The gods have been good to me in many ways, and my country and my people in India have honoured me beyond measure. They have shown me kindness which I could never, however much I may try, repay even in a small fraction. I have grown vain, I am afraid, by that kindness which has been showered on me, and it seems to have somewhat spoilt me and made me somewhat conceited and somewhat expectant of welcome and goodwill wherever I may go.

When I decided to come to this pleasant island of Lanka, I expected, let me confess to you, I expected welcome, goodwill and friendship. I expected them. But my vanity, my conceit was humbled by you. The welcome which you gave, the hospitality which was showered on me, both in Colombo and elsewhere in this island, and the goodwill that came in such ample measure humbled my pride and conceit.

1. 16 May 1931. From The Hindu, 21 May 1931.

I wondered as to what had happened that I should be considered worthy of the welcome. I thought that it could not possibly be because of the small part I played in India's national struggle. I was but one of the many millions who took part in that glorious struggle, whose names were not known to you—men and women who had made strenuous sacrifice. And the realisation came to me, and has grown, that for the moment I stand here or elsewhere I become not Jawaharlal Nehru but the emblem or the symbol of something else for you that you wish to honour in the great national movement—that you wish to honour the millions of people with whom it has been my honour and privilege to fight the great fight which we have fought in India.

The great march from Sabarmati was led by that indomitable captain, Mahatma Gandhi, little more than a year ago. An army of men, women and children followed the leader—father, mother, daughter, wife and husband, forgetting their relationship, fighting only as comrades and soldiers in the battle-line, taking counsel together and marching with an exhilaration indescribable. The sufferings undergone by them were, after all, not sufferings because they were in a good cause, and they were in such a state of exhilaration all the time that they did not mind the lathi blows showered on them. Their blood tingled with joy and the British realised that it was not possible by their crude methods of warfare—lathis, guns and the jail—to suppress that great movement.

They put their last ounce of energy into the fray and went on and on. Among those who died on the march were many great souls who had gone to rest. I could not see them all, but I wish to mention the name of Ganesh Shankar who died in saving his brothers at Cawnpore a month or so ago. There were many others who had gone on their march. Men may come and men may go, but India will go on. Then what else matters? If India lives they all live. If India dies who lives then? What does it profit, then, for those who live after?

Friends, it is right that you show your welcome to us. But don't waste your sympathy for the suffering and the sacrifice that India has undergone. We want no sympathy from anyone on earth. We want no sympathy even from our brothers or cousins. Sympathy is a thing that we are sorry for. We are not sorry for what has happened. India is proud of it. Therefore why call for sympathy?

We came here about three weeks ago. We have wandered about your pleasant island. I have wondered at the goodwill showered on us. I belong to what may be called the northern or central part of India. I might go still to my mother's home in Kashmir, the land of eternal winter, with snow-capped hills, overlooking the plains of southern India.

The gift[2] offered by India some two thousand years ago is still preserved by you here. It was a little more than a gift. It has been an indissoluble bond between the peoples of India and of Ceylon. In a few days we will be going away from this land and its verdure. We would be delighted to stay here, but India beckons to us and we have got to go. It is not possible to disobey that call, so we shall leave in a few days to shoulder our task and the burden of the fray in that great struggle.

In that work of ours, sometimes a little despair assails our hearts on our weary way. At that time of despair we shall think of Ceylon and the memory of your pleasant island. The memory of your hospitality that we have enjoyed will hearten us in our task and lighten the work and strengthen us in our duty.

2. A tooth of the Buddha preserved in a temple at Kandy.

SOUTHERN INDIA

11. To Krishna Nehru[1]

S.S. Something
22.5.31

Betty dear,

Our month of holiday in Lanka is over and as I write the shores of the island recede in the distance and the coconut trees become little specks on the horizon. It has been a strenuous holiday, specially the last part of it, but it has been a wonderful one, for Lanka is an enchanted place, beautiful till the eyes get satisfied with its beauty and nature's prodigality. It is ever afternoon there and the summer breezes blow and rustle through the graceful palm trees. And the great blue sea kisses lightly its pleasant green shores and sings a lullaby which soothes and intoxicates. One forgets almost the struggle and misery of the world of action.

We have had a welcome everywhere, magnificent and amazing. And as I went from one great crowd to another and passed numberless people waiting for hours by the wayside, I wondered at this miracle and tried to fathom its meaning. I realized that there must be something behind it, something obviously more than individual preference. And I felt suddenly that it was the glory of India and of our great fight that they were honouring and we were just the poor symbols and embodiments of that glory. There was a time, not so long ago, when an Indian had to hang his head in shame in foreign countries. But something has happened and that shame seems to be a thing of the past, a painful dream that has passed away. Today it is a proud privilege to be an Indian, and specially one who has borne his share in the heat and burden of the fray, and wherever anyone of us may go, he or she carries a bit of the glory of the new India.

I could write to you so much about our experiences. They have been rich and various and we are carrying away a host of memories. After we left Nuwara Eliya we visited the ancient cities in ruins and dreamt of the great days of Lanka. We visited Sigiriya with its great rock fortress and a cobra confronted us on the narrow rocky path up the hill and held us up for a long time till we managed to cajole it away. We went to Pollonarrua with its extensive remains of old palaces and temples and admired great statues of the Buddha and frescoes of the gods set in a lotus pond carved out in the shape of a lotus flower. We had a dip in the sea at Trincomalee and saw its beautiful harbour. In Anuradhapura we saw the widespread ruins of the sacred city built when the message of the Buddha was brought two thousand years ago by Mahindra and Sanghamitra, son and daughter of Ashoka. We saw there the ancient peepul tree, brought from Gaya 2000 years ago and said to be the oldest tree in the world.[2] And we wondered at the beauty and serenity of a statue of the Buddha. In Dambulla we saw the big temples and statues carved out of the solid rock and frescoes on the rock roof which we mistook to be paintings on canvas. In beautiful Kandy I addressed a great gathering almost under the shadow of the Temple of the Tooth. And then we returned to Colombo, to a whirl of engagements, addresses, meetings, receptions, crowds and enthusiasm, till my head felt giddy and my mind wandered and my body threatened to collapse. One night an amazing thing happened to me. I fell off my bed and woke up on the floor with my face all covered with blood. How this happened is still a mystery to me for my bed was a great big bed and I had not even a recollection of falling out of it or of hurting myself. But then I was on the floor in the dark with the unpleasant taste of blood in my mouth. All manner of strange thoughts came into my mind—thoughts of attacks and the like. I woke up Kamala, who was in the next room, and as she was washing my head, she fainted away and I had to carry her and look after her. The memory of the anonymous letters I had received in Allahabad had come to her and the sight of blood completed her collapse.[3] Hari[4] was then found and he washed me, and Kamala later dressed my head. There was just a small cut on the head about ¾ of an inch long—nothing much to speak of. It was quite superficial and I must have got it as I fell from the bed on the hard floor.

1 Nehru's Letters to His Sister (London, 1963), pp. 21-26.

2. A branch of the pipal tree under which the Buddha attained enlightenment had been planted at Anuradhapura.
3. Before he left for Sri Lanka, Jawaharlal had received two anonymous letters threatening his life.
4. Harilal, Motilal Nehru's personal servant who later, up to his death in 1961, served Jawaharlal.

The hurt was nothing—it has quite healed up—but the circumstances of the hurt were peculiar and eminent doctors came to see me. A heart specialist thumped me about a great deal and ultimately pronounced my heart and lungs and every part of me perfectly sound. The only possible explanation was that I was thoroughly exhausted and my brain was in a bit of a whirl when I brought off this strange fall. Please do not worry about it. It was a momentary lapse and I am thoroughly ashamed of it.

From Colombo we went south, hugging the coast and passing through splendid scenery. Every few moments we had to stop for addresses and short visits to schools and colleges. We passed through Kalutara and Galle and reached Matara in the far south. On the way we paid a visit to a French count who has built a charming house for himself on a tiny island just off the mainland. As it was high tide we had to take a catamaran boat and most of us got soaked. Just before we reached Matara we were stopped and told that the Motor Lorry Drivers' Association had organised a procession of a few lorries—just a paltry 75 or so—and we were to join this. There were many other private cars also and so we had this procession of a hundred cars, mostly lorries decorated and full of people. On reaching Matara we found a great crowd waiting for us and the lorries lined up all round the crowd. It was a fine sight.

In Matara a strange incident occurred. I had been invited by the municipality to accept an address and I had agreed. Not knowing where I was to go to I went to the public meeting. This upset the municipal council very much. They were waiting for me elsewhere. I offered to go there later but they turned up their noses. The chairman came to me in the evening and began telling me in a somewhat offensive tone—probably unintentional—that I had insulted him. This was a bit too much for my frayed nerves and I told him to go to hell and take his council with him. I made certain other similar polite remarks. There was an audience watching. Early next morning we found that the whole city was placarded with huge posters announcing to all and sundry: "Matara apologizes to Pandit Nehru for ill manners of U.D.C. Chairman"—U.D.C. meaning Urban District Council. Smart work, done overnight. A rival political faction had taken advantage of the incident to rub it in. On my return from Matara, I received frantic apologies from the chairman and in my turn I apologized also. So everything ended happily.

From Matara we went to Dondia Head nearby—the southernmost point of Ceylon—and looked to the south and felt exhilarated at the thought that there was no land between us and the South Pole.

On return to Colombo we left our cars and for the first time took to the railway train. We had sleeping cars—bedding, linen, etc., provided. Indeed, we have not required our bedding anywhere here. In private houses or the government rest-houses—corresponding to our dak bungalows, but far better—linen and pillows were always provided.

We went to Jaffna in the far north by train and had a tumultuous welcome. Jaffna is the centre of the Tamil and of the aggressive youth leagues. We had a heavy programme, motored all over the neighbourhood, and had a dip in the sea and swam out towards India—she was only 16 miles across. And so back again to Colombo this morning. A visit to a Buddhist temple and college for monks, blessings from the venerable head and my respectful reply to the venerable one, visits and short speeches at three different colleges, private visits to bid farewell to a number of friends, meetings and photographs with the reception committees and the volunteers, large numbers of people to say good-bye to us, a crowd at the jetty—and here we are! And so ends the story of our visit to Lanka.

Bernard Aluwihare has asked me to rub it in when I write to you—to make you feel sorrier and sorrier that you did not come. I hope I have done so sufficiently. Bernard belongs to a well-known and historical family here. They consider themselves among the chosen and do not approve of Bernard hobnobbing with Indians and the like! Bernard has the distinction of having a grandfather or great-great-grandfather who was beheaded for rebellion against the British.

Christians and Buddhists seem to mix well here. Bernard would curtsey deeply whenever he met a Buddhist priest and would treat him with all reverence.

Kamala has often been taken for my daughter. But what do you say to Indu being taken for the mother! This has happened repeatedly.

I am tired—we have just come back from dinner. We are the only first-class passengers on board. So Kamala sat on the right of the captain and Indu to the left. Tomorrow morning we reach Tuticorin. I do not know when I shall be able to write to you or anybody again—show this to Nan and Ranjit and tell mother we are all well and flourishing.

Love,

Your brother,
Jawahar

Tuticorin
23.5.31

One interesting thing I forgot to write to you. In Ceylon a great banquet was being organized in my honour at a big hotel. At the last moment I was asked if I would have any objection to formal toasts of the king and the government. As I did object the whole affair fell through!

12. Interview to the Press at Tuticorin[1]

QUESTION. What are your impressions of Ceylon?

ANSWER. It is a beautiful and charming country and its people gave me a wonderful welcome.

Q. What is the attitude of the Ceylonese people towards their new constitution?[2]

A. There are many strong movements there which have boycotted this constitution, and even those who are accepting it are doing it in order to change it. But I have not studied the question myself and can't say whether that constitution would work well.

Q. What is the condition of Indian labourers in Ceylon?

A. It appears to be highly unsatisfactory. I did not investigate the conditions in detail but I saw hundreds of Indian labourers in the tea estates, especially women, and almost all of them complained to me of the hard life they had to lead. It was obvious enough from their faces. In spite of an effort that is being made to reduce their wages on the ground that prices have gone down, any national government in India would oppose it by all means in their power.[3] Unfortunately, the Indian labourers are not organised. I think it would be a good thing if all emigration of Indian labour were stopped until their conditions are bettered.

The first thing to be done is that people in India should understand that such an attempt has to be made. In this, newspapers and public

1. Given some time between 23 and 25 May 1931 to The Ceylon Independent. From The Bombay Chronicle, 2 June 1931.
2. Introduced early in 1931, the constitution did not satisfy the people who wanted full self government.
3. In May 1931, the Ceylon government had, with the concurrence of the Indian government, reduced the wages of Indian labourers.

organisations can help. The other day I read a report of the shareholders' meeting of a Ceylon tea company in London. A thirty-five per cent dividend had been declared and yet the chairman of the board of directors said that they were trying, with the consent of the Ceylon government, to reduce the wages of Indian labourers. No argument is needed to show the monstrosity of the procedure. Unfortunately there is no cooperation between the Sinhalese and the Indian labourers in Ceylon. The former feel that Indians lower their standards of living and hence Indian labour and emigration should be stopped.

I think that the Sinhalese and their leaders are somewhat short-sighted in their labour policy, but I am perfectly prepared to support their demand for stoppage of Indian labour and emigration. As a matter of fact, if this were done the Ceylon planters and the Ceylon Government would come to terms soon enough with Indians. Reduction is sought of the legal minimum wage fixed by law. I have no doubt that the Government of India, if they so choose, can improve the condition of Indian labour.

Q. Will you go to England if Mahatma Gandhi goes to the second Round Table Conference?

A. The Congress Working Committee has definitely decided that only Mahatmaji should represent the Congress and I have therefore no business to go. Members of the Committee can go only as delegates and organised representatives of the Congress. As Mahatmaji is the sole representative, the question of other members of the Working Committee going does not arise.

13. Reply to Addresses at Tinnevelly[1]

It was a great time that we had last year, in this ancient country of ours. Although we have not achieved political freedom, the whole world knows, and you and I know, what we have achieved. There was a time not long ago, when any Indian going to a foreign country had to hang down his head in shame and everywhere he was looked down upon because we belonged to a subject country. Things have now changed. Let constitutional lawyers note this.

1. 27 May 1931. The Bombay Chronicle, 30 May 1931.

If you want to know and appreciate this altered status that has come upon us, go out of India and see how Indians are treated in foreign countries. For today in foreign countries, Indians, and especially those who took part in last year's movement, go about with the glory of India.

We have grown conscious of our strength. Though there may still be foreign domination, we have now the will and the strength to remove it. We know that England also knows that.

The position is now different. You know that at present there has been a truce between the Indian National Congress and the British Government and there is a provisional settlement. I hope that you know that this provisional settlement is very much provisional and cannot signify any permanent settlement. Of course, we want peace and everybody wants peace but the peace we want must be a peace that must bring freedom to India. Otherwise, there cannot be any peace.

We have given our word to honour the terms of the provisional settlement. We shall do our best to honour them. But, year by year, we shall not compromise except on terms which will bring independence to this country. We shall do our best to come to our objective by means of negotiations, but if these fail, and if there is a certainty that they will fail, there is no alternative except to start our campaign again in right earnest.

Therefore, I would in all humility suggest to you to leave the negotiations to Mahatmaji and the Working Committee. Don't bother about them. Get ready for action when the time comes for it.

I want to remind you that there are two or three things which are essential. You must bring about a complete boycott of all foreign cloth. Secondly, there must be a boycott of liquor. Thirdly, you must have as many trained and efficient volunteers as possible.

We have learnt very many lessons from the last year's struggle and the biggest lesson is that you can't carry on a struggle without trained and efficient volunteers. Take steps to build up a strong volunteer corps, not only of men but also of women, to serve the nation efficiently.

A time will come when you will be tested in a manner you have not been tested last year. When we entered with doubt into this valley of shadow, we found that it was full of glorious sunlight. Let us not worry, for there cannot be a shadow for those who work for a great cause. The real joy of life is to throw ourselves into a great cause and work on till we are exhausted. Many of us felt that real joy of life last year. Thousands of us felt it. When again the opportunity occurs, I hope hundreds of thousands will come forward.

14. Reply to Addresses at Trichur[1]

I would like to thank the organisers of the several institutions which have honoured me and my wife this evening, particularly the Desh Sevikas, because their address reminded me of the wonderfully marvellous activities and driving force of women during the last civil disobedience movement.

I have greatly appreciated the spirit of enthusiasm and perseverance that marked the activities of the Yuvajana Samithi and the Youth League. As a result of the civil disobedience movement we are nearer to Swaraj. We have the capacity in us to free ourselves. I cannot say whether India can win Swaraj within one year or two years, but I am sure that India will be free very shortly.

Indians cannot be considered as unintelligent and incapable of independent administrative capacity but the administrative machinery has been so devised by the imperialistic authorities that they have put wrong and weak persons in responsible posts, so as to point out their incapacity and thus draw Indians into ridicule. It is this system of jobbery against which I protest and rebel.

The last Round Table Conference was a failure because everyone who went there as a member did not know his real function. It is not that they did not have the intelligence to know their duty, not that they were unpatriotic, but that they were mere puppets.

As regards untouchability, the Congress cannot and will not tolerate untouchability or any inhuman system. The Congress stands for a new social order of things, wherein a healthy and more rosy structure will prevail.

We have entered into a truce with the British. If we get what we want, we shall not fight any more. If we do not, we must go to war again. I cannot, therefore, say whether a time may not come when we may have to be again forward in war. We have had to suffer and sacrifice to an inordinate extent. This is going to be a tough fight and we must not think that we are going to put an end to British imperialism by slogans. I doubt very much if the British have eagerness enough to fight it out. India is not going to be divided despite the Butler Committee and a hundred other committees. Mahatma Gandhi, who is going to the Round Table Conference as the sole representative of the Congress, carries with him the support of 330 millions. There must be some tangible result from the negotiations. Otherwise, the entire 330 millions will launch a greater fight.

1. 30 May 1931. From The Hindu, 2 June 1931.

15. Message to Travancore[1]

We have spent a few days in Travancore and we have had a delightful time. It has been a strenuous time also and the very affection that was showered on us by the people all along the route and wherever we went, welcome as it was, became a strain. This little strain or trouble that we had to undergo was soon forgotten, but the memory of the loving welcome lingered in our minds and strengthened and cheered us. We shall long remember this visit of ours to the southern tip of India.

The large number of schools that we passed was in itself a good enough indication of the spread of education in the state, a pleasant contrast to the desert of ignorance that prevails in the greater part of what is known as British India.

And so we passed on, and everywhere there were signs of a new life, of a new awakening, of a feeling that India was one and all of us had a share in the great national movement and in the freedom to come. But one big blot covers this fair landscape—the blot of untouchability. Where nature has been so generous, man has been so narrow and selfish and has denied his brother even the ordinary rights of a human being. I hope this blot will go soon—there are signs of its going already—and untouchability and the denial of the right to enter the public temples and go along public roads will soon become an evil dream which has passed.

We go back with pleasant memories of a beautiful land and of a charming people.

1. Alleppey, 30 May 1931. The Hindu, 1 June 1931.

16. Reply to Addresses at Calicut[1]

After a tour lasting nearly a week, we are leaving Kerala tonight. In the course of this short stay we have been overpowered by the affection shown to us by the people of Kerala in every village we visited. To be honest, I am sure I do not deserve so much honour. The people who have honoured me have spoken highly of my poor contribution to national service. In fact, the idle talk of sacrifice is insulting. Men and women who are made for service and sacrifice have no other option but to satisfy the purpose of their lives. A soldier who has actually taken his place in the battle-field has no courage to retreat for fear of being court-martialled. The same is the case with our national workers and sufferers.

When at Cape Comorin I sat on the cape proper, I felt as if I was sitting at the feet of Mother India. As I watched the junction at which the waters from the east and the west met, I felt a throbbing in my heart which shook me like a storm. My thoughts were riveted on the very stubborn unity of the Indian masses, though it has been mischievously and outrageously disputed. A strong emotion pervaded my senses and I was quite confident that from the snowy peaks of Kashmir down to the beautiful plains of Kerala there were no two individuals who were not brothers or sisters or were not engaged in the common pursuit of freedom.

I went to Ceylon in order to have a look at India from outside. Even in that small island I realised how much shame had been piled up on poor India. Every foreigner has the most offensive contempt for the 330 millions of Indians who are kept under control by a handful of Englishmen. No Indian can walk with head upright in any foreign country. But now, just at the end of the great agitation for freedom, Indians have demonstrated their capacity to think and do, to assert their independence and self-respect and to walk with an upright head and fearless mind through any foreign country.

Indians are now in an atmosphere of truce. If real peace is coming, it is well and good and everybody will welcome it. I cannot tell when real peace will be attained. Until real peace comes or until the government forces the people to make a breach of the truce, Indians have to observe the terms of the truce whether or not the government maintains it in spirit and word. At Lahore, Purna Swaraj was resolved upon as the ideal. It has to be borne in mind that this oft-repeated ideal must be kept in view throughout the struggle. No worker can go back upon this most sacred and solemn vow. It has to be fulfilled in right religious fervour. Everybody knows that a Round Table Conference was held in London some time ago. Those who attended the conference were patriotic and competent enough. But they were sorely in need of public support. They were not particularly concerned with what Great Britain would give to India, but their only helpless request was that unless something was granted a section of the Indian people, who were more fierce and patriotic than themselves, would rise in revolt against the British Government. But what occurred as a result of the Irwin-Gandhi pourparlers? Through the frail body of the "half-naked fakir" Lord Irwin did see the strength of 330 million souls and readily agreed to the safest move within reach.[2] That mentality of the Englishman who realised the tremendous strength of united India must be kept going by actions which will prove the irresistible capacity and courage of the Indian masses.

1. 30 May 1931. From The Bombay Chronicle, 4 June 1931.

The question of the depressed classes is especially peculiar and poignant in Kerala. I have been terribly shocked and agitated to hear about the prevalence and recrudescence of untouchability. The uplift of the untouchables is a prominent item of the Congress programme. The vow of independence taken a year and a half ago well defines the Congress ideal of Swaraj. The resolution on fundamental rights passed at the Karachi Congress also explains the Congress view of Swaraj. The Congress is fighting not only for political freedom but for economic and social freedom also. The Congress will never approve of a Swaraj scheme where social liberty does not attain as large a degree as it ought to. Can anybody show that Mahatma Gandhi, or I, or any other Congress worker is content with a Swaraj where there is no freedom for untouchables? If I am fighting for a particular cause, it is in accordance with the dictates of my inner spirit. If that cause is not satisfied by the Swaraj government, I will never hesitate to fight even with the Swaraj government. But I have something special to tell the untouchables. They should never keep brooding over their fate. Weeping and wailing will not achieve freedom. They should stand up and fight out their cause to a finish. If, otherwise, they keep aloof from the national struggle, saying that their demands are not satisfied, they are doomed for ever.

2. On 18 February 1931, Winston Churchill had described the talks between Mahatma Gandhi and Irwin as a "nauseating and humiliating spectacle" of "this one time Inner Temple lawyer, now seditious fakir, striding half naked up the steps of the Viceroy's Palace, there to negotiate and to parley on equal terms with the representative of the King Emperor".

I congratulate you, the people of Kerala, on the very successful manner in which the picketing campaign is being carried on in your province, and I regret the charge that appeared in the General Secretaries' Report[3] that South India lagged behind North India in political activity.

3. For 1930, placed before the Working Committee at Karachi in March 1931; this was however withdrawn.

17. Speech at Calicut[1]

It is almost a week now since we entered the land of Kerala and tonight we propose to leave it. It has been a very pleasant week, a somewhat strenuous week, but none the less a very delightful week. When I was asked by my friends in Kerala to go over here and there and address public meetings in various parts of Malabar I told them that I could not do so but merely wished to pass through Malabar on my way to Bombay, but in my attempt to pass through, the very call of your affection was so great that it was impossible for me not to stop and receive the honour which you are good enough to show us today.

When I landed at Tuticorin I had almost a feeling as if I was going on a pilgrimage. When I went to the southernmost part of India, to Cape Comorin, and when I sat there, I felt that I was sitting at the feet of India, and as I waited, the waters of the eastern and western seas washed gently over the feet of India. At that time I had a feeling which I shall remember for many years to come. When I, who hail from a place in Kashmir, travelled in these parts I found a feeling among everyone that we are all brothers belonging to the same land and tradition and marching together side by side towards the same goal. It is a feeling of unity among everyone in India. Wherever I see, I find only brothers, sisters and comrades. You are showing your affection towards us in a lavish manner. After all we are human beings and by the honour you shower on us we feel how greatly one is honoured for the sacrifice he has made. Those who took part in the last campaign did not think about their service as sacrifice but they considered it as a joy in their life. So, if you want to get real joy, I tell you, you can get it only if you get yourself interested in the mighty cause of India.

1. 31 May 1931. From The Hindu, 2 June 1931.

I would like to pay a tribute to the part played by the women of India during the last fight and to congratulate the people of Kerala for keeping up the fight to the last. I feel extremely sorry for the remarks in the Congress Secretaries' report regarding South India. The southern provinces did their utmost and some from the very beginning had to face repression. So far as you, the people of Kerala, are concerned, from all accounts you have taken a leading part in the movement. I congratulate you for this, and appeal to you to strengthen the Congress and be ready for action.

18. Speech at Civic Reception, Coimbatore[1]

I regret that I am unable to stay in your midst for a longer time. But I would like to pay my tribute to you, the people of Coimbatore, who have so nobly responded to the call of the country. The sight of such a mighty gathering gives me some idea of the enthusiasm of the people in the district, which no amount of newspaper accounts could have given. Wherever I have gone I have found the same enthusiasm—a new spirit, a new quality and a new mission—at work, and anybody who has eyes to see can say that the country is bent on achieving complete freedom and also that the country knows that it has got the strength to get it. You should remember that the Swaraj you are fighting for means not only freedom from foreign domination but also freedom for every caste, creed and individual in the community. Our Swaraj is going to be a Swaraj in which every Indian will have equal liberty.

In our fight last year, we succeeded in a large measure not because every group had joined us but specially because the women of India played a great part in it. We did well last year but let us remember that we are still far off from what we set out to achieve. The present truce does not mean that our struggle has ended. Nobody likes to see his friends going to jail in thousands and suffering lathi blows. But if there is no alternative to freedom, we have to face that also as we did in the past.

1. 31 May 1931. From The Hindu, 1 June 1931.

Therefore it is necessary not to slacken our efforts but to utilise them to strengthen our organisation and to keep ourselves in readiness to start the struggle for freedom, if necessary. We must carry on the boycott of foreign cloth and liquor shops. The boycott is not a political weapon for the moment but is a thing that is going to stay. Therefore we must have these boycotts and complete them. We must also get rid of the curse of untouchability and raise up our brothers.

I would like to thank the municipal chairman and you, the citizens of Coimbatore, for the addresses of welcome you have presented to me. I have also been presented here on the platform with a purse of Rs. 3,821. This purse, I take it, is meant for national work. Therefore I propose to hand over the money to the office bearers of your district Congress committee. Finally, I thank you all for having sat in considerable discomfort to hear me.

19. Address at Civic Reception, Mysore[1]

I am most thankful to you for your address of welcome and kind words and for this very beautiful casket which you have presented to me. In your address, you have stated something to the effect that it has been a sacrifice on my part in coming to Mysore and you have mentioned the numerous virtues I am supposed to possess and the numerous sacrifices I have made in coming to Mysore. As a matter of fact, coming to Mysore has been something I have looked forward to for a long time and I come here with a very high sense of giving effect to an ancient wish of mine. After all, a person does what it pleases him to do.

1. 1 June 1931. The Hindu, 2 June 1931.

People find pleasure in different ways. Sacrifice or no sacrifice, it has been a great joy for those of us who have been connected with this national movement to have done what we have done and to have had the satisfaction of having served a mighty cause. To call that 'sacrifice' is a misnomer. It is a real joy in life. It was not I alone but it was the thousands and tens of thousands of people who had the privilege to have experienced this joy. For them the other joys are feeble, futile and passing. Therefore, you need not talk of any sacrifices on my part.

I thank you for your welcome. It is good to go to a place and to find that a welcome awaits one who goes. I envy you, the members of the municipal council, that you have in your charge and keeping a beautiful city to be looked after and to improve. It is a great thing to see beauty grow by your efforts and to create a city, beautiful with public gardens and other amenities. I have not seen much of your city, yet the little I have seen impresses me by its beauty and I have felt envious of those who have made this beauty. The parks at any rate are beautiful and I hope you will make them more and more beautiful. After all this, one fact I would submit for your consideration, and that is that the beauty of a city is to be judged fundamentally and primarily not by the beauty of the mansions of the rich but by the beauty of the houses of the poor. The best of a city's life is not the sanitary condition of the parks and the places inhabited by the rich but the condition of the slums. When you think of the beauty of Mysore city you have always to think of the poorest parts of the city and see whether those places are beautiful, healthy and sanitary, or not. After all, the fundamental beauty of a city, as the beauty of a country, depends much more on flesh and blood and less on brick and mortar. The primary function of a municipal council is to see that the poorer residents are well-housed, well-fed, and well-clothed. That, after all, is the ultimate test of life in a municipality. That is a tremendous ideal to be put before any municipality or country and it will be long before a municipality can reach such an ideal. But that is the ideal that a municipality should always have. There is no use of a municipality saying that they have no funds to do this thing and that thing. You have to see whether the poorest of the city are keeping health, both mentally and physically. I hope that your council will always keep this ideal before it, and even if the municipality may not succeed in all efforts to reach the ideal you will have done much towards reaching it ultimately.

I thank you very much once again for the welcome and the address.

20. Reply to Addresses at Mysore[1]

It seems to have become a custom in these addresses that are presented to a person to often praise the person, in whose honour the addresses are presented, beyond all measure. I must confess to a strange feeling of going from place to place and of being welcomed by large crowds and replying to addresses—on an average, six to ten a day—which I may say in passing are done by people who have no idea of the consequences of presenting addresses in wooden frames. I realise that I would be buried in wooden frames. What would I do with about 200 of these wooden frames? A friend of mine asked me if I am interested in any furniture shop in Allahabad!

Having heard so much fulsome praise, I must confess to feeling a kind of nausea because I am neither used to this nor do I like it. It is not good for the soul of either party. I beg of you not to take my words in any sarcastic or jocular sense. Whatever my failings are, I do not suffer from modesty. I have a full knowledge of my virtues, and modesty is not one of my failings. I would however ask you not to indulge, in your public and private work, in this laxity of language in regard to individuals. One finds it all the more in Indian states and regrets it all the more.

Fundamentally it is a wrong outlook on life, if in national matters you look upon individuals and not upon the movement and forget the environment in which they work and look upon them as makers of a great national movement. No great movement can be built up by individuals alone. It has been our pride and privilege to have had in India during the last few years individuals of note of whom any country can be proud. We have had captains than whom we could wish no better. Can you think of only captains and captains general and not thousands and tens of thousands who, without really expecting any reward or receiving any address or garlands, have suffered and worked for the national cause? I recall to you what happened last year. When our general started his march to Dandi village there were people who laughed at his futile adventure. Gradually they felt the strength of the call and there was a tremor in the Indian continent. People who heard the call considered that it was a call from India herself and even those who hesitated and doubted at first felt a strange feeling in their hearts and could not say 'no' to the call. Millions of Indians marched in response to the call and thousands of them were removed to prisons. Our women, you know, are not used to the market-place and they were not capable of facing police lathi charges. Most of them lead a life of sheltered ease. But they could not say 'no' to the national call when they saw that their husbands, brothers and fathers were fighting in this struggle, and they showed that they could also suffer and sacrifice. Not only did they show themselves capable of suffering and sacrifice but they showed that they had powers of organisation and endurance and that even if the men of India failed the women of India could not fail. The movement went on and developed and you who talk of suffering and sacrifice need not waste your sympathy for those who suffered and sacrificed because they who sacrificed suffered and enjoyed doing so.

1. 1 June 1931. The Hindu, 4 June 1931.

What kind of life do most of us live in this country? Do we live like live persons? We live more like vegetables. We go round the same routine like potatoes and cabbages. We are always worried by the petty worries of the world. We are full of grievances and troubles and we carry on our life in that routine fashion until we deservedly die. For some time, at any rate, we got out of that vegetable state of existence. We felt the joy of life just then. Do we want sympathy for such a feeling of joy? No, we do not want to be turned again to potatoes and cabbages. There were some things said in the addresses about suffering and sacrifice. Those whom you have loved marched forward and were faced with lathi blows. Some of you might have heard of it. Have you ever heard the soft thud of a lathi falling on soft flesh? It angers you when you hear it or see it. We, some of us, who saw it happening in front of us—what do you think were our feelings then? We learnt the lesson of discipline, imposed by our captain. Without discipline the bravest man is a useless soldier. Therefore, whatever we saw, and however much it angered us and induced us to retaliate, we restrained and controlled ourselves and only strengthened our resolve to resist till we could put an end to such a happening.

Its mark is left not only on India but on England and on the entire world. It has left its mark on us and today in India we feel we have something in us which we did not realise before. We feel that we have also something in us which will knock down the mighty British Empire. We cannot prophesy how long it will take us to win our freedom. We are at any rate conscious today of strength enough to win and we are confident and optimistic of success. We do not very much care what happens in conferences and the like. The fundamental question is always one of the inner strength and of the sanction we have behind us. If you and I have strength we shall go forward and we shall get the results of our strength. If our nation is not strong enough to get what it deserves, do you think we shall win by our lawyers' quibbles and arguments? We have been engaged in doing real work in building up the strength of India and we know we shall build it enough in a large measure, and because we know the process now of building it we shall go forward and do not very much care what happens in the near future. We have to keep ourselves prepared, and those who have gathered here in such a large number should consider what they are prepared to do to help this movement and those persons who are connected with this movement. You must put that question and try to answer it yourselves. The future depends on your answer to such a question. That is why I have a horror of demonstrations, processions and shouting of slogans. Very often people who shout do nothing else. We are in for a big thing in this country. India has started something which is going to make a lot of difference not only for India but for the whole world. We are in for a big thing and we intend to see it through. Take it from me that there are men and women determined to see it through. It will be folly to imagine that the work before us is easy work. It is dangerous work and it has risks. But we have qualities of grit and endurance which can be compared to that of the bulldog. We embarked on this struggle because there was no other way for it. Now it all depends on the measure of response that we get from the men and women of India. I hope the answer will be one which will induce you to do something solid and to prepare yourselves for more action I hope you will therefore at the present moment strengthen in every way that national movement and the national organisation and also help in the boycott of foreign cloth and liquor. We must eliminate foreign cloth from India and we have included this in the terms of the truce. You have to help us in these things. Above all, get ready in mind and body for a greater call that may come. Get clear ideas and be in a fit condition, like an athlete, to face the pistol.

21. Address to Bar Association, Mysore[1]

Though it is nearly twelve years since I ceased to take any interest in law, it is for the first time that I have had the good fortune now of being invited by persons who are members of the profession to which I originally belonged. I have on many an occasion given expression to very severe criticism about the profession in general and about the members of the bar in India because the lawyer is generally prone to lose sight of the vital facts of life and be sordidly ridden by precedents and sections of law. That has been so. Yet one must admit that a large portion of public life has been shared by lawyers, and there might be cases when law has been helpful to them in solving the riddles of life. It is, however, a fact that the brightest of our intellectuals have chosen the profession for want of any other opening. The lawyer is apt to be parochial in his outlook and I fear that any system of law which does not receive the sanction of the community to which it applies is bound to be retrograde in its operation. You all know that within the brief space of one to one and a half years there has not been any change either of the legal or the constitutional aspect of India, but still the status of India has tremendously increased and Indians are held in higher esteem than they have ever been before. Even persons who had worked against the Congress are being, since the last one or one and a half years, held high in esteem because of the fact that the national movement has enveloped them also. This is a point which all lawyers may now and then seriously ponder over and contribute their mite towards the national upheaval.

1. 1 June, 1931. The Hindu, 4 June 1931.

22. Reply to Addresses at Bangalore[1]

I thank you for your welcome, for your reception and for your addresses of welcome. I thank my comrades and co-workers of the district and city Congress committees, the Youth League, the Mysore State Congress and the Arya Samaj, and in thanking you, I should like you to remember, as I have no doubt you do remember, that when you present address to indrviduals whose names you are acquainted with, when you welcome them, you should always remember that the real credit for the good campaign that we had last year, for the great fight that we had last year—the real credit does not belong to an individual here and an individual there. You know that the credit belongs to the women, and thousands of volunteers and workers, who worked and worked, not to catch the public eye but behind the scenes, without any expectation of congratulations given to them. They worked because they wanted to do their best for the cause of the country. Do not imagine that the mighty movement that we had last year was the making of only a few leaders. The movement was in a large measure due to the great captain, Mahatmaji. The movement was the Indian people in action, millions of people in action. Therefore we produced the great results, not so much the political results, but the moral and psychological results, which have made for India a place in the world and an influence which we have not had for some generations past. Now Indians go out of India not with so much of degradation and slavery about them as they went before. Today you go out of India with something of the glory of India about you. People respect you, people honour you and people are interested in you and ask you to tell them all about India and ask all about Mahatmaji. Such is the wonderful force of that mighty personality, such is the power of the man whom we have got as our leader.

1. 2 June 1931. From The Hindu, 3 June 1931.

You have also to honour the womanhood of India, who really might be said to have shouldered the greatest burden in this movement. They came out of their homes at the time of the greatest crisis when most of the workers in thousands had gone to prison. There was some risk of the movement slackening but the women came out and faced the heat of the fray. This movement has set the example for the rest of India. So wonderful have been its effects that it is impossible to put down the people of India. Again, if in the campaign some people played a prominent part, how did they do so? It was their privilege to play a prominent part because of the tremendous spirit they derived from the rank and file, because after all a leader is ultimately made by his following. The strongest of leaders become weak, when the following becomes weak. If you want to be strong and want your leaders to be strong, be strong yourselves. We know that today there is that spirit in the nation. India today is strong because millions of people are prepared to go ahead. Leader after leader came forward and even when 70,000 people, men and women, went to jail there was no lack of leaders. Leadership was rightly vested in the nation as a whole. Therefore we know that there is no danger to India. Nothing can happen which can upset our movement.

But, there is the problem of the future. One does not want to look back in the past. Greater than the past is going to be the future. Today we are in a period of truce. The Congress has given its word to the government that it will observe the conditions of the truce. We have agreed to a provisional settlement, and having given our word, we shall all stand by that word and honour its conditions rigorously. But remember, it is only a provisional settlement. If we can get peace on terms of India's freedom in accordance with the National Congress, well and good. Nobody wants to suffer unnecessarily and go through a tremendous campaign. But we want freedom more than peace. We cannot make any peace which does not bring with it complete freedom for India—not only political but also social and economic freedom as well, because the National Congress stands today not only for political freedom, but even more so for economic and social freedom. If peace comes with freedom, well and good. If peace cannot be obtained with freedom, then there will be no real peace and there will be war.

Therefore, it is up to us to keep ready both for peace and also for a breakdown of the negotiations. It is up to us all to observe the terms of the truce. Boycott of foreign cloth and picketing of liquor shops have to continue. We must concentrate our attention on the strengthening of the Congress organisation We must train volunteers and discipline them. We must concentrate on getting ourselves ready for the great movement of action whenever it comes. India is going to play a big part and our movement is going to be an even bigger one than the big one which we had. Do not get left behind when the stream of India's freedom goes forward.

India is one and India is going to remain one. So there can be no question of a division as Indian India and Indian states. This is one fundamental fact of which you need not have the slightest doubt. India is not going to be divided, for India is going to have a federation, as probably she will have. But it does not mean that the kind of federation is the one suggested by the Round Table Conference, because in my opinion it is a ridiculous and absurd kind of federation. What manner of federation we will have, I cannot say offhand. But you cannot have different units in the federation with different positions and status. There might be some transitional arrangement. In any event it must be certain that even if there is any kind of compromise on this issue, it can be subject only to certain fundamental rights in the states. An assurance that these rights will be protected properly is absolutely necessary. Also, there should be recognition of the fact that the people of the states cannot be ignored but must be represented in the federation. The ideal is identical both to the Indian states and to the rest of India. In the ultimate ideal, both of them must have the same status. Now we want to concentrate our fight against the outsider. We want peaceful negotiations. If peace comes to us in that way, well and good.

I hope that the welcome addresses and the reception indicate that the people of the Indian states are prepared for anything that might come in the future.

Organisation and discipline are the symbols of preparation. Therefore it is best for us to utilise the time we have now to train ourselves to become soldiers of India.

23. To Vijayalakshmi Pandit[1]

Bardoli
8 6 31

Nan darling,

Our wanderings are over, and although we are far from home, we are back again in the field of our labours and in more familiar surroundings than we found in the far south. Yesterday we reached Bombay, thinking that we would stay there some days. But on arrival I found a summons from Bapu awaiting me and to Bardoli I came. Tonight I travel back with him to Bombay. Probably I shall be in Bombay some three or four days and then I may go to Poona with Kamala and Indu. It will be the middle of June before we get back to Allahabad.

I had your letter and Betty's at Hyderabad. I wanted to write to you from there but even the 'social' programme arranged by Sarojini—politics, of course, are not encouraged in the dominions of H.E.H.—was heavy enough and left no leisure. Indeed ever since we landed at Tuticorin on the 23rd of last month we have been rushing along from place to place and function to function with little rest and less peace. It has been a pleasant enough tour, we have had a cordial welcome everywhere, and we have seen many places worth seeing. Impressions crowd in upon me as I write and yet they are beginning to fade already, and soon what is vivid now will be but a memory. Practically all our touring from Tuticorin to Mysore was done by motor car. It was only at Mysore that we finally took to the railway.

From Tuticorin we went to Tinnevelly and then to Cape Comorin or Kanya Kumari as the name should be. Kumari has been corrupted to Comorin. Right at the tip of India stands the shrine of Kanya Kumari, the Virgin Goddess, and so virgin and inaccessible is she that the likes of us, who had crossed the seas, were not admitted to her holy presence. But right up till midnight we sat by the sea and watched the meeting of the eastern with the western waters. And it seemed to us as if we were literally sitting at the feet of India, and the Arabian Sea and the Bay of Bengal were competing with each other in paying homage to the old lady. It was a peaceful spot, this southern tip of India, and the noise and the tumult seemed very far.

1. Vijayalakshmi Pandit Papers, N.M.M.L.

From Comorin we went to Nagercoil, the southernmost town in India —for Comorin is just a village—and then we proceeded to Trivandrum. There were crowds and addresses of welcome at frequent stages, and triumphal arches and pavilions erected across the road. So much trouble and expense, and we stopped there barely two minutes to be garlanded. Our motor journey through Travancore State threatened almost to become one continuous procession. There were so many stoppages, and at many places music and a short procession had been arranged. We passed scores of schools on the way. There seemed to be a school every mile or even less and all the little children from Tara's age upwards stood in lines along the road to see us pass by. Thus even a motor journey made us realise how advanced Travancore was in the matter of education. It is stated that 100% of the school going age go to school. And Cochin State has about the same percentage.

We reached Trivandrum late on the 25th night, but late as it was there was a huge crowd waiting for us. They surrounded our car and became so excited that it became impossible for the car to move. So I decided to get down and mix with the crowd and lead it away. I succeeded but the young men in the crowd became even more worked up by my presence and started shouting and dancing. Something of the spirit of the crowd took possession of me also, and so we marched along the main streets of Trivandrum with the shopkeepers and others gaping at us and not knowing what was happening. I was getting tired and wanted the car, but the cars had all disappeared. We sat down, many hundreds of us, by the roadside and I addressed them but still no car. So we decided to walk on. A short cut to our place of abode lay through the fort area which was a public area containing the palaces, shops, etc. We tried to go through this but were stopped by the Travancore Army! Mind you, not one or two men, but quite a crowd of men with muskets barred our way, imagining perhaps that we intended storming the fort or the palace. Every gate was similarly guarded and we had to take a long round before we reached our house.

The next morning I received an address from the municipality and in my reply I referred to the incidents of the day before in a manner not complimentary to the State of Travancore. Soon after I had a call from high police officials to apologise and to make it clear that they had nothing to do with the stoppage and that it was all the fault of the army people.

From Trivandrum we went to Quilon where we spent a pleasant hour on the backwaters; and then to Alleppey—strange names for India. From Alleppey we went by boat via the backwaters to Kottayam. They are very beautiful, the backwaters of Malabar, and to travel along them on a moonlit evening is a delightful experience. But beautiful as they are, they grow monstrous, and one wearies a little of them in the day time. In Alleppey we met an old Syrian Bishop, the head of the Nestorian Christians today. The once powerful Nestorian church which extended all over Central Asia and parts of Europe and Africa, is now confined to a small corner of South India. Kottayam is a centre of Syrian Christians—not Nestorians. George Joseph lived somewhere in the neighbourhood. The Syrian Christians are supposed to have come to India in the first century or two of the Christian era.

From Kottayam we went to Ernakulam by boat again from midnight to six in the morning. It was not a very comfortable journey. A crowd of Gujarati volunteers, who had come to do us honour, crowded the boat and made the night a trial to us by their conversation and movements. At Ernakulam we went straight to Tatapuram and met Jal.[2] In the director's bungalow at Tatapuram we came across again, to our joy, modern sanitary arrangements in the bathrooms, etc. The south of India may be very beautiful, but their ideas on the subjects of lavatories and bathrooms are extraordinary.

From Tatapuram we paid a short visit to Cochin which is just half an hour by motor boat. After meetings and addresses and various visits we went to see an old Jewish synagogue which belongs to a very curious crowd—the white jews of Cochin. These white Jews keep quite apart from the black Jews; mostly they marry among themselves and as they are a very small community now—about a hundred—they are getting pale and yellow and sickly. As we went through the white Jew quarter which we were told was like old Jerusalem (!) we saw the Jewish women and children going towards their temple in gala attire. We found that we had come just when the whole community was gathering together to witness a circumcision. A tremendous row was going on inside the synagogue. It was difficult to make out if the people there were quarrelling or weeping or wailing. But our conjectures were quite mistaken. What was happening was merely a recitation from the Talmud, suitable for the occasion. Everyone present—man, woman or child—was reciting or shouting at the top of his or her voice and the din was hardly bearable. We were proudly informed, however, that the method of recitation and intonation had been carefully preserved for several thousand years and was identical with that of Abraham or some other ancient gentleman. The novelty of the place held us in spite of the din. The women seemed to wear anything they could lay their hands upon. There were some in saris and some in European dresses and some in loose pyjamas and some in a kind of लङ्गोट[3] Plenty of silks and satins and कारचोब.[4] It was a curious medley and the whole thing seemed a pantomime.

2. Jal Naoroji, grandson of Dadabhai Naoroji and a close friend of the Nehru family; d. 1938.

We would not have stayed for the ceremony itself but we were pressed by our companion, a white Jew himself, to stay on. Probably they would have been offended if we came away without seeing it. So we stayed on and saw a babe about a month old circumcised. Ordinarily we were told this took place within a week or so of birth.

I felt tired out at Ernakulam and so we decided to steal a day and rest there. This enabled us to inspect the Tata factories, the Cocogem plant and the wonderful new soap with which Jal expects to astonish India in the course of the next few months. It is to be called the 'Jal' soap.

From Ernakulam we went to Trichur where we had a mighty meeting Here we saw Malabar dancing and specially their famous Kathakali, a mute play supposed to resemble greatly the Java mute plays. I liked the Kathakali very much.

Then to Calicut where a strange incident took place. Always, something happens if people take me out in procession. I can't stand being dragged about and usually I jump out of the car. At Calicut I got fed up with the rate of progress—I jumped out of the car and started walking ahead of it briskly. This was not very successful, so I seized hold of a bicycle from a volunteer and cycled away, the poor volunteer running on in front to show me the way! It was a curious sight and the assembled multitude was much taken aback and did not know what to make of it. Their garlands remained unused, except for one adventurous youth who made a successful attempt to lassoo me with his garland.

From Calicut to Coimbatore, where we had perhaps the biggest of our meetings. And then away by car to Ooty—two hours stop there, a visit to the botanical gardens, etc.,—and off again—stops and addresses on the way. At one place a procession and a big meeting and a municipal reception, and at last at about 10 p.m., Mysore, after having motored about 195 miles that day. We were the guests of the Maharaja and were comfortably installed in a guest house. We spent a busy day in Mysore, which included several meetings and addresses, visits to the Cauvery dam and to the Art and Technological Institutes—a short interview with the Maharaja and dinner with the Dewan, Sir Mirza Ismail,[5] who tried to induce me to agree to go to the Round Table Conference. My companion at dinner was Sir H S Gour's[6] daughter—the father was also somewhere at the dinner table. The young lady seems to have undergone some beauty treatment which has brightened up her complexion. She seemed to be a little more intelligent than her father.

3 Loin cloth.
4 Embroidered cloth.

Then Bangalore—vast crowds and an amazing programme from early morning to night. The flowers and garlands and bouquets we received in Bangalore and Mysore must have cost many hundreds of rupees, perhaps a thousand. We got enormous and most beautiful garlands by the hundred. In our car we were almost in flowers and our railway compartment became a bower or a florist's shop, whichever way you like to put it.

A long twenty four-hour railway journey from Bangalore took us to Hyderabad. We were surprised to find Sarojini, Padmaja and Leilamani[7] boarding our train at a previous station. I did not expect Padmaja would be well enough, but she is a funny girl. She looks well and almost immediately after, all her healthy look vanishes and she looks terribly ill. Some pushing about at Hyderabad station was too much for her and she fainted in our car which she reached with difficulty.

The Hyderabad government was much exercised as to what to do with me. There had been talk of serving me with an order not to indulge in political work but wiser counsels prevailed and nothing was said to me. But probably a hint was dropped to Sarojini to keep me away from mischief. She was keen on my not mixing myself up in public functions. I wanted to rest myself but any inhibition or prohibition

5. (1883 1959), Dewan of Mysore, 1926 41, delegate to the three Round Table Conferences, Prime Minister of Jaipur, 1942 46, Prime Minister of Hyderabad 1946 47.
6. (1872 1949); leader of the opposition in the Central Assembly, 1927-34, first Vice Chancellor of Delhi University, founder and Vice-Chancellor of Saugor University; Member of the Constituent Assembly
7. Leilamani Naidu (1903 1959); daughter of Sarojini Naidu, member of the Indian Foreign Service, 1948 58

mbs me up the wrong way. If a formal order had been served on me I would probably have broken it, technically at least, or else I would not have gone to Hyderabad. Socially, we had a busy time—Sarojini arranged a number of gatherings. I met all the big officials to the accompaniment of 'Mahatma Gandhi ki jai' which was being shouted by large crowds surrounding our house. I met younger people also and found that there was still some little spirit in them. But Hyderabad is a miserable place to live in. Only a worm can stand it for any length of time, but even a worm turns and so far the Hyderabadis have given no exhibition of turning.

On my arrival at the Golden Threshold[8] my first visitors were the Superintendent of Police and the Kotwal of Hyderabad. They offered me their services! A gentle way of telling me that they were interested in me.

And so on to Bombay, with midnight meetings on the way and a great gathering at Sholapur station at 1.30 a.m. and a big crowd at Victoria Terminus.

It has been a great tour, full of incident and interest. Do not judge of it by this letter which is apt to read like an abstract from a guide-book. Everywhere the crowds and the welcomes were overwhelming, and everywhere the welcome was not so much to me as to the Nehru family. Our family has captured the imagination of the millions in this country and 'Nehru' has become a magic word with which you can conjure. It is a great honour and a great responsibility. I feel a little frightened and overwhelmed by my own popularity. It is a great burden to shoulder. So much is expected of one, and one can do so little.

I have utilised part of the afternoon in writing this letter to you. It is Bapu's मौन[9] day and I have to wait till he speaks. The time is drawing near now and my letter must also therefore end. I wonder if the letter is readable. I dosed at several places. However it will give you some idea of our doings.

Give my love to Betty and share this letter with her.

Love,

Your loving
Jawahar

8. Sarojini Naidu's residence at Hyderabad.
9. Silence.

24. On Indian Labour in Ceylon[1]

Sir,

I am far from Lanka but distant echoes from it manage to reach me even here. I am told that some remarks of mine about labour conditions in the Ceylon plantations have been resented and criticised by some people who have described me as a maker of mischief. I am accused of trying to upset the harmony that prevails between the employer and the employed, and sometimes, taking pity on my ignorance, my critics have pointed out to me the many benefits that have come to Indian labourers in Ceylon. In particular, stress is laid on the fact that Indian labour is better off in Ceylon than in its homelands in South India, and a sufficient proof of this is the continuous stream of Indian humanity to Ceylon. Further, it is said that labour conditions in the plantations have vastly improved during the last decade and employers have spent large sums of money in building labour lines and providing other amenities.

I do not deny this. I am well aware that labour conditions have greatly improved in the last few years. I know well also that conditions in South India are bad and starvation drives thousands to seek a living in Ceylon. India has been exploited and misgoverned for generations past and it is no wonder that millions starve here and are driven to accept even a bare pittance so that they may carry on a miserable existence. That is fundamentally the basis and raison d'etre of our urge for political and economic freedom.

But admitting all this, I ventured to describe the attempt that is being made to lower the wage of the Indian labourer as a scandalous thing. In the past years, when dividends of 80 per cent or 100 per cent were declared, what part of them went to the labour that created them? And when the slump comes, the first to suffer must be the labourer. Even in these days of economic depression, to declare a dividend of 35 per cent and in the same breath to talk of lowering the minimum wage seems to me to indicate a mentality that is a danger to society. It is this mentality which always tries to pay the least possible wage to keep body and soul together and at the same time seeks to wring out the biggest dividends from the labour of these wage slaves.

1. Letter to the Editor, The Ceylon Daily News. Republished in The Hindu, 11 July 1931.

1. To Gopal Singh Khalsa[1]

July 1st, 1929

Dear Mr. Gopal Singh,[2]
Your two letters dated April 24th and May 17th have reached me almost simultaneously thus demonstrating the interest that our government takes in our correspondence. I shall gladly send you such literature as we may publish.

I have noted what you say about Miss Grace Boroughs.[3] You know well the kind of persons that our rajas and maharajas are. How can you expect the Congress to improve them? If we did not have a number of people who are always trying to ape the foreigner not in matters of science and intellect but in the foolish things of life we would not be quite so far from freedom.

Yours very sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. A.I.C.C. File No. F.D. 16/1929, p. 33, N.M.M.L.
2. He was then general secretary, Hindustan National Party, San Francisco, U.S.A.
3. An American tourist who was the guest of some Indian princes

2. To K. T. Shah[1]

July 12th, 1929

My dear Mr. Shah,
Your letter of the 1st July reached me rather late owing to my absence from Allahabad. I now enclose, as desired by you, a copy of the draft you had sent me.[2]

I agree with you that with an editorial board in command it may be possible to fit in various contributions and to reduce angularities a great deal. My chief difficulty is that I do not quite see how the various persons you have mentioned are going to cooperate or collaborate together. My father is not likely to be of much help. He is not a man who likes to do much writing and he is generally busy with a number of things. So I doubt if he will agree. Ansari is also a man whose time is taken up by various things and he is not likely to agree. I cannot say anything about Mukul Dey[3] and Raman.[4] But very probably they would be valuable contributors. Kamaladevi might also be useful in a limited way. I do not see exactly how Jinnah will fit in I find there is not very much in common between him and me so far as our outlooks are concerned. Do you think he accepts your economic interpretation of history? Or, for the matter of that, that he has ever given any thought to it or knows much about it? Brelvi ought to help. I agree that Ramanand Chatterji[5] is cast in too ancient a mould to look at things from a modern viewpoint. Tagore is, I suppose, too 'eminent' a person for us even to approach and Mrs. Naidu might contribute a poetic chapter but would otherwise not fit in with your argument. Sivaswami Aiyar,[6] I do not know well. Probably he is good in his own way. Is he not rather stodgy and exceedingly moderate in his outlook? Dange[7] is in jail and likely to remain there. So you might leave him out. Dr. Sumant Mehta ought to be helpful. Sir Jagdish Bose[8] and Subhas Bose are both in their own way very good but I am not sure if they will fit in with your scheme. There is just a possibility of their doing so to a certain extent. As for Satyamurti, it is difficult to say what his viewpoint is in anything. He changes so often. Radhakrishnan,[9] of course, we have already approached. We have sent him a copy of your draft for his suggestions.

1. A.I.C.C. File No. G-61/1929, pp. 1-3, N.M.M.L.
2. For a compilation on Indian politics, economics and culture that Shah proposed to publish for propagating the Indian cause abroad.

I shall write to you more later.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

3. Mukul Chandra Dey (b 1895); well known artist, principal, Government School of Art, Calcutta, 1928 43, curator, National Gallery of Modern Art, New Delhi, 1955-57.
4. C. V. Raman (1888 1970); professor of physics, Calcutta University, 1917-33, director, Indian Institute of Science, Bangalore, 1933-43; awarded the Nobel Prize for physics in 1930.
5. (1865 1943); Editor of the Modern Review for several years.
6. P. S Sivaswami Aiyar (1864 1946); Advocate General, Madras, 1907 12, member of the Executive Council, Madras, 1912-17; a leading Liberal politician
7. S. A. Dange (b 1899); member, A I C.C., 1928, 1929 and 1936, member, Lok Sabha, 1957 62 and 1967-71; one of the founders of the communist movement in India and chairman of the Communist Party of India since 1962
8. Jagdish Chandra Bose (1858 1937); an eminent botanist famous for his researches establishing that plants are not manimate.
9. Sarvepalli Radhakrishnan (b 1888); professor of philosophy at Calcutta and Oxford, ambassador to the Soviet Union, 1949-52; Vice-President of India, 1952 62, President of India, 1962 67.

3. To S. A. Brelvi[1]

July 16th, 1929

My dear Brelvi,
I have your letter of the 14th July. Of course, your Congress Muslim Party has my fullest support and goodwill.[2] I am not sure, however, if the support of a person like me who, I am told, is secretly conspiring against the Muslims and in the interests of the Hindu Mahasabha, is likely to be of much value. Such value as it has, you are welcome to it.

Personally, I am a little doubtful of the desirability of fighting communalism through communal organisations but it may be a necessary step. Of that you are the judge. In any event, any attempt to fight communalism, in whatever shape or form, must be welcomed.

With all good wishes,

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. A.I.C.C. File No. G-5/1929 (Pt. II), p. 273, N.M.M.L.
2. Brelvi was the chairman of the Bombay branch of the All India Nationalist Muslim Party which had been formed in July 1929.

4. To S. A. Brelvi[1]

July 23, 1929

My dear Brelvi,
Mr. T. Braganca Cunha, the secretary of the Congress committee in Goa, desires me to write to you about him. He is at present interested in getting back a large number of people who had been taken under false pretences from Goa to the Assam plantations. I know personally how terrible is the condition of the people in these plantations. It is real slavery of the worst kind. I wish we could raise the matter on a big scale in India. Events however force our hands and crisis after crisis comes, which prevents attention being given to such matters.

1. A.I.C.C. File No. A-4/1929-31, p. 35, N.M.M.L.

I understand that a new governor is coming to Portuguese India. He has announced that he is coming to suppress the nationalist movement here. The gentleman is a military man responsible for the ruthless suppression of a revolt in Porto[2] last year. His advent has been preceded by Indians in the Portuguese services in Goa being replaced by Portuguese. It may be that you will get communications on this subject from Braganca Cunha. He is a tolerably reliable individual. His English is weak. If they are worthy of publication, I hope you will publish them. The press in Goa, as you perhaps know, has been gagged by a stiff censorship.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

2 A town in Portugal.

5. To Dan Singh[1]

August 14th, 1929

Dear Mr. Dan Singh,[2]
I have your letter of the 12th July. I agree with you that it serves little purpose to talk about India's message to the world so long as India is unfree. Our job is to get free first and then to talk of messages I do not personally believe in any country being the chosen of the Lord. I think that all countries have some message for the rest of humanity and none have a monopoly of this.

I thank you for your good wishes. As for your imagining that I am going to do great things in the future, I would only say that you and our friends abroad should not put too much faith on any individual. The task is too big for anyone single-handed. What the future will bring the future alone will show.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 AICC File No FD 16/1929, p. 39, NMML.
2. Then a resident of New York, he later became a leader of the Methodist Church in India.

6. To Rash Mohan Roy[1]

August 16th, 1929

Dear Sir,[2]
I have received your letter of the 5th August together with your note on the Hindu Mission.[3] I have read your note with interest It seems to me from reading your note that the people of the Khasi and the Jaintia hills are not in any need of outside missions. Their ideals seem to be of the highest and they have the advantage of having no caste system or untouchability. Further, the women seem to be economically free.

Personally, I do not believe in proselytising missions. Of course, any person who gives education or medicine or otherwise helps the people should be welcome.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. A.I.C.C. File No. G-40/1929 (Pt. III), p. 487, N.M.M.L.
2. A resident of Mawkhar in Assam
3. Members of this mission, led by Swami Satyananda, were then active in Assam.

7. To the Editor, The Scholar[1]

Camp Calcutta
August 19th, 1929

Dear Sir,
I have your letter of the 10th August. I am sorry I am wholly unable to send you a contribution for your annual. I should have liked to do so as I appreciate the good work that your journal is doing.

I should like to send you, however, my best wishes. During the few days I had the privilege of spending in Kerala last year I was charmed by the beauty of the land and I felt how, in many ways, it was an ideal place to live in. At the same time I received many shocks when I saw or heard of the treatment of man by man in this beautiful land. Today all over the world men who think at all aspire to social equality in the widest sense of the term, including as far as is possible, economic equality, but in Kerala there is the very opposite of social equality. Every newspaper and magazine must therefore make it its first business to join the crusade against this relic of an ancient past which is unjust in itself and is holding back India from her onward march. I trust that your monthly will also help in this crusade.

1. A.I.C.C. File No. G-40/1929 (Pt. III), p 517, N.M.M.L.
A journal published from Palghat.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

8. To Shambu Nath Hakhu[1]

Camp Calcutta
August 25th, 1929

Dear Shambunathji,[2]
Your letter has been forwarded to me here. I am sorry to learn of your difficulties. I am afraid, however, that I am wholly unable to write to the various gentlemen you have named. I am very strongly opposed to this method of securing appointments by personal recommendations and I have not written any such letters in the past in spite of great pressure.

I really cannot understand why a strapping young person like you should go about begging for appointments. I feel you have gone to work the wrong way. If you had attached yourself to any municipality as an unpaid apprentice you would have found it much easier to get on later.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. A I C C. File No G-40/1929 (Pt. IV), p 597, N.M.M.L.
2 A resident of Srinagar, Kashmir.

9. To Devi Das Vaid[1]

Camp Gorakhpore
October 7th, 1929

Dear Sir,[2]

I have your letter. I do not know how I can be of help to you. Do you not think that it is not very fair to try one's luck in the usual channels opened by the government and having failed therein to turn towards national service? Still, I am glad that you desire to do public work. But please remember that public work does not consist of speaking at meetings or writing in the press. That is only the show part of it and the least important part of it. Indeed, it would be a good thing if our young men paid no attention to it. An intellectual person who wants to do public work must qualify for it by an ardent study of politics and economics and sociology and the many theories for the betterment of society that are being discussed today. From your letter it appears that you have not made any such study yet. You yourself say that you know very little of politics. How then can you expect to help?

You seem to be afraid of working as an ordinary volunteer. Of course, it is good that you do not desire to be a mere demonstrator but you must not imagine that because of a little intellectual training you are superior to the average volunteer or the manual worker. In our country there is a strange idea that a person with a little literary training is superior to the manual worker. The result is a large number of unemployed in our educated classes.

I am afraid I cannot help you to get a suitable training. I do not know what you think about me. Evidently you have a very wrong conception when you talk of my "train of followers". I do not carry about a train or even a single individual with me. I do not believe in this system of people having followers of this kind. A young man like you, who has gone through college, should surely have learnt enough to carry your own education further and to train yourself.

It is wholly immaterial what the dominating public men of the Punjab may or may not be. If they lack in intelligence or independence or sincerity, it is all the more reason for energetic young men to do honest public service. There is always room for such a young man if he has got enough go in him.

1. AICC. File No. G-40(a)/1929(Pt. III), pp 495-497, NMML.
2. A resident of Lahore.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

10. To Nripendra Chandra Bannerji[1]

October 7th, 1929

My dear Bannerji,
Thank you for your letter. When in Lucknow I got a telegram from Subhas asking me for my consent to the inclusion of my name in the All India Memorial Committee for Jatin Das. I consented. I could not do otherwise. I did not know in what relation this committee stood to your committee. It is very unfortunate that there should always be the element of competition in our national activities. There is so much work to be done and so few workers. Yet somehow each one of us wants to take the credit for work oneself and not to allow others to do anything important.

The names you mention for your Board of Eleven are good. Youth leagues will of course help you.

I am afraid you are not likely to remain out of jail for long. The government seems to be bent on having you. Perhaps most of us will follow you a little later. It is a funny world.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 AICC, File No. G 64/1929, p. 61, NMML.

11. To T. L. Ahobalacharya[1]

Camp Gorakhpore
October 7th, 1929

Dear Sir,[2]

I have received a copy of your open letter addressed to me. The letter raises so many interesting questions that it is impossible for me to answer it with any satisfaction unless I write a long essay or a little book on the subject. One thing, however, I should like to suggest to you. Either the various men and women in our country who are working in the political as well as in other fields and who do not happen to be working exactly in the manner you would like them to do are are all knaves or fools or else they may have sufficient justification for the kind of work they may be doing. I suppose you would agree with me that there are a fair number of intelligent and honest people in the public life of our country. Some of them, at any rate, have taken the trouble of studying social, economic and political questions. Some of them also have taken the trouble of studying the cooperative movement of which you are such an advocate. If this is so then it does not help at all to be imagining that everybody else except oneself is mistaken

I may inform you that so far as I am personally concerned I am a very firm believer in the cooperative principle. I believe in it so much that I would like to introduce it in all departments of the state, including the whole structure of government. I would like to have a cooperative commonwealth and even to extend it on an international scale. If that is the ideal, the problem before us is how we can reach it. Cooperation has made a most tremendous progress in some of the Western countries. It has made very little progress in India. Why is this so? Partly because the government is not really desirous of increasing the cooperative spirit of the people. The whole structure of cooperation in India is an official ridden structure.

It is of course possible to some extent to encourage private cooperative organisations and no doubt this should be done wherever possible.

1. AICC. File No. G-64/1929, pp 63-64, NMML.
2. (b. 1906); a journalist associated with labour organizations.

But it cannot be done on any large scale except by the state or with state help. It becomes necessary, therefore, to have political control before we can advance rapidly in any direction, whether that direction is cooperation or education or sanitation or anything else. What is necessary really is the development of the spirit of cooperation which is singularly absent in India. That can only come with proper education which is wholly lacking.

While, therefore, we can in our own way try to help by means of cooperation or otherwise, real help can only come on a nation-wide scale after political control is gained. That control, I agree with you, should be gained by the peasantry. Let the peasants control the destinies of India, and I have no doubt that the peasantry will flourish exceedingly. The problem before us is—how is the peasantry going to control India? To that we have to address ourselves. To ignore the political problem is to waste our energies in a fruitless effort.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

12. To Master Tara Singh[1]

10/10/29

Dear Master Tara Singh,[2]

I have to thank you for your kind invitation to attend the session of the Sikh League at Lyallpur. I would have very much liked to attend but unhappily it is hardly possible for me to do so now....

I have no doubt that under your able guidance the Sikh League will lay down a brave and forward policy for the future. Unhappily, during the past year there has been a great deal of misapprehension and mistrust and many Sikh friends have expressed their disagreement with certain provisions in the All Parties Report.[3] The recent statement on

1. A.I.C.C. File No. G-93/1929, p. 5, N.M.M.L. Extracts.
2. (1885-1967); prominent Sikh leader of the Punjab, a supporter after 1947 of the 'Punjabi Suba'.
3. The annual session of the Sikh League held at Gujranwala on 22 October 1928 passed a resolution objecting to the communal representation proposed in the Nehru Report and demanding instead reservation of at least 30% of the seat in the local legislature and the same proportion of representation from the Punjab to the central legislature on a system of joint electorates and plural constituencies.

this subject by Pandit Motilal Nehru, I hope, has gone a long way in allaying these suspicions and removing the mistrust.[4] The suggestions made in the All Parties Report obviously cannot be considered final and irrevocable. It is for all of us to meet together in a spirit of mutual confidence and forbearance and try to find other and better solutions of the problems that confront us, if the proposals already made are inadequate.

Personally, as you know, I am opposed to the idea of political or economic rights being given to an individual or a group on the basis of religion. In other words, I am entirely opposed to what is now usually called 'communalism'. The profession and practice of a religion ought to give cultural rights, if there is a separate culture, and of course religious rights. But beyond that, I feel, is an invasion of another domain. I have no doubt that when India is free these communal troubles and friction will automatically disappear. The country will then have to face more vital issues which affect the community as a whole and not merely a small part of it.

The Sikhs have, during the past eight years, by their disciplined courage, earned an honourable position in the struggle for national freedom. The struggle is entering a new and more critical phase and soon may absorb all our energy and vitality. Already the blood tingles in the veins and the call to the field of action becomes louder and louder. Brave men and women cannot say 'no' to that call, and the Sikhs do not lack brave men and women.

I earnestly trust that at this critical moment in our nation's history your League will take a broad and national view and will throw its full weight on the side of those who seek to put an end to all exploitation in India.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

[4] In his letter of 27 August 1929 to Sardul Singh Caveeshar, Motilal Nehru assured the Sikhs that their legitimate interests would be safeguarded but warned them that boycott of the Congress would be harmful.

13. To K. P. Choubey[1]

Camp Mussoorie
October 21st, 1929

Dear Sir,
I have received your letter and am exceedingly sorry to learn of your difficulties. As you say yourself such cases are not uncommon in our country and it is really not possible to give any kind of individual help. One cannot cure poverty by giving alms but by removing the cause of poverty. It is obvious that you cannot continue borrowing money from your friends and relatives. Probably you will be inclined to get work of a clerical kind and have failed to do so. I would suggest that you should try work which involves manual labour. This is easier to obtain than clerical work. For some foolish reason it is considered below one's dignity to do manual work although living on others' charity is not so considered.

You are young and I would strongly advise you to search for some manual labour which will be good training for you and will help you for the present at least.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 AICC. File No G40/1929 (Pt IV), p. 711, NMML.

14. To S. E. Stokes[1]

December 5th, 1929

My dear Stokes,[2]
It was a great pleasure to hear from you again. During the last few years I have often thought of you and spoken of you to friends. But like sanyasis of old you had retired so effectively in the mountains that it was difficult to have news of you.

1. AICC. File No G-40(1)/1929(Pt. III), p 301, NMML.
2. A resident of Kotgarh in the Simla hills. His sympathy for the Indian nationalist movement led to his imprisonment in 1921.

It was very good of you to send me your long note. I have read it once already and I hope to do so again. I must confess that I do not for the moment agree with your viewpoint. I think that the course you suggest will be injurious for us and will delay the day of our freedom. The problem is difficult enough and I do not pretend to know of any ready-made solution. I shall certainly think hard about your suggestions. If even so I do not see my way to agree with them or with any of them, you will, I am sure, understand. We have to steer ourselves by our own lights, however dim they may be. In my case they are dim enough; but what am I to do?

I hope you have been keeping well.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

15. To Jahangir Vakil[1]

December 6th, 1929

My dear Jahangir,

....As for the Congress, I cannot say what will happen to it after a year or more. It is quite conceivable that it may become a respectable and sober body doing nothing. For the moment, however, it is undoubtedly the most powerful political organisation in the country and it would be folly to ignore it or to break it....

Don't be distressed overmuch and in future do not write to me only a tenth part of what you would like to. Give it hot. It will do me good and you will feel relieved afterwards.

Ever yours,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. AICC. File No. G-40(I)/1929(Pt III), P. 311, NMML. Extracts.

16. Message to The Light of the World[1]

The name of the new magazine is very ambitious. I can only hope that it will derive some inspiration from its name, and will take the torch of freedom to the many dark corners in this country where sorrow dwells and misery is a constant companion.

1 9 December 1929. A.I.C.C File No G-40(i)/1929(Pt III), p 373, N.M.M.L
A magazine started in Bombay.

17. To R. V. Dhulekar[1]

Allahabad
January 16th, 1930

My dear Dhulekar,[2]
Thank you for a copy of your open letter to me. I have read it carefully.

Regarding the framing of the constitution I am afraid I do not agree with you that it is necessary at this stage. When the All Parties Committee was constituted they were criticised on the ground that constitutions are framed after the struggle and not before. I think the criticism was justified. India will find no difficulty in evolving her constitution at the right moment. Any present attempt to do so is bound to divert attention from the real struggle.

This does not mean that we should not lay down certain general principles. The first principle that we may take it that the Congress has laid down is the severance of the British connection. The second principle which it has laid down, though not absolutely unequivocally, is that in an independent India there should be no communalism. The third principle, which I should like it to lay down, is the rights of the peasants and workers. I should like the Congress to adopt an economic programme for them.

1. A.I.C.C File No G-40/1930, pp 141-143, N.M.M.L.
2 Raghunath Vinayak Dhulekar (b 1891), Congressman from Jhansi, imprisoned several times during the freedom movement; member of the U.P. Legislative Assembly, 1937-39 and 1946-50, of the Constituent Assembly, 1946-50, and the Lok Sabha, 1952-57.

I do not quite understand how the Congress as an organisation can interfere with the youth organisation. The two organisations are both necessary to the country and there is no inherent conflict though occasionally there may be criticism of each other. Many of the leading personalities in the youth movement are Congressmen. That is right. But how the Congress as such can start youth movements, I fail to see.

Regarding the national service fund that you suggest, the Working Committee had actually recommended a resolution encouraging provinces to do so on the lines of the U.P. But when the Subjects Committee defeated the resolutions regarding autonomous committees of the Congress we did not put forward the national service resolution. The Working Committee thought that a national service in order to be efficient must keep apart from the party intrigues in Congress committees and should therefore be put in charge of trustees appointed by the provincial committee. When this principle of autonomy was not accepted by the Subjects Committee it was not thought necessary to bring forward a similar resolution regarding national service. I propose, however, to circularise the provincial committees on the subject and recommend to them the example of the U.P. I do not think it is possible at this moment to start any all-India service; provinces must have their particular services.

Regarding the organisation of peasants and labour I have already hinted above, as I stated in my presidential address,[3] that the Congress must lay down an economic programme for them. This programme is not likely to go as far as, for instance, the programme of the T.U.C., but it should go far enough. Apart from laying down this programme and providing for the inclusion of direct representatives of labour organisations on Congress committees I do not think the Congress can do much. I do not think Congress committees as such can start labour unions. As one interested in labour I would object to this because it would mean that committees consisting of all kinds of people are exploiting labour. Labour can only grow on its own feet. Other people coming in will tone it down, and not up. Of course, this does not mean that Congressmen should not identify themselves with labour and help in its organisation. That they must do. Also, the executives of labour organisations and the Congress must cooperate with each other in both the national struggle and the economic struggle.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

3. See ante, section 5, item 2.

18. To C. V. J. Chetty[1]

January 27th, 1930

Dear Sir,[2]
I have your letter of the 20th January. It is difficult for me to deal with the points you raise. It is for the secretary of the All India Spinners' Association to consider them. He will no doubt write to you on the subject. I might say however that I entirely agree with you that we should follow the principle of small profits and quick returns. This is good business. That principle had been adopted by the A.I.S.A. I am not sure how far they can enforce it on semi independent concerns.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 AICC File No G 40/1930, p 273, NMML.
2 A khaddar merchant of Salem, Tamil Nadu.

19. To K. S. Venkatramani[1]

February 1st, 1930

Dear Mr. Venkatramani,[2]
I have to thank you for your book Renascent India[3] which you were good enough to send me some little time ago. Unfortunately I have not had much time to read books recently but your books are so charmingly written that it is a pleasure to read them. I am afraid I do not agree with the solutions offered by you. I doubt very much that India can ever be free unless it goes through the whirlpool.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal

1 AICC File No G 40/1930, p 321, NMML.
2. A well known writer who wrote Renascent India, Paper Boats, A Day with Sambhu and other books.
3. Published in 1928

20. To Durbar Secretary, Rewa State[1]

February 25th, 1930

Dear Sir,

We have received many complaints in our office about conditions in Rewa State. We are informed inter alia that no meetings of any kind are permitted in the state without the special permission of the district magistrate, and meetings of a political kind or in criticism of the administration are never permitted. There is thus no freedom of association in your state; nor, we understand, is there any freedom of speech or press.

Further, we are told that recently a new settlement took place whereunder an enhancement of 50% revenue was made.

It is also stated that Madhusudan Prasad Dixit, a resident and zamindar of Rewa, was arrested about the 10th August 1926, and was secretly sentenced for some offence to 20 years' imprisonment. Attempts made to get a copy of the judgement in the case or to get any particulars about him have entirely failed. The records of the case have not been shown to the lawyers engaged on his behalf.

I mention some allegations made to us here. As a matter of fact many other serious allegations have been made. It is not the custom of this office to give publicity to any such matter without finding out its correctness. I am therefore writing to you to request you if the facts mentioned above are correct or not. On hearing from you the matter will be referred to in the Congress Bulletin that is issued from this office from time to time.

I should also like to know if it is possible for people to be sent to your state to carry on personal investigations in regard to the complaints made and if such persons can expect the cooperation of the state authorities in their work.

Yours faithfully,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. AICC. File No G 17/1930 1931, pp. 23 25, NMML.

21. Statement to the Press[1]

I have read the report of the Patiala Enquiry Committee appointed by the Indian States Peoples Conference.[2] To say that I have read it with amazement, is to put it mildly. It has produced a feeling of disgust and nausea in me. Admittedly the enquiry was one-sided and the report is an ex parte document, and as such its conclusions cannot be considered as final. But, as it is pointed out, under the circumstances it could not have been otherwise. The evidence that is given certainly supports the conclusion that a strong prima facie case has been made out. It is a monstrous thing that such charges should be made and no attempt to disprove them should be made by one who has autocratic control over the lives and property of large numbers of persons. No person, whoever he may be, can honourably remain silent under this accusation; much less can a prince or a public man. For, those who are in charge of public affairs must be, like Caesar's wife, above suspicion.

1. Allahabad, 8 March 1930. The Hindu, 10 March 1930.
2. This committee was appointed in August 1929 following government inaction on a memorial to the Viceroy from the citizens of Patiala charging the Maharaja with misconduct, misappropriation of public funds and other malpractices. Its report, published in February 1930, upheld the charges.

22. To Sri Prakasa[1]

March 13th, 1930

Dear Sir,

With reference to the resolution of your committee imposing an income-tax of 1% on your members I have to inform you that my personal income is about Rs 150/- per month. This is a rough estimate only as the income is variable, chiefly depending on royalties. As I have not to pay out of this income for my board and lodging and other necessaries, I can give a much larger percentage than 1% for Congress work

1. A.I.C.C. File No G-40/1930, p. 443, N.M.M.L.

I have so far this year given Rs. 210/- to the local Congress committees. To your committee I gave the minimum sum of Rs. 2/- some time ago. I now enclose a cheque for Rs. 98/- thus making the total sum given to your committee, Rs. 100/-. These payments, totalling Rs. 310/-, may be considered the tax for the full year. But I hope to pay more, specially to the local committees, in the course of the year.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

23. To Motilal Nehru[1]

March 28th, 1930

Dear Sir,
Permit me to offer you my grateful thanks for the generous offer you have made of the old Anand Bhawan. It is fitting that this house, which has been associated with the national movement for so many years, should become the property of the nation. It is also in the fitness of things that this dedication to the nation should take place at the auspicious moment when the country is launching on a great national struggle for independence. I am communicating your offer to the members of the Working Committee and, on receipt of their answers, I shall write to you. Meanwhile allow me to express the hope that the old Anand Bhawan, appropriately renamed "Swaraj Bhawan", will play a worthy part in the struggle for freedom and will before long see the establishment of independence in India.

Jawaharlal Nehru
President

1. Gandhi Smarak Sangrahalaya, Serial No. 16731.

24. To Members of the Working Committee[1]

Allahabad
March 28th, 1930

Dear Comrade,

I enclose a copy of a letter dated March 27th from our colleague, Pandit Motilal Nehru, offering his house, the old Anand Bhawan, to the nation. I also enclose a copy of my reply to him.

I think the offer should be accepted. This does not mean that we can take possession of the house soon. In any event it will take a few weeks for Pandit Motilal Nehru to vacate the house, and for us to leave our present office buildings.

I should like, however, members to consider one aspect of this matter. Anand Bhawan is a big rambling house, in some ways particularly fitted for a public institution but at the same time a somewhat expensive house to keep in good condition. The taxes are also fairly heavy. It may be possible to induce the municipality to remit or reduce these taxes on the ground that the building is a national possession, but I cannot be sure of this. Thus the house may become a financial burden on us to some extent at least. It is possible, however, to reduce this burden by suitable arrangements. Anyway, every big house is a burden in this sense.

On the whole I am clearly of opinion that the offer of Pandit Motilal Nehru should be accepted. The Working Committee can consider later to what use we can put such parts of the building as are not occupied by the office.

I shall thank you if you will kindly send me an early answer.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 Gandhi Smarak Sangrahalaya, Serial No 16730.

25. To Father[1]

Allahabad
5/4/30

My dear Father,
I received your letter with its enclosures at Rae Bareli station.

I do not think there is any question of the Working Committee or any members of it accepting your offer patronisingly. Jamnalalji, as you know, is a cautious bania and he was probably afraid, as I was at the beginning, that the property though valuable and desirable may prove a white elephant for the Congress. I have no doubt that the Working Committee will accept your offer. But in view of Jamnalalji's telegram it will be necessary to put the matter up at the next meeting of the Working Committee.

I was a little surprised yesterday on my return to Allahabad to learn the details of the dedication ceremony. I had not looked forward to any such dedication at this stage. My idea was that the national flag should be hoisted by you on the 6th April in token of the resolve on your part that the building should be given to the nation. The question of the transfer of the building at this stage did not arise, nor need we have waited for any acceptance or otherwise. This hoisting would have certainly meant that in future the building would be used for a national purpose. What this purpose would be, would depend on the Working Committee and on you. If the Committee was not willing to accept on your terms then it would be open to you to suggest some other national purpose.

Whatever the Working Committee may or may not do, it seems to me clear that Anand Bhawan must in future be used for a public or national purpose. It is right that this should be so, and after your public offer it would not be desirable to treat it as private property.

I would suggest that the dedication ceremony should be proceeded with. In the course of it you might state that owing to shortness of time your offer has not yet been considered by the Working Committee as a whole and so you cannot say definitely whether they agree to your proposals. But whatever their answer might be, so far as you are concerned you have decided that Anand Bhawan should be given to the nation in some form or other. This form can be decided later —meanwhile, in token of your resolve to give the house to the nation, you were performing the dedication ceremony.

1. J.N. Correspondence, N.M.M.L.

Personally, I am convinced that the Working Committee will gratefully accept your offer.

The only other alternative is postponing the dedication as you suggest. This might be done, though personally I prefer the course I have suggested.

The limitations in your gift are three:

1. The house must be used for the headquarters of the Indian National Congress.
2. The trustees should consist of yourself, Gandhiji and I and the members of the Working Committee.
3. The house must not be sold or mortgaged.

I do not think there is likely to be any marked objection to any of these. I do not very much care for the second limitation.

The very fact that you value the house greatly for sentimental reasons is a strong reason why the house should be used for some national purpose and should not be sold to a private owner.

Some of the Working Committee members have already sent their views to the office. If you have not seen these letters, please send for them.

Sri Prakasa is going to Allahabad tonight. You might discuss the matter with him. I have not been able to show him your letter.

Sri Prakasa will also tell you of the happenings in Rae Bareli.

I reach Allahabad by the down mail on Monday the 7th.

Your loving son,
Jawahar

26. To Krishna Nehru[1]

Delhi
21.2.31

Betty darling,

I seem to be hung up here indefinitely and I do not know when I shall return. This is rather disconcerting as there are so many things which I want to do in Allahabad. I had hoped to get a clear week there to settle in consultation with the family our domestic affairs. So far the whole burden had fallen on father and all of us were relieved by his loving care and foresight of a host of difficulties. His amazing love for his children enveloped us and protected us and we lived our lives freed in a large measure from the care and anxiety which most people have to face. The very thought of him was a comfort and he was a tower of strength and a refuge whenever the hard facts of life confronted us. We have to do without him now and as every day passes I feel his absence the more and a terrible loneliness takes hold of me. But we are children of our father and have something of his great strength and courage, and whatever the trials and difficulties that may come our way we shall face them with resolution and with the determination to overcome them. I want so much to discuss the future with all the members of the family. But circumstances have driven me here and I do not know when I shall go back. If I get even a couple of days off I shall go to Allahabad. Meanwhile, I am writing to you, but this letter is a poor substitute for a talk. Soon I hope I shall supplement it with a long talk.

1 Nehru's Letters to His Sister (London, 1963), pp 19 20.

I have not been able to examine father's papers yet. But probably he has not left a will or any directions in regard to the property he has left. It was not necessary for him to leave a formal will as even a hint of his wishes would have had the force of law for us. We have therefore to do without any direction from him and have to decide for ourselves what we should do.

Technically, in law, I suppose I am the heir of his property. But my own inclination is against inheriting property or at any rate living on inherited or unearned increment. Circumstances today are such, however, that if I have to devote myself to public work I cannot at the same time earn a livelihood. After considering the matter impersonally and dispassionately I think it will not be right for me to stop my public activities at this stage and direct my attention to money-making. I have no doubt that I can earn enough, if I so choose, to live in tolerable comfort. But it would not have been father's wish that I should turn to money-making now.

In any event, however, I can only consider myself as a joint sharer in father's property, the other sharers being mother and you. I am not including Nan as she stands in no need of money. I would like you, therefore, to consider yourself as an equal sharer with mother and me of father's property. Indeed, mother and you are the real sharers. I am a trustee for the family property. We shall discuss this matter more when we meet. But I want you to be clear about one thing. You are in no way dependent on me. You have as much right, indeed more, to father's property as I have.

We have also to discuss other matters—your future programme—what you propose to do. I promised some months back to give you plenty of work. You shall have it if you so desire. But the main thing is to be perfectly clear in one's own mind as to what one wants to do.

Look after mother and yourself.

Your loving brother,
Jawahar

27. To Khwaja Ahmad Abbas[1]

March 12, 1931

My dear Friend,[2]

Thank you for your letter of the 7th. You owe me no apology for the letter you sent me to Delhi. I was quite pleased to read it. I like spirit in a young man and it delighted me to find that you were full of it. You are perfectly right in feeling that our opponents are masters in the art of diplomacy and they might mislead us.

I could not remain in Delhi for further discussions as I had to come back to Allahabad for certain ceremonies in connection with my father's death. I shall be back in Delhi in a few days' time when I understand further talks on the question of Hindu-Muslim unity will take place.

Regarding the Indian states and their rulers I have no doubt whatever in my mind that the rulers will have to go completely. Whether it is possible to dispose of them soon or late depends on circumstances.

I am sorry I have not got any photograph of mine at present which I can send you. When I have one, I shall do so.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. AICC File No G-40(KW)(n)/1931 (Pt 1), p. 103, NMML.
2. (b. 1914); well known journalist and film producer.

28. To Chairman, Allahabad Municipal Board[1]

Sir,

It has been brought to my knowledge on my return to Allahabad, after a lengthy absence, that a controversy has arisen in the Board regarding the naming of a park or building. I would not have troubled you or the Board with this letter, if I had not learnt to my surprise that my name was involved in this controversy. I am writing as it is extremely distasteful to me that I should become the subject of a controversy in such a matter.

I do not know exactly what the question at issue is. I gather that some member has proposed that a street or park be named after me. I further understand that some other member has proposed that the late Maulana Mohamed Ali's name should be given either to the same street or park or to another. I am grateful for the kind thought which prompted this conferment of civic immortality on me, but for two reasons I am very much averse to it. The first reason is one of principle. I am strongly of opinion that streets, parks and public buildings should never be named after living persons. When I had the honour of being chairman of your Municipal Board, it was my intention to bring this matter up formally before the Board and to get a resolution passed, if the Board agreed with me, to the effect that no name of a living person be given to any public thoroughfare or building or place of resort. Owing to my resignation, I could not do so, but I have continued to hold the same opinion, and with all respect I would like to bring this before you and the Board that such a resolution would give a very desirable lead to other boards and would eliminate a great deal of personal controversy in future. We are apt to exaggerate the importance of living persons. It is far safer to permit history to judge of their importance before we try to perpetuate it. For this fundamental reason, I would beg you and the Board not to consider my name in this connection. I hope I have many years yet to live, and the time to judge of my work or services is not yet.

My second reason is a personal one. The Maulana was a true comrade of mine with whom I had the honour of standing shoulder to shoulder in many national struggles. It is inconceivable to me that my name should be pitted against his in any matter, and it would be a matter of grief for me should my own Board, with which I have had such intimate relations, do so. The Allahabad Municipal Board and the city of Allahabad will honour themselves if they perpetuate the name of Maulana Mohamed Ali in our city. I would beg of you, therefore, as well as the Board that my name should not be considered in regard to the naming of any public way or place of resort. Should you desire it, you can place this letter before the members of the Board informally or formally.

1. Written before 14 March 1931. The Hindu, 16 March 1931.

Jawaharlal Nehru

29. The Economic Exploitation of India[1]

INSURANCE AND BANKING

For the past ten years India has worked for the boycott of foreign cloth. The exploitation of India has been carried on for long in a variety of ways, some obvious enough, many others veiled and deceptive. Cloth was chosen as the major item of our boycott not only because it represents a great drain from India but also because it has been the classic example of exploitation in India. On the boycott of cloth, therefore, the nation concentrated specially in the course of the last year and met with very great success. The Congress stood primarily for khaddar so that millions of spinners and weavers might profit by the boycott and develop their ancient subsidiary industry again. But in order to make the boycott a complete success every effort was made by the Congress to secure the cooperation of Indian cloth manufacturers, and to this cooperation was due largely the success of the boycott of foreign cloth. Indian manufacturers of cloth have naturally profited by this boycott which was to their advantage. The Congress had hoped that the profits secured by them would not be used for personal advantage but would go towards the betterment of labour which so sorely needs better conditions. The Congress also hoped to induce them to promise to assist in every way in freeing India from other forms of foreign exploitation. It must be realised that cloth is not the only form of this exploitation although, for historical as well as practical reasons, we have laid the greatest stress on cloth. If we are to free the country from the burden of foreign exploitation and vested interests, we must pay sufficient attention to these other forms also and specially to the hidden and veiled forms which take the life-blood from the country without our people realising it.

1. The Hindu, 24 March 1931.

With this object in view a form of undertaking was circulated on behalf of the Congress to Indian cloth manufacturers and they were asked to sign it. In this they undertook to assist Indian enterprises in the fields of insurance, banking and the like. I am glad to say that a very large number of cloth manufacturers agreed to this undertaking. Some who did not were placed on the ban by the Congress. It is hoped that before long every firm manufacturing cloth in India will agree to this undertaking and we shall carry on our campaign with redoubled energy for the elimination of foreign domination in the economic sphere.

FOREIGN INSURANCE BUSINESS

One of the directions in which leakage of national resources is taking place is the field of insurance. I understand that under this head alone there is a net drain from this country of something like Rs 5 crores a year. It is deplorable that this should be so in spite of the fact that several very reputable insurance institutions exist in this country. It is further deplorable that in this drain many an Indian assists the foreigner, and reputable and otherwise patriotic firms of Indians are acting as the agents or, rather, as the brokers of alien insurance companies. For the sake of some personal advantage, the economic and political freedom of the country is thus put in jeopardy. I hope that all Indians will realise the importance of stopping this drain of insurance money and patronise only Indian institutions. If there are not enough Indian institutions to undertake all the work that exists in India today, it should be easy enough for our industrial and commercial people to start additional companies. Every rupee which an Indian spends must be spent with discrimination and with a definite desire for creating work in India for our own people, so that the savings of our people may remain in the country and may help nascent enterprises.

BANKING

Insurance and shipping and various kinds of trade drain money from this country. But the place of honour in the field of foreign exploitation must be given to the alien banking institutions. In any country the banks play a very important part. Behind the democratic structure of parliaments it is really the great banks that dictate policy and largely control it. It has become a recognised axiom that unless the state controls the banks for the public good, the banks will control the state for their own good. In India the position is, however, a far more difficult one than that which prevails in free countries. Foreign banks work in this country as a part of the commercial operations of their own nationals. The British banks are members of the British Chamber of Commerce and they share their outlook. British trade helps British banking, and British banking helps British trade. There are at present as many as 19 foreign banks in India. They have a monopoly in the field of foreign exchange and the financing of foreign trade. They work in this country in a closed ring through an association of their own. They have developed such strength that it is impossible for any Indian institution to come on the scene and to expect to operate without heavy losses being inflicted on it. Not being content with their activities at the ports and in the field of foreign trade, the foreign banks have invaded the interior of India and they are now engaged in the operations of ordinary commercial banking with reference to internal trade. They have opened more branches and have increased their activities at the older branches in such a manner that they not only compete seriously with all Indian institutions, but have also inflicted a definite setback to the Imperial Bank of India. Towards Indian institutions they have been notoriously hostile. They refuse all cooperation and they have shown a spirit of intolerance of Indians not only in the field of banking but also in shipping and insurance. Before giving assistance to their clients they demand assurances that the shipping and insurance would be effected through foreign institutions. In their personnel no Indian finds a place either of honour or dignity. It is very doubtful if they are even paying proper taxes in this country on the heavy profits which they should be making.

INDIAN SUPPORT

The tragedy of the whole situation appears to be that their people operate in India not from monies which they bring over from abroad but from money deposited with them by our own people. The amount of such deposits, I understand, has increased in the last 30 years by over 700 per cent, and they have today between Rs. 70 to Rs. 80 crores of Indian money in their hands. With this money they have helped the effective transfer of trading operations from Indian hands into foreign hands. The continued existence in this country of these foreign banks in their present position must result in the continued exclusion of Indians from the legitimate handling of the trade of their own country. With resources which they gather in India they are in a position to secure not only banking profits but trading profits for their own nationals, with all the harmful effects on Indian aspirations and Indian enterprise. This is a monstrous situation calling for immediate notice and action. No free country would permit this for any length of time. The foreign banks have found a ready and over-generous hospitality in India but many of them have not scrupled to abuse it by a systematic weakening of Indian institutions and by engineering attacks on them.

It is stranger still that monies are deposited by Indians with these foreign banks actually at a rate lower than they are able to obtain from Indian institutions. Apart from an item of profit of Rs. 80 lakhs on this account alone, these foreign institutions levy a charge on the entire foreign trade of this country ranging from Rs. 500 to Rs. 600 crores. Through their monopoly they are able to make the Indian exporter and the Indian importer, i.e., the Indian producer and the Indian consumer, pay on every item that is taken out of this country and on every item that is imported into this country. This profit on the exchange transaction alone is reckoned at something well over a crore of rupees. In addition, these banks render all kinds of services to their clients and charge for them. They earn interest and they make their ordinary banking profits, inflicting a collective drain on this country, which, as a whole, it would be difficult to estimate at anything less than Rs. 5 crores. The indirect losses to India, not merely in money but in morale, cannot be estimated.

Some of these foreign banking institutions are so powerful that they attempt to buy out the best established banking institutions in India. Is this a position which any Indian can contemplate with a sense of safety or security? Under these circumstances Indian enterprise must languish. And yet, because Indian institutions do not always flourish as they should, our opponents preach to us and tell us that we are unable to look after our own affairs and must therefore leave it to them to run our country and its business.

NEED FOR ECONOMIC FREEDOM

We are carrying on a great struggle for political freedom. It is well to realise, however, that political freedom is a delusion without economic freedom. If we merely concentrate on that political side of freedom we shall find that our exploitation will continue and our last state will be worse than the first. A time will come, I hope, when a politically free India will control her economic resources and will not permit anyone to exploit them for the benefit of a few. The key industries, I hope, will be controlled by the state. Today even the state is not ours, so there can be no question of its controlling them. But even today we must be clear that economic exploitation is the real thing to be aimed at and put an end to. And in this economic exploitation, banks play a dominating part. Even now we can observe an interaction of economic forces on political thoughts and events. The attempts being made by foreign exploiters to retain their present privileged position in the economic field in India, under cover of phrases like 'equal rights and opportunities', throws a lurid light on the realities of the situation. It would be a poor gain to us, if gain at all, if in our removing the political disabilities of India we confirm her financial and economic disabilities. I would therefore beg of the country to ponder over these questions and to set itself out to put an end to all foreign exploitation. Every Indian should give undoubted preference to an Indian institution and should lay stress on the fact that it is run for the good of the many and not merely for the good of the few. No foreign institution should be allowed to function in India to the detriment of the Indian people.

GLOSSARY

Aghan Badi	the fortnight of the ninth month of the Hindu lunar calendar when the moon is waning
Ashram	hermitage
Azadi	independence
Barat	a bridegroom's wedding procession
Bare Mian	respectful Urdu appellation for an elderly person
Bela	jasmine
Chaprasi	peon, attendant
Choldari	small tent
Chowk	city square, street crossing
Chowkidar	watchman
Chowkidari	the watchman's occupation or wages
Dahi	curds
Dallia	broken wheat boiled with milk or water
Darshan	view of a person
Durrie	mat woven from cotton yarn
Ghar	house
Inqilab	revolution
Inqilab Zindabad	long live revolution
Jaykars	cheers
Khatta	a sour fruit
Kotwali	police-station
Lambardar (Numberdar)	convict overseer; cultivator responsible for collection of government dues from his village
Magh	eleventh month of the Hindu lunar calendar
Mainas	mynas
Masala	spices
Murraba	sweet pickle, preserve, jam
Namda	woollen rug

Naoroz	the New Year Day observed by Kashmiri pundits, which falls on 1 Vaisakh; also the name for the Parsi New Year Day
Newar	thick white cotton tape used in weaving a bed
Pagli	alarm raised in jail to signify an emergency
Panna	cold drink made from green mangoes; a sweet made from milk
Safayas	cleaners
Sanyasi	ascetic
Sattu	cold drink made from ground wheat, gram or barley
Surai	long necked earthen pitcher
Takli	spindle with disc at the bottom for drawing thread from cotton slivers
Tulsi	basil
Vaisakh	second month of the Hindu lunar calendar
Vaisakh Badi	the fortnight of Vaisakh when the moon is waning

INDEX

(Biographical footnotes are italicized)

Abbas, Khwaja Ahmad, 586 & fn
A.B.C. of Relativity (Bertrand Russell), 337, 387
Abhyudaya, 318 fn
Abraham, 556
Acharya, N.N., 91 & fn
A Day with Sambhu (K.S. Venkataramani), 578 fn
Adhikari, J., 254
Afghanistan, 241
———, Amir of (Amanullah), 293 fn
Aga Khan, 363 fn
Aga, Rup Kishan, 341
Agra, 21 & fn, 143, 309, 330, 342, 349 & fn, 353, 360, 442, 443, 499, 500
Ahmad, Shamsuddin, 67 & fn, 77
Ahmedabad, 6 fn, 22 fn, 251 fn, 276, 280, 282, 285, 304, 327 fn, 401, 523
Ahobalacharya, T.L., 571 & fn
Aiyar, P.S. Sivaswami, 564 & fn
Akbarpur (U.P.), 283
Alexandria, 52 & fn
Ali, Manzar, 357, 421
———, Maz, 100 & fn
———, Maulana Mohamed, 98 & fn, 99, 335, 587, 588
———, Sadiq, 310 & fn
———, Maulana Shaukat, 524
Allahabad, 5—7, 10 fn, 14, 34, 38, 40, 68, 103 fn, 111, 120, 121, 143, 148, 155, 156, 159, 164, 167 fn, 206, 209 fn, 211, 213, 214, 219, 223, 224, 230, 231, 240, 244, 246, 253, 255 fn, 266, 271, 273, 276, 279, 280, 290, 295, 297, 303—305, 310—314, 320, 321 fn, 322 fn, 323, 325, 328 fn, 330 fn, 331, 336 fn, 337, 344 fn—348, 351, 360, 364, 374 fn, 379, 385, 387, 395, 397, 401, 405 fn, 420, 421 & fn, 424—426, 428—430, 433, 434, 436, 447, 477, 478, 486, 487 488, 495 fn, 517, 520, 521, 523 fn, 528, 533, 547, 553, 563, 576, 582—588
Allahabad Municipal Board, 587, 588
Allahabad Youth League, 6, 16, 17
All Bengal Students Conference, 5
All Ceylon Trade Union Congress, 42 fn, 86 fn
Alleppey (Kerala), 555
All India Congress Committee, 16, 20, 22, 35, 95, 115—117, 122—126, 155, 157, 159, 160, 162, 167, 169, 178, 196, 199, 203, 205 & fn, 208, 218, 219, 227, 231, 239 fn, 251, 265, 271, 276, 279, 280, 282 & fn, 284—288, 304, 310 fn, 324, 351 fn, 371, 376, 391, 392, 399, 403, 436, 439, 451, 477, 513, 523, 524, 529, 564 fn
All India Kisan Sabha, 367 fn
All India Nationalist Muslim Party, 565 & fn
All India Panchayat Parishad, 10 fn
All India Peace Council, 365 fn
All India Posts and Telegraph Employees Union, 305 fn
All India Railwaymens Federation, 36 fn, 305 fn
All India Silk League, 50, 97 fn, 572 & fn, 573
All India Spinners Association, 92, 93, 105, 137, 276, 253, 347, 395—397, 407, 528, 578

All India States Peoples Conference, 10 fn, 580
All India Trade Union Congress, 29 fn, 33, 36 & fn, 40, 44, 45 & fn, 49, 55 & fn, 56, 58 & fn, 63 fn, 77, 166, 257
All India Trade Union Federation, 55 fn
All India Women's Conference, 379 fn
All Parties Committee, 175, 187, 191, 194
———, report of, 188, 261, 335, 439, 572 & fn, 573
Almora (U P), 137 fn, 517
Aluwihare, Bernard, 522 & fn, 535
Amir Khusrau (Mohamed Habib), 337 & fn, 387
Amritsar, 93, 137, 139, 405
Amsterdam Federation of Trade Unions, 71, 77
Anand, 384
Aney, M S, 282 & fn
A New Way with Crime (Fenner Brockway), 364 & fn
Anglo Egyptian Treaty, 52 & fn
An Indian Journey, 388
Ansari, M A, 119, 129, 169, 377, 378, 391, 466 fn, 524 fn, 564
Anti Intimidation Ordinance, 357 fn
Anuradhapura (Sri Lanka), 533 & fn
Apple Cart (Bernard Shaw), 462
Apurna Devi, 363
Ariel ou la Vie de Shelley (Andre Maurois), 337, 387
Arthashastra (Kautilya), 462
Art of Thinking (Ernest Dimnett), 462
Arya Samaj, 550
Arya Sevak Ashram, 112 fn
Ashoka, the Great, 518, 533
Asquith, H H, 456 fn
As You Like It (Shakespeare), 462
Atal, Madan, 338 & fn, 373
Attlee, C R, later Earl, 52 fn
Attock (Pakistan), 213 fn, 335 fn
Avadh, 442, 443
Azad, Maulana Abul Kalam, 68, 336 & fn, 367, 374, 377, 391
———, Chandrashekhar 495 & fn
Azamgarh (U P), 384, 385

Bachha Saqqa, 318 & fn
Backward Classes Commission, 384 fn
Bahraich (U.P.), 220 fn
Bajaj, Jamnalal, 583
Bajpai, R B, 122 & fn, 123, 126, 127
Bakhale, R R, 42 & fn, 47, 48, 55, 58, 62
Baksh, Hayat, 76 & fn
Baldwin, 462
———, Roger, 298, 486
———, Stanley, 52
Ballia (U P.), 180 fn
Ballo, 347
Banaras—see Varanasi
——— Conspiracy Case, 20 fn, 209 fn
——— Hindu University, 13 fn, 88 fn, 303 fn, 367 fn
Bangalore, 113 fn, 527, 529, 550, 557, 564 fn
Banker, Shankarlal, 327
Bannerji, Nripendra Chandra, 493 & fn, 570
Bansgopal, 240 & fn
Bappi, 378
Baquani, Gilbert, 462
Barabanki (U.P.), 492 fn
Bardoli (Gujarat), 134, 277, 287, 399 fn, 553
Bareilly, 21 & fn, 118 fn, 137 fn, 143, 155, 322
Bari, Professor Abdul, 61 fn, 80
Baroda, 344 fn
———, University of, 379 fn
——— State Peoples Conference, 258 & fn
——— State Prajamandal, 258 fn
——— State Subjects Conference, 22 fn
Basti (U P.), 367
Bauria (Bengal), 27
———, jute mills, strike in, 28 & fn, 29
Beal, Samuel, 356 & fn, 388
Beaslay, P, 280 fn
Bengal Jute Workers Union, 62 fn
Bengal Ordinance, 382
Benn, Wedgwood, 102 fn, 189, 357, 458 & fn
Berlin, 105 fn, 131, 267
Bernstein, Henry, 337, 387
Betul (Mysore), 221 fn
Bex (Switzerland), 355, 356

Bhagalpur (Bihar), 417
Bhagat Singh, 8 & fn, 9 fn, 13, 14, 20, 35, 157, 395, 491, 503 & fn, 505 & fn, 506
———, execution of, 8 fn, 500 & fn, 503 & fn, 505, 506
Bhagawad Gita, 327, 355
Bhalla, Mulkraj, 486 & fn
Bhandari, 220 & fn
Bharat, 321 & fn, 325, 327 & fn, 330, 333, 335, 341, 344, 345, 353, 359, 363
Bhargava, Gopichand, 178 & fn
Bhattacharji, Profullo, 74
———, Suresh Chandra, 209 & fn
Bhavnagar, 10 fn
Bhopal, Nawab of, 524 & fn
Bhuwerji, 324 & fn, 338
Bijnor (U.P.), 119
Bikaner, Maharaja of (Ganga Singh), 192 fn
Bismarck (Emil Ludwig), 356 & fn, 360, 388
Biswas, 74
Bojer, Johan, 337 & fn, 387
Bombay, 2, 4, 29, 30, 32, 38—40, 62, 92, 110 fn, 115 fn, 124, 135, 149, 150, 169 fn, 231, 232 & fn, 250, 300, 317, 332, 360, 361, 364, 367, 374, 391 & fn, 392, 400, 405, 408, 413, 439, 456, 493, 494 & fn, 517, 520, 524, 528, 529, 543, 558, 576 fn
———, Congress offices raided at, 405 & fn
———, general strike in, 31 & fn
———, riots in, 4 & fn
Bombay Presidency Youth Conference, 5, 22 & fn
Bombay Youth League, 19 fn, 23
Boroughs, Grace, 563 & fn
Bose, Jagdish Chandra, 564 & fn
———, Subhas Chandra, 29, 34, 55, 56, 69, 77, 78, 97 fn, 129, 130, 177 fn, 205, 207 fn, 226, 227, 228 fn, 476 fn, 564, 570
Botha, General, 24 & fn
Bradley, 346
Braganca Cunha, T., 94, 565, 566
Brailsford, H N, 421, 447
Breen, Dan, 71
Brelvi, S A, 161, 564, 565 & fn
Bridgeman, R, 35, 43, 44, 160, 174, 207
British Chamber of Commerce, 590
British Medical Council, 268
British Trade Union Congress (Council), 71, 77
Broach (Gujarat), 112 fn
Brockway, Fenner, 107, 364
Buddha, Gautama, 531 fn, 533 & fn
Buddhist Records of the Western World (Samuel Beal), 356 & fn, 388
Budge Budge (Calcutta), 71, 79
Bukharin, 388
Bulandshahr (U P.), 120
Burli, B.V., 172 & fn
Burma Oil Company, 60 & fn, 71—74, 79
Burns, M E, 89 & fn
Butler Committee, 539

Calcutta, 4 & fn, 27, 37, 61, 63 fn, 64, 68, 69, 87, 92, 120, 138, 139, 158, 160, 164 fn, 177, 178, 207, 214, 230 fn, 231, 250, 263 & fn, 264, 266, 281 fn, 285, 333, 336 fn, 378 fn, 399 fn, 405, 421, 431, 433—435, 452, 476, 564 fn, 567, 568
———, Congress session at, 99, 105 fn, 175, 176, 188, 189, 198
———, Corporation of, 263—266
———, University of, 378 fn
———, Youth Congress at, 4
Calicut (Kerala), 541, 543, 556
Cambridge, University of, 317 fn
Cambridge History of India, 334
Cape Comorin—see Kanya Kumari
Carlyle, 462
Caveeshar, Sardul Singh, 97 & fn, 98, 349, 573 fn
Cawnpore—see Kanpur
Ceylon, 42, 63 fn, 517, 522, 559
Chagla, M.C, 39
Chalisgaon, (Maharashtra), 33
Chamanlal, Dewan, 239 fn, 240
Chamberlain, Sir Austen, 51
Chanda (Maharashtra), 209 fn
Chandragupta Maurya, 518
Chandernagore, 493 & fn
Chanson de ma Vie (Yvette Guilbert), 344, 387

Charles I, 18
Chatterji, Ramanand, 564 & fn
Chattopadhyaya, Kamaladevi, 349 & fn, 564
———, V., 36, 159, 175 & fn, 232, 234 fn, 253
Chelmsford, Lord, 102
Chesterton, G.K. (C.K.C.), 388
Chetty, C.V.J., 578 & fn
Chhatari, Nawab of, 374 & fn
Chheoki (U.P.), 317
Chiang kai Shek, 52 fn
Child Marriage Restraint Act, 481 & fn
China and the Manchus (H.A. Giles), 387
Chinnot (Pakistan), 180 fn
Chittagong Armoury Case, 493 fn
Choubey, K.P., 574
Churchill, Winston, 52 & fn, 384, 388, 542 fn
Citrine, Walter, 35 & fn, 43
Coastal Tariff Reservation Bill, 370 fn
Cochin (Kerala), 555
Coimbatore (Tamilnadu), 544, 545, 556
Collins, Michael, 71 & fn, 280
Collum, 462
Colombo, 86 fn, 520, 521, 524 & fn, 528, 529, 533—535
Comedy of Errors (Shakespeare), 388
Communist Party of India, 564 fn
Congress Bulletin, 107, 110, 124, 157, 241, 275, 279, 285, 579
Congress, Indian National, 16, 23, 27, 32, 36, 39, 48, 55, 62, 63, 65, 67, 80, 85—91, 93—95, 97, 98, 100, 102—107, 109, 111—113, 115, 116, 122—126, 128, 130, 131, 133, 135, 140—143, 149, 151, 155—158, 160, 162, 163, 165—168, 170, 171, 173—180, 183, 184, 191—199, 203—208, 210, 212, 217, 219, 220 & fn, 222, 223, 225, 228, 230, 231, 234—243, 245, 247—249, 251, 253 & fn, 254, 257, 261—263, 265—267, 271, 272, 279, 281, 282 & fn, 286, 290—292 & fn, 294, 300, 308, 309, 330 fn, 335, 339 fn, 344 fn, 345 fn, 354, 357 & fn, 371, 372, 375, 376, 380, 391 fn, 393—395, 398, 399, 402, 403, 405, 406, 408, 415, 434, 437—441, 445, 449—451, 453—459, 468, 469, 471, 485 fn—488, 490—497, 499, 500, 505—511, 517 fn, 523 fn, 525, 529, 537—540, 542, 544, 550—552, 563, 565, 573 fn, 575, 577, 580, 581, 583, 588, 589
——— session at Calcutta, 99, 105 fn, 175
——— session at Gaya, 197
——— session at Karachi, 489, 497, 503—513, 525, 526, 529, 542
——— session at Lahore, 10, 95, 126, 132, 172, 174, 207 fn, 210, 221, 225 & fn, 226, 231, 235, 241—243, 261, 284, 485, 489, 491
Congress Working Committee, 29, 63, 72, 88, 99, 103, 122, 125—128, 155, 162—164, 168, 169, 172, 175, 176, 203, 205, 212, 215, 217, 223, 225—227, 235, 236, 239, 251 & fn, 253, 258, 262, 265, 267, 271, 272, 276, 278, 282—285, 287, 304, 305 fn, 344 & fn, 345, 349, 367 & fn, 371, 373, 376, 377, 380 & fn, 383, 398, 399 fn, 401 fn, 403, 436, 453—462, 470, 472, 475, 479—482, 485 & fn, 489—491, 497, 504, 537, 538, 543 fn, 577, 581—584
——— meeting at Delhi, 485, 490, resolution on truce issued by, 485; and statement, 489
Congress Socialist Party, 305 fn, 349 fn, 351 fn
Contai (Bengal), 465 fn
C.P. Hindustani Provincial Political Conference, 317 & fn
Coolus, Romain, 388
Coppier, Andre Charles, 324

Dain, J.R., 77 & fn
Dakshineshwar (Bengal), 434 & fn
Dalton (U.S.A.), 346 & fn, 347
Dambulla (Sri Lanka), 533
Dance of Civa (Collum), 462
Dandekar, V.S., 11 & fn, 108 fn, 330
Dandi (Gujarat), 286 fn, 292, 293, 301, 547
Dange, S.A., 346, 564 & fn
Danton, 400 & fn
Darbhanga, Maharaja of, 332 & fn
D(h)arsana, 345 fn, 349

Das, Seth Govind, 317 fn
———, Jatindranath, 13 & fn, 15, 19 fn, 20, 21 fn, 22, 108 fn, 184, 354, 570
———, Nilakantha, 48 & fn, 77, 79 fn
———, Raghava, 114 & fn
Das(s) Gupta, J. M., 227, 228 fn
Dashera, Ganesh Lal, 304
Daspur (Bengal), 465 fn
Datta, Bhupendra Nath, 47
Daud, Muhammad, 63 & fn, 67, 69, 75, 77
Dayal, Bhagwat, 5 & fn
Decline of the West (Oswald Spengler), 322 & fn, 345, 348, 349, 352, 360, 388
Dehra Dun (U.P.), 385, 408 fn
Delhi, 2, 29, 48, 97, 119—121, 129, 137—139, 149, 155, 157, 163, 167 fn, 168, 169, 229, 246, 380 & fn, 405, 413, 476, 478, 490 fn, 497, 499, 507, 584, 586
———, Congress Working Committee meeting at, 485, 490 ———, manifesto issued at, 165, 167 fn, 170, 172, 175, 207, 236
———, resolution on truce issued at, 485, and statement, 489
Delhi Settlement—see Gandhi Irwin Settlement
Democratic Congress Party, 205 fn, 206
Deoki Prasad, 70
Desai, M., 169 & fn
———, Mahadeva, 280, 327, 421
Desh Bhagat Case, 118 fn
Desh Sevika Sangh, 494 fn
Destiny of a Continent (Manuel Ugarte), 388
Detroit (U.S.A.), 100 fn
Dey, Mukul Chandra, 564 & fn
Dhampur, 119
Dhanraj, 357
Dhulekar, R.V., 576 & fn
Dikshit, Shri Krishna, 293 & fn
Dimnett, Ernest, 462
Din Dayal, 312 & fn
Divekar, D.V., 170 & fn
Dixit, Madhusudan Prasad, 579
Dondra Head (Sri Lanka), 534
Doulatram, Jairamdas, 136 & fn, 137, 138, 140, 146, 377, 382, 528, 529
Dover, Cedric, 333 & fn
Do We Agree (Bernard Shaw & Chesterton), 388
Dunthanya Case, 349 & fn
Dutt, B K, 8 & fn, 9 & fn, 13, 15, 20, 35, 157

East Africa, 197
Ebreichsdorf (Austria), 363 fn
Edib, Halide, 388
———, Memoirs of, 388,
England, general election in, 101 & fn
Enigmas, 388
Ernakulam (Kerala), 555, 556
Etah (U.P.), 145
Etawah (U.P.), 118, 144, 293 fn, 310
Exchange Mobilisation Agreement, 496 fn

Fatehpur (U.P.), 231 fn, 240 fn
Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry, 273
Fiji, 197
Fimmen, Edo, 256
Firdausi, 462
Foreign Cloth Boycott Committee, 137, 140
Forward Bloc, 97 fn
France, Anatole, 462
Frankfurt, 36, 124 fn, 234, 235
Fyzabad (U.P.), 373, 426

Gadag (Mysore), 148
Galle (Sri Lanka), 534
Gandhi Ashram, 303 fn
Gandhi Irwin Settlement, 455—490, 494—495
Gandhi, Kasturba, 421
———, Mahatma, 34, 91—93, 114—116, 119—121, 123, 127, 128, 135, 137 fn, 155, 156, 158—160, 162—164, 166, 206, 207 fn, 211, 214, 215 & fn, 227—229, 234 fn, 235, 238, 245, 248—250, 251 fn, 262, 271, 273—275 & fn, 277—281, 283, 284, 286—288, 292, 295, 297, 299, 301, 302, 304, 314 & fn, 317 fn, 324, 327, 333, 338, 341, 342, 344 fn, 349 fn, 351 fn, 363 fn, 369 & fn, 371—375, 377—379, 393, 394, 402, 408, 419, 424, 434, 440, 441, 447, 454 fn, 456, 457, 460, 470 & fn, 471, 479, 480, 485 & fn, 489—492, 494, 497—499, 506, 507 fn, 524—528, 530, 537—539, 542 & fn, 553, 558, 584

Garg, Lakshmi Narain, 21 fn
Garibaldi, Giuseppe, 423 & fn
Garibaldi's Defence of the Roman Republic (Trevelyan), 423 & fn
Gautam, Mohanlal, 351 & fn
Gaya, Congress session at, 197
Geneva, 36 fn, 48, 51, 63 fn, 520
Genius and Character (Emil Ludwig), 364 & fn, 384, 388
Ghanshiam Singh (of Murshan), 241 fn
Ghatkopar (Bombay), 497
Ghazipur (U.P.), 145, 426, 428, 430
Ghose, Sailendranath, 95, 124, 125, 127
Gibran, Khalil, 388
Gignoux, Regis, 462
Giles, H.A., 387
Ginwala, T], 33 & fn, 34, 38
G.I.P. Railway Kamgar Union, 33 fn ———, split in, 33 fn, 34 fn
G.I.P. Railwayman, 39
G.I.P. Railwaymens Union, 38—40, 43
G.I.P. Railway strike, 254 & fn, 256
Giri, V.V., 63 & fn, 64, 67, 69, 77
Gladstone, William Ewart, 350 & fn
Goa, 94, 111, 565, 566
Gokhale Institute of Public Affairs, 113 fn
Golden Threshold, 558 & fn
Golmuri (Bihar), 59, 72, 77—80
———, strike in, 42, 57
——— Tinplate Workers Union, 57, 58, 63, 65, 69, 76 fn
Gonda (U.P.), 103 & fn, 291 & fn
Gopal, 404
Gorakhpore (Gorakhpur) (U.P.), 43, 110, 114 & fn, 115, 161
Gouna Sinha, 86 & fn
Gour, Hari Singh, 557 & fn
Government School of Art (Calcutta), 564 fn
Great French Revolution, (Kropotkin), 462
Great War, the, 2
Guilbert, Yvette, 344, 387
Gujarat College, strike in, 6 fn
Gujarat Vidyapith, 288, 384 fn
Gujranwala (Punjab), 285 fn, 302, 572 fn
Gundappa, D.V., 113 & fn
Gupta, Shiva Prasad, 160, 234, 253, 334, 345, 367
Gur Narain, 421
Guzders, 347

Habib, Mohamed, 337, 387
Haemmerlin, Mlle, 355, 356
Hague, the, 51
Hague Court, 493
Hailey, Sir Malcolm, 308
Hakhu, Shambu Nath, 568
Half Caste (Cedric Dover), 333 fn
Hallowes, B.J.K., 103 & fn
Handia (U.P.), 307, 322 & fn, 324, 327, 328 & fn, 330, 350, 351, 373
Hanif Ullah, 75
Harda, 378
Hardikar, N.S., 129, 130, 367
Hardoi (U.P.), 13 fn
Haridewat, 91 fn
Harilal, 360, 533 & fn
Hartford Times, 474 & fn
Hartshorn, Vernon, 52 fn
Hathras (U.P.), 151
Henderson, Arthur, 101 & fn
Heroes (Carlyle), 462
Hieun Tsang—see Hiuen Tsang
Higginbotham, 365
Himmat, 386
Hindi Sahitya Sammelan, 330 fn
Hind Mazdoor Sabha, 45 fn
Hindu Mahasabha, 99, 225 fn, 565
Hindu Mission, 567 & fn
Hindustan Association of America, 127, 179 fn
Hindustani Seva Dal, 93, 130, 132, 133, 144, 150, 172 fn, 218, 252, 279, 284, 290, 291, 307 fn, 499
Hindustani Talimi Sangh, 384 fn
Hindustan National Party, 563 fn
Hindustan Socialist Republican Association, 13 fn
Hindustan Times, 308

Hindu View of Life (S Radhakrishnan), 462
Historical Materialism and Economic Theory of Leisure Class (Bukharin), 388
History of the Orient (Steiger-Beyer-Benitez), 344, 387
Hiuen Tsang, 388, 417 & fn
Homi, Manek, 67 & fn, 75, 76
Hooghly Mills Co., 60
Howrah (Calcutta), 27
Hsi yu chi (Hiuen Tsang), 417
Hubli (Mysore), 172 fn
Husain, Fazli-, 373
Hussain, M. Vilayat, 343
Huxley, Aldous, 462
Hyderabad (A P.), 62 fn, 527, 529, 553, 557 & fn, 558 & fn
———, Nizam of, 553

Illustrated Times, 321
Independence for India League, 88, 131, 156, 166, 221 & fn
India, Gandhi and World Peace (Reginald Reynolds), 351 fn
India in Bondage (Sunderland), 206 fn
Indian Institute of Science, 564 fn
Indian Medical Association, 268
Indian Medical Service, 268
Indian National Trade Union Congress, 61 fn, 309 fn
Indian Press Ordinance, 338 fn
Indian Seamens Association, 63 fn
Indian Seamens Union, 37
Indo China, 336
Inner Temple, 542 fn
Indra, Professor, 148 fn
International Labour Conference, 36 fn, 48, 63 fn International, Second, 53, 54
———, Third, 54
International Transport Federation, 256 & fn
Ireland, 442
Irwin, Lord, 357, 372, 379—382, 392—394, 458, 460, 497
Ismail, Mirza, 557 & fn
Itarsi, 378
Iyengar, S. Srinivasa, 34, 46 & fn, 106, 117, 171

Jaffna (Sri Lanka), 535
Jaipur, 557 fn
Jallianwala Bagh, 189, 286 fn
Jamshedpur (Bihar), 57 & fn, 58 fn, 60, 62, 67 fn—69, 76 fn, 77
Jamshedpur Labour Association, 36 fn
Jawahar Day, 421, 422
Jawahar Week, 421
Jayakar, M R., 369 & fn, 371—373, 375, 377—383, 393, 470, 471
Jean Christophe (Romain Rolland), 351 & fn
Jeanne d'Arc (Joan of Arc), 418 & fn
Jhabvala, S H, 33
Jhansi (U P.), 576 fn
———, U.P. Provincial Conference at, 440
Jharia (Bengal), 40, 55
Jinnah, M.A, 373, 564
Johannesburg, 89 fn
John, Michael, 61 & fn
Johnston, 123
Johri, C B, 33 & fn, 34 fn, 37—39, 43
Joseph, George, 555
Joshi, N M, 29, 30 & fn, 33 & fn, 43, 44, 48, 55
———, P C., 6
Jugal Kishore, Acharya, 330 & fn
Juhu (Bombay), 520
Jullundur, 98 & fn

Kabul, 241, 318
Kaiser Wilhelm (Emil Ludwig), 364
Kaithamal, 350 fn
Kakori Conspiracy Case, 20 fn, 21 fn, 209 fn, 495 fn
——— prisoners, treatment of, 20, 21 & fn, 209
Kalakankar, Raja of, 336
Kalappa, V.R, 36 & fn
Kalelkar, D B, 384 & fn
Kalutara (Sri Lanka), 534
Kandy (Sri Lanka), 521, 525, 533
Kannada Sahitya Sammelan, 113 fn
Kanpur, 13 fn, 41, 138, 143, 159, 209 fn, 213, 244, 307, 311—313, 324, 405, 486, 487, 503 & fn, 528, 530
———, tragedy in, 503 & fn, 505
Kanpur University, 330 fn
Kanya Kumari (Tamilnadu), 527, 541, 543, 553, 554

Kapra Committee, 139
Karachi, 405, 489, 493, 528, 529
———, Congress session at, 489, 497, 503—513, 525, 526, 529, 542
Karadi (Gujarat), 286 fn
Karnasuvarna, 417
Kashi Vidyapitha, 143, 310, 350 & fn, 351, 354
Kashipur (U.P.), 451
Kasuri, Abdul Qadir, 349 & fn
Kathiawar (Gujarat), 18, 19
——— Youth Conference, 10 fn
Katju, Kailas Nath, 307, 312
Kautilya, 462
Kesari, 170 fn, 225 fn
Ketkar, G. V., 225 & fn
Keyserling, 462
Khadi Fund, 114 fn
Khaliquzzaman, Chaudhri, 344, 383, 391
Khalsa, Gopal Singh, 563 & fn
Khan, Khan Abdul Ghaffar, 293 & fn, 467 fn, 510
Khan, Maulana Mir, 293 & fn
Khan Sahib, Dr., 293 fn, 467 & fn
Khan, Shyam Kumari—see Nehru, Shyam Kumari
Khatri, Ramkrishna, 209 & fn
Khera, S.S., 351 & fn
Khilafat Committee, 293 fn
Khudai Khidmatgars, 293 fn, 468 fn
Khwaja, Abdul Majid, 349, 421
Kidderpore (Calcutta), 37 fn
Kidwai, Rafi Ahmad, 311, 349 & fn, 492
Kirkee (Poona), 374, 375
Kishori, 453
Komagata Maru, 77 fn
Kotgarh (Simla Hills), 574 fn
Kottayam (Kerala), 555
Kripalani, J.B., 119, 303
Krishnanand, 492 & fn
Krishna Narayan, 180 & fn
Kropotkin, 462
Kulkarni, D.B., 29 & fn, 32, 38, 43
Kuomintang and the Future of Chinese Revolution (T.C. Woo), 337 & fn, 387

La Double Passion (Auguste Villeroy), 388
La Griffe (Henry Bernstein), 337 & fn, 387
Lahore, 4, 14, 35, 48, 56, 93—97, 107, 118, 179 & fn, 199 fn, 203, 205, 207, 209, 211, 212, 219, 228, 229, 241, 250, 263, 360, 364, 376, 391, 394, 399 fn, 402, 482, 494, 495, 505, 507, 569 fn
———, Congress session at, 10, 95, 126, 132, 172, 174, 207 fn, 210, 221, 225, 226, 231, 235, 241—243, 261, 485, 489, 491
——— Conspiracy Case, 8 fn, 9 fn, 13 fn, 14, 35, 209 fn, 382, 500 fn
Lahore Students Union, 4
Lajpat Rai, Lala, 15, 34 & fn, 97, 206 fn, 243
Lajpat Rai Memorial Fund, 131
Lakhimpur Kheri (U.P.), 117 & fn, 429, 430
Lakshmi Insurance Company, 179 & fn
Lakshmipathi, Rukmini, 349 & fn
La loc de Finte (A.E.W. Mason), 462
La Marche (Henry Bernstein), 337 & fn, 387
Lambert, G.B., 430
Landaur, 120
Lansdowne, Marquess of, 456 & fn
Lansbury, George, 52 fn
La Vie de Disraeli (Andre Maurois), 350, 388
Leader, 308, 357
Leaders Conference, 167 & fn, 236
League against Imperialism, 87, 89 fn, 103 fn, 104, 123—126, 232—235, 237, 253 & fn, 256, 258
———, second World Congress of, 36, 124 & fn, 234, 235
League of Nations, 24
Le Clif (A.E.W. Mason), 462
Le Detour (Henry Bernstein), 337 & fn, 387
Legal Practitioners Act, 220 fn
Lenin, 241 fn, 419
Le Prof. d'anglais (Regis Gignoux), 462
Le Revolte des Anges (Anatole France), 462
Les Alpes (Hans Schmithals), 324
Le Saphir (A.E.W. Mason), 462
Les Chef d'Oeuvres de la Langue Francaise—Poesie, 387

Les Chef d'Oeuvres de la Langue Francaise—Prose, 388
Les Miettes et L'Elagique (Edmund See), 388
Le Trois Henry, 388
Leyshom, J., 72
Liberal Party, 318 fn, 343
Liberty Under the Soviets (Baldwin), 462
Life of the Ant (Maeterlinck), 462
Life of the Bee (Maeterlinck), 462
Life of the White Ant (Maeterlinck), 462
Light of the World, 576 & fn
Linlithgow, first Marquess of, 41 fn
Lloyd George, David, 52 & fn, 101 388
Lokhare, B G, 276
London, 43, 89 & fn, 395, 467 fn, 471, 497, 537
Love's Labour Lost (Shakespeare), 388
Lucknow, 5, 20 fn, 143, 159, 160, 246, 250, 322, 324, 330 fn, 338 fn, 358, 368, 383, 386, 406, 452, 466 fn, 486 fn, 519, 522 fn, 570
———, firing in, 352 & fn
———, U.P. Youth Conference at, 5
———, University of, 367 fn
Lucknow Charkha Pracharak Sangh, 492
Lucknow Conference—see Muslim Nationalist Conference
Ludwig, Emil, 356, 360, 364, 384, 388
Lyallpur, 572

MacDonald, Ramsay, 3, 51—53, 101, 453 & fn, 455 fn, 460, 461, 462 fn
MacManus, L, 462
Madras, 2, 34, 46 & fn, 92, 292 fn
Madras Youth League, 349 fn
Maeterlinck, 462
Mahabharata, 243
Mahabharati, Alokananda, 88
Maharaj Kishore, 322 & fn, 324
Maharaj Singh, 319 & fn, 321, 328, 334, 373
Mahmud, Syed, 213, 222, 337 & fn, 338, 349, 360, 367, 377, 379, 383, 386, 387, 421, 429—431, 436, 522, 523, 527, 528
Mahratta, 225 fn
Mainpuri (U.P), 12
Maheca jail (Allahabad), 422, 430, 432
Malaviya, Chandrakant, 373
———, Govind, 420, 430
———, Kesho, 373
———, Madan Mohan, 167, 336, 374, 378, 384, 385, 430, 435
———, Padmakant, 373
Malaysia, 336
Malik, Lal Khan, 285 fn
Malta, 52 fn
Manga, 75
Manmatha Ram, 517
Mann, Tom, 86 & fn
Martial Law, 134, 189, 286 fn, 349
Mason, A E.W., 462
Matara (Sri Lanka), 534
Mathura, 145
Maung Maung, 508
Maurois, Andre, 337 & fn, 350, 387, 388
Mawkhar (Assam), 567 fn
Measure for Measure (Shakespeare), 388
Meerut, 53, 70, 103 fn, 118, 120, 121, 159, 303 fn, 472
Meerut Case, 33, 39, 43, 45, 159, 346, 382
Meerut Prisoners Defence Committee, 107
Meherally, Yusuf, 4, 7 & fn, 19
Mehta, Balvantray, 10 & fn
———, Hansa, 379 & fn
———, Jivraj, 379 fn, 466 fn
———, Sumant, 22 & fn, 564
Memoirs of Halide Edib, 388
Merchant of Venice (Shakespeare), 462
Meredith, 462
Merry Wives of Windsor (Shakespeare), 388
Michael Collins and the Making of a New Ireland (P. Beaslay), 280 fn
Midnapore (Midnapur) (Bengal), 465 & fn
Midsummer Night's Dream (Shakespeare), 462
Mira Ben (Mira bai), 363 & fn
Mirza, Bakar Ali, 62 & fn
Mirzapur (Mirzapore) (U P), 144, 428, 430, 517

Mishra, Bhagwan Din, 220 & fn
Misra, B D, 117 & fn
———, Mata Prasad, 309
———, R.S, 221 & fn
Mitra, 76, 77
———, B.N, 77 & fn
———, Jatindranath, 58 & fn. 61
Modern Review, 564 fn
Modern School (Delhi), 347
Mohamad, Jan, 74
Mohanganj (U.P.), 307
Mohani, Hasrat, 337 & fn
Montessori, 346
Moradabad (U.P.), 151
Much Ado about Nothing (Shakespeare), 388
Mukerjee, A.N., 143 & fn
Mukerji, 338, 373
Mukherji, Dhan Gopal, 347, 404
———, Prafulla C, 179 & fn
———, R.N., 16 fn
Mumbai Girni Kamgar Union, 31 fn, 32
Munzenberg, Willi, 234 fn
Murshan, 241 fn
Muslim leaders' manifesto, 98 fn
Muslim Nationalist Conference, 522, 523
Mussoorie, 44—46, 119, 120, 383, 385, 387, 400, 402, 404, 517, 521, 574
Muttra—see Mathura
Muzaffar, 357
Muzaffarnagar, 120
Muzaffarpur, 298 fn
My Life (Trotsky), 462
Mysore, 529, 545, 547, 549, 553, 557
———, Maharaja of, 557

Nadvi, Masud Ali, 384, 436
———, Syed Sulaiman, 384
Nagercoil (Tamilnadu), 554
Nagina, 119
Nagpur, 55, 175
Naidu, Leilamani, 557 & fn
———, Padmaja, 422, 557
———, Sarojini, 125, 349, 377, 382, 422, 524, 553, 557 & fn, 558 & fn, 564
———, T.V.K., 220 & fn
Naik, B.R., 258 fn
Naini (Allahabad), 317, 331, 334, 336, 337, 339, 341, 343, 351, 354, 360, 366, 367, 378, 384, 393, 395, 396, 413, 417, 420, 423, 424, 425, 428, 444, 468, 518, 519
Naini Tal, 137 fn, 151, 306, 331, 346, 358
Najibabad, 119
Nalanda, 417
Nambiar, A C N, 36, 105
Naoroji, Dadabhai, 555 fn
———, Jal, 555 & fn, 556
Napoleon (Emil Ludwig), 388
Narayan, Jayaprakash, 305 & fn, 332 & fn, 349
Narendra Dev, Acharya, 367 & fn
National Federation of Indian Railwaymen, 309 fn
National Gallery of Modern Art, 564 fn
National Minority Movement, 86 & fn
National Service Fund, 118
National Week, 286 & fn, 288, 297, 298
Naujawan Bharati Sabha, 1
Navsari (Gujarat), 258 fn
Nawakot, 133
Nawanagar, Jam Saheb of, 18 fn
Nehru Award for International Understanding, 293 fn
Nehru, Indira, 178, 323, 324, 331, 338, 346, 355, 364, 367, 368, 373, 374, 378, 384, 417 & fn, 420, 421, 433, 451, 452, 518, 535, 553
———, Jawaharlal, 5, 7 & fn, 9, 10 fn, 12, 16 fn, 21, 23, 27, 29 & fn, 30, 33, 35 & fn, 37, 38, 40, 44, 45, 47, 48, 52 fn, 59, 61, 62, 64, 68—71, 77, 85—91, 94, 95, 98 & fn, 100, 103 fn, 105, 106, 109—113, 115—124, 126—131, 134—140, 141 fn, 143, 148 fn—151, 155, 157—164, 168—172, 174, 175, 179, 180, 204, 205 fn—208, 212, 213 & fn, 215 & fn, 218—221, 223, 224, 227, 230, 231, 233, 239—241, 253—255, 258, 263, 266, 267, 273, 274, 276, 277, 279, 280, 282, 283, 286, 290—292, 294, 296, 298—300, 303—305, 307, 310—314, 317 fn, 335, 338 fn, 340, 348, 356, 365, 371, 372, 377, 379, 383, 384 & fn, 385, 387, 392,

396, 397, 400, 401, 403, 404, 408 fn, 416 & fn, 423—425, 428, 429, 435, 436, 440, 441, 453, 461, 467, 469, 470 & fn, 486, 487, 490, 492, 498 fn, 500, 509 fn, 511 fn, 517 & fn, 520, 521, 522 fn, 523, 524, 528—530, 534, 535, 558, 560, 563—568, 570, 572—575, 577—579, 581, 582, 584, 586, 588

———, presides at Lahore Congress, 184—199, advocates launching no tax campaign, 399; advocates non-payment of chowkidari, 399; desires to work in villages, 156; dislikes office work, 156; dislikes the word 'vernacular' 9; expresses regret to Joshi, 44; nominates successor to presidentship, 304, 409; on provisional settlement, 481, 482, 489, 490, 491, 494, 496, 497, 503, 507, 538, 539, 545, 551, 552; resigns from League against Imperialism, 238, 267; upset by flogging of prisoners, 423; visits Sri Lanka, 517—531

———, in jail, 317—388, 413—462, arrested and imprisoned (fourth time), 313, 314, 317; arrested and imprisoned (fifth time), 413, 414, 420, dislikes differentiation in treatment of political prisoners, 336, 339; drafts agrarian and economic programme, 437—444, fasts for three days, 427, 429, 430; interviewed by Brailsford, 421; treated for shoulder pain, 326, 334

———, on Anglo Indians and Congress, 109; on behaviour of volunteers on arrest, 295, 296; on Bengal Congress disputes, 230, 263—266, on boycott of foreign cloth, 134—139, on British Labour Party, 86, 89, 102; on Calcutta Congress, 99; on China's freedom, 85 & fn, on communalism, 186, 187, 503, 505, 573; on communism, 7; on Congress, 99, 125, 127; on Congress presidentship, 155, 161, 164; on Constituent Assembly, 444, 450, 451, on dignity of manual labour, 569, on discipline, 166, on duties of municipalities, 546; on economic distress of peasants, 243—251; on economic programme, 255, 256; on efficient work, 118, 149, on father's death, 466, 519; on fundamental rights, 511, 512; on foreign banks in India, 487, 589, 590; on forward policy, 469, 509—511; on independence, 191, 198, 199, 228, 229; on Independence Day, 204, 218, 224, 225, 230, 231, 285; on Indian labour in Sri Lanka, 536, 559, 560, on Indian states, 192, 193, 258, 259, on India's poverty, 104; on journalism, 8; on khadi, 134—136; on kingship, 18, on literacy in Cochin and Travancore, 554; on minorities, 99, 259—261; on national flag, 131, 183, 232; on national language, 24; on nonviolence, 506, on conduct in life, 419, on parallel government, 205, 226; on political prisoners, 210; on prohibition, 110, on psychology of political movements, 445—447, 455—461; on public debt of India, 196, 197; on relations with neighbours, 469, 510, 511, 527, on release of political prisoners, 504, on separation of Burma, 508, 509; on socialism, 2, 3; on Swaraj, 2; on trade unionism, 32, 49, 50; on unity of India, 541, 543; on untouchability, 539, 540, 542; on violence, 12, 195, 495, 503, 505, on youth, 2, 3, 6, 7, 222, 503, 526

———, Kamala, 120, 157, 160, 310, 318, 320, 323, 324, 334, 336, 338 & fn, 341, 348, 349, 353, 358—361, 367—369, 373, 374, 378, 379, 404, 421, 426, 431, 432, 435, 451, 452, 517, 521, 522, 533, 535, 553

———, Krishna Kumari, 106, 310, 318, 336, 338, 343, 347—349, 357, 358, 360, 364, 365, 367, 368, 373, 374, 378, 384, 421, 422 & fn, 435, 452, 521, 532, 553, 558, 584

———, Motilal, 117 fn, 122, 135, 304, 314 fn, 331 fn, 338 fn, 344 fn, 349 fn, 371, 372, 377, 383, 391, 393, 408, 409, 466 fn, 471, 478 fn, 518 & fn, 519, 533 fn, 573 & fn, 581, 582, offers Swaraj Bhawan to the nation, 478 fn, 581

———, Shamlal, 357, 374 fn
———, Shyam Kumari, 374 & fn, 384
———, Uma, 323, 357, 374 & fn
Nehru Report—see All Parties Committee Report
Nepal, 91
New Delhi, 120 fn, 208, 246
New Temple (Johan Bojer), 337, 387
New Testament, 365
New York, 170 fn, 347, 566 fn
North West Frontier Province, 335 & fn, 401, 402
Nuwara Eliya (Sri Lanka), 520, 522, 523, 527, 528, 532

Oberoi, Major, 318 & fn, 423, 426
Olivier, Lord, 102 & fn
Ooty (Ootacamund) (Tamilnadu), 556
Orleans (France), 418 fn
Oudh—see Avadh

Palghat (Kerala), 567 fn
Palwal, 330
———, Sri Krishna Datt, 309 & fn, 330
Pandey, Bindeshwari Prasad, 118 & fn
———, Ram Nath, 209 & fn
Pandit, Chandralekha, 331 & fn, 346, 364, 378, 452
———, Nayantara, 331 & fn, 360, 363, 452, 554
———, R.S., 178, 323, 338, 349, 365, 369, 373, 374, 385—387, 404, 420, 429—431, 433—435, 452, 453, 478, 517, 524, 535
———, Vijayalakshmi, 331 & fn, 336, 338, 348, 349, 352, 357, 358, 360, 361, 366—369, 373, 374, 378, 386, 421, 432, 434, 436, 452, 478, 517, 520, 535, 553
Pandya, H.M., 10 & fn
Pant, Govind Ballabh, 161
Paper Boats (K.S. Venkatramani), 578 fn
Pardon Madame (Romain Coolus & Andre Rivoire), 388
Parkhurst, Helen, 346 fn
Partabgarh, 244
Pataliputra (Patna), 417
Patel, Vallabhbhai, 34, 277, 281, 287, 373, 374, 377, 382, 391, 399 fn, 409 & fn, 421, 441, 446, 527, 528
Patel, Vithalbhai, 336 & fn, 378, 401 fn
Patel Enquiry Committee—see Peshawar Enquiry Committee
Patiala, Maharaja of, 580 fn
Patiala Enquiry Committee, 580 & fn
Patna, 343
Paul, L., 110
Perhipunan Indonesia, 87 & fn
Peshawar, 213 fn, 293 & fn, 335 & fn, 337 fn, 344 fn, 345 fn, 391, 392, 401 fn, 406, 413, 505
Peshawar Day, 344 fn, 348
Peshawar Enquiry Committee, 401 & fn
Picketing Ordinance, 382
Pioneer, 386
Pittsburg (U.S.A.), 179 fn
Poe, Edgar Allan, 519 & fn
Point Counter Point (Aldous Huxley), 462
Pollonarrua (Sri Lanka), 533
Poona, 114 fn, 146, 148, 553
Porto (Portugal), 566 & fn
Port Said, 52 fn
Potter-Wilson, J.E., 27 & fn
Prabha, 357
Prabhavati Devi, 332 & fn
Praja Socialist Party, 305 fn, 367 fn
Prasad, Bindhyabasini, 115
———, Mata, 242
———, Rajendra, 77
Pratap, Raja Mahendra, 241 & fn
Pratt, Frances J., 170 & fn
Press Act, 377
Profits of Religion (Upton Sinclair), 388
Prophet (Khalil Gibran), 388
Public Safety Bill, 1, 42, 53
Punjab National Bank, 487
Punya Deva, 324
Purandare, V.B., 32
Puri, Major N.D., 108 fn
Pyarelal, 155

Quilon (Kerala), 555

Radhakrishnan, Sarvepalli, 462, 564 & fn
Rae Bareli, 145, 244, 251, 298 fn, 307—309, 311—313, 342, 349 fn, 350 & fn, 351
Raghavachari, 523, 527, 528
Rahim, Abdur, 205 & fn, 219
Rai, Nand Kumar, 180 & fn
Raipur (M.P.), 307, 311—313, 317 & fn
———, C.P. Hindustani Provincial Conference at, 317 & fn
Rajagopalachari, C., 110, 207 & fn, 400
Raj Guru, 500 fn, 505 fn
Rajkot (Gujarat), 10, 11, 38, 39, 159
Rajpur, 385
Ramakrishna Paramahamsa, 434 fn
Raman, C.V., 564 & fn
Ramkumar, 360
Ranchi, 77
Rangoon, 281 fn, 287, 421
Ranu Bala Debi, 299
Rao, Raja, 332, 333, 338
———, B. Shiva, 36, 42
Ras (Gujarat), 277 fn, 399 fn
Rashtriya Stree Sabha, 494 fn
Ratnagiri (Maharashtra), 317 fn
Reimemann, Otto, 90 & fn
Renascent India (K.S. Venkatramani), 578 & fn
Revenue Act, 377
Rewa, 579
Reynolds, Reginald, 351 & fn
Rivoire, Andre, 388
Rohtak, 96, 134, 141
———, Punjab Provincial Conference at, 96 fn
Rolland, Romain, 351 fn, 355
Rome and the Papacy (Gilbert Baquani), 462
Romier, Lucien, 388
Round Table Conferences, 47, 113, 165 fn, 170, 369 fn, 372, 444, 453 fn, 456, 458 fn, 482 fn, 487, 491, 492, 497, 507 & fn, 537, 539, 540, 542, 557 & fn
Rowlatt Act, 293 fn, 301
Roy, B.C., 230 & fn, 263 fn—265, 367, 378, 466 fn, 477
———, Kiran Sankar, 228 fn, 476, 478
———, Rash Mohan, 567 & fn
Royal Commission, on Agriculture, 41 & fn
———, on Indian Labour, 30 & fn, 39—42, 44, 45, 46 fn, 47, 51, 53
Ruikar R.S., 45 & fn, 46 & fn, 48
Ruskin, John, 364
Russell, Bertrand, 337, 387
Russia, 54, 419
———, revolution in, 2, 18, 419

Sabarmati, 158, 212, 215, 277, 280, 287, 324 fn, 352, 356, 360, 363 & fn, 396, 397, 530
Sahai, Raghubir, 527
———, Sitla, 14, 305, 307, 309
Saharanpur (U.P.), 120
Salem (Tamilnadu), 578 fn,
Salt Act, 325, 330, 416 fn, 420, 481
———, violation of, 272, 288, 290, 294, 302, 306, 398
Sambamurti, B., 176 fn
Samed, Abdul, 75, 76
Sampurnanand, S., 300
San Francisco (U.S.A.), 563 fn
Sanghamitra, 533
Santanam, Pandit K., 178, 179 fn
Sanyal, Bhupendra Nath, 209 fn
———, Sachindra Nath, 209 & fn, 322, 328
Sapru, T.B., 369 & fn, 371—375, 378—383, 458, 461, 470, 471
Saran (Bihar), 311
Sarda Act—see Child Marriage Restraint Act
Sarkar, Niratan, 378 & fn, 434
Sastri, V.S., Srinivasa, 470, 471
Satyagraha Samachar, 308
Satyamurti, S., 206, 564
Satyananda, Swami, 567 fn
Satyapal, Dr., 96 & fn, 173
Saxena, Jta Ram, 21 fn
———, Mohanlal, 324
Sayeed, Basheer Ahmed, 292 & fn
Schmithals, Hans, 324
Scholar, 567 & fn
See, Edmond, 388
Sen, B.N., 164 & fn
Sen Gupta, J.M., 207 fn, 263 fn, 281 & fn, 287
Servants of India Society, 30 fn

Servants of the People Society, 34 fn
Sesame and Lilies (Ruskin), 364
Seth, Damodar Swarup, 20 & fn, 118
Sethi, R.C., 36 & fn
Shah, Abdulla, 468
———, Jaffar, 468
———, K.T., 387, 563 & fn
Shakespeare, William, 355, 356, 364, 388, 462
Shamshere Bahadur, 524
Shahnamah (Firdausi), 462
Shanghai, 52 & fn
Shankarlal, Lala, 148 & fn
Sharma, Murari, 215
———, Vichitra Naram, 303 & fn
Shastri, Hariharnath, 309 & fn
Shaw, George Bernard, 388, 462
Shaw Wallace and Company, 60, 64, 69, 71, 72, 78
Sherwani, T.A.K., 349, 357, 374
Shiromani Akali Dal, 80 fn
Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee, 80 fn
Shokipur, 349 & fn, 391, 392, 406, 465, 504, 505, 558
Siberia, 419
Sigiriya (Sri Lanka), 533
Sikh League—see All India Sikh League
Simla, 68, 336 fn, 379, 382, 392, 393 fn
Simon Commission, 4 fn, 6 fn, 52, 86, 89
———, boycott of, 4 fn
Sinclair, Upton, 388
Singapore, 421, 509
Singh, Bhagat—see Bhagat Singh
———, Chhatar, 342
———, Dan, 566 & fn
———, Gurdial—see Singh, Puran
———, Baba Gurdit, 77, 78
———, Sardar Kharak, 80 & fn
———, Sardar Narmada Prasad, 330 & fn, 336, 337 fn, 340, 341, 345, 347 348, 351, 352, 365—368, 386, 387, 429, 430, 431, 434—436, 451, 452
———, Puran, 343
———, Raghubir, 120 fn
———, Rajkumar, 209 & fn
———, Shiva Murti, 328 & fn, 338
———, Shyamvir, 322
———, Sultan, 120 & fn
———, Master Tara, 572 & fn
Sinha, Deoki Prasad, 346
Sinn Fein, 107
Sitapur (U.P.), 351, 367 fn
Slade, Admiral, 363 fn
Slings and Arrows (Lloyd George), 388
Snowden, Viscount Philip, 51 & fn, 101
Socialism and Capitalism (Bernard Shaw), 462
Socialist Party of India, 367 fn
Socialist Youth Congress, 4
Sohagpur, 378
Somasundaram, S., 524 & fn, 528, 529
*South African Federation of Non-*European Trade Unions, 89 fn
Soviet Russia (Jawaharlal Nehru), 33
Spengler, Oswald, 322 & fn, 345, 348, 349, 351, 352, 388
Splendour that was Ind (K.T. Shah), 337 & fn, 387
Spykman, Nicholas John, 520 & fn
Sri Lanka, 517 fn, 522 fn, 529, 532, 533 & fn, 559, also see Ceylon
Srinagar (Kashmir), 568 fn
Sri Prakasa, 11, 117 & fn, 119, 300, 307, 311, 312, 580, 584
St. Anne's Vicarage, 384
Steel Protection Act, 79 fn
Steyer Beyer Benitez, 387
Stokes, S.E., 574 & fn
Sukhdev, 500 fn, 503 fn
Sundarlal (Sunder Lal), 368 & fn, 373, 421
Sunderland, J.T., 206 fn
Sun Yat Sen, Madam, 85
Swaraj Party, 70 fn
Swinburne, A.C., 462

Tagore, Rabindranath, 564
Talmud, the, 555
Taming of the Shrew (Shakespeare), 462

Tandon, Lal Behari, 291 & fn
———, Purushottamdas, 97, 338, 346, 357, 367, 426, 432, 492
Tangan (U.P.), 242
Tanner, Jocelyn, 384 & fn
Tata Iron and Steel Company, 67 fn, 72, 73
Tatapuram (Kerala), 555
Tata Workers Union, 61 fn
Tegart, Sir Charles, 477 & fn
Tempest (Shakespeare), 388
Temple of the Tooth (Sri Lanka), 533
Tendulkar, D G., 317 & fn
Tewari—see Tiwari and Tivary
Thailand, 5 fn
Thomas, J.H, 101
Thompson, 338
Tilak Day, 391 fn
Tilak, Lokmanya, 228, 243
Tinnevelly (Tirunelveli) (Tamilnadu), 537, 553
Tivary, Venkatesh Narayan, 318 & fn, 321, 327, 333, 340, 342
Tiwari, Radha Krishna, 486, 487, 527, 528
To Live in Mankind (Reginald Reynolds), 351 fn
Trades Disputes Act, 42, 53, 81
Transvaal, 24 fn
Travel Diary (Keyserling), 462
Trevelyan, Charles Edward, 212 & fn
———, G M., 423 fn
Trichur (Kerala), 539, 556
———, Youth League at, 539
———, Yuvajana Samithi at, 539
Trincomalee (Sri Lanka), 533
Tripathi, Rup Narain, 322 & fn, 324, 350
———, Tika Ram, 345 & fn
Trivandrum, 554, 555
Trivedi, P.N., 88 & fn
Trotsky, 462
Tuticorin (Tamilnadu), 529, 535, 543, 553
Two Gentlemen of Verona (Shakespeare), 388
Tyabji, Abbas, 344 & fn
Tyne (Teyen), 318

Uberoi—see Oberoi
Ugarte, Manuel, 388
Uma Shankar, 231 & fn
Unhappy India (Lajpat Rai), 206 fn
Union of South Africa, 24 fn, 190, 197
Unlawful Associations Ordinance, 392 fn
Unlawful Instigation Ordinance, 357 fn.
U N. Human Rights Commission, 379 fn
United Forward Republican Bloc, 309 fn
United India League (Detroit), 100 fn
United States of America, 51, 92, 95, 96, 100 fn, 122, 125, 126, 216, 346 fn
Unto This Last (Ruskin), 364
Upadhyaya, S D, 338 & fn, 523, 524
U P Jails Enquiry Committee, 209
U P. Provincial Political Conference, 307 fn, 368 fn, 517 & fn
U P. Trade Union Conference, 40, 41

Vaid, Devi Das, 569 & fn
Vakil, Jahangir, 575
Vanguard, 7 & fn
Varanasi, 7, 88 fn, 143, 145, 146, 159, 209 fn, 250, 299, 300, 310, 363, 399 fn
Varma, L. Shiv 13 & fn
Vasishta, Nand Kumar Dev, 307 & fn
Venkatramani, K.S, 578 & fn
Verlaine, Paul, 365 & fn
Victoria Terminus (Bombay), 558
Vidyarthi, Ganesh Shankar, 352, 503, 505, 530
Villeroy, Auguste, 388
Vyas, Sakarben K, 112 & fn

Waheed, 357, 360
Washington, 122 fn
———, Congress Legation in, 122 fn
Weinbren, B., 89 & fn
Welsh Plate and Sheet Manufacturers Association, 74
White Sahibs of India (Reginald Reynolds), 351 fn
Whitley, J H., 30 fn
Whitley Commission—see Royal Commission on Agriculture
White Light and Flame (MacManus), 462

Who will be Master—Europe or America? (Lucien Romier), 388
Wilder, Thornton, 462
Willingdon, Earl of, 458 & fn
Winterton, Lord, 278
Wizaya, 184 & fn
Woman of Andros (Thornton Wilder), 462
Woo, T.C., 337, 387
Workers Welfare League of India (London), 27 fn
World Crisis (Churchill), 384 & fn, 388
World Federation of Youth for Peace, 90 & fn

Yale (U.S.A.), 520
Yatzdani, S.Y., 37 & fn
Yeravda (Poona), 342, 369 fn, 374, 375, 384, 396, 422, 471, 476
Young India, 214, 215, 227, 273, 280, 297
Young Liberator, 169 fn
Youth Congress, 4 & fn

Zutshi, Lado Rani, 356

Who will be Master—Europe or America? (Lucien Romier), 388
Wilder, Thornton, 462
Willingdon, Earl of, 458 & fn
Winterton, Lord, 278
Wizaya, 184 & fn
Woman of Andros (Thornton Wilder), 462
Woo, T.C., 337, 387
Workers Welfare League of India (London), 27 fn
World Crisis (Churchill), 384 & fn, 388
World Federation of Youth for Peace, 90 & fn

Yale (U.S.A.), 520
Yatzdani, S.Y., 37 & fn
Yeravda (Poona), 342, 369 fn, 374, 375, 384, 396, 422, 471, 476
Young India, 214, 215, 227, 273, 280, 297
Young Liberator, 169 fn
Youth Congress, 4 & fn

Zutshi, Lado Rani, 356

Selected works of Jawaharlal Nehru

Selected works of Jawaharlal Nehru

Volume Five

U. U. CENT. LIB.

MLSU - CENTRAL LIBRARY

73475CL

A Project of the
Jawaharlal Nehru
Memorial Fund

Orient Longman

© Indira Gandhi, 1973

Published by
Sujit Mukherjee
Orient Longman Ltd

Regd Office
3/5 Asaf Ali Road New Delhi 110001

Regional Offices
Nicol Road Ballard Estate Bombay 400001
17 Chittaranjan Avenue Calcutta 700013
36A Mount Road Madras 600002
1/24 Asaf Ali Road New Delhi 110001

Printed at
Indraprastha Press (CBT)
Nehru House New Delhi 110001

Advisory Board

M. Chalapathi Rau
H. Y. Sharada Prasad
B. R. Nanda

General Editor

S. Gopal

FOREWORD

Jawaharlal Nehru is one of the key figures of the twentieth century. He symbolised some of the major forces which have transformed our age.

When Jawaharlal Nehru was young, history was still the privilege of the West; the rest of the world lay in deliberate darkness. The impression given was that the vast continents of Asia and Africa existed merely to sustain their masters in Europe and North America. Jawaharlal Nehru's own education in Britain could be interpreted, in a sense, as an attempt to secure for him a place within the pale. His letters of the time are evidence of his sensitivity, his interest in science and international affairs as well as of his pride in India and Asia. But his personality was veiled by his shyness and a facade of nonchalance, and perhaps, outwardly there was not much to distinguish him from the ordinary run of men. Gradually there emerged the warm and universal being who became intensely involved with the problems of the poor and the oppressed in all lands. In doing so, Jawaharlal Nehru gave articulation and leadership to millions of people in his own country and in Asia and Africa.

That imperialism was a curse which should be lifted from the brows of men, that poverty was incompatible with civilisation, that nationalism should be poised on a sense of international community and that it was not sufficient to brood on these things when action was urgent and compelling—these were the principles which inspired and gave vitality to Jawaharlal Nehru's activities in the years of India's struggle for freedom and made him not only an intense nationalist but one of the leaders of humanism.

No particular ideological doctrine could claim Jawaharlal Nehru for its own. Long days in jail were spent in reading widely. He drew much from the thought of the East and West and from the philosophies of the past and the present Never religious in the formal sense, yet he had a deep love for the culture and tradition of his own land. Never a rigid Marxist, yet he was deeply influenced by that theory and was particularly impressed by what he saw in the Soviet Union on his first visit in 1927. However, he realised that the world was too complex, and man had too many facets, to be encompassed by any single or total explanation. He himself was a socialist with an abhorrence of regimentation and a democrat who was anxious to reconcile his faith in civil liberty with the necessity of mitigating economic and social wretchedness. His struggles, both within himself and with the outside world, to adjust such seeming contradictions are what make his life and work significant and fascinating.

As a leader of free India, Jawaharlal Nehru recognised that his country could neither stay out of the world nor divest itself of its own interests in world affairs. But to the extent that it was possible, Jawaharlal Nehru sought to speak objectively and to be a voice of sanity in the shrill phases of the 'cold war'. Whether his influence helped on certain occasions to maintain peace is for the future historian to assess. What we do know is that for a long stretch of time he commanded an international audience reaching far beyond governments, that he spoke for ordinary, sensitive, thinking men and women around the globe and that his was a constituency which extended far beyond India.

So the story of Jawaharlal Nehru is that of a man who evolved, who grew in storm and stress till he became the representative of much that was noble in his time. It is the story of a generous and gracious human being who summed up in himself the resurgence of the 'third world' as well as the humanism which transcends dogmas and is adapted to the contemporary context. His achievement, by its very nature and setting, was much greater than that of a Prime Minister. And it is with the conviction that the life of this man is of importance not only to scholars but to all, in India and elsewhere, who are interested in the valour and compassion of the human spirit that the Jawaharlal Nehru Memorial Fund has decided to publish a series of volumes consisting of all that is significant in what Jawaharlal Nehru spoke and wrote. There is, as is to be expected in the speeches and writings of a man so engrossed in affairs and gifted with expression, much that is ephemeral; this will be omitted. The official letters and memoranda will also not find place here. But it is planned to include everything else and the whole corpus should help to remind us of the quality and endeavour of one who was not only a leader of men and a lover of mankind, but a completely integrated human being.

Indira Gandhi

New Delhi
18 January 1972

Chairman
Jawaharlal Nehru Memorial Fund

EDITORIAL NOTE

After the settlement concluded by Mahatma Gandhi with the British Government in March 1931, Jawaharlal Nehru, despite his mental reservations, loyally abided by it. However, the government had no intention of permitting this truce to develop into any form of final settlement. Particularly in Jawaharlal Nehru's home province, official repression combined with the general economic depression to cause acute agrarian distress which Jawaharlal Nehru could not ignore. In the absence of Mahatma Gandhi in London, he tried his best to secure at least the minimum redressal of tenant wrong without coming into direct clash with the government. But the government was eager for a conflict and Jawaharlal Nehru was arrested while on his way to Bombay to receive Mahatma Gandhi.

A few days later, civil disobedience was resumed and Mahatma Gandhi and the other Congress leaders were promptly arrested. The diaries maintained by Jawaharlal Nehru in prison from December 1931 till his release in August 1933 vividly reflect his mental conflict and his disappointment with many aspects of the policy of the Congress and especially of Mahatma Gandhi. After his release he gave special attention to the formulation of ideas which would rapidly advance economic development and social change.

Much of the material included in this volume has been selected from the papers of Jawaharlal Nehru. The cooperation extended by the Director and the staff of the Nehru Memorial Museum & Library is acknowledged.

The Maharashtra Government, the National Archives of India and the Gandhi Smarak Sangrahalaya have kindly allowed us to utilise material in their possession. Letters and texts of speeches and statements first published in The Hindu, The Hindustan Times, The Bombay Chronicle, The Tribune, The Leader, Amrita Bazar Patrika, The Times of India, Pioneer, and Young India are reprinted with their consent. Punch has authorised us to reprint one of its cartoons, and Asia Publishing House have permitted us to include two letters first printed in Glimpses of World History.

CONTENTS

1. Congress, the Settlement and the Round Table Conference

1	Truce is not Peace	7 June	1931	1
2	Be Prepared	8 June	1931	2
3	On the Changed Temper of the Nation	11 June	1931	2
4	Speech at Poona	15 June	1931	4
5	Peace Only with Honour and Freedom	20 June	1931	4
6	On Resumption of the Struggle	22 June	1931	6
7	On Observance of the Truce	23 June	1931	7
8	Circular to P.C.Cs	16 July	1931	8
9	Interview to the Press	18 July	1931	9
10	Interview to the Associated Press	21 July	1931	10
11	On His Interview at Simla	25 July	1931	11
12	On Congress Participation in Round Table Conference	14 August	1931	12
13	Little Hope of a Compromise	15 August	1931	13
14	On the Working Committee's Decision	18 August	1931	14
15	To Fenner Brockway	20 August	1931	17
16	On Government's Attitude towards the Settlement	20 August	1931	18
17	Circular to D.C.Cs	26 August	1931	21
18	Circular to P.C.Cs and Members of Working Committee	27 August	1931	22
19	Repudiation of Press Propaganda	29 August	1931	23
20	On the Simla Settlement	31 August	1931	25
21	Circular to P.C.Cs	31 August	1931	27

22	To Mahatma Gandhi	1 September	1931	28
23	To Mahatma Gandhi	11 September	1931	31
24	To Mahatma Gandhi	12 September	1931	32
25	To the Maharaja of Patiala	16 September	1931	37
26	To Roger Baldwin	17 September	1931	41
27	To Mahatma Gandhi	17 September	1931	42
28	Circular to P.C.Cs, D.C.Cs and Seva Dals	23 September	1931	44
29	To Home Secretary, Government of India	27 September	1931	44
30	To Vallabhbhai Patel	27 September	1931	45
31	To Mahatma Gandhi	27 September	1931	46
32	To M. A. Ansari	4 October	1931	48
33	Telegram to S. K. Datta	10 November	1931	49
34	To Vallabhbhai Patel	8 December	1931	50
35	On the Order Banning Congress Activities in Puri	8 December	1931	50

2. Agrarian Distress in the United Provinces

1	To G. B. Pant	March	1931	55
2	To Chief Secretary, U.P. Government	11 March	1931	56
3	Message to the Peasants of Rae Bareli	12 March	1931	61
4	Note on Economic Distress in the United Provinces	23 March	1931	61
5	Appeal to Kisans	March	1931	65
6	To Commissioner, Allahabad Division	9 April	1931	66
7	To Sitla Sahai	11 April	1931	68
8	Appeal to the Kisans of Allahabad District	13 April	1931	69
9	On the Rent and Revenue Situation in U.P.	18 April	1931	70
10	To Chief Secretary, U.P. Government	17 June	1931	79
11	To G. B. Pant	18 June	1931	80

12	Address to Kisans	20 June	1931	81
13	The Significance of the Truce	25 June	1931	85
14	No Compromise on Swaraj	26 June	1931	91
15	To Deputy Commissioner, Rae Bareli	26 June	1931	95
16	To Chief Secretary, U.P. Government	27 June	1931	96
17	To Chief Secretary, U.P. Government	27 June	1931	98
18	To Secretary, U.P.P.C.C.	27 June	1931	99
19	To Mahatma Gandhi	27 June	1931	100
20	To Deputy Commissioner, Rae Bareli	28 June	1931	100
21	To Deputy Commissioner, Rae Bareli	1 July	1931	101
22	To T.A.K. Sherwani	3 July	1931	101
23	On His Speech at Lucknow	4 July	1931	102
24	On the Need for Unity and Nonviolence	5 July	1931	103
25	To Chief Secretary, U.P. Government	23 July	1931	105
26	The Congress and the Kisans	28 July	1931	105
27	To Chief Secretary, U.P. Government	29 July	1931	106
28	Interview to the Press	29 July	1931	108
29	To Chief Secretary, U.P. Government	30 July	1931	108
30	To Chief Secretary, U.P. Government	31 July	1931	109
31	To Chief Secretary, U.P. Government	1 August	1931	111
32	Interview to the Press	2 August	1931	113
33	Telegram to Mahatma Gandhi	15 August	1931	114
34	To A. Sahay	20 August	1931	114
35	To Private Secretary to Viceroy	1 September	1931	115
36	To Chief Secretary, U.P. Government	5 September	1931	115
37	Statement to the Press	11 September	1931	119
38	How They Manage Things in [illegible] Mettra Dated	19 September	1931	120
39	To Vallabhbhai Patel	19 September	1931	123
40	To Sita Sahai	22 September	1931	123

41	To Rampal Singh	23 September	1931	124
42	Reply to Charges against Congress	23 September	1931	125
43	To Commissioner, Allahabad	23 September	1931	126
44	On the Resumption of Satyagraha	24 September	1931	128
45	To Chief Secretary, U.P. Government	24 September	1931	128
46	To Deputy Magistrate, Bareilly	30 September	1931	131
47	To Mahatma Gandhi	1 October	1931	133
48	To Chief Secretary, U.P. Government	2 October	1931	136
49	To Mahatma Gandhi	4 October	1931	137
50	To Deputy Commissioner, Bahraich	7 October	1931	138
51	To Rampal Singh	12 October	1931	139
52	On Conditions in Balrampur Estate	13 October	1931	140
53	The Deepening Agrarian Crisis	14 October	1931	141
54	To Chief Secretary, U.P. Government	15 October	1931	143
55	Issue Before the Kisans	15 October	1931	147
56	To Chief Secretary, U.P. Government	15 October	1931	148
57	To Private Secretary to Viceroy	16 October	1931	152
58	Cable to Mahatma Gandhi	16 October	1931	155
59	To Mahatma Gandhi	16 October	1931	156
60	To Vallabhbhai Patel	16 October	1931	157
61	To Purushottamdas Tandon	16 October	1931	158
62	To T.A.K. Sherwani	16 October	1931	159
63	To Chief Secretary, U.P. Government	16 October	1931	160
64	To Secretary, Jalabad Congress Committee	17 October	1931	161
65	To Jagannath Prasad Agarwal	19 October	1931	161
66	Speech at Allahabad District Kisans Conference	23 October	1931	162
67	To Sitla Sahai	23 October	1931	163
68	To Chief Secretary, U.P. Government	26 October	1931	164

69	To T.A.K. Sherwani	30 October	1931	166
70	To Vallabhbhai Patel	2 November	1931	167
71	To Chief Secretary, U.P. Government	3 November	1931	169
72	To Rampal Singh	5 November	1931	170
73	On the Condition of U.P. Kisans	7 November	1931	172
74	Interview to the Press	17 November	1931	175
75	To Vallabhbhai Patel	21 November	1931	176
76	To Khan Sahib	23 November	1931	177
77	Address to Kisans	23 November	1931	178
78	To the Kisans	23 November	1931	179
79	No Half-way Settlement	25 November	1931	179
80	To Vallabhbhai Patel	26 November	1931	180
81	To Syed Mahmud	27 November	1931	181
82	To Private Secretary to Viceroy	28 November	1931	182
83	To Krishna Chandra	28 November	1931	183
84	To Vallabhbhai Patel	1 December	1931	183
85	To Vallabhbhai Patel	4 December	1931	185
86	To Vallabhbhai Patel	7 December	1931	187
87	On the U.P. Ordinance	17 December	1931	187
88	Interview to the Press	21 December	1931	190
89	To Vallabhbhai Patel	23 December	1931	191
90	Telegram to Vallabhbhai Patel	23 December	1931	191
91	To District Magistrate, Allahabad	23 December	1931	192

3. General Secretary A.I.C.C.

SWADESHI MOVEMENT

1	Circular to P.C.Cs	8 April	1931	197
2	To Vallabhbhai Patel	8 April	1931	197
3	Circular to P.C.Cs	18 June	1931	199
4	To Secretary, Dhariwal Woollen Mills	24 June	1931	200
5	To M. Abdullah	25 June	1931	201
6	To Bishambhar Nath Gupta	30 June	1931	203

7	Reply to Muslim Cloth Dealers	30 June	1931	204
8	To Muhammad Hussain	2 July	1931	205
9	To President, Nellore D.C.C.	3 July	1931	208
10	To Muhammad Hussain	6 July	1931	208
11	Circular to P.C.Cs	16 July	1931	209
12	To S. K. Datt Paliwal	21 July	1931	210
13	To Mahavir Tyagi	22 July	1931	211
14	To President, Dharwar D.C.C.	27 July	1931	211
15	To Shankarlal Banker	21 August	1931	212
16	To Shankarlal Banker	1 September	1931	213
17	Swadeshi as a Creed	24 September	1931	213
18	To G. R. Khanna	4 October	1931	214
19	Statement to the Press	6 October	1931	215
20	To Kurur Nambudiripad	25 October	1931	216
21	To Secretary, Bombay P.C.C.	7 November	1931	216
22	To Vallabhbhai Patel	21 November	1931	217

HINDUSTANI SEVA DAL

23	Volunteers to Allay Panic	9 April	1931	219
24	On the Training of Volunteers	13 April	1931	220
25	Appeal for Flag Day Celebration	22 April	1931	221
26	Circular to P.C.Cs	16 July	1931	221
27	Speech at Seva Dal Conference	9 August	1931	224
28	Message to the Khudai Khidmatgars	12 August	1931	225
29	Volunteers and Other Organisations	11 September	1931	226
30	To N. S. Hardikar	14 September	1931	226
31	To N. S. Hardikar	4 October	1931	227
32	To N. S. Hardikar	12 October	1931	228
33	To Nandkumar Deo Vashishta	12 October	1931	229
34	To Secretary, Bengal P.C.C.	18 October	1931	230
35	To N. S. Hardikar	19 October	1931	230
36	On the Hindustani Seva Dal	21 October	1931	231
37	To All Provincial Seva Dal Boards	6 November	1931	235

38	Appeal to the Youth of Bengal	19 November	1931	236
39	Address to Women Volunteers	15 December	1931	236
40	On British Criticism of the Seva Dal	16 December	1931	237
41	Address to Volunteers	19 December	1931	238
42	Circular to All Provincial Seva Dals and Members-in-charge	21 December	1931	239

GENERAL

43	Circular to P.C.Cs	9 April	1931	240
44	To Pattabhi Sitaramayya	12 April	1931	242
45	To Mustafa Ali	14 April	1931	243
46	To M. John	28 June	1931	244
47	To Vallabhbhai Patel	30 June	1931	245
48	To Mata Prasad Misra	1 July	1931	246
49	To President, Bangalore City Congress Committee	2 July	1931	246
50	To Secretary, Indian Journalists Association	4 July	1931	248
51	To Anjani Kumar	21 July	1931	248
52	To B.S. Ramaswami Iyengar	24 July	1931	249
53	On the New Design of the National Flag	7 August	1931	250
54	Note on Foreign Branches of the Congress	8 August	1931	250
55	To Secretary, Frontier P.C.C.	12 August	1931	253
56	To C. Chattur Singh	26 August	1931	254
57	To Secretary, Bangalore D.C.C.	18 September	1931	254
58	To Vallabhbhai Patel	24 September	1931	256
59	To Prithvi Raj Singh	2 October	1931	257
60	To Ali Gul Khan	3 October	1931	257
61	To Khurshed Naoroji	3 October	1931	259
62	To Abdul Ghaffar Khan	3 October	1931	260
63	To Vallabhbhai Patel	7 October	1931	261
64	To Khan Sahib	14 October	1931	262
65	To Khurshed Naoroji	14 October	1931	262
66	To Ali Gul Khan	22 October	1931	263

67	Note on the Kanpur Riots Enquiry Report	31 October	1931	264
68	To Saadullah Khan	10 November	1931	267
69	To Prafulla Chandra Sen	16 November	1931	271
70	To Sampurnanand	21 November	1931	271
71	Telegram to Vallabhbhai Patel	22 November	1931	272
72	To Vallabhbhai Patel	24 November	1931	272
73	To Gopinath Singh	26 November	1931	273
74	To Vallabhbhai Patel	26 November	1931	274
75	To D.R. Thengdi	4 December	1931	275
76	To Khan Sahib	5 December	1931	276
77	To Vallabhbhai Patel	7 December	1931	276
78	To Vallabhbhai Patel	8 December	1931	277

4. Political Speeches and Statements

1	On the Riots in Kanpur	April	1931	281
2	Appeal for Ganesh Shankar Vidyarthi Memorial Fund	13 May	1931	282
3	On Hindu Muslim Unity	9 June	1931	282
4	On Minorities and Nationalism	13 June	1931	283
5	The Congress and Mill Workers	13 June	1931	286
6	On H S. Suhrawardy's Allegations	15 June	1931	287
7	On the Defence of the Accused in the Delhi Conspiracy Case	23 June	1931	288
8	On the Congress Attitude towards Harijans	24 June	1931	289
9	Reply to Depressed Classes' Welcome Address	9 July	1931	290
10	On Terrorist Occurrences	30 July	1931	290
11	On Political Violence	6 August	1931	291
12	On Protection of Women Workers	8 August	1931	292

13	On Formation of the National Government in England	24 August	1931	293
14	Address to Mill Workers	10 September	1931	293
15	On the Firing at Hijli Detention Camp	24 September	1931	294
16	On the National Flag	26 September	1931	294
17	Speech at Punjab Political Conference	26 September	1931	295
18	On Mahatma Gandhi's Birthday	2 October	1931	296
19	On M.N. Roy's Defence	9 November	1931	297
20	On Hijli and Chittagong Occurrences	14 November	1931	298
21	Harijans and the Congress	19 November	1931	299
22	To the Youth of Bengal	19 November	1931	300
23	Call to Eschew Violence	23 November	1931	303
24	On Bengal's Sacrifices	7 December	1931	305
25	Reply to Address of Gadag Municipality	19 December	1931	306
26	To the People of Gadag	19 December	1931	307
27	Reply to an Address at Hubli	19 December	1931	308
28	Imminence of a Struggle	20 December	1931	309
29	Message to Karnatak	20 December	1931	311

5. Miscellaneous

1	To C. Chattur Singh	9 April	1931	315
2	To Bharati Sarabhai	8 June	1931	315
3	To Bharati Sarabhai	6 July	1931	317
4	To Will Durant	22 July	1931	318
5	To Will Durant	20 August	1931	319
6	To Sri Prakasa	30 August	1931	321
7	To George Slocombe	31 August	1931	322
8	To S.A. Brelvi	7 September	1931	323
9	To S.B. Patel	18 September	1931	324
10	To Mahatma Gandhi	19 September	1931	324
11	To Jawaharlal Rohtagi	22 September	1931	327

12	To Mahatma Gandhi	24 September	1931	327
13	To D.N. Bahadurji	14 October	1931	328
14	To Chief Secretary, U.P. Government	16 October	1931	329
15	To the Manager, Gauhr-i-Hayat Office, Kanpur	19 October	1931	330
16	To Vallabhbhai Patel	21 November	1931	330
17	To Vallabhbhai Patel	24 November	1931	331
18	To P.R. Lele	26 November	1931	332
19	To K.F. Nariman	27 November	1931	333
20	To Vallabhbhai Patel	28 November	1931	333
21	To K.F. Nariman	4 December	1931	335
22	To the Members of the Swaraj Bhawan Managing Committee	8 December	1931	336
23	To Syed Mahmud	9 December	1931	337
24	To Syed Mahmud	10 December	1931	338
25	To the Income Tax Officer, Allahabad	23 December	1931	338

6. Prison Diary with Letters
26 December 1931—31 December 1932

Prison Diary with Letters 343

7. Prison Diary with Letters
1 January 1933—30 August 1933

Prison Diary with Letters 449

8. On the Situation in India

1	On His Release	30 August	1933	505
2	Interview at Allahabad	30 August	1933	505

3	Interview to the Pioneer	31 August	1933	506
4	To Aldous Huxley	1 September	1933	510
5	To Desmond Young	1 September	1933	514
6	To B.K. Das Gupta	2 September	1933	516
7	To T.C. Goswami	3 September	1933	516
8	On the Congress Organisation and Programme	4 September	1933	517
9	On the World Situation	4 September	1933	519
10	To S.P. Khambatta	7 September	1933	520
11	To Sri Prakasa	10 September	1933	521
12	To Kapildeva Malaviya	10 September	1933	522
13	To Bhagavan Das	11 September	1933	523
14	To Patrick Lacey	13 September	1933	524
15	The Andaman Prisoners	13 September	1933	525
16	To Mahatma Gandhi	13 September	1933	526
17	To J. Makhmoor	14 September	1933	530
18	Statement to the Press	14 September	1933	531
19	Interview to the Press	15 September	1933	533
20	Interview to the Press	17 September	1933	534
21	Interview at Kanpur	19 September	1933	538
22	On Gandhi Jayanti Celebrations	20 September	1933	539
23	On the Treatment of Political Prisoners in Rae Bareli Jail	21 September	1933	540
24	To Bhagavan Das	23 September	1933	540
25	Appeal for Khadi	23 September	1933	543
26	On the Congress Programme	24 September	1933	543
27	Speech at Lucknow	24 September	1933	545
28	To A.G. Venkatachari	25 September	1933	546
29	To S.K. Mukerji	26 September	1933	547
30	To V.V. Giri	30 September	1933	549

9. General 1931-33

1	Foreword to a Biography of Ganesh Shankar Vidyarthi		1931	553
2	Foreword to a Book on Prison Reforms	6 July	1931	554
3	The Defence of India	9 September	1931	555

4 A Window in Prison 10 September 1933 560
5 Prison Land 18 September 1933 565

Appendix

To K.M. Munshi 29 April 1940 579

ILLUSTRATIONS

Frontispiece

The Elusive Mahatma
With Mahatma Gandhi in Bombay, 29 August 1931 — between pp. 48–49

Bombay, 1931
Bombay, 1931 — 112–113

With Congress workers at Allahabad, 1931
At Allahabad District Kisans Conference, 25 November 1931 — 176–177

With Vallabhbhai Patel in Ahmedabad, 1931 — 224

At Chheoki station on the eve of arrest, 26 December 1931
A page from the jail diary — 352–353

Statement to be read at trial, 4 January 1932
The barrack in Dehra Dun jail — 384–385

First page of letter to Indira Nehru, 3 October 1932
A page from the jail diary, 8 May 1933 — 416-417

1

CONGRESS, THE SETTLEMENT AND THE ROUND TABLE CONFERENCE

1. Truce is not Peace[1]

When I recall the splendid record of Bombay during the last civil disobedience movement I must pay a high tribute to the people of this great city for their achievement. But I must remind you that the truce is only a temporary suspension of hostile activities and we must keep ourselves in good trim to resume the fight if there is need for it.

In view of the work before the country in the immediate future, I appeal to you to strengthen the hands of Gandhiji. The fight that Gandhiji is carrying on is for the freedom of the masses and for solving the problem of feeding the hungry millions in India. It is, in short, the question of providing bread to the poor.

The victory achieved by the Congress is due to the solid backing that the Congress received from the poor people. They have stood behind the Congress like one man, faced all sorts of sufferings and kept the Congress flag flying. It is up to them now to stand by Gandhiji and strengthen his hands.

I warn you not to be led away by the cry that truce is 'Peace'. I want to make it perfectly clear that it is not peace but merely a truce, or, in other words, a temporary suspension of hostile activities. No one knows nor can say what will come out from the truce. It may be lasting peace or it may be a grim fight again. But whether it is going to be peace or war, you, as soldiers of freedom, must keep yourselves ready for any emergency. For that purpose, you must gather more and more strength and it is only when you do that, that the dream of Swaraj will come true.

1 Speech at Rashtriya Stree Sabha, Bombay, 7 June 1931. From The Bombay Chronicle, 8 June 1931.

2. Be Prepared[1]

Be prepared for peace as well as for war. If there is no peace you will have to fight. You have got an opportunity to prepare yourselves within three or four months. Bardoli has taken a great part in tho last struggle and great responsibility rests on its shoulders. There should be the strength of millions behind our representative. Then there will be peace, otherwise not.

I have travelled as far as Ceylon.[2] Everywhere I have found men and women inspired with one ideal. There is unity from one end of the country to the other, despite dissensions at some places. We have now acquired the power to win Swaraj.

1. Speech at Bardoli, 8 June 1931. From The Hindu, 9 June 1931.
2. See Selected Works, Vol 4, pp. 518 531.

3. On the Changed Temper of the Nation[1]

Wherever we may look we can see India completely changed because of the war we have fought. Hitherto wherever an Indian went he was regarded as a slave unworthy of any respect; but things have changed after the magnificent fight we gave last year. The constitution on paper is the same, but the temper of the whole nation has changed. We can see that change with our own eyes. What is the moral of this great change that has come upon us? It is that we have now developed a strength in us which is impossible to be put down or defeated. Our sacrifices and sufferings have given us that strength.

We have obeyed our leaders, no doubt, but we have also put greater responsibility on them. Hereafter the leaders will not dare to go a step astray. They must keep to the path and that path is the path of war.

1 Speech at Bombay, 11 June 1931. From The Bombay Chronicle, 12 June 1931

We have taken a vow to attain independence. We are bound to fulfil it at any cost. If that can be done by peaceful negotiations at the Round Table Conference, by all means, let us have it; but if that fails, there must be no doubt in anybody's mind that we have to go back to the old path and that is the path of war. It is impossible that we shall be slaves in our own land.

Let us not think that Mahatmaji will bring independence from England and that we can sleep here. We must be alert now and for ever. Even when Mahatmaji is in England we must be so up and doing that the whole world must feel that the strength of the entire nation is behind him. It is left to us to create sanctions behind Gandhiji's demand.

Large number of Muslims had gathered to hear the speakers at the Dongri meeting. Only a handful of mischief mongers wanted to break up the meeting by despicable means. In any other country such rowdies would have been thrown out of the meeting. These mischief-makers could not succeed in their attempts. I read in the papers that after the meeting was over, these michief-makers began to throw stones at the crowd and assaulted innocent persons. By these dirty tactics the hooligans had exposed themselves. These hooligans went to the length of stabbing innocent persons. One brave young man was a victim of their stabbing. That was a most unfortunate incident. What bravery is there in stabbing an innocent person? They ought to have stabbed me, Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel, Abdul Ghaffar Khan or Dr. Ansari, if they were brave. If these people really want a fight I am prepared for it. I would go to Dongri. Let them fight with me. The time has come when these cowardly tactics must stop.

The nation that gave such a valiant fight to the mightiest power on earth is not going to be cowed down by these despicable methods of a handful of persons. The Congress has begun to fight and that is going to be fought to the finish. No community is going to be cowed down by threats Even Hindus and Muslims put together could not cow down a small community like the Sikhs. The strength of the nation is the strength of sacrifice. Who can put down that strength?

4. Speech at Poona[1]

I visited this city last year with my father as the honoured 'guest' of His Majesty at Yeravda jail. Though we have not attained Swaraj following last year's struggle, we have shown our strength. One cannot say for certain whether we may have to fight again. But the nation must be prepared for emergencies, keeping itself in readiness like organised and disciplined soldiers.

Several distinguished men went to the Round Table Conference last year, but they were not sent by the people of India as their representatives.[2] Now, we are sending Mahatma Gandhi to represent the whole of India.[3] So, the success of the Congress depends on the strength behind it and behind Mahatma Gandhi.

To those who say that Muslims are not behind the Congress I would tell them that during the last movement, out of 70,000 persons who went to jail, nearly 14,000 were Muslims. The Frontier people have borne the brunt of the struggle and they have lost more lives and suffered more in comparison with other provinces.

I appeal to the merchants who have promised that they will not sell foreign cloth for a certain period, to give up its sale for ever.

1. 15 June 1931. From The Hindu, 16 June 1931.
2. The Congress did not participate in the first Round Table Conference because it failed to get an assurance from the government that the discussions in the conference would take place on the basis of full responsible government—Purna Swaraj
3. Mahatma Gandhi attended the second Round Table Conference which met from 7 September to 1 December 1931.

5. Peace Only with Honour and Freedom[1]

When two nations sit together to arrive at a settlement, fine questions of constitutional law are of no avail. It is the sanction behind a particular representative that really counts. If therefore the Mahatma attends the Round Table Conference he will do so as the representative of the organised will of the nation, and the sanction of millions of his countrymen, of all classes, will be behind him. The British Government should not, however, feel elated as they have to face a nation which does not yield easily. Meanwhile we should strengthen the Congress and its internal power.

1. Allahabad, 20 June 1931. From The Searchlight, 23 June 1931.

I have been criticised that I mar the peaceful atmosphere of the country by my references to the next fight which we may be forced to start.[2] We must remember that 'eternal vigilance is the price of liberty' as an American had said. Even free countries maintain armaments and study the international situation. If, therefore, we want to achieve freedom and retain it we must be vigilant and ready for all emergencies.

It is no pleasure to those who are at present leading the people to throw their countrymen into the fire of political struggle and into the suffering that attends it. But in arriving at a settlement we must not forget the vow of Purna Swaraj we have taken and we must remember that no peace which is not honourable and which does not secure us freedom can satisfy the country.

Ever since my arrival in Allahabad, I have been approached by tenants who related woeful tales of harassment and oppression in the districts. The Congress has observed the terms of the Gandhi-Irwin Settlement honourably. Mahatma Gandhi himself met the Governor of the province in order to arrive at some formula to tide over the difficulties of the tenants and the zamindars. But his very reasonable proposals were not accepted. I would advise the tenants that they should observe the peace terms and follow the Mahatma's advice in this connection. The result in the long run is bound to prove beneficial to them and the country.

2. Such criticism long continued. See Jawaharlal's letter to K. M. Munshi of 29 April 1940. Appendix one.

6. On Resumption of the Struggle[1]

Our strength and solid organisation alone shall lead us to success whether at the Round Table Conference or outside it.

After having toured the whole country and watched the mood and the temper of the people myself, I can say that the people who were denounced as slaves have risen from their slumber and 350 million people are now determined to be free. It is this determination of the people which has attracted world attention. And the people throughout the world hold our leader Mahatma Gandhi in high esteem.

The selfless sacrifices and silent sufferings of our people are responsible for making us rise in the estimation of the world and we feel much stronger now. The truce itself is a proof of our strength.

At the Round Table Conference, Mahatma Gandhi will deliver the message of India to the British and the world. His voice would be the voice of India's 350 millions, and most probably his demands would be met

As regards the truce, I must say that the government has not sincerely fulfilled its part of the agreement. In U.P., repression is in full swing and selected Congress workers are being prosecuted. The government alone is responsible for breach of the truce terms. It is shameful for such a powerful government to use the zamindars for crushing the poor kisans. It is impossible for us to go on crying 'truce', 'truce', while our peasant brethren are being trampled under foot. We shall have to take some drastic action.

I must also say that if the fight is resumed again, the government alone will be responsible for it. The government must know that the peasants are as strong as before to give it another big fight. It must take a lesson from the past. If last year, thousands of men, women and children could make tremendous sacrifices, we would certainly make much greater sacrifices in the next fight which would be more fierce. The next political earthquake will be of a more tremendous nature.

I cannot say when we shall gain complete victory, but I must say that victory is assured to those—be it today or tomorrow—whose fight is for truth, justice and righteousness.

1. Delhi, 22 June 1931. From The Bombay Chronicle, 29 June 1931.

7. On Observance of the Truce[1]

When we made the truce with the government three months back we knew that if an opportunity arose, we could again enter the battlefield afresh with our sword of satyagraha unsheathed.

The truce is a temporary measure, for it is well-known how far its terms are adhered to.

In the United Provinces, the zamindars and the government are crushing the poor kisans. Though the peasants have paid as much rent as they can and the Congress is observing the truce terms, the government are not adhering to them. The government have begun arresting the chief organisers and workers of the Congress in various places under different sections in order that they may not be able to help the Congress when needed.

This cannot be borne for long, though the Congress wants to prove that it is not taking an aggressive attitude, yet, if the government and the zamindars persist in their policy, the Congress will be obliged to do something. The government will be mistaken if they think that the movement can easily be crushed, for it has spread into the villages.

Gandhiji will go alone to the Round Table Conference not to argue but to convey the message of the country and he will be heard because he has the support of the whole country behind him. India is not fighting individuals but the government as a whole. And if that is to be fought out we should establish a strong Congress sangathan. We have already succeeded to some extent in this. I also appeal to you to continue the boycott of foreign cloth.

1. Delhi, 23 June 1931. From The Hindu, 24 June 1931.

8. Circular to P.C.Cs[1]

Allahabad
July 16th, 1931

Dear Comrade,

The Working Committee met at Bombay on the 7th July and had a prolonged session lasting full six days. Many vital matters affecting the future of the country and the national movement were considered and important resolutions were passed. The next number of the Congress Bulletin containing the Working Committee resolutions will be sent to you soon. Meanwhile, I am addressing you separately and drawing your particular attention to these important resolutions requiring immediate action. These relate to the communal problem, the volunteer organisation and the pledge for the exclusion of foreign cloth and yarn.

The most important question, however, before the Working Committee was the action to be taken in regard to the numerous breaches of the Delhi Settlement on the part of local governments and their officers. As you are aware provincial and local Congress committees and individuals have brought many such instances to the notice of the Working Committee and the Committee felt that it was not possible to ignore them or to permit the situation to drift from bad to worse. After the most anxious consideration they decided to make another earnest effort to bring about an observance of the settlement on the part of the government, and Mahatma Gandhi has proceeded to Simla with this object. Gandhiji will undoubtedly do his utmost to secure a peaceful settlement of the matters in issue so that there may be no future complaints of this kind. But it is obvious enough that there are dangerous possibilities ahead and it is well to be prepared for all emergencies. We must of course continue to observe scrupulously the terms of the Delhi Settlement. Any other action that we may have to take can only be considered after all avenues of amicable settlement by negotiation have failed and the Working Committee gives a definite lead. Till then no breach of the truce, individual or collective, on our part is permissible.

1. A.I.C.C. File No. P-1/1931, p. 111, N.M.M.L.

But in view of the grave situation, it is incumbent on us to keep wide awake and to keep our organisation ready and prepared. You will therefore kindly see to it that all the local Congress committees in your province are kept up to the mark and are made to appreciate the necessities of the situation.

The next meeting of the A.I.C.C. will take place in Bombay on August 6th afternoon and following days. We have not received the names of the new A.I.C.C. members from many provinces and it is therefore difficult to inform them individually. I shall be glad if you will kindly send information about this meeting of the A.I.C.C. to all the A.I.C.C. members in your province. Members desiring board and lodging arrangements to be made for them in Bombay should address the secretaries, Bombay Provincial Congress Committee, Congress House, Girgaum Back Road, Bombay, as early as possible.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

9. Interview to the Press[1]

My talk at the Viceregal Lodge was only a side issue and I was called in because it was felt I could propound certain points. There is nothing to be satisfied or dissatisfied about my talk with the Viceroy.

Question: Do you think that Mr. Gandhi's going to London is more certain than before?

Jawaharlal Nehru: It is just the same as before.

Q: Would you be seeing Lord Willingdon again?

JN: If he sends for me I shall certainly see him. Today he was in a hurry to leave for Mashobra and we have made no appointment so far.

1 Simla, 18 July 1931 From The Bombay Chronicle, 20 July 1931. When Mahatma Gandhi met the Viceroy and other officials in Simla in the middle of July 1931 for discussing the matters relating to the breaches of the settlement, Jawaharlal also joined him for elucidating certain points concerning his own province While in Simla, he also met the Viceroy and other officials for the same purpose

10. Interview to the Associated Press[1]

Gandhiji is the main person to decide the question whether there is an agreement.[2] So far as I am concerned my talks with everyone have been quite satisfactory.

Question: Do you think that the government will agree to appoint an inquiry board to go into the alleged breaches of the Delhi Pact in the United Provinces and inquire into economic conditions?[3]

Jawaharlal Nehru: It is too early to say anything about it just now. The way is just being paved to get at an amicable settlement.

Q: Can you say, as the result of your talks with Mr. Emerson,[4] Sir James Crerar and Sir George Schuster,[5] that there is a turn for the better or that an optimistic view could be held?

JN: The very fact that we are staying on here shows that there is something like real optimism prevailing. Otherwise we should have gone away long ago.

Q: Do you think that the chances of Gandhiji going to London are now more certain than before?

JN: I won't put it so rosily as all that, but there is every chance of Gandhiji going to London.

Q: Can it be said that the bone of contention is the arbitration board and an economic inquiry?

JN: They are not the only things, but they are the vital issues.

1 Simla, 21 July 1931. From The Hindu, 22 July 1931.

2 Mahatma Gandhi had demanded the appointment, in different provinces, of inquiry boards, each consisting of an official and a Congress nominee, to inquire into the allegations on both sides and also a permanent arbitration board to interpret the settlement correctly.

3 In addition to an inquiry into breaches of the truce, Jawaharlal had asked for an inquiry into the economic distress of the U.P. peasants.

4 Herbert William Emerson (1551-1962); Home Secretary, Government of India, 1930-33, Governor of Punjab 1933-38.

5 Finance Member, Viceroy's Executive Council, 1928-34.

11. On His Interview at Simla[1]

During my stay in Simla, I gave no interview as such to any press correspondent, but I find that interviews purported to have been given by me have appeared in the press. They convey an entirely wrong impression. I refer particularly to the interview which the Associated Press of India have published. They have picked up odd words and sentences of mine and tried to cross the t's and dot the i's. In doing so, they have added something which I did not say and changed the tenor of my words.

It is stated that my interviews at Simla were very satisfactory and that the situation was promising. What I said was that during all the interviews I had in Simla, I was shown all courtesy. This had nothing to do with the possibility or otherwise of a satisfactory outcome of our interviews in regard to the points at issue between the Congress and the government. There has been no settlement yet, and we cannot say whether the Congress will be represented at the Round Table Conference or not. To say that I am optimistic is not correct. At the same time, it would be equally incorrect to say that there is no chance of a settlement.

The present conditions are very unsatisfactory in the United Provinces, in Bardoli and elsewhere. If these conditions manifestly improve, then there will be a chance of Gandhiji going to London.

Question: Is there any time limit for an improvement in the situation?

Jawaharlal Nehru: Gandhiji may decide to go to London if an improvement in the situation appears even two or three days before the date fixed for the delegates to sail for London.

Q: But the government has definitely refused to concede the Congress demand for an inquiry or arbitration board.

JN: Statements made in the press in regard to this matter have not been correct, but I would rather not go further into the subject at this stage. The demand for an inquiry board is not the only question at issue.

1 Interview to the press, Allahabad, 25 July 1931. The Hindu, 26 July 1931.

10. Interview to the Associated Press[1]

Gandhiji is the main person to decide the question whether there is an agreement.[2] So far as I am concerned my talks with everyone have been quite satisfactory.

Question: Do you think that the government will agree to appoint an inquiry board to go into the alleged breaches of the Delhi Pact in the United Provinces and inquire into economic conditions?[3]

Jawaharlal Nehru: It is too early to say anything about it just now. The way is just being paved to get at an amicable settlement.

Q: Can you say, as the result of your talks with Mr. Emerson,[4] Sir James Crerar and Sir George Schuster,[5] that there is a turn for the better or that an optimistic view could be held?

JN: The very fact that we are staying on here shows that there is something like real optimism prevailing. Otherwise we should have gone away long ago.

Q: Do you think that the chances of Gandhiji going to London are now more certain than before?

JN: I won't put it so rosily as all that, but there is every chance of Gandhiji going to London.

Q: Can it be said that the bone of contention is the arbitration board and an economic inquiry?

JN: They are not the only things, but they are the vital issues.

1 Simla, 21 July 1931. From The Hindu, 22 July 1931.

2 Mahatma Gandhi had demanded the appointment, in different provinces, of inquiry boards, each consisting of an official and a Congress nominee, to inquire into the allegations on both sides and also a permanent arbitration board to interpret the settlement correctly.

3 In addition to an inquiry into breaches of the truce, Jawaharlal had asked for an inquiry into the economic distress of the U.P. peasants.

4 Herbert William Emerson (1881-1962); Home Secretary, Government of India, 1930-33, Governor of Punjab 1933-38.

5 Finance Member, Viceroy's Executive Council, 1928-34.

In the event of emergency arising so as to leave no time for calling the Working Committee, the President is hereby authorised to act in the name and on behalf of the Committee.

The resolutions will indicate to you that the political situation in the country has undergone a vital change. In spite of this change, however, the Working Committee wishes all Congressmen to observe the terms of the settlement. It may be that it may become difficult for you, owing to the governmental action, to observe these terms scrupulously. If so, you must refer the matter to the President. Any action contrary to the terms of the settlement should not be taken without the President's permission.

You will no doubt appreciate that the trend of events is such that at any moment one may be called upon to face an even more critical situation. We must be ready for all eventualities.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

13. Little Hope of a Compromise[1]

It is a pity that Mahatma Gandhi is not going to London. The Round Table Conference, however, is not being held under the best conditions from the Congress point of view. For one thing it is a packed conference Gandhiji would have taken part had he gone and joined the debates, but the principal objective of the Congress in accepting the invitation to be present in the first place was that it might, through its representative, get into close touch with the British Government and the people.

Question: There is still a strong feeling that a compromise may be reached.

Jawaharlal Nehru: I am not inclined to agree with this view. In fact I think it is very improbable We are all watching the position very closely.

1 Interview to the press, Poona, 15 August 1931 The Times of India, 17 August 1931.

12. On Congress Participation in Round Table Conference[1]

Camp Bombay
14 August 1931

Dear Comrade,

Yesterday the Working Committee passed the following resolution:

> The Working Committee has carefully considered the correspondence exchanged between the Central Government and various provincial governments on the one hand and Mahatma Gandhi on the other upon matters arising out of the Delhi Settlement, and has also considered the statement made by Mahatma Gandhi describing the events that led to the correspondence.[2] The Committee notes with great regret that there have been, in its opinion, repeated and, in some cases, serious breaches by provincial governments of the conditions of the Delhi Settlement. A stage was reached when, failing satisfaction, Mahatma Gandhi had asked, with the approval of the Working Committee, for the appointment of an impartial tribunal to investigate the allegations of breaches and to interpret the terms of the settlement. Such request has now been refused even in matters affecting the vital interest of the peasantry. The Committee has, therefore, been obliged reluctantly to come to the conclusion that, consistent with the terms of the settlement and the national interest, the Congress cannot and should not be represented at the Round Table Conference.

This morning the Committee passed, inter alia, the following two resolutions

> In view of the resolution relating to the Congress non-participation in the Round Table Conference passed by the Working Committee on August 13th, the Committee desires to make it clear that this resolution should not be construed as ending the Delhi Settlement. The Committee therefore advises Congress organisations and all Congressmen to continue to comply, until further instructions, with the terms of the settlement, in so far as they are applicable to the Congress.

1 A I C C File No P-1/1931, p 55, N M M L. This was a circular sent to P.C Cs.
2 The correspondence was carried on from 21 March to 13 August, when Mahatma Gandhi wired to the Viceroy that because of the "fundamental difference in our respective outlooks" he could not go to London.

matter of vital principle involving the bona fides of Mahatma Gandhi, and his assurance given to the cultivators of Bardoli.[3] The question, therefore, is not a petty issue relating to Bardoli but one of principle and one which shows the mentality of the government behind. I cannot say what will happen in the immediate future. The Working Committee has made the position of the Congress quite clear. The next move lies with the government. If they accept the contention of the Congress and are prepared to remove the obstacles in our way then the Committee will certainly be prepared to reconsider the position. But there can be no reconsideration so long as the obstacles are not removed. All along Mahatma Gandhi has stressed that, where there is a difference in the interpretation, the matter should be judged impartially. Even this obvious way out of the impasse has been rejected by the government who claim to be the sole judge. If they are to be the sole arbiters then there was no necessity for the Delhi Agreement. They may very well say that they will do what they think right and proper.

Question: Is the decision of the Working Committee the result of the communal situation?

Jawaharlal Nehru: The decision of the Working Committee has nothing to do with the communal situation or with various incidents that happened in Bombay recently.[4] I do not wish to go into any details as Mahatma Gandhi is the recognised spokesman of the Congress in this matter, and I have no doubt that he will explain fully the present attitude and the future policy of the Congress.

Q: Was the latest suggestion of an inquiry by an officer of the government, such as a High Court judge, also discussed with the Viceroy before?

JN: In regard not only to Bardoli but to the interpretation of all doubtful terms of the settlement we have claimed that an impartial inquiry tribunal or committee should decide. The question of what this tribunal or committee should consist of has not been considered as the principle of any such reference to a third party has not been accepted by the government who claim to be the sole judge.

3 Following an assurance by the local authorities, Mahatma Gandhi had advised the peasants of Surat district that if they paid the land tax according to their ability no coercion would be used against them

4 On 3 August, the nationalist Muslim leaders were assaulted by some hooligans, and on 6 August, members of the Youth League picketed the entrance to the A I C.C. meeting protesting against the Congress proposal to attend the Round Table Conference

Q: Do you think that the Congress Working Committee is in a frame of mind which will allow compromise on the position as it stands at the moment? Would it be prepared to make any sacrifices to retract the position described in Gandhi's letters to the Viceroy?[2]

JN: Congress has already made sacrifices all along the line and things have come to a pitch where it has felt that it can do no more. The decision to withdraw the Congress representation has thus been made.

2. Mahatma Gandhi wrote on 14 August 1931 to the Viceroy: "The Working Committee of the Congress has no desire to embarrass the government at the present juncture and therefore it is prepared to continue honourably to work the Settlement. But such working must depend upon a reciprocal attitude on the part of provincial governments. As I have told you so often through correspondence and our conversations, this reciprocity has been found to be progressively missing."

14. On the Working Committee's Decision[1]

I think it is unlikely that the government will remove the obstacles so that Mahatma Gandhi may be able to proceed to London.

If further developments affect the resolutions of the Congress Working Committee, another meeting of the Working Committee will have to be convened to reconsider the situation.

The correspondence published by the government is not complete.[2] Specially in regard to the United Provinces, only two telegrams have been published and these do not give any facts. It has been our contention that there have been numerous breaches of the terms of the settlement on the part of the government in the United Provinces. The question, however, which was in the forefront in Bombay was that of Bardoli. This involves a clear breach of an undertaking given to Mahatma Gandhi. However much the Congress Working Committee is prepared to put up with unpalatable facts, it cannot give in on a 1 Interview to the press, Allahabad, 18 August 1931. The Leader, 20 August 1931.

2 On 14 August 1931.

15. To Fenner Brockway[1]

20/8/1931

My dear Fenner,

Long ago you wrote to me and I have been discourteous enough not even to acknowledge your letter for these two or three months.[2] I shall not apologise or excuse myself for excuses are rather futile.

We seem to be at the cross-roads again, if we have not passed them already. The 15th August has gone and Gandhiji has not sailed for London and it seems highly unlikely that he will do so now. So the R.T.C. may do or not do just what it pleases so far as we are concerned. We shall carry on in our own way and perhaps some time later there will be a real conference with real persons in it.

As you know the London branch of the Congress has been disaffiliated.[3] I saw the letter you and some others wrote asking for the recognition by the Congress of another organisation. I am afraid this is not going to be given. We have had bitter experiences of our branches and our Committee is all against foreign commitments. But I do not see why this should prevent you from working on the lines indicated by the Congress.

All good wishes,

Sincerely yours,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 AICC File No F.D 33/1931, pp 12, NMML.
2. Fenner Brockway in his letter of 14 April had written, "I have been so delighted by the attitude you have been taking since the truce."
3 For Jawaharlal's note on disaffiliation of Congress branches abroad, see post, section 3, item 54. Also see Selected Works, Vol 4, p. 124

Q: The object of the truce is to enable the Congress to participate in the Round Table Conference. Your Working Committee has decided against the Congress participation. Should not the truce be considered as ended?

JN: We are perfectly justified in saying that the truce is over, but simply to avoid precipitating a conflict, we are prepared to carry on as if the truce continues provided the other party also takes the same view and gives us relief in cases where, according to us, there have been manifest breaches of the truce.

Q: But the Working Committee has already held that the other party has broken the truce and the Committee should have, therefore, concluded that the other party does not desire to continue the truce.

JN: This is true but we wish to give the truce another chance. It may be that the other party is not yet prepared to terminate the truce, and on reconsideration, it may give us the relief, in proof of its desire to continue the settlement.

Q: Am I to understand that the reason for your not declaring the truce as ended is that you want the other party to say so?

JN: Certainly it is for the other party to say whether it wants the truce to continue or not. If it does not want to continue it, obviously we ourselves cannot do so. If it does still wish to continue it we are prepared to do our best to carry on with the settlement. We have no desire to restart the conflict so long as we have any other alternative left. When there is no other way left open to us, then, of necessity we have to fall back on our sole effective method of action, that is, satyagraha.

Q. Suppose the Congress does not participate in the Round Table Conference, will it give consideration to the decisions that may be arrived at in the Round Table Conference?

JN: The Congress will give consideration to anything and everything which fits with the Congress resolutions on independence and fundamental rights.

offer proper relief to the tenants. For some time no doubt the government did adopt a policy but when they saw the Congress power among the tenants increasing, they deliberately went back upon it and desired that the government themselves should help the zamindars in realising rents.[3] Police aid was given to them and if under these circumstances, excesses were committed the government were certainly to blame.

The repression in Allahabad district and other parts of the United Provinces has ruined thousands of tenants. In the beginning the Congress offered to settle matters between the kisans and the zamindars and asked the government either not to interfere with them, or, that if it interfered, it should interfere properly. At that time, the Congress understood that the government would handle matters pertaining to the tenants properly, and in some places it even permitted the Congress to meet the kisans and the zamindars to settle matters among them, but subsequently deliberate attempts were made against the Congress meeting the kisans, and zamindars and taluqdars were told that they should not go to the Congress, the result of which was that the taluqdars and the zamindars were encouraged to resort to repression against the tenants. Therefore if anybody is responsible for the excesses committed on the peasants, it is the government and its officials. I may also refer to repression against Congress workers in certain places where there is no question of disputes between the kisans and the zamindars, and also the failure of the government servants to admit students who have left schools and colleges in connection with the civil disobedience movement in spite of the assurance given to the Congress in that matter.

But I attach great importance to the attempt being made to break the Congress organisation in villages by arresting leading village Congress workers and this is done because it is realised by the government that the real power of the country is the kisan and the Congress organisation has gained a complete hold on them. The United Provinces Congress Committee viewed such a concerted attempt to break the

3 In his letter of 30 June 1931, the Chief Secretary, U P. Government, wrote to H W Emerson, the Home Secretary. "We are satisfied that rental collections have actually been going on steadily throughout the greater part of the province.. but in some of the districts such as Rae Bareily, Bara Banki, part of Allahabad and possibly Unao, matters are coming to a head owing to the greater pressure exerted by Congress It is clear that the personal activities of Jawaharlal, Purushotam Das Tandon and one or two others may have a very detrimental effect in these districts and if matters seriously deteriorate we may have to apply to the Government of India for permission to prosecute Jawaharlal."

16. On Government's Attitude towards the Settlement[1]

It is necessary that the whole country should know what happened at Bombay and what will happen. Some Anglo-Indian papers have published what purported to be secret instructions of the Working Committee.[2] The Congress, however, does everything openly. If these papers do not have enough sense to understand that, I can only pity their intelligence. Several falsehoods have been spread by them during the last few months but I would tell them that such trickery would neither help nor retard the advent of Swaraj. If India wins Swaraj it will be by the sheer strength of her people.

Gandhiji has made it quite clear that he will not proceed to London until certain questions are settled. I want to know whether the government is genuinely anxious for peace or is simply deceiving us. It is well known how the truce has been made. The government wanted peace and Gandhiji said it was not proper to reject the hand of peace when the government offered it. At that time we virtually stemmed the mighty tide of an overflowing river. We restrained the great enthusiasm of the people. It was so great that it would not have been surprising if we had failed. We, however, succeeded and the government knows we have a force of disciplined soldiers.

Now that the door of charges is open it is possible that thefts and dacoities committed in the country will be laid at the Congress door. But I want to make it clear that it is easy for the government to enforce the truce because they have got the power to do so. If they do not faithfully enforce it, we can reasonably complain. The Congress, on its part, although it has only the method of persuasion and appeal at its disposal, has succeeded in implementing the truce.

The Congress, however, cannot quietly sit on the fence while the peasants are subjected to all sorts of oppression and harassments. Many excesses had been committed by the zamindars, but the government deny responsibility for them. The Congress position is that if the government do interfere in this matter, they should do so effectively and

1. Allahabad, 20 August 1931 From The Leader, 22 August 1931.
2. The Times of India had published a report on 17 August 1931 about instructions having been sent to Congress workers to disobey government orders, and to farmers in Kaira and Surat districts not to pay any more land revenue.

Bardoli. When the Viceroy refused to do anything in connection with the Bardoli affairs, it became impossible for Mahatma Gandhi to go to London.

Though at present the Congress has decided to abide by the truce, everything would depend on the attitude of the government. If the government do not change their present ways it will be impossible for the Congress to abide by the settlement. I doubt if the government will declare in clear terms that the truce is over but it may try to do things secretly as if there was a fight. If the struggle is revived, it is bound to be much stronger and more extensive than before on either side. It will decide the issue finally.

17. Circular to D.C.Cs[1]

Simla
August 26th, 1931

Dear Sir,

I enclose a cutting from the Gazette of India of August 24th giving the government's reply to the charges brought forward by Mahatma Gandhi in regard to——————————district.[2] The reply of government denies many of the charges made. It is therefore necessary to deal with this reply immediately. Will you please send me to the A.I.C.C. office, Allahabad, immediately your reply and criticism of the government statement? Please remember that you should be definite and positive in your statement. Vague statements will not help. Further please send us any further information regarding government activities in your district. A copy of your reply should be sent direct to Mahatma Gandhi wherever he may be.

Kindly treat this as urgent.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 AICC File No 53/1931 (Pt. 1), p 25, NMML.
2 They were listed in a memorandum accusing the government of either coercion, persecution, terrorism or harassment

Congress hold in the villages though it has been unsuccessful, with anxiety, and discussed it repeatedly, and eventually when it became impossible to tolerate it, the committee asked the Congress Working Committee to take steps for putting a stop to such attempts or to permit the provincial committee to take such steps. The civil disobedience movement has been withdrawn on account of the truce, but the Congress cannot leave the peasants in distress. The main function of the Congress is to relieve the peasants of their distress and if the Congress cannot perform that function, it will be better to dissolve it. It is impossible for the Congress to keep silent while atrocities on the peasants and secret activities to paralyse the Congress organisation continue. In view of these circumstances, how can Mahatma Gandhi go to London?

Gandhiji invited my opinion whether the truce should be broken on the ground of the breaches in the U.P. I however did not wish him to do so, though the government is guilty of violating the truce terms.

There is little hope of achieving Swaraj by going to England and it is also apprehended that perhaps his going to England may be harmful to the interests of the country. Still the Congress decided to give the conference a chance. Accordingly, we have tolerated many things, but when the attitude of the government is clearly understood, the path that is left open to us is one which cannot take us from Bombay to London but which takes us from Bombay to the villages.

Although it has been decided that Mahatma Gandhi will not go to London, still the Congress Working Committee has declared that we should stick to the settlement. There is no doubt that the decision against going to London has brought the question of a revival of the fight very near. Still the Working Committee has announced that there should be no talk of reviving the struggle at present as the Congress wants to give the government one more chance so that the Congress may not be blamed for reopening the fight. If the government declares that the truce is over and the fight may recommence the Congress is prepared for it. But if the government desires to continue the truce, the Congress is prepared for it as well, but the government should give proof of its desire to continue the settlement by its conduct.

The decision not to participate in the Round Table Conference has been taken particularly on account of U.P.

There have been complaints from many other provinces before the Working Committee, particularly from Bardoli. The Bardoli situation is comparatively a smaller matter than the case of the United Provinces. But here a principle of paramount importance is involved and if Mahatma Gandhi had tolerated what had happened in Bardoli and had gone to London in spite of it, he would be guilty of deceiving the tenants of

19. Repudiation of Press Propaganda[1]

In the message of the Simla correspondent of The Times of India it is stated that Mahatma Gandhi telegraphed on Wednesday, 26th, to Miraben and to his secretary and Mr. Andrews stating that he was leaving for London. It is further stated that although he had made up his mind to go to London, he went on arguing and haggling to the very last moment.

As usual these statements are entirely wrong. The motives behind them are obvious enough but I do not wish to say anything about them. I shall only say that no such message was sent by Mahatma Gandhi, or any member of the staff or any one else, and both the members of the Government of India and others connected with the negotiations know well enough that everything was in the melting pot till Thursday afternoon.

Indeed on Thursday morning it seemed almost certain that he would not go. Mr. K. F. Nariman, reading various press reports, wired to Mahatma Gandhi suggesting a public meeting in Bombay, just prior to Gandhiji's departure. Gandhiji wired back that nothing has been decided and that he should not arrange any meeting.

It was not till Thursday afternoon that the agreement was reached. I do not wish to say anything about the various stages of the negotiations, but the Simla correspondent of the 'Times' presumably can find this out easily for himself and discover how utterly mistaken he is in his message.

Another point which The Times of India has made for itself is that the Congress has abandoned its claims to be an intermediary between the people and the government. It is remarkable how this conclusion has been reached. The claim of the Congress is not going to be decided by the 'Times' or by anyone else. It has already been decided by the people of India. The very course of the negotiations and their final outcome shows that the government acknowledge it in effect.

The demand for inquiry related specially to Bardoli. We were not interested in other inquiries, but we pointed out to the government clearly that where there is a conflict of opinion, the only intermediate step between submission of one party to the other's viewpoint and civil disobedience on the part of the Congress was an impartial inquiry.

1. Statement to the press, Bombay, 29 August 1931. The Bombay Chronicle, 31 August 1931.

18. Circular to P.C.Cs and Members of Working Committee[1]

Camp Simla
27/8/31

Dear Comrade,

As you are aware Mahatma Gandhi issued some days ago a statement containing instances of breaches of the truce on behalf of government. To this government has replied in the Gazette of India dated August 24th, 1931, a copy of which I enclose. In many cases government has denied the charges made and it is therefore necessary for us to issue a full statement on the subject substantiating our charges and, where necessary, correcting them. We should like your help in preparing this statement. Will you, therefore, please send a detailed criticism, based on facts and not on surmises, of the government's reply?

Mahatmaji's charge-sheet against the government was based on some facts which had come to his knowledge. It was by no means complete as many provincial committees had not supplied the necessary information. Kindly therefore send us a full and detailed account of all instances of breaches of settlement in your province. This will of course include instances which have not so far been referred to in the charge-sheet or elsewhere. Care should be taken not to make vague charges which cannot be substantiated.

Your reply should be sent to Syt. Jairamdas Doulatram, General Secretary, A.I.C.C., Ahmedabad. This matter should be treated as urgent.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. A.I.C.C. File No. P-1/1931, pp. 45-47, N.M.M.L.

as it has done, as an intermediary between them and the government and when it fails in bringing this relief, the only other course open to it is to side with the kisans completely and offer such defensive direct action as may be deemed necessary. But in no event can the Congress desert the kisans. If it did so it would abdicate from its principal function.

20. On the Simla Settlement[1]

It is true that there were many hitches before the final draft of the settlement was approved by both the parties.[2]

I do not wish to go into the details of these difficulties and hitches, but I may mention that there was no desire on our part to ask for inquiries other than that in Bardoli. This was made quite clear at an early stage and there was no further argument about it. Of course we were not prepared to give up the theoretical right of having an inquiry as this is the only way out of a difficulty short of conflict. But as the government was averse to facing any such inquiries we pointed out to them that the only alternative, if relief is denied, is defensive direct action, in other words, civil disobedience. This fact has been made perfectly clear in the correspondence that has been published. We are quite content with the elucidation of this position of the Congress. If the government prefers the fire to the frying pan, it is for the government to choose. We shall of course try our best to avoid any resort to direct action, but the Congress cannot desert the kisans and its own workers where they are in trouble. If it did so it would abdicate its

1 Allahabad, 31 August 1931. The Leader, 2 September 1931.

2 The settlement, together with Mahatma Gandhi's letter of 27 August to the Home Secretary and his reply, embodied the terms: (1) Congress to be represented at the Round Table Conference; (2) provisional settlement remained operative; (3) inquiry to be held into the alleged coercive collection of land revenue in Surat district but "no inquiry in regard to other matters hitherto raised by Congress", (4) complaints of a general nature to be dealt with according to normal administrative procedure and (5) in extreme hardship when no relief was forthcoming Congress had the right to adopt "defensive direct action."

If the inquiry is left out, satyagraha is the only consequence. This fact has been brought out clearly in Gandhiji's message to Mr. Emerson and the government's reply has acknowledged it.

So the position is this. In regard to Bardoli there will be an inquiry. In regard to other matters that may arise, there may or may not be an inquiry. But in regard to all grievances, old and new, where relief is demanded, if such relief is not given and there is no impartial tribunal to decide, the Congress has a right to start defensive direct action, that is to say, civil disobedience.

In the United Provinces, as is well known, we have a large number of grievances, in particular the thousands of ejectments that have taken place and proceedings against Congress workers and kisans under preventive or the Criminal Procedure Code.

We shall endeavour to the best of our ability to get relief in regard to this matter, but should relief not be forthcoming, we cannot desert the thousands of kisans who are in trouble and our only alternative is defensive direct action.

The measure of distress among the kisans in U.P. can be gathered from reports that many of them are surrendering their holdings. No tenant, specially non-occupancy tenant, who has stuck on to the land for generations, wants to give up his holdings, except on the extreme pressure of economic circumstances.

Ordinarily conditions in U.P. are such that they would have given rise to very serious agrarian troubles. It is due entirely to the Congress influence and ceaseless effort of the Congressmen in U.P. that the peasantry have remained peaceful to a remarkable extent. But it is obvious that such conditions cannot continue.

Hence the problem of the U.P. is an urgent and vital one for the Congress and we shall do our utmost to get relief for them. The government itself has recognised this by appointing a committee which was recently reported to be bringing down rents substantially. I have not seen the report yet but this committee dealt with the future only, and the immediate problem is one of the present.

The Congress in the U.P. is primarily a kisan organisation, and for the last few years, therefore, it has been concentrating on the distress among the peasantry.[2] It can try to bring relief to the kisans by acting,

2 H W Emerson writing on his discussions with Mahatma Gandhi on 15 and 16 July 1931 observed: "I challenged his statement that Congress was identical with the kisans, and suggested to him that the close identity of interest had been developed since the Settlement and was part of the policy of consolidation in rural areas as preparation for a new fight."

JN: I have only seen a brief report of the committee's conclusions and it does not give sufficient information to enable me to form an opinion. It seems to me, however, that the government has again made the mistake of producing an intricate and elaborate scheme in which patwaris and the lesser revenue officials will have a large say. Apart from the quantum of reduction in rent which is still vague, the methods are very unfortunate and, I am afraid, will not give the relief desired.

21. Circular to P.C.Cs[1]

Allahabad
August 31st, 1931

Dear Comrade,

Mahatma Gandhi has sailed for England in order to attend the Round Table Conference[2] and it may be that some of us will think that we have little to do now except to wait till he returns. A greater error cannot be committed. The burden on us is the heavier because he has gone. The Congress has agreed to take part in the Round Table Conference with great doubt and hesitation and without much faith in it. But because we believed that there was a possibility of some good resulting from it, and specially because we thought that Gandhiji's participation in it, with the mandate of the Congress behind him, cannot possibly do harm to the national cause, the Congress sent our leader to represent the nation. He may come back within a few weeks or he may return after two or three months. His success will depend on the strength of an organised nation behind him. And if he returns, as he well might, with our objective still to be gained and a greater struggle before us, we have to be ready to welcome him back, alert and fully prepared for all contingencies and eventualities.

But even before he returns we may have to face a crisis which may test our strength and organisation to the full. The Simla Agreement makes it clear that if relief is not given to us in any vital matter, the Congress has the right to resort to defensive direct action, that is, satyagraha or civil disobedience. We must be prepared for this.

1. A.I.C.C. File No P-I/1931, p 39, N.M.M.L.
2. On 29 August 1931.

function. Therefore we shall try our utmost by all means of peaceful persuasion to get relief for such grievances as people may have. Failing such relief and failing an impartial inquiry into such grievances, the only alternative for us is direct action. But I hope that this alternative will not be forced down on us while Mahatmaji is away.

Question: Suppose this alternative is forced down upon the Congress in any part of the country, will it interfere with Mahatma Gandhi's participation in the Round Table Conference?

Jawaharlal Nehru: That will necessarily depend on circumstances and on the extent of the defensive action that we may have to take.

Q: It is being stressed that the Congress has given up its position as 'intermediary'. What is your comment?

JN: This is an extraordinary statement and it shows how keen our Anglo-Indian newspaper friends are to clutch on to straws. The whole course of negotiations and the agreement shows one thing and that is this, that the Congress is treated as a representative of the people. The argument is sought to be enforced by a reference to inquiries in the future. As a matter of fact we laid no stress on such inquiries, as I have stated earlier, because they are seldom real and impartial and they take up a great deal of time and energy.

Q: What will be the programme of the Congress when Mahatma Gandhi is in England?

JN: Our future programme has not been changed by Gandhiji's departure. We continue strengthening our organisation and carrying it to distant villages; we continue the boycott of foreign cloth and liquor and we shall continue to get redress for those who are suffering by what we claim to be breaches of truce on behalf of the government and on account of economic distress. In particular the Congress is concerned with the situation in the United Provinces and the Frontier Province.[3] I hope that in both these places relief will be forthcoming.

Q. What are your views on the conclusions of the committee appointed by the government to adjust rent and revenue in conformity with the present range of prices?[4]

3 In July 1931, Mahatma Gandhi presented to the government a charge sheet which included accounts of highhanded behaviour of the local authorities in the N W F P. In a report prepared for the Working Committee, Devadas Gandhi gave instances of cruelty and torture perpetrated by the N.W.F.P. authorities in connection with the realisation of land revenue and rent.

4 The U P Government had appointed a committee on 23 July 1931, consisting of officials and zamindars, to suggest remissions of rent and revenue. The committee suggested only 21 per cent remissions whereas the fall in prices had been about 54 per cent.

to be a duller and an emptier place without you and I am afraid many will look, oftener than the pious Muslim's five times a day, to the Kaaba in the west, and will pay little heed to work at home. Wireless reports tell us that you are enjoying yourself on board and are unperturbed at the frolics of the Arabian Sea, although many others have been laid low. I am glad for one reason at least that you have gone. You will rest after a fashion for a fortnight and the sea air will freshen you.

I returned to Allahabad from Bombay to find Kamala ill. She had had fever—probably malarial. She is better now but is extraordinarily fragile and weak.

I am enclosing some papers. There are copies of letters from and to the Private Secretary to the Viceroy.[2] There is a newspaper cutting giving an article from an Egyptian paper.[3] I hope you will read it, specially as I understand Shaukat Ali is going to descend on you at Port Said.[4] There is some wholesome advice in this article which Shaukat would do well to accept—but I fear he will not do so! The example of Egypt has often been thrust upon us. It is well that we should know what it was.

I am also enclosing a cutting from the Pioneer just to show you what your friend Newham[5]—if that is his name—is capable of. It is a shameless bit of writing and propaganda. I said something about it in a press interview yesterday but the Leader took special care to leave out that part of the interview. But after all it was not for me to contradict. It is for Abdul Ghaffar and I have drawn his attention to it.[6]

I have decided to send Kamala's brother, Kailas Nath Kaul, to Khan Sahib. I sent for him here and explained to him what his job was going to be. He liked the idea of going. I think the Khan will like him and get some work out of him.

I have suggested to Vallabhbhai to invite Abdul Ghaffar to the Working Committee on the 8th. I hope he will come.

2 For Jawaharlal's letter to Private Secretary to Viceroy, see post, section 2, item 35

3 It stated that the settlement of the minority problem in Egypt was based on trust and goodwill of Muslims and Christians and not on reservations and safeguards

4. He joined Mahatma Gandhi on 7 September.

5 Charles E Newham, then editor in chief of The Pioneer.

6. Jawaharlal wired to Abdul Ghaffar Khan: "Pioneer and Civil Military Gazette carrying on propaganda against Khudai Khidmatgars suggesting conflict with Congress giving misleading statements in alleged interview with you at Simla. I suggest your issuing press statement"

Kindly therefore impress upon local committees that:

(1) The Delhi Agreement is still in force and must be respected. Any breaches of it by government officials must be reported to the President and an attempt should be made to get redress by peaceful persuasion. Where redress does not come, in spite of all our efforts, we may have to resort to satyagraha. But in no event must any satyagraha, individual or mass, without the special permission of the President, be started.

(2) Special attention must be paid to the improvement of the Congress organisation by starting village and mohalla committees.

(3) Foreign cloth boycott must be continued and, wherever necessary, picketing should be carried on.

(4) Boycott of liquor and intoxicating drugs should be continued.

(5) Volunteers must be reorganised and volunteer units started in all towns and in rural areas in accordance with the new rules. This is most important and urgent and provincial committees must take this work in hand immediately and send fortnightly reports to the Allahabad office

The A.I C.C. office at Allahabad issues a Congress Bulletin from time to time, giving the resolutions of the A.I.C.C., the Working Committee and other information for Congressmen. These bulletins are sent free to all members of the A.I C C. and to P.C.Cs. We shall gladly send these bulletins to any district and town or taluqa committees or to individual Congressmen on payment of Rs. 2/- per annum to cover cost of production and postage. The Bulletin comes out irregularly.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

22. To Mahatma Gandhi[1]

Allahabad
Sept. 1st, 1931

My dear Bapu,

You have gone at last and there have been great rejoicings in many quarters and five column headlines in the newspapers. But India seems

1. J N Correspondence, NMML.

23. To Mahatma Gandhi[1]

Ahmedabad
September 11th, 1931

My dear Bapu,

The Working Committee has been sitting for three days. It has not finished its work yet. Probably it will end today. As desired by you we considered what our minimum demands should be and a note to this effect has been drafted. This is not technically a resolution but it is as good as a resolution. We are of course treating this as confidential. Vallabhbhai will send you a copy of the note. I am also enclosing it.

The note covers most of the points mentioned by you except on the type of federation desired and the division of subjects. We may consider this before we part.

According to your suggestion I wrote to Ramanand Babu about the army matter. He has not replied yet but his assistant editor has done so and as this reply is interesting, I am sending it to you with this letter.[2]

In discussing the note we were to send you, Ansari was very keen on adding some kind of an assurance to the princes. Most of us were not agreeable to this. He tells me that he is writing to you on this subject.

Bengal is troubling us a great deal. Sen Gupta is acting aggressively and putting us in a very false position.[3] The Frontier appears to be a little worse. U.P. is bad and indeed worse also. In Muttra district

1. J N. Correspondence, N M.M L.
2. The assistant editor of Modern Review had written "The authoritative military opinion seems to be that it requires more time to train soldiers in India than, say, in England, and that, on this account, it is not possible to raise a large army in this country within a short time . In times of real danger and stress it requires almost as much intelligence and initiative in a private as in a Commissioned Officer This initiative and intelligence, the Indian sepoy is unable to supply on account of his defective education and lopsided character development. . This phenomenon .has been exploited to the full by the British as an argument for the retention of the British personnel And what is still more important, it will always remain as an obstacle to the complete Indianization of the Indian Army unless that fundamentally vicious thing—the recruitment policy of the British Government of India is absolutely done away with."
3. The reference is to the rivalry between Sen Gupta and Subhas Bose

Another enclosure is a copy of the letter I have sent to Slocombe.[7]

In the U.P. conditions are bad but there are no red spots. People seem to be resigned to their fate. Cholera is raging in the Allahabad district and helps to divert attention. Ejectments continue, and our good workers are caught here and there in the coils of Sec. 108 Cr. P. Code. But all this is being done more quietly and without any fuss. The Chief Secretary—Jagdish Prasad[8]—writes to me long letters, courteous and detailed, dealing with the complaints I make. I present the tenant's side, he puts forward the other side and it is a little difficult to say without full enquiry where the truth lies. Probably there are exaggerations on both sides. But the solid fact remains that thousands of tenants, and specially occupancy tenants, have been dispossessed and are in great trouble. I see no obvious way to tackle this problem. I shall continue writing of course to Jagdish Prasad.

The report of the Agrarian Committee appointed by the U.P. Government does not appear to be at all satisfactory. We do not know all the details yet but I am afraid it has produced a complicated scheme and the quantum of reduction is not enough. Much will be left to the petty revenue officials and this will mean trouble.

Meanwhile the rains are holding back and there is likelihood of a bad harvest.

You asked me to send duplicate copies of all air mail letters by the ordinary mail. This is going to be a little difficult. I cannot easily get duplicates of all the cuttings and enclosures. It is not even easy to get a copy of this letter unless Krishna gets busy with her typewriter. The A.I.C.C. office here has been depleted and a little illness makes it difficult to carry on. However it does not matter very much if my letter goes astray.

With love and all good wishes,

Yours affly.,
Jawaharlal

7 See post, section 5, item 7, George Slocombe, correspondent of the Daily Herald in India in 1930.

8 (1880-1957), Chief Secretary to the U.P. Government 1927-31; Home Member, U.P., 1933, Member, Viceroy's Executive Council, 1935-40

In the copy of the letter I am enclosing I have made a wrong statement which I must correct. I have stated that there have been over 2,000 ejectments in Muttra district in August. What I should have stated is that over 2,000 processes have been issued. The actual ejectments have not taken place yet.

Love.

Yours affly.,
Jawaharlal

The Working Committee's note is being treated by us as a confidential document. But you are at full liberty to use it in any way you like, even to publish it if you so choose.

J.

ENCLOSURE

The Working Committee at its meeting held in Ahmedabad on September 8th, 9th and 10th considered what attitude should be taken up on behalf of the Congress at the Round Table Conference, or in any other negotiations with Great Britain. The Committee felt that the points noted below should form the basis of a settlement.

The Karachi Congress resolution reaffirmed the Lahore resolution and, in particular, laid down that India should have control over the "defence forces, external affairs, finance, fiscal and economic policy, and to have a scrutiny by an impartial tribunal of the financial transactions of the British Government in India and to examine and assess the obligations to be undertaken by India or England and the right to either party to end the partnership at will." This resolution has brought out the main points clearly. Some of these with their implications are dealt with below.

2. Right to sever connection—It is not clear what the connection or partnership between India and Great Britain is likely to be in terms of the Karachi resolution This partnership, based as it must be on the independence of India, will be something more than what is termed Dominion Status Further this partnership must be capable of being put an end to by either party at will

3 Defence—The full control of all the defence forces by India is a necessary attribute of independence. This will mean:

1) that the British troops should be withdrawn from India immediately, there have been over 2,000 ejectments in August. Some of our special workers have been arrested (not in Muttra).

I enclose a copy of an article[4] on the Defence of India I have given to Kumarappa[5] for Young India.

We propose to publish our rejoinder to the government soon.

This letter goes by ordinary post which goes today. In a day or two I shall write by air mail.

Jinnah, just before he left, gave an interview on the communal question,[6] which can hardly be beaten by Shaukat Ali. It was an amazing farrago of nonsense and narrow-minded communalism.

Yours affectionately,
Jawaharlal

4 See post, section 10, item 3.
5 J. C. Kumarappa (1892-1959); Gandhian economist, in charge of Young India, May 1930-31, author of Gandhian Economic Thought and other books.
6 On 5 September 1931, M. A. Jinnah had said: "The new constitution should provide for reasonable guarantees to Muslims and if they are not provided, the new constitution is sure to break down."

24. To Mahatma Gandhi[1]

Ahmedabad
12.9.31

My dear Bapu,

Yesterday I sent you a letter by the ordinary post, registered. I am sending a copy of this and a copy of the Working Committee's note by air mail.[2] There are some minor corrections in the note which I enclose today which yesterday's copy did not contain.

The Working Committee finished its sessions yesterday. I am staying over for a day or two to clear up some work. The next meeting of the Committee has been fixed for October 24th—either in Delhi or Allahabad. Probably by that time we shall know tolerably well how you have been fashioning in London!

1 Gandhi Smarak Sangrahalaya, Serial No. 17701.
2 See enclosure. Jawaharlal drafted this note on 28 August while travelling with Mahatma Gandhi to Bombay.

insisted upon. The real test should be the freedom from the operations of international finance and the Bank of England resulting in the exploitation of the country. We should be at liberty not only to encourage Indian industries and mercantile interests irrespective of its effect on foreign business interests but also we should have the power to follow an economic policy for the betterment of the masses different from the one now in vogue. The resolution on fundamental rights lays down that the key industries and services must belong to or be controlled by the State. This would mean that banking and other key services are controlled by the State.

Foreign capital may be obtained and the State may guarantee its safety. But it is desirable that such dealings with foreign capital are as far as possible with and through the State. With regard to the foreign private capital already invested in the country, control by the State may not be possible for a period, and during this transitional period, therefore, such capital may continue to function subject to certain limitations.

The claim put forward by the British commercial community as embodied in the proposition accepted by the Minority Committee of the R.T.C., namely, "that there should be no discrimination between the rights of the British mercantile community, firms and companies trading in India and rights of the Indian born subjects, and that an appropriate convention based on reciprocity should be entered into for the purpose of regulating these rights", cannot be accepted. Nor can we accept that "the existing rights of the European community in India in regard to criminal trials should be maintained." We do not think that any special rights or privileges need be granted to the British commercial community. It should be made clear that the Swaraj government shall have the right to organise its industries so as to protect and favour its national interests.

5. Public Debt etc.—In regard to the alleged public debt of India we must stand by the Congress resolution demanding an impartial tribunal to scrutinise the financial transactions of the British Government in India and to examine and assess the obligations of either party. The tribunal must also investigate all other obligations and concessions which are inherited by independent India and are subject to dispute. (These points were brought out in the Lahore Congress resolution but have not been covered by the Bahadurji Committee's report).[3] Further the tribunal must consider such counter claims as may be presented before it on behalf of India.

3. A committee consisting of D. N. Bahadurji, K. T. Shah, Bhulabhai J. Desai and J. C. Kumarappa examined the financial obligations between Britain and India. The committee found that Britain owed to India over £546 million.

ii) the control of the military, naval and air forces shall rest completely with the Swaraj government,

iii) all the defence forces including the militia shall be organised and controlled by the central authority and there shall be no provincial armies or militia and no provincial control over the defence forces stationed in the province, iv) no part of India should be used as a military, naval or aerial base by Great Britain, nor should any means of communication or transport by air, land or sea be utilised by Great Britain for warlike operations,

v) Great Britain may however use our airways and aerodromes for the purpose of civil aviation. This will not prevent our permitting other nations to enjoy like privileges, vi) such British technical experts and officers as are required by the Swaraj government may be retained for such period and on such salaries as may be agreed upon. The Swaraj government shall however be free to employ other foreign experts and officers, vii) no state which is a member of the federation can be permitted to maintain any army or militia apart from the federal troops. As however some states have got existing armies of their own, their future will have to be determined. This may be done by their being absorbed in the federal army or by other arrangements that may be agreed upon.

It is difficult to conceive how any state can really keep out of the federation as this would result in an impossible situation which cannot last for long. But if it is assumed that this is a possibility and a state chooses to remain outside the federation, it should be understood that it shall not be made a military, naval, or aerial base by itself, by any other state or Great Britain for any operations which may affect the safety of the Swaraj government. Transit of troops of such states cannot be permitted through territories of the Swaraj government.

This naturally leads to the conclusion that such a state cannot have an independent existence for long and must become a member of the Indian federation. Economic reasons point to the same conclusion.

It is sometimes urged that India will require the services of a navy to protect her shores. This is perfectly true and free India will have to build up a fresh navy with rapidity with the help of foreign experts. But the risk of any attack by sea is not great. In any event it is preferable to face that risk rather than depend upon foreign protection.

4. Economic policy and Finance—Complete freedom in regard to these is necessary. Fiscal freedom and control of currency must of course be immediate effect to the resolution on fundamental rights. This test however is not a complete test as it does not touch certain important matters, e.g. defence, referred to above.

10. Name—We are of opinion that the word "Hindustan" be used officially in place of "India" in describing federated India.

25. To the Maharaja of Patiala[1]

Allahabad
September 16th, 1931

Dear Maharaja Saheb,[2]
I owe you an apology for the great delay in writing to you about your scheme of federation.[3] I have been over-burdened with work and it was difficult to find time to write at length. The subject you had suggested is, as you well know, bristling with difficulties and any proper consideration of it would necessitate the writing of a lengthy essay. It is because I wished to write to you at some length that I went on postponing the writing of this letter. Repeated meetings of the Congress Working Committee and the All India Congress Committee and the continuous effort to deal with a difficult situation in the country have robbed me of my time. I have now decided not to delay any longer my writing to you in the hope of dealing with the subject at length. I feel that I should write something at least to give you an idea of what I have in mind.

I do not propose to criticise in any detail the scheme of federation which the Round Table Conference and you have put forward. I feel it would be better to suggest the background of such a federation as I conceive it should be.

I have been a student of constitutions and of constitutional law, but I feel that the problem of India, as indeed of any other country today, is not one which can be decided only by jurists and lawyers, who are

1 J. N. Correspondence, NMML.
2 Bhupindra Singh (1891-1938), Chancellor of Chamber of Princes, 1926-30.
3 In June 1931, the Maharaja of Patiala rejected the federation scheme he had supported at the first Round Table Conference and proposed a "union of the Indian States alone in direct relationship with the Crown."

6. Services—The new India will not be able to carry on efficiently if the services are manned to any great extent by the present personnel. It will be necessary to have as our civil servants people who believe in the new scheme and can work for it with ardour and missionary enthusiasm. It will therefore be necessary to replace to a large extent the old civil servants. Many of them may retire of their own accord. We must have the option to keep as many members of the All India services as we choose. We must also have the right to retire others on such compensation as may be deemed proper. We consider that the Government of India scale of compensation for retired officials is an extravagant one.

7. Communal question—We do not think it necessary to say anything here in regard to this as the Committee has already put forward its scheme after full discussion.[4]

8. Indian States—We have referred in connection with the problem of defence to some aspects of the question of the states. We feel that the minimum conditions on which we can agree to the states coming into the federation are:

i) That a guarantee of fundamental rights be agreed to by them.
ii) There should be a Supreme Court not subordinate to the states to protect these rights.
iii) That the subjects of the states are given representation in the central legislature on an elective basis.

It is difficult for us to conceive how any state can keep outside the Indian federation for long and we cannot give up the ideal of the unity of India. In case however the states do not accept our minimum terms or agree to join the federation, we suggest that the consideration of the question of the states be postponed for the moment and the future of what is known as British India may be discussed directly with the British Government. But this can only be done after we have made it quite clear that we are leaving the states question as an open one and that we will not be bound by any agreement arrived at between England and the states behind our back. In case a settlement is reached between British India and Great Britain the question of the states can be taken up afresh.

9. Fundamental Rights—A test of the extent of power that a new constitution confers upon the country is how far it enables us to give immediate effect to the resolution on fundamental rights. This test however is not a complete test as it does not touch certain important matters, e g. defence, referred to above.

4 The scheme, which was evolved in July 1931, proposed joint electorates with reservation of seats to Muslims and Sikhs and statutory guarantees for the protection of their religious and cultural rights. If this proposal were rejected, the Congress would accept any other solution acceptable to all parties.

10. Name—We are of opinion that the word "Hindustan" be used officially in place of "India" in describing federated India.

25. To the Maharaja of Patiala[1]

Allahabad
September 16th, 1931

Dear Maharaja Saheb,[2]
I owe you an apology for the great delay in writing to you about your scheme of federation.[3] I have been over-burdened with work and it was difficult to find time to write at length. The subject you had suggested is, as you well know, bristling with difficulties and any proper consideration of it would necessitate the writing of a lengthy essay. It is because I wished to write to you at some length that I went on postponing the writing of this letter. Repeated meetings of the Congress Working Committee and the All India Congress Committee and the continuous effort to deal with a difficult situation in the country have robbed me of my time. I have now decided not to delay any longer my writing to you in the hope of dealing with the subject at length. I feel that I should write something at least to give you an idea of what I have in mind.

I do not propose to criticise in any detail the scheme of federation which the Round Table Conference and you have put forward. I feel it would be better to suggest the background of such a federation as I conceive it should be.

I have been a student of constitutions and of constitutional law, but I feel that the problem of India, as indeed of any other country today, is not one which can be decided only by jurists and lawyers, who are

1 J N Correspondence, NMML.
2 Bhupindra Singh (1891 1938), Chancellor of Chamber of Princes, 1926-30.
3 In June 1931, the Maharaja of Patiala rejected the federation scheme he had supported at the first Round Table Conference and proposed a "union of the Indian States alone in direct relationship with the Crown" ever looking for precedents and who can seldom get out of the ruts which we have inherited from the past. If one thing is obvious to anyone having some knowledge of international conditions it is this: that the political and economic structure of the present day world is highly unstable and cannot endure. It is changing rapidly and in some places is on the verge of a breakdown. The old edifice still stands in many places, but its foundation has been sapped. Politics, in the narrow sense of the word, has almost passed away and many other forces control the various departments of human activity. A recent portent of this has been the crisis in England which has resulted in the fall of the Labour Government and the formation of what is called a National Government.[4] England with all her power and prestige is facing a grave crisis and it is difficult to say what its outcome will be.

In considering the problem of India therefore we must bear this in mind—the emergence and dominance of world economic factors, the new ideals, the new forces, almost elemental in their character, and the general tendency in the world today. We have to deal with impalpable and yet powerful movements, with masses of people in action and in the grip of an idea. We have passed the stage, here as elsewhere, of a nation's destiny being decided in a private conclave of a few individuals. The wonderful awakening of India last year during the civil disobedience movement demonstrated, as nothing else has done, that Indian humanity was up and on the move, in the sense that nations move once in many generations, magnificently and irresistibly, sometimes even blindly, towards the objective that they have set before themselves. That great urge onwards is far from exhausted. Indeed the nation has just begun to realise its own strength and the difficulty is to keep it in check. I am reminded of a saying of Bernard Shaw: "When a great political movement takes place, it is not consciously led or organised· the unconscious self in mankind makes its way through the problem as the elephant breaks through the jungle."

Any consideration of the future of India must bear this cardinal fact in mind. For this is the reality today and all other factors are more or less side issues. Reality can seldom be ignored except at great risk.

With this background, and no other is possible, we must consider the question of federation. What is the future scheme of things going to be in India? And can we fit in the idea of a federation in it? It is well known that India is aiming today at the completest freedom, political and economic. While India may agree to an alliance or an arrangement with Great Britain, that arrangement or partnership cannot ultimately take away from this full freedom or the sovereignty of India. It must also be remembered that this freedom must be for the masses. I have no doubt that a federation is possible in India and that in all likelihood some federation will ultimately be evolved here. But that federation must take into account the above factors and must not be a relic of the past. A federation implies a union between equals and the component parts of the future Indian federation must therefore be equal in dignity and in freedom and responsibility. They must all have the larger ideal of Indian unity before them and all their other ideals and wishes must fit in with this larger ideal of unity and freedom.

4 On 24 August 1931 the Labour Government resigned owing to a financial crisis and a [illegible]al Government dominated by the Conservative party was formed.

If this is agreed to it is not difficult to come to an agreement about other matters. You will remember that you told me that you would like us to consider the question of federation on the basis of responsible government in the states. I replied then that if responsibility was granted to the people of the states there was little to discuss. We could then agree easily to most other things. The difficulties which are supposed to come in the way are, if I may say, personal and individual. In a sense there is no problem of Indian states, the problem is one of Indian princes.

On the one hand the princes feel that the British Government has gradually taken away all the real powers and the rights that they possessed, on the other hand they are afraid of the new democracy in India. You will remember that you pointed out very rightly that the present backward condition of the states is very largely due to the existence and the interference of the British Government. Even autocracy has to be in a measure responsible to the people it governs and cannot go beyond a certain limit in defiance of their wishes. There is a certain contact and relation which subsists between them. The coming of the British Government and the power it exercised behind the scenes in the states did away with all this sense of responsibility and personal contact. The ruler cared only to please the British Government and in many cases ignored his subjects. The British Government cared only to keep the ruler under their influence and ignored his subjects. So the poor subjects had nowhere to go to and their condition became worse and worse. I have no doubt that if the British Government had not intervened, a stable equilibrium would have been established between what is now called British India and the states, and also between the rulers and their subjects. I was glad to find that you agree with this viewpoint. If that is so, the first thing for all of us to do is to remove the influence and the interference of the third party and we shall then easily come to a common understanding.

But here the personal factor comes in—the fear of the rulers that under the new order in India their position may not be safe. In wider questions of national policy it is difficult to lay down a hard and fast rule. No one knows what the new forces will be in India. But in so far as the Congress is concerned it has sought to bring about a peaceful solution of the Indian problem as between the British Government and India. Much more so must it necessarily strive for a peaceful solution of our internal problem of the states. It will go far to allay the fear of the states and in doing so it may even compromise to some extent with its declared policy. We are sure that we shall be able to evolve a free and united India in cooperation with the various elements in the country. While therefore the Congress is prepared to go a long way to meet the wishes of the states it cannot put in jeopardy the whole ideal of Indian unity and freedom. So that whatever arrangement may be agreed to must be such that it puts no barriers in the way of our future progress towards our ideal.

As I have stated, a federation must be between equals and with a common object. The common object can only be the advancement of India as a whole unrestrained from foreign interference. Equality must mean that the people of the states are on the same level as regards freedom as the people of the rest of India. There may be some difficulties in bringing about this equality to begin with and the Congress recognises this fact and is therefore willing to agree to a transition stage so far as the states are concerned. But some steps should surely be taken to put the states and their people on the road to equality with the others in India Otherwise even if the Congress agree there would be no stability or contentment and we would have ceaseless trouble.

If the princes recognise these governing factors and decide to act in accordance with them all the clouds that darken the skies would soon vanish away. They would become real leaders of their people who would be their strongest bulwarks. After all it will be for the people of the states themselves to say the final word regarding their form of government and their princes.

I earnestly hope that the rulers of the states will look at this question from this larger point of view. I hope that the great vision of a free and united India with all parts cooperating and working together for the common good, will come to them also. Any other objective would be unworthy of India or of any son or daughter of India. We live in great times and we have to act greatly if we are to play an effective role in the making of India's history today.

I am afraid I have written to you rather vaguely. None the less I hope I have made it clear how I approach the question of federation and the states. I believe that my views are generally shared by Congressmen, but I cannot commit the Congress or any one else to them.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

26. To Roger Baldwin[1]

September 17th, 1931

I have just received your two letters of the 27th and 28th August. Gandhi as you know is in London. I hope you have seen him there. I do not know what the outcome of his visit is going to be. Anyhow we shall know in a couple of months' time. You are correct in thinking that Gandhi is made of stern stuff. I do not think he will give in.

We shall gladly keep in touch with the U.S. as you suggest. We are prepared to cooperate with any group but for the moment I do not see the necessity for official recognition of any group there. Even if I thought this was necessary it would be difficult to convince my other colleagues. Their past experience of foreign committees has been unfortunate. Do write to me your views on the subject. Meanwhile I would suggest your forming an independent committee or group in the U.S with which we could cooperate without any official bonds.

I have sent you a cable today about M. N. Roy.[2] I am a member of his defence committee and I shall gladly do what I can to help him We do not yet quite know what charges are going to be brought against him It seems to me that some old charges are being revived. Certainly there is no suggestion that he has been indulging in any act of violence. I realise that he is rather a forlorn figure. On the one side his old colleagues of the Communist Party have kicked him out; on the other the non-communists dislike him. I know that he has said many uncomplimentary things about me in the past but that makes no difference. I shall certainly give him the help I can but as I am so busy with other things this cannot amount to much. The T.U.C. here has

1. J N Correspondence, N M M L.
2 M N Roy was arrested in Bombay on 21 July 1931 for his alleged involvement in the Kanpur and Meerut Conspiracy Cases opened a defence fund. There are also local defence committees, but so far there has not been an abundance of money. Our local communists—there are not many of them—continue to stigmatise Roy as traitor to the cause. The help which you and others outside could give would be to send some money. If you like you could send the money to me and I shall hand it over to the defence committee. You could also of course draw public attention to the case.

I do not know if this letter will catch you in Geneva. I am therefore sending a copy to New York.

Jawaharlal Nehru

27. To Mahatma Gandhi[1]

Allahabad
17.9.31

My dear Bapu,

I have had a letter from Mahadeva from Aden and he has told us something of the happenings on board. But we do not suffer from lack of news of you. We have the minutest details about your meals and prayers, and the hour you get up, and your walks and above all your famous loin cloth.

I returned yesterday from Ahmedabad after a fairly prolonged stay there. The Working Committee seems to swallow up more and more time. We meet again on October 24th perhaps at Delhi.

I do not wish to trouble you about our difficulties here. I only want to inform you that at my request Vallabhbhai has written to Emerson about the distressing state of affairs in the U.P. I am myself thinking of writing briefly to the Viceroy's Secretary.[2]

Next week I shall send you the report of our agrarian enquiry committee.[3]

1 J N Correspondence, N M M L.

2 See post, section 2, item 35.

3 A committee, consisting of Govind Ballabh Pant, Venkatesh Narain Tivary, Rafi Ahmad Kidwai and Mohanlal Gautam, was appointed on 19 September to examine the question of rent remissions in the United Provinces It recommended that all rent arrears should be written off and remissions between 60 to 70 per cent should be given.

I am enclosing a copy of a letter I have sent to the Maharaja of Patiala.[4]

The Working Committee did not consider after all the question of federation and division of functions. But the Committee's views on this subject are clear enough. They believe in a strong Central Government. The list of central subjects given in the Nehru Report may be treated as a good basis for discussion. I find from the report of Shafaat Ahmad Khan's speech[5] in the Federal Structure Committee that he claims sovereignty for the provinces. This is an interesting development. Shafaat Ahmad is more than half mad and cannot be taken seriously but it is likely that some of the other stalwart Muslims may support him. I think there should be some plain speaking on this subject.

You must have heard about Chittagong.[6] It was pretty bad but the reports you must have received were no doubt exaggerated. Sen Gupta has been openly stating that the whole affair was got up by the official and non-official Europeans. Others have said this also and there appears to be truth in the charge.

There was a lovely cartoon in Punch the other day about the 'Elusive Mahatma'[7]—I wonder if you saw it. I was so taken by it that I forthwith subscribed to Punch as well as other English papers to read what they say about you.

I hope you met Roger Baldwin. In a letter from him which I have just received there is a passage which might interest you. "...the new British 'Dictatorship' is the creature of the American bankers. You have two enemies to fight from now on—the hidden enemy of Wall Street, backed by the American Government, and Britain. Wall Street will use all its power to save India for Britain as the chief source of revenue in trade for an economically degenerating empire."

Yours affectionately,
Jawaharlal

4. See ante, item 25.
5. (1893-1947), professor of History, Allahabad University; High Commissioner of India in South Africa, 1941-44, Member, Interim Cabinet, Government of India, September-October 1946. In his speech at the Federal Structure Sub-Committee on 14 September 1931 he advocated full autonomy for provinces and transfer of some central subjects to them.
6. There was a complete breakdown of law and order in Chittagong for three days in the first week of September 1931. The damage caused by hooliganism was estimated at a crore of rupees.
7. See illustration facing p. 48.

opened a defence fund. There are also local defence committees, but so far there has not been an abundance of money. Our local communists—there are not many of them—continue to stigmatise Roy as traitor to the cause. The help which you and others outside could give would be to send some money. If you like you could send the money to me and I shall hand it over to the defence committee. You could also of course draw public attention to the case.

I do not know if this letter will catch you in Geneva. I am therefore sending a copy to New York.

Jawaharlal Nehru

27. To Mahatma Gandhi[1]

Allahabad
17.9.31

My dear Bapu,

I have had a letter from Mahadeva from Aden and he has told us something of the happenings on board. But we do not suffer from lack of news of you. We have the minutest details about your meals and prayers, and the hour you get up, and your walks and above all your famous lom cloth.

I returned yesterday from Ahmedabad after a fairly prolonged stay there. The Working Committee seems to swallow up more and more time. We meet again on October 24th perhaps at Delhi.

I do not wish to trouble you about our difficulties here. I only want to inform you that at my request Vallabhbhai has written to Emerson about the distressing state of affairs in the U.P. I am myself thinking of writing briefly to the Viceroy's Secretary.[2]

Next week I shall send you the report of our agrarian enquiry committee.[3]

1 J. N Correspondence, N M M L.

2 See post, section 2, item 35.

3 A committee, consisting of Govind Ballabh Pant, Venkatesh Naram Tivary, Rafi Ahmad Kidwai and Mohanlal Gautam, was appointed on 19 September to examine the question of rent remissions in the United Provinces It recommended that all rent arrears should be written off and remissions between 60 to 70 per cent should be given.

The salt concession was an explicit and important part of the Delhi Settlement and its withdrawal raises vital issues. So far as my information goes there has not been any abuse of it in Shahpur district, but in any event we would have expected that any allegations should have been brought to the notice of the Congress President, as you have done in some other cases, before any action was taken by the government. If the date of the notice is 10th August, as is mentioned in the copy, Mr. Gandhi was here at the time and could have been informed of it.

In the ordinary course, our President, Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel, would have written to you about this matter and I would not have troubled you about it. But in view of the importance of the matter and the desirability of avoiding delay I have ventured to write to you direct I am of course informing our President and I shall be obliged if you will write to him in answer to this letter of mine. You need not trouble to write to me.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

30. To Vallabhbhai Patel[1]

Jhang
September 27th, 1931

My dear Vallabhbhai,

I enclose a copy of a letter I am sending to Emerson, also a copy of a notice issued by the deputy commissioner of the Shahpur district withdrawing the salt concession from the salt range. I did not want to write to Emerson direct but then I felt that great delay would occur if I referred the matter to you first. Hence the action I have taken. I hope you do not mind.

Some time ago you issued a warning to people abusing the salt concession I believe this applied to Karachi or parts of Sind but I am not sure. So far as I remember, the salt range in the Punjab had nothing to do with it. It seems to me that it is highly improper for government to withdraw the salt concession in this way whatever the facts regarding abuse might be I am informed that there has been no such

1 AICC File No G 60/1931 (Pt I), pp 76 77, NMML

28. Circular to P.C.Cs, D.C.Cs and Seva Dals[1]

September 23rd, 1931

Dear Comrade,

I should like to draw your particular attention to one of the resolutions of the Working Committee meeting held at Ahmedabad recently.[2] This resolution related to breaches of the Delhi Settlement on the part of the government officials or other matters of complaint. All such cases should, in the first instance, be reported to the provincial Congress committee concerned, and the president or the secretary of the P.C.C. should endeavour to obtain relief from the representatives of the local government. In case relief is not forthcoming, the matter should be referred to the President of the A.I.C.C. Information in regard to all important matters should, however, be promptly sent by the D.C.C. to the A.I.C.C. office through the P.C.C....

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 A.I.C.C. File No. P.I/1931, p. 29, N.M.M.L. Extracts.
2 Held from 8 to 11 September 1931

29. To Home Secretary, Government of India[1]

Jhang
27th Sept. 1931

Dear Mr. Emerson,

I have been shown a copy of a notice which the deputy commissioner of Shahpur district is said to have issued withdrawing the salt concession from the whole area covered by the salt range.[2] I enclose a copy of this notice, which bears the date 10.8.31. I do not know if this date is correctly given in the copy as the notice has, I understand, only recently been generally published for public information.

1 A.I.C.C. File No. G.7/1931, pp. 23-24, N.M.M.L.
2 It alleged that the people had abused the salt concession by removing surplus salt for sale in markets miles away from the salt range.

motley crowd. I wonder if any purgatory would be more dreadful for me than to carry on in this way. If I had to listen to my dear friend Mohamad Ali Jinnah talking the most unmitigated nonsense about his 14 points[2] for any length of time, I would have to consider the desirability of retiring to the South Sea Islands, where there would be some hope of meeting with some people who were intelligent enough or ignorant enough not to talk of the 14 points.

It is a month today since the fateful decision was taken at Simla and you rushed across India to sail for foreign lands. Four weeks you have been away and it seems so long.

Lahore
28.9.31

I am continuing this letter in a hurry during a brief stay in Lahore. I enclose a copy of a letter I have sent to Emerson.

The Punjab papers were full some time ago of your having accepted Jinnah's 14 points. The Sikh League got alarmed and hurriedly summoned an All Party Sikh Conference. This conference has rejected the Working Committee's scheme and reiterated their 17 demands.[3]

There is a great deal of repression going on here and large numbers of young men are being proceeded against. Some are being charged under Sec. 302 (the murder section) for a speech, which is extraordinary. These speeches are reported usually by police constables who know nothing about shorthand. It is easy to distort them or to introduce a particular phrase or two. There has been of course a general tendency here to use strong language. I have been going for it since I came to the Punjab and Naujawans have had a severe drubbing.

This is written in a hurry as I want to catch the air mail and I am leaving Lahore soon.

Yours affly.,
Jawaharlal

2. Jinnah formulated his demands in 14 points, the important ones being a federal constitution with residuary powers vested in the provinces, separate electorates with a third of the seats in the Central Legislature reserved for Muslims, reforms in the N.W.F.P. and Baluchistan, creation of Sind as a separate province, and no bill or resolution to be passed in an elected body if three fourths of the representatives of any community opposed it

3. They reiterated the rights of the Sikh community, opposed communal representation and reservation of seats, but if communal representation were adhered to they demanded one-third of membership in the Punjab Cabinet and legislature, 5 per cent representation in the Centre and at least one Sikh member in the Central Cabinet.

abuse. People from Shahpur district tell me that as a matter of fact full advantage has not been taken of the concession. It may be that there have been minor breaches by individuals. In any event, the burden of proof rests entirely on government and they must prove their case before they take action.

I find that repression here is going strong and a very large number of persons, chiefly young men, are being proceeded against under various sections. Many are being tried under Sec. 302 I.P.C. (the murder section) coupled with some other sections, simply because of a speech. I read through the speeches in one such case. It was a report taken by a head constable and most of it was strenuously denied as incorrect. But even accepting it for what it was worth it is an extraordinary state of affairs to proceed under Sec. 302 for a speech.

This is just an instance. In a variety of other ways local officials here are misbehaving. Unfortunately the Punjab P.C.C. is not an efficient or a capable body and does not do much. It is hardly possible to make it realise what should be done and what should not be done.

I notice from the papers that you are still in Bombay. I do not know what your future programme is. I am sending this letter to both places.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal

31. To Mahatma Gandhi[1]

Jhang
Punjab
27.9.31

My dear Bapu,

I grow impatient, you will think. You have hardly been in England a fortnight and I complain of you not having got the British Government and others to agree to discuss vital matters of principle. I am sure you are right and I am wrong. But when I read of the same old crowd repeating the same old pet phrases about the communal problem and you putting up with this inanity, I marvel at your patience. How wonderful you are to argue and argue and yet again argue with this

1. Gandhi Smarak Sangrahalaya, Serial No 17863.

THE ELUSIVE MAHATMA.

SHE ONLY SAID, "MY LIFE IS DREARY,
HE COMETH NOT" SHE SAID
SHE SAID "I AM AWEARY, AWEARY
I WOULD NOT BE A PERFECT LADY
I'D LIKE TO SMASH HIS HEAD" —(With apologies to Tennyson)

REPRODUCED FROM Punch

32. To M.A. Ansari[1]

Camp Cawnpore
October 4th, 1931

My dear Ansari,

Thank you for your letter.[2] I had a telegram last night from Vallabhbhai saying that he has received a message from Alam requesting him to change the date of the Working Committee meeting so as not to conflict with the Punjab Nationalist Muslims Conference. I have suggested to Vallabhbhai to have the Working Committee on the 27th if other members agree. This ought to suit everybody.

You seem to fill the picture in London town. I am very glad that the Mahatma is insisting on your presence.[3] Please do not be so rash as to cable to him to do what he chooses. This will put him in a false position. I sometimes wish I was there to have a loving chat with the Muslim delegation. There seems to me to be too much sugariness in the proceedings at least so far as our side is concerned. That of course is Gandhiji's way and we must not complain. But a little pepper would add to the taste. How I would love to have a nice little chat with the London crowd of Round Tablers

Last evening I received a long letter from Mahadeva. He says that Shaukat took an impossible position on board on every matter. Even apart from the communal question he seems to be committed to the British Government on almost everything. I think it is a matter of days now before the break comes in the conference and Gandhiji thinks of the return journey It is good however that he has gone there.

1 AICC File No G-60/1931 (Pt I), pp. 101-102, N.M.M.L.

2 In his letter of 30 September 1931, Ansari had said "I feel like cabling to Mahatma to do whatever he thinks best irrespective of anybody or any party and face the consequences . . The Muslim reactionaries are haggling over their supporting my candidature in return for all their demands being conceded by Mahatma"

3 In his letter to Jawaharlal written from London on 2 October 1931, Devadas Gandhi wrote "Although Bapu assured the persons concerned that if Dr. Ansari came he would try his best to persuade him to agree to the Muslim demands, they could not see their way to agree to his coming ... Mr. Shafi Daudi quite openly admitted that he had been instrumental in keeping Dr. Ansari out . Bapu was pained beyond measure.... He feels that now he can no longer press with dignity for Dr. Ansari. It would mean courting greater insult...."

I am on a tour of some U.P. districts specially rural areas. I shall return to Allahabad on the 11th morning.

There is a great deal of friction still between Abdul Ghaffar Khan and the Peshawar Congress Party. I think that Rafi ought to go there. I hope you will spare him.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

33. Telegram to S.K. Datta[1]

10 November 1931

Your telegram.[2] Thanks. Working Committee already cabled Bapu.[3] Personally have no desire prevent his visiting other countries but feel developing Indian situation may upset his programme. Psychological effect of long tour after unsuccessful end conference bad specially with increasing repression here. Suggest his visiting few important places on way back. Why not return overland route.

Jawaharlal

1 AICC. File No. 57/1931, p 13, NMML.
S. K. Datta (1878-1942); principal, Forman Christian College, Lahore; member, Legislative Council, 1924-26, delegate to the second Round Table Conference representing Indian Christians.

2 In his telegram Datta said there was some chance of Mahatma Gandhi saving the situation by his intervention and stressed the need for Mahatma Gandhi visiting the Continent and Ireland

3 The cable said that when conditions were worsening in India his early return was desirable and a long Continental tour inadvisable.

THE MAHATMA GANDHI IN BOMBAY, 29 AUGUST 1931

Ever since the inception of the Congress, forty-six years ago, it has been the custom to have volunteers to help in Congress arrangements and to serve delegates and visitors and to control crowds. In accordance with the usual practice, training camps for volunteers were opened in various parts of Orissa. The officials of Puri town have, however, distinguished themselves by issuing orders under Section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, and under Section 30 of the Police Act, endeavouring to prevent the training. The district magistrate, at first, prohibited volunteers from marching in regular formation with lathis as this was likely to be taken as a challenge to established authority. The order was obeyed. Soon after, the superintendent of police issued an order prohibiting all processions and assemblies. Even before these orders were promulgated, the volunteers of the Puri camp went out for a long route-march. On their way back, they were met by 100 police constables, armed with rifles and lathis, under the command of the superintendent of police. The volunteers were marching along quietly without even singing. The leader of the volunteers was arrested and the police insisted on the others breaking their formation and dispersing. Objection was specially taken to any volunteers marching in step even though they might be in twos or threes. Later, armed police kept watch on the camp. In the city an announcement was made by beat of drums, warning the public not to join any Congress meeting or procession and not to have anything to do with the Congress. The district magistrate further ordered that the Congress volunteers were not to help pilgrims on the Kartik Purnima festival day and that they were not to be allowed to help in controlling crowds.

These remarkable orders have been passed without the slightest allegation that the volunteers have misbehaved themselves in any way or done anything which was objected to by any section of the public. They are apparently intended to interfere with the arrangements for the Puri Congress and a deliberate effort seems to have been made to provoke Congressmen and volunteers by offensive and aggressive behaviour.

I am issuing this statement, both as Secretary of the Congress and as one responsible for the Volunteer Department of the Congress, so that the facts may be placed before the public.

34. To Vallabhbhai Patel[1]

December 8, 1931

My dear Vallabhbhai,
I have just received a copy of a letter dated 2 December sent to you by the Seva Nayak of the Puri Reception Committee.[2] I have read this and the orders issued with amazement. A more flagrant interference with Congress activities, it is difficult to conceive. I presume you will address government on the subject. I think they should be asked to state clearly if they consider the truce at an end. It is quite impossible to tolerate this kind of interference. It would make all our work impossible. I am issuing a statement to the press merely to give publicity to the facts. I enclose a copy.

Thanks for your telegram about the Etawah conference dates. We have fixed the 23rd to the 27th. At the latest we shall finish on the 28th. We have to hold a meeting of the P.C.C. two days before the conference as the Subjects Committee and after the conference also. This procedure takes up three days.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal

1. A.I.C.C. File No. 52/1931, p. 9, N.M.M.L.
2. Formed for the 47th annual Congress to be held in Puri, but which did not meet as in the meantime all leaders had been arrested.

35. On the Order Banning Congress Activities in Puri[1]

Repeated attention has been drawn to the numerous breaches of the Delhi truce on behalf of the government and interference with the ordinary activities of the Congress. An extraordinary instance of this has now occurred in Puri, where the next Congress is to be held.

1. Statement to the press, Allahabad, 8 December 1931. The Hindu, 9 December 1931.

2

AGRARIAN DISTRESS IN THE UNITED PROVINCES

1. To G.B. Pant[1]

March 1931

My dear Pantji,
I had hoped to meet you in Lucknow and was disappointed not to do so. There is a meeting of the Council on the 13th and I hope you will be able to come.

Some of our colleagues have been much exercised about various matters resulting from the truce. A suggestion has been made with which I heartily agree that help should be enlisted in straightening out some of the tangles that are bound to remain. We propose that we should sit down in Lucknow together with one or two others forming a committee for two purposes: (1) to find out what prisoners have not been released and to take such steps for their release as you may think necessary, that is to say, you should keep in touch with government officials and draw their attention to the non-release of our people. We could ask our District C.Cs to send you full lists of such persons as are not released together with particulars regarding them; (2) to keep in touch with government in regard to the rent and revenue situation and specially regarding any excesses that might be committed by the police or by the agents of the zamindars on the tenantry. This is a very difficult matter and we have to take every care that the peasantry are not made to suffer now in any way. We have also to impress upon government the urgent necessity of a considerable remission.

I saw Chhatari[2] and Jagdish Prasad[3] in Lucknow night before last. They were very cordial and they promised all manner of assistance both in regard to the prisoners and in regard to the economic situation. But they were very vague also and it is therefore necessary that we should keep a vigilant watch over these matters. No one better than you can be suggested for this purpose. If you like you can have Venkatesh Naram Tiwary to assist you. I hope you will agree to undertake this work.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 AICC File No 63/1931, p. 77, NMML
2 Home Member, U.P. Government
3 Chief Secretary, U.P. Government.

as of the different districts. Stress has also been laid on this in the speech of the Revenue Secretary which you have been good enough to send me. Undoubtedly this is true but it is equally undoubted that the distress is almost universal. The occupancy tenant is slightly better off than the statutory tenant. But even the occupancy tenant has also had to face, in the recent past, a steep rise in his rent amounting to, I understand, in some cases, upto 50%. It is difficult for me to generalise but I can certainly say that large numbers of occupancy tenants in Allahabad district are really very hard hit by the prevailing prices and general economic depression. Here in Allahabad district a very large proportion of the tenantry are occupancy tenants and to my knowledge they are very badly off. It is true that the statutory tenants are worse off. The policy of the local zamindars seems to be to carry on a campaign against the occupancy tenants in order to deprive them of their occupancy rights by ejectment or otherwise. It is hardly fair to take advantage of the economic conditions and the prevailing distress to deprive these tenants of the rights they or their forefathers had earned.

Large numbers of tenants are coming to me daily with tales of woe. It appears that in the Karchchana tahsil of the Allahabad district about 800 ejectments have already taken place. In Handia tahsil also there have been very many ejectments. Even in the Court of Wards estates in this district ejectments have taken place. In addition to these ejectments we are continually receiving reports of ill-treatment and beating of tenants by the agents of zamindars or the police. Only last night a crowd of tenants came from Soraon tahsil and gave us a graphic account of a police raid on their village at the instigation of the landlord. The tenantry, it was stated, has been beaten with the butt ends of rifles and otherwise maltreated. One of these tenants who came had to be treated in the hospital.

I trust you will agree with me that this attitude of the zamindars, backed up as it is by the police, is not likely to help in creating a peaceful atmosphere or in inducing the tenantry to pay up their rents. Some of them may be frightened into paying what they can but there is bound to be a feeling of deep resentment and hostility. I had hoped that the local government would see to it that all aggressive action on the part of zamindars would stop and, in any event, that the police will not help them; also that in the matter of ejectments the government would take up a strong line—something of the kind you told me it took up in the past—when it gave orders that ejectment suits should be postponed for a long period. So far, there has been no improvement of any kind on the part of the zamindars or the police that is

2. To Chief Secretary, U.P. Government[1]

March 11, 1931

Dear Kunwar Jagdish Prasad,
Thank you for your letter of the 9th March and the statement in Council by the Revenue Secretary.

I have been consulting my colleagues as to what we should do regarding the rent and revenue situation. We have been receiving large numbers of complaints both of ejectments and of oppressive action on the part of the zamindars. We are repeatedly asked for advice as to what the tenantry should do in the face of this aggressive attitude of some zamindars and I must confess that it is no easy matter to advise under the circumstances. Your suggestion that we should merely tell them to pay up honestly what they can pay does not carry us very far. That is the advice we have given in many cases but it does not lead to the solution of any difficulty. Indeed it is really a negative form of advice. Speaking not as a Congressman but as one deeply interested in the welfare of the tenantry I feel that whatever the tenants might do should be more or less in an organised capacity. If each individual is to act separately, it means as it has meant in the past, that he will be crushed by the powers opposed to him. His only strength lies in some measure of united action. If this is admitted, then individual advice ceases to have much value and indeed may be positively injurious from the point of view of the tenants at large. All my colleagues are of opinion that when distress is so general it should be to the interest of all parties concerned, i.e., the tenantry, the zamindars as well as the local government, to lay down clearly and precisely the policy that should be followed. If a generous policy was followed and a large measure of agreement was arrived at between the parties concerned there would be no further difficulty. Otherwise it is obvious that suffering and bad blood will continue to increase and will lead to graver problems in the future. To wait and see is not always the best method to get over a present difficulty.

You told me that it was the intention of the local government to wait for the rabi crop and then to come to a decision. As a matter of fact the rabi crop has already been cut and it should not be difficult to come to a decision in regard to it now. Further you laid stress on the varying conditions of the different classes of the tenantry as well expression of opinion will go a long way in limiting the aggressive activities of those zamindars who are apt to err. In any event the police and the tahsil staff might well be asked not to help zamindars in collecting rents.

1. A.I.C.C. File No G-40(KW)(iii)/1931, pp. 237-245, NMML.

In the course of our conversation I promised to draw your attention to particular cases of prisoners who had not so far been released. I am attaching a note to this letter in regard to them.[3]

We have received information that attachments are still taking place in Kanauj to recover the punitive police tax. There must be some mistake about this as we have been assured that no further collections in this behalf will be made.

I am sorry to send you such a long letter. I am leaving Allahabad on the 14th for Bombay. From there I shall go to Delhi and Karachi. I shall therefore not be back here for another three weeks or more. If you wish to send any communication on the matters touched on in this letter you could kindly write to Mr. Purushottamdas Tandon, Provincial Congress Office, Zero Road, Allahabad. Some of us have been thinking that it would facilitate our work if one of our colleagues would interest himself specially in these matters and remain at Lucknow so that whenever necessary he could get into touch with you. We are requesting Pandit Govind Ballabh Pant to do so.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

ENCLOSURE

MAINPURI CONSPIRACY CASE[4]

A number of persons were convicted in this case on the 1st September 1919. The maximum sentence was seven years. On the 5th February 1920 there was an amnesty and two days later these persons were released on their signing a bond to be of good behaviour. The bond contained certain other provisions also. For ten years nothing special happened so far as they were concerned. In 1930, three of them, Dammilal, Sidh Gopal and Karhori Lal were arrested in connection with the civil disobedience movement. Dammilal and Sidh Gopal are now in the Fyzabad district jail in the B class. Karhori Lal

3 See enclosure to this letter.

4 About fifty young men, mostly students, were arrested in 1918-19 in U.P. on a charge of revolutionary conspiracy.

acting with them and apart from ejectments and general ill-treatment it has been reported to us that property belonging to kisans has been destroyed.

You will remember that there has been firing at Kalyanpur in Soraon tahsil in Allahabad district and at village Kehla in Partabgarh district. The Kalyanpur case, I believe, is going on in the courts. In Kehla our people report to us that a very strenuous attempt is being made to manufacture some evidence by terrorising the tenantry.[2] The police are justified in taking action in cases of violence but in both these places, to the best of our information, the crowds did not misbehave to any marked extent. In Kehla I took some part in the enquiry myself and I was unable to discover any aggressive action on the part of the crowd. Where there is no solid and obvious evidence of violence would it not be desirable for the government to be generous and not to proceed with the cases? In any event the attempt to frighten the people into giving false evidence, as is reported from Kehla, is deplorable.

In Fatehpur district, as you must know, a tahsildar was killed. The persons involved in his death will of course be proceeded against but from repeated reports received from people of the locality it appears that the whole village has been deserted owing to police action. One of these reports appeared in the Leader yesterday.

In the Aj newspaper of Benares dated the 9th March there appears a letter from the Mukhtar-i-am of the Raja of Bara. In this letter it is stated inter alia that the Raja has ordered the suspension of 50% of the revenue of all his tenantry for a year provided that limitation does not run. This appears to be a general order applied to all tenants. I do not know that mere suspension is much good as conditions are not likely to be rosy in the future. But in any event a general order of this kind for all the tenants appears to me to be good. If the other zamindars followed suit it will not be difficult to arrive at a satisfactory settlement. I hope the local government will help in bringing about this settlement. In particular I trust they will ask the zamindars not to use coercive processes as far as possible and not to eject. If those who have already been ejected are given back their lands, as we were told in Delhi might be done, it would create a very good impression. The Court of Wards estates could set a good example in this respect. There are zamindars of all kinds, good and bad, and it may be that even the local government cannot control all of them. But a strong

2. On 16 February 1931 police fired on the kisans at Kehla, a village in Partabgarh district, for alleged attack on them. A case was later filed against the police.

3. Message to the Peasants of Rae Bareli[1]

Rae Bareli had done a lot, still more is expected from Rae Bareli. Our peace is still far away. The more our strength increases, the sooner we will have real peace and this is only possible when we obtain complete Swaraj. I therefore hope that all tenant brethren will understand what has been done and what still remains to be done. We cannot take rest yet. We will take rest only when the troubles of tenants are over. That time will also come.

1. Home Department (Political) File No. 33/24 of 1931, National Archives of India. This was brought to the notice of the U.P. Government by the district magistrate of Rae Bareli on 12 March 1931.

4. Note on Economic Distress in the United Provinces[1]

Owing to a variety of causes, in particular the great fall in prices, there has been great economic distress among the agriculturists of the U.P. This fact has been recognised and admitted by everyone concerned. The measure of distress varies to some extent in different parts of the province and among the different classes of the zamindars and the tenantry; but that there is all round distress, amounting in some cases to inability to pay, is an acknowledged fact. This fact was brought prominently to the notice of Mr. Gandhi at the time he was having his conversations with the Viceroy regarding the terms of the provisional settlement. It was pointed out to Mr. Gandhi that even on the withdrawal of the political no-tax campaign the economic distress would obviously continue and it would not be possible for the tenantry to pay the full demand. In the event of a settlement taking place the no-tax campaign would of course be suspended but the Congress is in the C class in Mainpuri district jail. I should like to point out that:

1. A.I.C.C. File No. 4/1931 (Pt. I), pp. 61-65, N.M.M.L. Jawaharlal prepared this note at the request of Mahatma Gandhi who sent it on 23 March 1931 to the Home Secretary, Government of India.

1. The undertaking which they gave in 1920 must be deemed to have expired on the expiry of the period of sentence, that is to say, a maximum of seven years. As a matter of fact they were not re-arrested till 10 years later.

2. Under the present amnesty the sentences for disobedience of Salt Act etc. ended and therefore we can presume that the old sentences, even if they are supposed to continue, have also ended. The case of these three persons is thus exactly on par with that of any other non-violent civil resister.

In Fyzabad jail there are at present three sepoys, two of whom were sentenced to six months and one to one year apparently for wearing a Gandhi cap when not on duty. I understand that seven others were similarly sentenced and are in other jails. The offence of these sepoys was a very trivial one, hardly involving any strict breach of discipline, and I trust that they will be included in the released prisoners.

In Shahjahanpur I am informed that some people under the Security Section 107 have not yet been discharged.

It appears that some people arrested under Sec. 131 for distributing the resolution of the Congress Working Committee regarding the duty of the police and the military have not been discharged. I should have thought that people arrested and convicted under this section would definitely come under the category of nonviolent satyagrahis.

We have issued definite instructions that orders passed by the police or other officials should not be disobeyed. Thus orders under Section 144 are not to be disobeyed on the part of the Congress. But I hope you will appreciate that it does not help in the restoration of peaceful conditions if such prohibitive orders are passed.

Jawaharlal Nehru

U U. CENT. LIB.

MLSU - CENTRAL LIBRARY

Meanwhile the U.P. Congress Committee was faced by a serious situation. In many areas, zamindars, aided by the police, were harassing the tenantry and telling them that now that there had been a settlement between the Congress and the government they must pay up the full demand immediately. In many places, to our knowledge, tenants were beaten. They came to us in large numbers in their distress telling us of their sufferings. Some of them had actually to be treated in hospital for their injuries. We found that most of them could not possibly pay the full demand. The capacity to pay varied but roughly it was about 50%.

To all the tenantry that came to us as well as to zamindars we said that we would be glad to help in arriving at a settlement on a fair basis for all concerned. It was manifestly absurd to expect the payment of the full demand from the tenantry. It was equally wrong to leave each tenant to deal separately with his landlord. A peasant or an industrial worker is absolutely powerless as an individual. The whole of the trade union movement has been built up to ensure corporate action for the workers or the peasantry. We advised the tenantry therefore to confer in groups of villages or larger areas with their zamindars and with government. Later the U.P. Provincial Congress Committee having carefully considered the situation passed a resolution in which inter alia it was stated that the economic situation demanded that considerable remissions be made in the rent. It was suggested that 50% remission should be given to the occupancy tenant and 60% to the statutory tenant. These figures were not final figures for the whole of the province because it was realised that conditions varied. They were merely suggested as a basis for the consideration of the subject of remission. The figures however were not casually given. They were carefully thought out and represented the conviction of the U.P. Provincial Committee. As a matter of fact in the district of Allahabad one of the larger zamindars, the Raja of Bara, had publicly announced that he had suspended 50% of the rent from all his tenants, occupancy as well as statutory. The Raja of Bara has not been connected with the Congress movement in any way. Indeed he has always opposed it. But the mere force of economic circumstance has made him take this action.

All these facts were brought to the notice of the U.P. Government by letters. In addition, the U.P. Provincial Congress decided to open an office in Lucknow specially to deal with the question of the undischarged prisoners and the rent and revenue situation. We put one of our prominent colleagues, Pandit Govind Ballabh Pant, who used to be the leader of the Swaraj Party in the local council, in charge of could not, in fairness or justice, leave the tenantry or the zamindars in the lurch when they were faced with a grave economic crisis. The Congress would use its best endeavour to arrange a settlement by way of remission or otherwise between the government, the zamindars and the tenantry. Further, the question of ejectments was also raised. It is understood that reference was made to these difficulties which the Congress would have to face in the U.P. in the course of the conversations between Mr. Gandhi and the Viceroy or Mr. Gandhi and Mr. Emerson.

The U.P. Provincial Congress Committee started the no-tax campaign in October last. It was confined to certain districts only, probably not more than five or six. Undoubtedly many districts where the no-tax campaign was not started were indirectly affected by it. But in the great majority of the U.P. districts—and there are 48 districts in the U.P.—the real problem to be faced was an economic problem and not a political one and it was because of actual inability to pay that people did not pay. On the conclusion of the provisional settlement between the Government of India and the Working Committee of the Congress, the U.P. Provincial Congress Committee immediately proclaimed that the political no-tax campaign was to be discontinued. Further they took steps to get into touch with the U.P. Government and their members interviewed repeatedly the Home Member and the Chief Secretary of the U.P. Government and fully discussed the rent and revenue situation. The position of the Congress was frankly and fully stated to the government. The Home Member and the Chief Secretary, on the other hand, explained the position of the government. They recognised that there was great economic distress in the province although the measure of it varied in different parts. Thus the districts of Meerut, Muttra, Agra etc. were the hardest hit. The permanently settled districts in the east were comparatively well off. Most of the other districts in between were in a bad way though they were not quite so bad as Meerut and Muttra. It was admitted that the statutory tenants were in the worst position of all and they could not possibly be expected to pay the full demand. The U.P. Government further admitted that it had to do something radical in the matter in the way of remission or suspension of revenue but it wanted to postpone action as long as it could in the hope that something might happen which might help the situation. This hope was not based on anything real as it was known that even the rabi crop had been a failure. Still the government wanted to wait and see. Apparently it was their desire to realise as much revenue as possible before announcing any liberal remissions or suspensions.

lead to a satisfactory solution. The Congress appreciates the difficulties of the government and is prepared to meet them as far as possible, but it also appreciates the difficulties of the tenantry and the petty zamindars and it would be failing in its duty if it did not lay stress on this.

Jawaharlal Nehru

5. Appeal to Kisans[1]

Dear Kisan Brothers,

Last year we all participated in the struggle for complete independence of the country. How the satyagraha campaign was carried on during the year, and how thousands of our brothers and sisters went to jail and made other sacrifices is known to you all. The kisans of Gujarat fully participated in this battle and I am happy that the district of Allahabad did not lag behind. You know how much this battle has strengthened us. We have not yet gained complete independence but we have now become stronger to achieve it.

You would have heard that Mahatma Gandhi, after detailed discussions with the Viceroy, has decided on behalf of the Congress that we should stop our battle for some time and see if some settlement can be arrived at. We have therefore stopped satyagraha for the time being though permanent peace is yet to come. A complete settlement will come only with complete independence. If the present peace parleys were successful, well and good; otherwise we shall have to launch satyagraha again. Be prepared for it.

What have we to do now? The British Government have freed our brothers from jail and have made some friendly gestures. We also have now to stop the battle of satyagraha. But we have every right to carry on the boycott of foreign cloth and continue campaigning peacefully for the boycott of liquor, ganja and other intoxicants. Wherever a boycott is launched it should be completely peaceful. All enquiries in this regard should be addressed to the Congress Office, Prayag.

1 AICC File No 4/1931 (Pt. I), pp 106-107, N.M.M.L. Pamphlet, published in Hindi, issued by Jawaharlal and Purushottamdas Tandon in March 1931

this office. He was instructed to keep in intimate touch with the U.P. Government so that there may be as little friction as possible between them and us.

Mr. Pant has been interviewing the U.P. Government officials and placing before them the point of view of the Congress. He reports that he saw the Revenue Secretary of the U.P. Government recently and discussed the agrarian situation with him with special reference to the lines laid down for its solution by the U.P. Congress Committee. The Revenue Secretary did not wish to commit himself in the matter of remission. But he is reported to have appreciated the point of view of the Congress. About statutory tenants he agreed largely with the Congress. In regard to occupancy tenants he was of opinion that they were in a stronger position. But even in regard to them he did not reject some of the points advanced on behalf of the Congress. Stress was laid by him on local conditions and he asked if Mr. Pant could suggest any means for determining fair rates with regard to local circumstances. Mr. Pant suggested that local conferences might be held in every district between representatives of those concerned in order to find out what portion, if any, of the rent the tenants could reasonably afford to pay. He further stated that the Congress would be willing to lend its assistance in reaching an amicable settlement between the zamindars and the tenants on this question. The tenants should not be required to pay anything in excess of the amount determined by the conference and whatever be the difference remitted. The Revenue Secretary promised to place the whole matter before the government and further stated that actual ejectment could not be effected before May. As a matter of fact Congress had received complaints about hundreds of ejectments, amounting in one tahsil of Allahabad district alone to 600 or more. The Revenue Secretary promised to enquire into this matter also.

The U.P. Provincial Congress Committee is desirous of helping in every way a settlement between the zamindars, the tenantry and the government. It feels however that the way to bring about such a settlement is not by merely leaving the tenantry in the lurch and asking them to shift for themselves. The tahsil Congress organisations are practically peasant organisations and it is their duty to protect the interests of the tenants quite apart from the political side of the Congress movement. The Congress has made it very clear that the political movement has stopped and on the economic side all that it desires is a satisfactory settlement. The attitude of the U.P. Government, we have been told, is sympathetic. But it has been rather vague and this has made it difficult to formulate any definite plan which would

In Delhi a few days ago I was told of the contents of a letter you had addressed to the government about the hostile attitude of the kisans and some Congress workers in the district.[2] I am unable to find out, without further enquiry, what the real state of affairs is in the rural areas in Allahabad district. It is quite possible that some kisans have adopted an aggressive attitude in some places. It is also possible that some Congress workers have been indiscreet. Most of the prominent Congressmen, as you know, have been away in Karachi. It is obvious however that the conditions prevailing in the district are very abnormal and undesirable. It is also clear that the kisans have had to face and are facing today a great deal of ill-treatment and repression. Some villages, I understand, have even been deserted by the inhabitants for fear of the zamindars and the police. Many cases, it appears, have also been started against kisans under Sec. 107 and even bail has not been encouraged.

In any movement affecting vast numbers of people accidents are likely to happen. It is admitted that there is great economic distress and all the rural areas are affected by it to a greater or lesser extent. What is happening however is something more than the usual crop of accidents. Certainly it is not at all in keeping with the truce or the provisional settlement between the government and the Congress. So far as I am concerned, or my colleagues, we desire strictly to abide by the spirit and letter of this settlement and we shall certainly try to remedy any errors that may have been committed on our side. But it was pointed out to the Government of India by Gandhiji and to the local government by me that the Congress is not purely a political body.[3] In the rural areas it is practically a kisan organisation and as such it must interest itself in the well-being of the kisans, quite apart from political issues. We tried therefore by negotiation and direct approach to the local government to help in arriving at a satisfactory settlement between the zamindars and tenants. In some districts I am glad to say we have met with a measure of success. But in Allahabad conditions appear to be daily worsening. They are bound to become worse or to improve. They cannot remain where they are. I shall be

2 He had reported to the government in March 1931 that tenants were being asked by the Congress to pay only a part of the rent, zamindars had been attacked by the tenants at some places and Congress panchayats were coming in the way of police investigations.

3 In an interview on 6 April 1931, Mahatma Gandhi told the Home Secretary, Government of India "The Congress is predominantly a peasants and workers' organisation." During his talks with the officials of the U.P. Government on 7 April, Jawaharlal had reiterated this position

Our battle of satyagraha started with the Salt Act. It has been agreed that the kisans can make salt for their use as well as for their neighbours wherever saline earth is available.

The biggest problems of the kisans are of payment of rent and ejectments. A lasting solution of these problems will be found only when complete independence is achieved. We shall then have the power to relieve the kisans of their troubles. That time, we hope, is soon to come. At present, under the truce, it has been decided that we should not include non-payment of taxes in our satyagraha campaign. But we all know that because of a fall in the prices the condition of the kisans is very bad and they are not able to make full payment. We, therefore, expect the government and the landlords to prepare such conditions under which the kisans may only pay as much rent as they can, and the rest of it be written off. We shall, in this respect, try to bring about some compromise and inform the kisans later what they should do. An attempt will also be made to get back the lands of those kisans who have been ejected during the struggle. Please help us in this and inform the Congress Office wherever disposession has taken place.

Your brothers
Jawaharlal Nehru
Purushottamdas Tandon

6. To Commissioner, Allahabad Division[1]

Allahabad
9.4.31

My dear Maharaj Singh,

I returned to Allahabad yesterday after three weeks' absence and almost the first sight that came my way was a number of wounded kisans who had come to our hospital for treatment. I was further informed that a serious case was lying in a village and could not be removed by carriage or train. An ambulance car was sent for him. Later I was besieged by other kisans from various parts of the district, all of them bringing tales of woe and complaints of ill-treatment by zamindars or the police.

1 AICC File No. G-40(KW)(ii)/1931, pp. 233-235, NMML.

8. Appeal to the Kisans of Allahabad District[1]

Dear Kisan Brothers,

On my return to Allahabad after three weeks, I have learnt with great sorrow that the kisans of the district have been put to great hardships and they are in a miserable condition. At some places kisans are also reported to have resorted to violence. This has made me all the more unhappy. All kisans should remember that our principle is to work peacefully. Those who resort to violence will harm the kisans and bring a bad name to the Congress. It should therefore be well understood that neither from the Congress side nor from the side of kisans should there be any violence.

The Congress has recently decided at Karachi that after the achievement of independence the taxes on land will be reduced to the minimum so that the poor kisans and small zamindars get relief and their condition improves. But we shall be able to do this only when we gain independence and power rests with the masses. We have therefore to work ceaselessly for the achievement of Swaraj.

At present we have not got Swaraj. It has been agreed between the Congress and the British Government that for some time we should both stop fighting and work for a settlement. It will be good if a settlement is arrived at; if not, we shall again have to wage war for Swaraj. It should be remembered that at present our fighting has been stopped. No kisan or volunteer should adopt a posture of war. Mahatma Gandhi and the Congress have given their word that so long as negotiations continue, we shall not resort to satyagraha or start a civil disobedience campaign. We have to keep our promise. When the time to do something else comes, we shall let you know, and then we shall all do it together.

We actually want at this time some agreement over the payment of rent between the kisans and the zamindars. Some zamindar brothers are willing and it is hoped that some agreement will soon be reached with them. But it is very sad that some zamindars have inflicted great hardships on the kisans and these continue unabated. Wherever this happens, please report it to the Congress Office at Allahabad. We very sorry if matters do not improve, and I shall gladly do everything in my power to improve the situation.

1 A.I.C.C. File No. 4/1931(Pt.I), pp. 109-110, N.M.M.L. Pamphlet published in Hindi on 13 April 1931.

If you think it is worthwhile I shall gladly come over to see you and explain our viewpoint. Or if you prefer I can send you a note on the subject.[4] I am keeping bad health and have been told to take rest immediately. I shall be leaving for Bombay and Ceylon soon, but I am here for the next five days or so, except the 13th.

May I have a line in reply?

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

4. See post, item 9.

7. To Sitla Sahai[1]

April 11, 1931

My dear Sitla Sahai,

I have your letter of the 7th April. I do not remember receiving any letter from you at Karachi. I am told that a letter was given to me at Delhi but I have been so unwell that I cannot deal with my work properly. From your letter it appears that on the whole you are surmounting your difficulties. I am glad to learn this. We are having far greater difficulties in Allahabad district.

I shall be leaving Allahabad for some time on the 16th morning. I shall go to Bombay and from there perhaps to Ceylon.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 AICC File No G-40(KW)(iv)/1931, p. 135, NMML.

to bring about an amicable settlement of the agrarian problem between the zamindars, the tenantry and the government.

It is stated on behalf of the government that the Congress has not faithfully carried out the terms of the truce in the U.P. and has tried to carry on the no-tax campaign in another form.[3] The truth or otherwise of the statement can only be judged after a proper appreciation of the economic situation in the agrarian areas in the U.P., and the steps that the Congress has taken to relieve it by helping a settlement between the parties concerned. The Congress, as representing a very large number of the tenants, could not leave its tenant members in the lurch when they were admittedly in great difficulties. This fact was repeatedly brought to the notice of Mr. Gandhi when he was having his conversations with the Viceroy, prior to the settlement. He was further informed of the difficulties caused by ejectments. We were given to understand that the government would help in the solution of the problem in every way, if the political no-tax campaign was withdrawn, and would also try to give possession of lands from which ejectment had taken place. It was reported that Mr. Emerson had written to the U.P. Government on these subjects.

A brief account of the agrarian situation in the U.P. in the course of the past few years is given below. It must be remembered that the tenancy law of the Agra province is different from that of Oudh. In Oudh there are no occupancy tenants and it is admitted that the Oudh tenantry is on the whole in a worse economic plight than the peasantry of Agra province. The facts given below relate in the main to Agra province. The figures for Oudh are even more unfavourable from the point of view of the tenants.

The province of Agra (as well as that of Oudh) is mostly a land of small cultivators, whose holdings, on an average, do not exceed, according to a government estimate, 5½ acres. This means that the vast majority of tenants have got between 3 to 4 acres only. There are three classes of tenants: (a) occupancy tenants, (b) statutory or life tenants, and (c) sub-tenants. The average rates of rents for these classes of tenants vary from district to district. They are the highest in the district of Muzaffarnagar and the lowest in Jhansi. In the district of Allahabad occupancy tenants pay between Rs. 3-8-0 and Rs. 5-8-0 and non-occupancy tenants pay between Rs. 10 and Rs. 16 per bigha. The cooperative department of the U.P. are of opinion that between 60 to 80% of the cultivators are generally in debt.

3 The collectors of Allahabad and Mathura had reported in these terms to the local government in March 1931.

cannot do much for you but we shall do whatever we can. But remember, whether the zamindars ill-treat you or not, you will not ill-treat them. Whatever be your complaints, report them to the Congress Office and discuss them there.

About rent, the Congress has told you that those kisans who can pay easily may come to an understanding and make payments. This understanding cannot be reached individually. The people of any tahsil, group of villages or of the villages under one zamindar can reach an agreement with the government or the zamindar. The provincial Congress committee has suggested that an agreement for payment of half the rent will not be bad for the kisans. But the conditions are not the same everywhere. Therefore, the payment of a little bit more at some places and slightly less at others should be suitably devised. We suggest that half the land tax should be written off, for, if the kisans are unable to pay fully during the current harvest, how will they pay more later? It will be good if the zamindars write off that much. If they write off a part and postpone the payment of the rest, it should be understood that the kisans will not be able to pay the arrears of rent. The government has not yet announced its policy in this regard. But I hope that our zamindar brothers will not be harsh, will sympathise with the kisans and try to reach an agreement with them. The Congress will give full support to this.

Your servant,
Jawaharlal Nehru

9. On the Rent and Revenue Situation in U.P.[1]

About a month ago a note on the economic distress in the rural areas in the U.P. was given to Mr. Gandhi in Delhi and passed on by him to Mr. Emerson.[2] In this note it was pointed out that even on the withdrawal of the political no-tax campaign, as a result of the provisional settlement between the Congress and the government, the economic crisis would continue and the tenantry would find it impossible to pay the full demand or anything approaching it. Reference was made in this note to the various steps taken by the U.P. Provincial Committee

1. 18 April 1931. AICC File No. 4/1931 (Pt I), pp. 75 91, NMML.
2. See ante, item 4

According to Mr. Har Swarup M.L.A. (Leader of January 16, 1931) the cost of producing an acre of sugarcane will be somewhat as follows:

	Rs. as.
Rent and Revenue	20—0
Manure	10—0
Ploughing, harrowing, weeding and bunding	25—0
Irrigation with labour for watering	12—0
Seed	15—0
Cutting and collecting	7—8
Making gur with its cartage to market	22—8
Total	112—0

Thus "the tenant gets, in sugarcane, in spite of all his labours, about 35% less than what he actually spends. The case of wheat is still worse because the tenant produces on an average 12 maunds of wheat worth Rs. 30 and spends about Rs. 62, i.e. thus getting a return of less than one half."

Mr. Brijnandan Lal M.L.C. in the course of his speech in the U.P. Legislative Council gave certain striking figures relating to three villages in which he had made personal enquiries. These figures show the terrible plight in which the tenants and zamindars find themselves in at present owing to the unprecedented fall in prices. According to him, in one village the cash value of the produce per acre was Rs. 204, while the cost of production, excluding the maintenance charges of the cultivators and their families, came to Rs. 311 per acre. For the other two villages the respective figures given by him were: Rs. 186 and Rs. 20, being the value of the produce, and Rs. 240 and Rs. 28, being the cost of production per acre.

Pandit Venkatesh Narayan Tivary carried out a rough economic enquiry, on behalf of the Congress, in the rural areas in three tahsils of the Allahabad district this year. The information he obtained from the landlords showed that the cost of cultivating a plot of 6 bighas was, in the case of occupancy tenants, between Rs. 110 and Rs. 130, according as the rent was low or high, while the cash value of the produce was in normal years between Rs. 125 and Rs. 140. In the present year the cash value has been less than one-third of what it was in 1926-27.

It would appear that even before the no-tax campaign was started in the U. P. the local government had under consideration the question of remission and suspension of land revenue on a generous scale. They realised, as they had to, that the agriculturists of the province were passing through a severe economic crisis, the like of which had not been

Such was their condition in normal years. Since 1928-29, however, it has steadily grown worse. In 1928-29 the government remitted no less than Rs. 60 lakhs in land revenue and suspended nearly Rs. 20 lakhs. In 1929-30 there was a remission of Rs. 33 lakhs and suspension of Rs. 24 lakhs. Out of the rabi demand only for 1930 remission amounted to Rs. 11.57 lakhs and suspension to Rs. 2.94 lakhs. That is to say that from April 1928 to June 1930 the government had to remit about Rs. 105 lakhs and suspend nearly Rs. 46.82 lakhs. In addition to these sums, over Rs. 24 lakhs were spent on famine relief etc.

These figures demonstrate that the economic condition of the U.P. tenantry had been steadily deteriorating and their power of resistance was breaking down. They were at a very low ebb when the phenomenal fall in the prices of foodstuffs set in. This was the last straw on the camel's back.

The following figures will show how serious this fall of prices has been:

	Year 1873	Year 1916-20	Increase per cent
Rice	3.12	6.24	100
Jawar	1.89	4.24	124
Wheat	2.41	5.39	124
Barley	1.9	4.0	111
Gram	1.39	4.56	228

For sugarcane and cotton the record of prices goes back only to 1901:

	Year 1901	Year 1916-20	Increase per cent
Sugarcane	4.29	8.82	106
Cotton	13.69	34.64	153

The comparison of this year's rates with those of 1916-20 is as follows:

	Price of 1916-20	Present rates	Percentage of fall on the prices of 1916-20
Sugarcane	8.82	4 to 5	120—80
Cotton	36 64	12.0	275
Rice	6.74	5.0	33
Wheat	5.39	2.5	112
Barley	4.0	1.25	325
Jawar	4.24	1.125	400
Makka	4.24	1.125	400
Gram	4.56	3 0	33

out of rents received from their tenants. Some other zamindars borrowed money to meet the demand. The great majority however had neither resources of their own nor could they find people to advance money to them. But as they had to find money, the only way open to them was to extract as much as they could from their unfortunate tenants. Threats of violence and actual violence have been and are being used for this purpose. Thus the policy of the U.P. Government and their instructions to realise as much of the land revenue as rapidly as possible has resulted in great suffering and hardship for the tenantry.

It may be mentioned that where the local authorities have been even slightly helpful or have not been obstructive, satisfactory settlements between the zamindar and the tenant have been brought about by Congress workers. Such settlements have been made in the district of Rae Bareli in Oudh, where there are a large number of big taluqdars. Some of these taluqdars have agreed to remit generally one half of the rents due to them. A settlement having been reached on this basis, Congress workers have helped and succeeded in rapidly collecting the balance of the rent. A similar policy on the part of the district officials in Allahabad would have succeeded equally well. In spite of the difficulties facing the Congress in Allahabad district, prominent Congressmen are even now trying their best to arrive at a settlement with a number of zamindars by means of private negotiations.

If the local government agreed to take the following steps immediately and cooperated with Congress workers in bringing about settlements between the zamindars and their tenants, there would be an immediate and widespread improvement in the situation all over the province, including the district of Allahabad:

(i) Remission of -/8/- in the rupee in the case of non-occupancy tenants for both the kharif and rabi demands.

(ii) In the case of occupancy tenants, remissions of four annas and suspension of four annas in the rupee.

(iii) Lands from which tenants have been ejected should be restored to them.

(iv) No suits for arrears of rents to be filed by landlords during the next twelve months.

These terms are by no means over-generous. They have been admitted to be just by some of the biggest landlords in the district of Allahabad. Indeed, the distress in certain areas is so acute that even these terms will be difficult of fulfilment. The tenantry may not be able to pay even eight annas. In some areas in Allahabad district, particularly in tahsil Soraon, hailstorms have inflicted great damage and have worsened a bad enough situation.

experienced in recent times, and only extraordinary measures would relieve the situation. But as soon as the no tax movement was started the idea of a substantial reduction was apparently dropped, for the time being, on political grounds. But hopes of remission were kept alive by statements made by officials in their unofficial capacities. It was stated that there would be both remission and suspension in regard to the kharif instalment of land revenue. These hopes have, however, proved illusory. The Finance Member of the U. P. Government has stated in the local Council that the government had decided not to give any general remission in regard to the kharif demand. This announcement was made after the pressure of the no-tax campaign was removed as a result of the provisional settlement between the Congress and the Government of India. The reticence and ambiguity of previous official statements have now given place to a definite statement against the grant of any general relief to zamindars and tenants in regard to the kharif demand. Some remission and suspension is suggested for the next rabi demand which falls due next month.

The net result of all this has been that there has been a paltry remission of Rs. 10 lakhs for the kharif in the case of the worst affected districts only, while the major part of the province has been left to get along as best it could, in spite of admitted economic distress of an extraordinary degree. The figures given above relating to remissions and suspensions for years 1928-29 to 1930 (rabi instalment only) show that while in those two and a half years the government remitted nearly Rs. 105 lakhs, they have so far remitted only Rs. 10 lakhs for the kharif instalment this year, when the cash value of the kharif produce has on an average been reduced to one-third of what it would be in a year of normal prices. The local Council has passed a number of resolutions and adopted various motions in order to impress upon government the urgency and the need for liberal remissions and suspensions. But so far this has produced no substantial result. The local government has been putting pressure on the zamindars to pay up as much as possible. Orders have been issued to revenue officials to expedite collections, and they have exercised the maximum of pressure on the zamindars to pay up their dues in full before the close of the financial year. If the zamindars happened to be honorary magistrates, munsifs or assistant collectors, they were told that cases would not be sent to their courts if they failed to pay up before the due date. Zamindars were also threatened with the withdrawal of licences for firearms. Some attachments were also made. Zamindars were made to feel that they would be under official displeasure if they delayed in paying up. A few of the richer zamindars paid their dues from their private resources, as they could not pay them

Tenants, who have been ejected, naturally have no further interest left in paying any part of their rent. They become a discontented group, full of bitterness at what they consider an unjust treatment. It is therefore a necessary part of a solution of the problem that these ejectments should be set aside and the lands restored, when possession has been actually taken. If such a solution is delayed somewhat, in any event, all pending ejectment suits should be stayed.

In the same way, if a settlement is to be worked for, attachments of property, cattle and the like should be discontinued and where such attachments have taken place, there should be no sales. Sales, where they take place, will necessarily complicate the situation.

Complaints have been made about the attitude of Congress workers in the U.P., and specially in the Allahabad district. It has apparently been stated on behalf of the government that the Congress has made no attempt to discontinue the no-tax campaign. This is not correct. The Congress in the U.P. has taken great pains to face a difficult situation and, while making it clear that the political no-tax campaign is off, has made every effort to bring about settlements between the parties concerned. In some cases it has succeeded. Where the local authorities were not helpful it has not been so easy to succeed. The Congress obviously could not leave the tenants to shift for themselves or tell each individual tenant to deal directly with his landlord. Any person acquainted with the principles of trade unionism will appreciate that this was an impossible position for it to take up. A single tenant left to himself must go to the wall. His strength lies in corporate bargaining and the Congress has tried to represent his interests and to protect him from undue pressure.

Some irresponsible statements may have been made by certain Congress workers in Allahabad and it is true that in a few cases the kisans have acted wrongly. Where this has happened the correct position of the Congress has been explained in leaflets which were widely distributed, and the tenants have been repeatedly warned against acting aggressively.[4] But it must be remembered that the tenantry are being made to put up with all manner of hardships by many zamindars and sometimes by the police. Reports of ill treatment are being received by the Congress office in Allahabad almost hourly and crowds of kisans come themselves with tales of their sufferings. If so desired, instances of ill treatment of kisans, and the forcible methods being employed to make them pay up, can be supplied. Those who are acquainted with agrarian problems will realise that nothing is more resented than dispossession of lands and general ill treatment of the tenantry in

4 See ante, items 5 and 8

Stress is laid on the part of the government that the occupancy tenants are far better off than the statutory or the non-occupancy tenants and should therefore be given little or no relief. It is admitted that occupancy tenants are as a rule better off and hence the relief suggested for them is less than in the case of the others. But it must be borne in mind that they are also in a bad way and in any event are not in a position to pay anything like the full demand. They can only pay if they realise rents from their sub-tenants. These sub-tenants are admitted to have been very hard hit and are not in a position to pay much. If then the sub-tenants do not pay much to the occupancy tenants, it is not just or reasonable to expect the latter to pay in full. In cases where it is shown that the occupancy tenant has realised a large part of the sub-tenant's rent, relief to him may be proportionately limited. Otherwise he is fully entitled to substantial relief.

The amount of rent paid by a tenant is by itself no safe criterion of his economic condition. Thus in the U.P. the tenants in the northern districts pay far higher rents than those in the eastern districts, and because of this the government argue that the latter stand in less need of relief. Accordingly some partial remissions were granted to the districts of Agra, Muttra etc. in the north, while no remissions were granted to the other districts. But this reasoning ignores several vital factors, on which stress has been laid in the government reports. One of these factors is the size of the holding. Where the holdings are comparatively larger, a larger surplus is left over and consequently a higher rent can be paid.

A very large number of ejectments have already taken place in Allahabad district and this has complicated an already difficult situation. This district has a great majority of occupancy tenants—probably 80% Many zamindars are taking advantage of the situation by depriving occupancy tenants of their occupancy rights. These zamindars welcome the chance of increasing the value of their lands considerably. But this policy is creating great difficulties and is increasing bitterness. No occupancy tenant likes to part with rights which he or his ancestor has laboriously acquired, and if these ejectments are to remain, it will hardly be possible for a peaceful atmosphere to be restored. This was pointed out at the earliest stage when the terms of truce were being discussed. There had been few ejectments then. Instead of these few ejectments being set aside, as was hoped, a large number of fresh ejectments, about two thousand, have taken place in Allahabad district, and many more are pending.

10. To Chief Secretary, U.P. Government[1]

17.6.31

Dear Kunwar Jagdish Prasad,

I returned to Allahabad last night after two months' absence. Immediately I was met with numerous complaints of ill-treatment and harassment of kisans by zamindars and, in many instances, by the police or by chowkidars. I do not wish to trouble you with the details at present as I am investigating the reports made to me. But I might mention that complaints have come from a large number of districts and particularly from Rae Bareli, Allahabad, Gonda and Gorakhpur.

Occasionally the newspapers have contained reports of agrarian trouble and of aggressive action on the part of the kisans. Some time ago, as you know, a zamindar and some of his men were killed in Allahabad district. I regret this very much, but from all the accounts I have had, very great provocation has been offered by some zamindars in attempts to terrorise the kisans in paying rents. Sometimes the worm has turned. Little or no publicity is given by the newspapers to the continuous harassment that is being caused to the kisans.

In Rae Bareli district, so far as I know, there has not been a single instance of aggressive action by the kisans during the last two months or more. And yet it appears that the district authorities and some of the taluqdars there have joined hands to crush the tenantry. Large numbers of our men have been proceeded against under Section 107 and other sections.[2] Lathi charges have taken place on the kisans, and some of our volunteers, it is stated, were beaten inside the police station day before in tahsil Maharajganj, police station Sheodarshanganj and were tauntingly asked to send for Gandhi. A few days ago in Mauza Gulupur, tahsil Rae Bareli, a taluqdar accompanied by his own men and the police, is reported to have had our volunteers beaten and their clothes, flags and other belongings taken away.

I am writing to you specially however about a notice under Section 144 Cr P.C. issued on the 10th of June by the district magistrate of times of economic distress. In spite of this great provocation however the tenantry have been generally kept in control and the lapses on their part, regrettable and unfortunate as they were, have been few. And for each lapse they have had to suffer greatly. In Dadauli in the tahsil of Soraon (Dist. Allahabad) there was a petty riot between the zamindar's men and the tenantry resulting in the death of two of the former.[5] This has been the most serious lapse on the part of the tenants. Since then, apparently owing to police action, several villages in the neighbourhood have been deserted.

1 A I C C. File No G-40(KW)(m)/1931, pp 227-229, N M M L.

2 Legitimate Congress work like enrolment of members and volunteers and hoisting of the national flag was banned and Congress workers were ordered to abstain for two months from speaking on the agrarian issue and from carrying on propaganda among the tenants.

Most of the difficulties that have arisen in the province are due to the fact that the U.P. Government cannot make up its mind. Even yet there has been no clear and final decision by the government about remission and suspension. It is not easy to arrive at settlements with zamindars when they do not know what their position is likely to be. It appears to be the policy of the government to say nothing definite till the last moment and to try to realise as much as possible meanwhile. This is most unjust to the zamindar as well as to the tenant.

Even if a tenant can pay and is willing to pay half his rent, he is afraid to do so as he might be proceeded against and ejected even then. Why then should he pay anything at all? Some cases have been brought to our notice where tenants have paid -/8/- and are being harassed for the balance.

Another great difficulty is the practice of many zamindars not to give any receipts for the rent paid to them. This is illegal but is none the less a very prevalent practice and a tenant can do little against it.

The last year has been admittedly one of great agrarian crises. It is very strange that in spite of this the government do not propose to give any marked relief for the kharif and only propose remission or suspension for the rabi. It is essential that substantial relief be given for both the kharif and the rabi.

5. On 22 March 1931, the zamindar's son who had gone with his servants to Dadauli to collect rent was attacked by the tenants, and two of his servants were killed held on the 27th and 28th June at Allahabad. I am waiting for his reply. I want to take a considered opinion of the Council to the Working Committee. If the Council meeting is held I hope it will be possible for you to attend.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

12. Address to Kisans[1]

Kisan Brethren,

I beg your pardon for arriving here so late. I am coming here after attending another big meeting at Sulahpore. When more than one meeting has to be attended then it becomes difficult to attend any on time.

As you have been waiting here for a long time and there is not much time left now, I may not be able to tell you all that I want to. I have been away from the province for about two months and have just returned to Allahabad after a very long journey. So, I am not very well acquainted with recent conditions. Since my return to Allahabad I have been hearing how the kisans of our district and other places in the province are being subjected to repression and injustice, how they are forced to pay rent, beaten with lathis and prosecuted and how many of our workers are being tried under Sec. 107.

I am very much pained and troubled by all such sad accounts. It has also pained me much to know how you are faced with serious troubles. I, therefore, agreed to attend two or three sabhas of kisans so that I may have an opportunity to talk with you and give you some advice. But before giving you any advice, I wish to consult our leader Mahatma Gandhi, and a few Congress workers who are present here. At present, it is rather difficult for one person to advise you much

You know when we launched a great struggle for complete Swaraj, many Hindus, Mohamadans and kisans joined us and helped us as they knew that Swaraj when achieved would be beneficial to them and

1 Home Department (Political) File No 33/24/1931, National Archives of India The only report available of this address, delivered in Hindi on 20 June 1931 at a kisan meeting at Kohkharaj in Allahabad district, is the English version prepared by the police reporter for the Criminal Investigation Department. The text printed here is based on that report and has to be read with caution.

Rae Bareli to most of the prominent Congress workers in Rae Bareli. Section 144 has been responsible for many curious notices but the one issued in Rae Bareli has certain features which are unique. I am enclosing a copy of this notice. You will observe that if a person is to obey this notice he must abstain from all activity, agrarian, political and labour. Thus no Congress work or any other similar work can be carried on in Rae Bareli. No member can be enlisted and we cannot do any work even in regard to swadeshi, boycott of foreign cloth or prohibition. You will remember that according to the terms of the provisional settlement between the Government of India and the Congress even peaceful picketing is permitted.

The order under Section 144 appears to me to be a clear breach of the truce terms and I must confess that I am surprised that such an obvious breach should be committed by an officer of your government. I presume it was done on his initiative and without the knowledge of the provincial government. As my advice has been sought by my colleagues in Rae Bareli I am taking the liberty of writing to you and drawing your attention to the notice and to the happenings in Rae Bareli district.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

11. To G.B. Pant[1]

June 18th, 1931

My dear Pantji,

I enclose a letter sent by me yesterday to Kunwar Jagdish Prasad. This letter will speak for itself. I feel that the government or the officers of the government are deliberately committing a breach of the truce and are trying to break up the whole Congress movement under the guise of meeting the agrarian situation. This kind of thing cannot be tolerated and I do not propose to do so for long. A meeting of the Working Committee is taking place on the 1st July. I want to put everything before them and get the necessary directions. I have suggested to Sherwani that a meeting of the U.P. Council might be

1 AICC File No 63/1931, p 103, NMML

Mahatma Gandhi, as you know, is a great leader. He is such a leader because he has been chosen by the people of this country to be their leader unlike the governors and others who are not appointed by the people. Mahatma Gandhi has become our leader because the people of India love him and have great confidence in him. If you lose confidence in him tomorrow then you can remove him from the leadership of the country and replace him by another person. You should remember that Gandhiji has the people's strength behind him. But what strength has the governor behind him? He has the strength of the gun and sword at his back through which he can put fear in your minds and commit oppression.

Under Mahatmaji's leadership, not only you, but the people of the entire country took part in the battle for Swaraj. As the people were sick of their problems and as they also loved Gandhiji, they followed him. Thousands of our brethren went to jail. Both Hindus and Musalmans took part in the struggle with the result that the British Government became perplexed. The British Government is a strong government and not a weak one. It knows how to fight a big battle but it had also to acknowledge the bravery of those who were fighting the Congress battle. How can the government or the English nation check the fight for Swaraj which is fought by crores of kisans and other people? How can the police stop them when they are prepared to suffer lathi blows? The result of the battle has been that the people of this country have won the respect and admiration of the outside world. The people outside this country have come to know that Indians are brave. Formerly, they thought that Indians who are ruled by a handful of men are slaves and thirty-three crores of Hindus and Muslims bow down their heads and receive kicks like slaves. Last year's struggle has led people in countries like Germany, America, Japan, and England too to think us to be brave and courageous. They now appreciate that we can also make sacrifices for attaining Swaraj.

Our successful fight also produced a great effect on the British Government and the British people. They sought to reach a compromise with us. You know that there were some talks between Mahatma Gandhi and the Viceroy about two months ago, as a result of which we agreed to suspend the struggle for some time, so that further talks on the compromise could be held. If a settlement is arrived at resulting in Swaraj under which the grievances of the kisans are removed, so much the better and we shall gladly accept it.

When the British offered terms, Mahatmaji agreed to them and suspended the battle from our side. The British, as you know, released many prisoners from jails and cancelled new ordinances. They gave their grievances would be removed. They helped because they understood that Swaraj meant removal of the poverty of the masses and their other grievances.

Who constitute the masses of India? It is the kisans in the villages and not a few citizens or vakils living in the cities. Of what avail would Swaraj be if the kisans' difficulties were not removed. Swaraj really means the removal of the difficulties of the masses of India, specially the kisans. Their difficulties in the main relate to such questions as rent, ejectment and possession of lands. Swaraj would be of little avail if it did not solve their problems relating to these matters.

Swaraj, therefore, means that there should be no foreign government in the country and no single individual should be the ruler in the capacity of a raja, maharaja or a governor. Our Swaraj means a panchayati raj in which there will be no distinction between the ruler and the ruled. We wish that all those who are ruled now should become the rulers of the country. There should be a panchayat in the country of all its people which may manage its affairs. The panchas who are temporarily your rajas should become your servants as well.

There are two forms of government. One is based on the use of force. It makes people obey its orders by terrifying them by use of police and the army. The other form of government is that in which the people in consultation with each other establish panchayati raj without resort to force. Such a government does not need the help of the army and the police. The present government in the country is run with the help of the army and the police. Nothing is done in the country with your consultation. An order passed by an officer is enforced by the police or the army.

But what type of government do we want? We want such a government under which the panchayat established with the consent of the people will manage affairs. No panch will ever use a lathi or a gun and, if he does so, he will be removed. There are, therefore, two forms of government. One, which we see now in our country, under which cases are instituted and forcible ejectments from land take place. The people are sent to jail and efforts are made to realize rents by the use of force. The other government formed by the panchayat will be established in the country when Swaraj is attained.

The kisans have joined the battle for Swaraj with the idea of establishing a panchayati raj under which their grievances would be removed. There was no need for them to join the struggle for Swaraj if it did not hold out a hope of removing their grievances in such matters as rent. The Congress had also launched a struggle for the same Swaraj.

The second thing is, that on one side, the efforts for reaching a settlement are being made and, on the other, atrocities are being committed on kisans. Congress workers are being arrested and securities under Section 107 are demanded from them. Section 144 is promulgated.

When the truce talks were going on we clearly told the British Government that we were prepared to advise the kisans to suspend the no-tax campaign. Afterwards, we informed the Viceroy of the condition of the kisans and their plight owing to fall in prices. We also informed the government that they should be under no misapprehension that as the truce has been effected we can ask the kisans to pay the full rent. We told them that the kisans cannot pay it in full and so the zamindars also cannot pay the revenue demand in full. We shall, of course, ask them to pay as much as they can but we also know at the same time that they are unable to pay the full amount. We, therefore, requested the government to remit the major portion of the rent. Only then could the settlement be effected as it was quite impossible for the kisans to pay their full rent. This fact was also admitted by the government as they knew that the conditions of the kisans are bad. We accepted the truce on this condition as we made it quite clear to them that the kisans cannot pay the full rent.

We are certainly anxious for a settlement as we do not want to create any trouble. We have tried hard and are trying still to see that the kisans are not put to any trouble. Mahatma Gandhi also visited our province with a view to see what can be done for the kisans. He had a talk with the Governor and issued a pamphlet which you may also have seen. He tried his level best to see that there was no clash between the kisans and the zamindars. He even went one pace ahead of the Congress in the matter of payment of rents by the kisans. He asked those kisans who had occupancy rights to pay up to -/12/- so that -/4/- would be remitted to them. To those who were non-occupancy tenants, he advised that -/8/- should be remitted to them. He also suggested that for paying -/12/ or -/8/-, the kisans should be issued receipts for the full amount. This would save the kisans from ejectment as in the absence of a receipt for the full amount, a decree could be passed against them for the remitted sum by showing it as outstanding against them. Everything should be shown clearly in the receipt so that no suit for the amount remitted might be instituted. Some zamindars have accepted this condition but most of them have not. We have tried to settle matters amicably but the zamindars are not agreeable to that.

We again ask you to pay whatever you can easily pay. You must pay whatever Mahatma Gandhi has advised you to pay. If zamindars permission for the manufacture of salt for which we had first started our battle. The kisans can now manufacture salt in the villages if they so like. We also told the British that we have a right to picket foreign cloth shops and we will do it. At the time of the truce, we made it quite clear that we shall banish foreign cloth and forbid the sale of liquor in our country. We would have continued to picket shops selling foreign cloth and liquor no matter whether there was a truce or not. We agreed to suspend the struggle and not to resort to satyagraha or a no tax campaign.

Although three months have passed, further talks for compromise have not commenced. It is not yet known whether the conference will be held in India or in England. It is also not yet decided whether anyone on behalf of the Congress should go there or not. The Congress would decide to send its representative to the conference only when it is convinced that honest and sincere talks for a settlement would take place. Only one representative of the Congress, whom the country and the kisans would like to go, would attend the conference. He may be Mahatma Gandhi or anybody else. When we start the struggle, all will take part in it. At this time, however, one person alone is enough to hold talks.

There is no negotiation for a settlement yet. But what has been done against the kisans during this time? Excesses are being committed against them for realisation of rent, cases have been instituted against them and they are hard pressed in many other ways. It is a matter of regret that at one or two places the kisans, having endured the atrocities and oppression for long, have in sheer desperation resorted to violence. We regret such incidents very much and hope that, in future, the kisans will adhere to the principle of nonviolence and start satyagraha after mutual consultations, if they have to protest against their oppressors Once they had accepted the advice of Mahatma Gandhi to fight peacefully, they ought not to have deviated from that path. The breach of the peace has resulted in great loss to the kisans and has done no good to them.

You have to fight many battles and do bigger things. Along with the important question of winning Swaraj we have also taken up the question of kisans. Your forefathers have also undergone such sad experience as ejectment from land as you are going through. But, for the removal of your grievances, you have to undergo a lot of suffering and pain You should, therefore, remember that if you adopt the path of violence, it will not benefit you in any way. We wish to adopt such methods by which we have already shown to the whole world last year how brave our country is. It is the first thing you should keep in mind.

shall have to adopt the same old ways. We shall have to resume satyagraha and suffer lathi blows. We should therefore hold ourselves in readiness. A settlement is always effected with the strong. So, we should remember that the country which keeps itself in readiness can fight any battle and succeed in bringing about a settlement.

You should therefore make the organisation of the Congress and the kisans strong. You must remember that if kisans look perplexed or feel nervous at this time, then, the zamindars, thinking them to be weak and helpless, will eject them from their lands. Nobody will then be able to do anything for them, for the Congress has no legal authority or military strength through which it would get the ejectments stopped. We can help you in one way only. It is by fighting vigorously for Swaraj. It is only then that we shall be able to restore your lands to you and help you in other ways. All this will be possible when we have power in our hands. We can, therefore, do nothing at present but make efforts for the achievement of Swaraj.

There is one thing more which you should remember at this time. It is that none of you should try to acquire the land made available through the ejectment of a brother kisan. If you do that then you will be cutting each other's throat. Do not allow any ill-feelings to develop among you at this time as these will weaken you and harm your cause. Unity among yourselves will give you all the required strength to meet the present situation without getting nervous. At the same time, I may tell you that we are not in a position to help you, and therefore we cannot give you any promise of the same. The only course left open to us will be to fight again. But our methods of struggle are quite different. When the time comes, we shall start satyagraha again. We shall defy orders and do all other things. But whatever we may do, we will do it like a disciplined army. A handful of men should not start the struggle at this time. Keep yourself in readiness and when the struggle for a no tax campaign is launched then we shall start it with all the strength we command.

do not agree to receive that much, then it cannot be helped. We ask both you and the zamindars to settle the differences amicably.

Efforts are being made to realise rent from you by the use of force and by filing suits. I tell you to pay whatever you can. But, at the same time, I also say that you should not pay a single pie to anybody if he tries to compel you. We were ready to pay whatever we could but it was not accepted then. Now, it is being realized by using force and by instituting cases and effecting ejectments. It is degrading to pay in this manner. You should ask your zamindar to reach a compromise with you. Tell him that you are ready to pay but if he tries to realise it by the use of the lathi then you will not give him a single shell even. You must tell him that you are not beasts to be degraded and humiliated.

Your suffering and your sacrifices for the attainment of Swaraj will be of no avail, if, at this juncture, you should lack courage and, out of fear of lathi blows and ejectments, allow the zamindars to think that they can easily suppress you and keep you under their control.

We shall have peace only when we get our rights and when kisans get their rights. Today the immediate question before us is that of remission of rent. The Congress aim is to secure permanent remission of rent and revenue. It can, however, be achieved only when we have power in our hands. We are at present fighting for the Swaraj which will strengthen the hands of the masses of India. We are fighting for the Swaraj under which we shall be able to frame laws for the removal of the grievances of kisans and make permanent reductions in their rent.

If you ask me for my personal views, I am against the zamindar class, in principle. In my view, everybody should be the owner of his land. But this will ultimately have to be decided by the people of this country. I will certainly be very pleased if my views are accepted in this regard.

The question facing you now is what you should do under the present circumstances when you are so hard pressed, and rent is being realised from you by the use of force. I would again repeat and tell you that you should not submit to coercion, but must tell them that you will pay whatever you have been asked by Mahatma Gandhi to pay. I must tell you that the more you are oppressed greater will be your strength. You should tell the zamindars that by threats of intimidation and beating, you cannot be coerced by them nor can rent be realised from you in that way.

If our object can be achieved through peaceful means, it is no good engaging in a fight for it. But, if no settlement is arrived at, then, we laws and asks us to abide by them. If we refuse to obey the laws there is the police, the army and the danda to force us to obey. The present rule is the rule of might, of the cannon and the gun. But the rule of Swaraj will be the rule of people carried on according to their wishes. It will be a panchayati raj and will not be carried on by means of the lathi. There can be two methods of governing a country—one by means of lathi as at present, and the other by means of panchayat under which a lathi can never be used. The present lathi raj will not continue long. There can be no other alternative to make us yield than to use force because the government cannot make us understand a thing as it is itself at fault. Sometimes attempts are made on behalf of the government to deceive us. We have now to decide about the setting up of panchayati raj which will be carried on according to the counsels of the people and in which the panchas will be elected by the people themselves. The public will have a right to dismiss any panch who makes mistakes. At present no one has the right to question a big officer who behaves like a monarch but if we defy him, the police and the army are ready to use force against us. It was to resist such force that this big fight was started. Our power has now greatly increased as is evident from the fact that we have been able to unnerve the spirit of a great and powerful nation like the English with all its army and the police. It is not an easy thing to accomplish. As a result of this the government had to seek a truce.

We have now pledged to emancipate ourselves. What can the government do when the people cannot be frightened by the police or lathi blows and jails? We should not however think that we have defeated the government. If we think that then it will only be a delusion because there is much to be done. The English and the people of other countries have fully realized the power of Indians and they have begun to understand that Indians cannot be subdued now. We however cannot say when we will attain Swaraj as it depends upon our courage and perseverance.

It is ridiculous for the government to talk of a truce while resorting to coercion. It raises doubts in our minds. But we have to observe strictly the truce terms as Mahatma Gandhi has given his word to act according to them.

We want peace that will alleviate the sufferings of kisans; if not, then there is no other alternative for us than to fight. So we should be in readiness both for war and for peace. The Congress wants to do everything above board; if it will have to fight, it will inform the government beforehand as was done last year by Mahatma Gandhi before

13. The Significance of the Truce[1]

You promised me during my last visit about one and a half years ago, that you would take part in the civil disobedience movement and supply ten thousand volunteers. You all know how the movement was launched by Mahatma Gandhi and what events happened during the last year's struggle in your district as well as in other places. The struggle was started by violating the salt laws, and thousands of our brothers and sisters had to go to jail. Lathis and bullets were freely used at many places and many lost their lives. In spite of all this the movement could not be suppressed. This makes us realise that our strength has grown much. At one time all our leaders along with about sixty to seventy thousand of our people, including many women, were in jail. More were prepared to follow but the government did not like to arrest them. Thus we fought the war and in the wake of it a no rent campaign was launched in Gujarat with great force and vigour.

You all know that about two or three months ago, Mahatma Gandhi made a truce with the great Lat Sahib to stop the fight temporarily. He held then that a real truce could be effected when some final decision was arrived at. It is useless to hold peace parleys when coercion to realise rent is being adopted in a greater degree. This is far from Swaraj. The Congress has suspended the struggle and made a truce at the request of the government. It does not matter. We do not like to fight as nobody would like to send his brother and sister to jail or have them beaten. But when a country is overtaken by misery, the people are compelled to alleviate it by liberating themselves from the chains of slavery and thus save themselves from ruin. And that was why the Congress, about one and a half years ago, resolved on the attainment of complete independence. The kisans cannot be relieved of their affliction and misery unless Swaraj is attained. The real meaning of Swaraj is to save the kisans from their present plight of being harshly dealt with by zamindars and police who extract work from them as if they were their masters.

In the present system of government the kisans are not consulted in setting up legislatures. What the government does is that it frames laws and asks us to abide by them. If we refuse to obey the laws there is the police, the army and the danda to force us to obey. The present rule is the rule of might, of the cannon and the gun. But the rule of Swaraj will be the rule of people carried on according to their wishes. It will be a panchayati raj and will not be carried on by means of the lathi. There can be two methods of governing a country—one by means of lathi as at present, and the other by means of panchayat under which a lathi can never be used. The present lathi raj will not continue long. There can be no other alternative to make us yield than to use force because the government cannot make us understand a thing as it is itself at fault. Sometimes attempts are made on behalf of the government to deceive us. We have now to decide about the setting up of panchayati raj which will be carried on according to the counsels of the people and in which the panchas will be elected by the people themselves. The public will have a right to dismiss any panch who makes mistakes. At present no one has the right to question a big officer who behaves like a monarch but if we defy him, the police and the army are ready to use force against us. It was to resist such force that this big fight was started. Our power has now greatly increased as is evident from the fact that we have been able to unnerve the spirit of a great and powerful nation like the English with all its army and the police. It is not an easy thing to accomplish. As a result of this the government had to seek a truce.

1 Home Department (Political) File No 33/24/1931. National Archives of India This is based on a report of the C I D. of the speech delivered in Hindi at the kisans' gathering at Lalganj in Rae Bareli district on 25 June 1931.

We have now pledged to emancipate ourselves. What can the government do when the people cannot be frightened by the police or lathi blows and jails? We should not however think that we have defeated the government. If we think that then it will only be a delusion because there is much to be done. The English and the people of other countries have fully realized the power of Indians and they have begun to understand that Indians cannot be subdued now. We however cannot say when we will attain Swaraj as it depends upon our courage and perseverance.

It is ridiculous for the government to talk of a truce while resorting to coercion. It raises doubts in our minds. But we have to observe strictly the truce terms as Mahatma Gandhi has given his word to act according to them.

We want peace that will alleviate the sufferings of Kisans; if not, then there is no other alternative for us than to fight. So we should be in readiness both for war and for peace. The Congress wants to do everything above board; if it will have to fight, it will inform the government beforehand as was done last year by Mahatma Gandhi before launching the movement. The Congress will not do anything surreptitiously.

We have tried our best to observe the truce but the government has not. I appeal to you to organize yourselves; without that we can achieve nothing. Mahatma Gandhi is respected for the sole reason that he commands the following of a majority.

I have been informed that coercive methods are being adopted by the zamindars to realise rent and hundreds of kisans are being proceeded against under Section 107 in your district. I have also been told that zamindars are oppressing the kisans with the help of the police. During his conversation with the Viceroy Mahatma Gandhi had clearly said that he would stop the no-rent campaign and help the government if more rent was not realised by force and adequate remissions were given to the tenants. We also tried to bring about some agreement between the zamindars, the kisans and the government, but in vain. Mahatma Gandhi in his manifesto advised the kisans to pay their rent at the rate of 8 annas, more or less according to their capacity, and take receipt for full payment. He also advised them that if the zamindars did not give them full payment receipts, they should deposit that money in a certain bank to avoid charges being made later on against them for non-payment of rent.

But the government has remitted only 2 annas in a rupee which is inadequate. Judicial cases now proceeding against the kisans are nothing but an attempt to harass and frighten you and the Congress workers. The government now helps the zamindars in violation of the truce terms Do not be afraid of these coercive methods and judicial cases but suffer them patiently and courageously, otherwise the zamindars and the police will use more force and take from you all that you have. On the attainment of Swaraj every possible attempt will be made to compensate your losses. You should not also run away from your villages on the arrival of the zamindar and the police, leaving a few behind to be tortured and beaten; but all of you should assemble at one place and ask the zamindar and the police what they want. If they beat you, suffer it patiently without even raising your hand, by offering a united front you will be able to face them better. You may defend yourselves in the court but you should not expect any justice from the court where dishonesty has the upper hand. I would ask you not to purchase the land of any ejected tenant and not to pay a single pie to the zamindars who use coercion in the realization of rent unless they apologize for it. On hearing the news of coercion, I have toured the district and now I will mention at the meeting of the Congress Working Committee all that I have gathered from your complaints.

I also advise you to organize a branch of the Hindustani Seva Dal in your district. I am sorry to hear of the death of Kadir Khan, a political prisoner who died in jail when a wall fell upon him. Fat-salaried officers who alone are responsible for such mishaps are generally very incompetent and unfit for work. I would not like to keep them even as my clerks.

I deplore the undesirable dissensions among the Congress at Lalganj which should be ended at once. An enquiry committee will soon visit the district to settle these affairs. I wish to see a perfect harmony and organisation among our people.

14. No Compromise on Swaraj[1]

Brothers, the first request is that no volunteer should utter a word. Whether the audience is sitting or standing the volunteers must sit. I have come to your city after about three months, and during these three months I have moved about a lot, and have gone abroad as well. I toured Ceylon. Wherever I went, I saw the effects of our last campaign.

We know what we did last year, how we faced a well established government; and the impression we have made on the people of other countries can be seen if one goes abroad. One finds Indians, who were once considered as slaves coming from a slave country, being respected now. It is so because they now know how bravely we have fought for the freedom of India, and how out fight has now grown stronger. And you know it well, that no power in India can stop us from attaining Swaraj. Hence we are respected everywhere. Wherever we go, we carry the aspirations of India with us.

It is said that we did our best last year. But last year is now over and another year has started. What we have to do this year is a question to be considered. You know how the kisans are being treated in the districts of Oudh and in Allahabad and elsewhere, indeed throughout the province. Last year we started a no-rent campaign and in spite of the promulgation of as many as ten or eleven ordinances we succeeded in it. The ordinances only strengthened our position and we made further progress in our struggle. If the no rent campaign was stopped, it was done so by us at the time of the truce. Since then we have done our best to keep the peace. We have tried to effect a compromise between zamindars and tenants as we do not want a fight at this time. We do not seek to fight and to compromise simultaneously. This may be the way of the government. We have shown that we are really able to fight, and when there is a necessity we shall show it again. If there is any promise made on our behalf, we shall honour it.

1 Home Department (Political) File No. 247 of 1931, National Archives of India. This is based on the C I D. report of the speech delivered in Hindi at the kisans' meeting in Lucknow on 26 June 1931.

We have tried for a compromise among the zamindars, taluqdars and tenants. Such a compromise would have been the best thing. We approached high officials although we never liked it. We went to see the Governor at Naini Tal, had a talk with him; with arguments, we tried to effect a compromise, but with what result? In some districts, taluqdars, government servants and specially the police are confronting the kisans with their full vigour. They beat them, and Section 107 proceedings are specially resorted to against them. Securities are demanded because you have unfurled the flag or you have met in committee. I know English, but I do not follow the meaning of the word "committee". Again you are charged that you have threatened the zamindar's men or that, you are concerned with the boycott and non-payment of taxes or stop others from paying rent. So hundreds of notices under Section 107 are being served in every district. It means clearly that the government want to unite the zamindars and taluqdars to overpower the kisans, as well as weaken the Congress. They know that the kisans are the real power who will fight. Hence they want to weaken the kisans during the truce period. This is a false whim, this is a dream, and the world will see through it shortly. The treatment meted out to the Congress last year, the mar pit and so on, are well known to us. When we settled the truce in March, I can say that we were more powerful than what we were when we launched the campaign. If we effected a compromise, it was from the position of strength. We did not do this because we had grown weaker. I am sure that had we continued the fight the results would have been in our favour. When the government could not weaken us last year in spite of using its full force it is mere wishful thinking that they will weaken us now by merely serving notices under Section 107 to the kisans and by beating them. You will shortly see the result of all this.

I wish to say one thing in this city of taluqdars. The world knows and you also know that India will soon be free. The taluqdars will soon have to decide which side they will join in this country. It appears to me that they have decided always to remain under the British Government, protected by British lathis, and their guns. Blessed be their decision! But then they will have to live across the seven oceans. It is impossible for anybody—whether he be a taluqdar, an Englishman or an Indian—to live in India, if he is against the Indians, or against us, or has troubled us, is rich or a government servant. We are now ready to compromise. We will allow Englishmen to live in India, but with honesty. We will not fight them. But nobody who has proved a traitor to the country can live here, although he be a taluqdar. I am just coming from Rae Bareli. Those who are torturing the kisans or beating them will have to stand trial in court. If it is proved that they had attacked their countrymen now under their protection with the guns of the enemy then there can be nothing more shameful for an Indian. They can bear this but India will not bear to allow such cruel men to live unless they mend their ways. I know that our sangathan cannot be weakened by this.

I know that our country is now growing stronger, and we desire, and also will try our best, to settle all problems with a compromise. Mahatmaji may have to go to London for the sake of freedom, or anything else may happen. We must try for peace. As we wanted peace, we stopped the fight. So we also agreed that Mahatmaji should go on behalf of the Congress and the country. It is difficult to say whether he will go because if violations of truce continue, it will be wiser for Mahatmaji not to leave his country. We can acquire here the real power to attain Swaraj. When we get enough power there will be no necessity to go and argue in the Round Table Conference. Your power will be seen there, and it is hoped that your decision will be accepted because when such questions arise between two countries, no arguments are wanted, but only their powers are weighed. We are ready to try our best even now. We do not want a fight—who would like to involve his country in a troublesome war which may entirely ruin a number of families and the lives of lakhs of young men? The leader of our country cannot take up this responsibility of commencing the war unless and until he is compelled to do so for sufficient reasons. Therefore every effort has been made and will be made to make peace. But we are determined to attain Purna Swaraj and liberate our country. We have unfurled our national flag for a year and a half. The only lasting compromise will be that which will give us complete freedom. If this cannot be done, then it is no compromise, and we must start the fight. We shall march ahead with the national flag and will face any difficulty. We know the difficulties in our way, many of which we have already experienced. The difficulties experienced during the last struggle now seem to be light, because when a man starts a big fight, he does not mind trifling difficulties. He remembers only his goal and forgets everything else.

You have seen our young brothers and sisters coming forward merrily and receiving lathi blows. This happened in Bombay and at other places where the young cheerfully received lathi blows and bullets. What was behind all this courage? It was their fearless determination to face anything, what to say of the guns and lathis. Now we have trod this path enough and have gained sufficient experience and we still remember what we have learnt. Now we are fully convinced as to what we can do or what we cannot do. When the time comes we will be fully prepared. We shall try, if possible, not to fight without any sufficient reason. But it is not in our hands that there should not be a war. We will not break the peace terms from our side lest we be blamed for it. Compromise is a good thing. After all, we have to decide how far we should bear this treatment, mar pit. It is possible that a time may come when we may not be able to bear these things, so we have to keep ourselves ready for any eventuality. Compromise was effected when we were strong.

Kisans have to work hard and be prepared to receive abuses. They are also weak. Their troubles can be removed when the country attains Swaraj.

If you face death in this fight, or are sent to jail, remember that it is for freedom's sake. Remember, that you have to carry on this fight peacefully. If we use lathis we will be dealt with lathis. The government rules the country not according to our wishes but on directions from abroad. It is a government of lathi, police, thana and foreigners. We have to turn this out and establish Swaraj, in which there will be no question of might.

There has been enough picketing of foreign cloth in Lucknow. There have been enough arrests. I do not know what is wrong in picketing as under the truce the foreign cloth may be boycotted. Let us therefore continue picketing as we do not want any foreign cloth in our country. As we apply no force, it is possible that some foreign cloth dealers might get some customers. But let us confine ourselves to mere appeals. Anyhow, a time will come when no one in this country will purchase cloth from them, and they will be put to loss. It has already been decided that there cannot be compromise in the matter of foreign cloth. We cannot tolerate its sale and purchase. The people of Lucknow city should also be ready and keep their sangathan.

I heard that leaflets had been circulated which defamed our women. Do you know what was the greatest thing in last year's struggle? It was that women took part in it. The part played by them, their receiving blows, and going to jail attracted the attention of the whole world. While I was in jail I read with a sense of pride how our sisters took part in the movement; and how glad I was! Who now dares to issue such anonymous leaflets in Lucknow? Only mean fellows can issue such leaflets. You must treat such mean fellows with a like meanness, so that they may realize that those who act like them are not respected by anybody. We cannot tolerate our sisters being defamed.

15. To Deputy Commissioner, Rae Bareli[1]

Rae Bareli
June 26th, 1931

Dear Sir,[2]
I am credibly informed that a certain letter, a copy of which I enclose, has been issued by you to the taluqdars of Rae Bareli district.[3] As this letter suggests a definite policy on behalf of the district authorities in regard to the agrarian situation, I shall be glad to know from you if the copy I am enclosing is a correct one.

Since my arrival here yesterday I have met large numbers of people who have received notices under Sec. 107 Cr.P.C. I am told that several hundred persons have probably been served with these notices, but the information supplied to me might be exaggerated. I would be obliged if you could kindly send me the correct figure.

Many of these notices under Sec. 107 that I have seen state, among the reasons for requiring security, that the national flag was hoisted and a "committee" took place. It is not clear what is meant by the

1 A I C C. File No G 40 (KW) (III)/1931, p 205, N M M L.
2 S S L. Dar
3 The deputy commissioner of Rae Bareli in his letter of 6 June 1931 had asked the taluqdars to report to the authorities the objectionable activities of the Congress and kisan sabhas and help the police to prosecute the agitators word "committee". May I know if it is the view of the district authorities that the hoisting of the national flag, or the formation of a panchayat or the holding of a public meeting are offences which must be prevented by means of Section 107 Cr.P.C.?

An early answer addressed to Swaraj Bhawan, Allahabad will be appreciated.[4]

Yours truly,
Jawaharlal Nehru

4. On 26 June 1931 the deputy commissioner replied that he had written the letter of 9 June 1931 to only three or four landlords seeking their help to prosecute law breakers.

16. To Chief Secretary, U.P. Government[1]

27.6.1931

Dear Kunwar Jagdish Prasad,

Thank you for your acknowledgement of the 22nd June. I was glad to learn at Rae Bareli day before yesterday that the notices under Sec. 144 Cr. P.C, a copy of which I sent you with my last letter, had been withdrawn.

I am enclosing a copy of a letter which I am credibly informed was sent by the deputy commissioner of Rae Bareli to the taluqdars of the district. In order to make sure that the letter is quite genuine I have sent a copy to Mr. S. S. L. Dar. So far I have not had his reply.

This letter of Mr. Dar appears to be an invitation to all taluqdars to cooperate with government in a general campaign against the Congress, kisan sabhas and panchayats. The campaign itself is obvious enough as hundreds of people in the district are being proceeded against under Sec. 107 Cr. P.C. and sometimes other sections. The reasons for demanding security usually include the hoisting of the national flag and the holding of a "committee". What is meant by the word "committee" I do not know. It may mean a panchayat or a meeting. In either event I shall be glad to know if it is the view of government that the hoisting of the national flag or the constitution of a panchayat or the holding of a meeting are to be put down and are reasons for the demand of security.

1. AICC. File No G-40 (KW)(m)/1931, pp 201 204, N.M.M.L.

In the Bara Banki district also, which I visited yesterday, I was informed that a very large number of persons had already been arrested and were being proceeded against. It appeared that every petty police official carried about with him blank forms which he could fill in at any moment and issue a notice under Section 144 Cr. P.C. I presume that in Bara Banki also, and perhaps in some other districts, a general campaign like that in Rae Bareli is being carried on.

I should like to write to you perfectly frankly on the subject. Indeed I should have liked to meet you and discuss it fully so that at any rate we might understand, if not appreciate, each other's viewpoints. Many of us are placed in a terrible predicament by recent happenings. It may be that your government has not approved of some of our activities, but we have tried our level best to carry out the terms of the provisional settlement between the government and the Congress At the same time we have tried to help the kisans because we felt that they were the greatest sufferers on account of the agrarian distress. Often it was difficult to reconcile the two viewpoints, but we tried our best to do so, and it seemed to us at first that the attitude of the government, though critical and a little difficult, was not entirely unfriendly to the tenantry and there was some desire to cooperate with us. We had to face local difficulties with local officials but we hoped that these difficulties would be surmounted if the provincial government proved helpful.

I was away for two months. On my return I found a different atmosphere. There appeared to be a general campaign in progress—a campaign in which the government or its district officials had joined hands with the big zamindars to crush the tenant and to break up the Congress organisation in the rural areas. The zamindar's men did most of the dirty work but the lead seemed to come from the government officials. Some of the accounts that have come to us—notably from the Balrampur Estate in Gonda and from Unao—make one's hair stand on end. Of the neighbouring district of Bahraich and its deputy commissioner we have had strange tales. In Muttra a dead set seems to have been made on Congress workers. A case from Unao has been reported in Young India—I enclose a cutting. I need not add to the list here for then this letter would become intolerably long.

You can well imagine what effect all these accounts of atrocities have on our minds. But even more disconcerting is the belief that the government is deliberately not playing us fair. The reaction of

2 On 30 May 1931, Pipri in Unao district was raided by the zamindar of the village and his men for collection of rent They beat the tenants, insulted the women, snatched away their ornaments and seized personal belongings each one of us to this belief varies according to his or her temperament. But in every case the reaction is marked. Soon the Working Committee of the Congress will meet and will consider the U.P. situation. It may decide to issue definite directions in the matter. Before that happens it would have been well if we knew the policy of government. Perhaps we may be wrong in misjudging it or in imagining that it is deliberately not playing the game with us. If this impression could be removed from our minds it would be a relief and it would make it easier for us to fashion our policy so that peace may result from it. You will no doubt appreciate that it is impossible for us to desert our colleagues, and specially our helpless kisan colleagues in their hour of trial and need.

I shall be thankful to you if you could kindly let me have early reply.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

17. To Chief Secretary, U.P. Government[1]

Allahabad
27.6.31

Dear Kunwar Jagdish Prasad,

I have already sent you a long letter today. But I am troubling you again as I wish to add to it. I have been in communication with Gandhiji in regard to the U.P. agrarian situation and its off-shoots. Our communications have been intermittent, owing I suppose to censorship regulations. Gandhiji, like most of us, is troubled by recent developments here and he feels that perhaps it might help matters if there was a personal talk and our position was laid before the U.P. Government before the Working Committee meets. He has suggested to me therefore that I should seek an interview with Sir Malcolm Hailey. I will gladly do so and I shall be obliged if you could kindly let me know if it is possible to arrange an interview in the course of the next few days. The Working Committee meets in Bombay on the 7th July and I shall have to leave Allahabad on the 6th July morning for Bombay. I am afraid there is very little time and and it is hardly fair on my part to attempt to rush an interview in this manner. But if it is at all possible, I shall be glad. Could you kindly send me a telegram?[2]

1. A I C C. File No. G-40 (KW) (iii)/1931, p. 197, N M M.L.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

2. The Chief Secretary replied that the Governor was not free till 6 July 1931 and the commissioners of Lucknow and Fyzabad could be contacted on the subject.

18. To Secretary, U.P.P.C.C.[1]

June 27, 1931

Dear Sir,
I have had occasion recently to visit Rae Bareli and Bara Banki districts and acquaint myself with the agrarian situation there. In Allahabad, Muttra, Bahraich, Gonda, Unao and Gorakhpur, as you no doubt know, the situation is also bad. A meeting of the Working Committee will take place very soon and I propose to place before them the facts relating to the U.P. agrarian situation and to take their advice on it. It will help me greatly if you would kindly prepare and send me at a very early date a note on this situation dealing particularly with:

(1) Remissions of revenue to zamindars and consequent remissions of rent to tenants.
(2) Effect of such remissions in the various districts and on various kinds of tenants.
(3) Coercive methods adopted by government to collect revenue.
(4) Coercive methods adopted by zamindars to collect rent.
(5) Action taken by government to help the zamindars to collect rent forcibly.
(6) Instances of cruelty, beating and destruction by agents of zamindars or by police.
(7) Action taken by government officials against Congress workers and volunteers and panchayats and specially:
   i) Notices under Sec. 107 Cr.P.C.—number, nature etc.
   ii) Notices under Sec. 144 Cr.P.C.

1. A I C.C. File No 63/1931, pp. 93 95, N.M.M.L.

iii) Arrests and proceedings against Congress workers or kisans.
iv) Action against national flag. Orders preventing outsiders from entering a village or a particular area.

As I need this note urgently please prepare it from the materials you possess already. Do not ask afresh for facts from the districts for the purpose of this note. Please also give facts in the note, which are true to the best of your information.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

19. To Mahatma Gandhi[1]

Allahabad
27.6.31

My dear Bapu,
I have written several letters to you. Some have been acknowledged, others may or may not have reached. I have decided to follow your advice and to seek an interview with the Governor. The enclosed copies of letters will speak for themselves.

Yours affly,
Jawaharlal

1 AICC File No 4/1931 (Pt. II), p 131, NMML.

20. To Deputy Commissioner, Rae Bareli[1]

June 28th, 1931

Dear Sir,
I am obliged to you for your letter of the 27th June. In my letter of the 26th I drew your attention to a large number of notices under Sec. 107 Cr P.C. and requested you to let me know how many such notices had been issued and what the policy of the government was in regard to panchayats, kisan meetings and hoisting of the national flag. May I have a reply to this?

1 AICC File No G-40(KW)(ii)/1931, p 195, NMML.

Yours truly,
Jawaharlal Nehru

21. To Deputy Commissioner, Rae Bareli[1]

July 1st, 1931

Dear Sir,
I am in receipt of your letter of the 30th June for which I thank you. I am sorry that you are unable to supply me with accurate figures regarding the issue of notices under Sec. 107 Cr.P.C. You will agree with me that there can be two opinions as to what the situation requires. As the figures supplied to me appeared to be excessive, I thought perhaps you could correct them and moderate them. Opinions may differ but facts are usually solid enough. I had hoped that such facts might be placed within my knowledge so that I may not be led away by vague information.

Yours truly,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. AICC File No G-40/(KW)(III)/1931, p 191, N.M.M.L.

22. To T.A.K. Sherwani[1]

July 2nd, 1931

My dear Tasadduq,
I do not know where you are. I have been waiting to have some news of you for some days past. I feel that the provincial committee must function at present continuously and must keep all eyes open. We are going inevitably to a crisis and we must be prepared for all contingencies. That was why I suggested a meeting of the Council on the 27th but unfortunately this could not be held. I hope that you will convene a meeting soon.

1. AICC. File No 63/1931, p. 89, N.M.M.L.

I am going to Bombay on the 6th and will probably return after a week. If the Council meeting is held on the 15th it will be convenient for me. But do not mind me. What is important is to hold the meeting and decide about many pending matters. Whether I am present or not is immaterial.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

23. On His Speech at Lucknow[1]

Sir,—A brief report of a speech delivered by me in Lucknow on the 26th June seems to have attracted a measure of attention.[2] The report did me no justice and conveyed a wrong impression of what I said. My views on the zamindari system are well known. Much as I love many taluqdars and zamindars I do not love the system under which they flourish. Indeed, the course of recent economic events has made it absolutely clear that the present land system in the United Provinces cannot endure and is breaking down through force of circumstances. A state which attempts to bolster up this system in the face of hard facts will itself ultimately share in its downfall. Therefore, everyone, whether he is a taluqdar or a tenant or is a part of the machinery of the state, must address himself to the problem of evolving a new and more stable order which would function harmoniously and bring well-being to as large a number of persons as possible. Such a change might be brought about with a minimum of disturbance and loss if there was some cooperation in the various elements; or it might entail a considerable upsetting of everything and consequent loss, if there was no such cooperation. No one, I hope—and certainly I do not—desire to cause needless loss to any individual or group. But it must be borne in mind that the burden of the change must of necessity fall largely on the big zamindars and taluqdars. In this connection it should be remembered that the vast majority of the zamindars in these provinces are petty zamindars who are themselves sufferers under the present system and who have been hard hit by the fall in prices. In any change that may come they can hardly be expected to suffer more.

[1] Allahabad, 4 July 1931. Letter to the editor, The Leader, 6 July 1931.
[2] For government version of the speech see ante, item 14.

But in my Lucknow speech I did not enter into this question at all. I referred, if I remember rightly, to two matters. The first was the tendency of some taluqdars to combine with government officials as against their tenantry. I pointed out that in the future order of things, which was bound to come soon, they would have to live and deal with the tenantry without any outside interference and the vast rural population was certain to have considerable power in the state. It was, therefore, wise and desirable that they should gain the goodwill of these masses. If, however, they thought that their safety lay in ignoring and ill treating their tenantry and in taking shelter under the protecting wings of deputy commissioners, commissioners and the like, what would happen to them when the present order changed and their protectors crossed the seas to far off lands? It would be better for them then to accompany their aforetime protectors and cross the seas themselves so that they might continue to bask in the sunshine of their presence.

My second point referred to instances of tyranny and oppression on the part of some taluqdars and their agents. Some of the facts that have come to my notice have made my hair almost stand on end. Those who were guilty of such behaviour, I said, would have to answer for it before the nation. But I gladly admit that this applies to certain individuals only and not to all taluqdars.

Jawaharlal Nehru

24. On the Need for Unity and Nonviolence[1]

The recent conduct of the government in dealing with the peasants has led us to feel that the government is not carrying out the terms of the Gandhi-Irwin Pact. The reports of oppression and instances of alleged breaches of the truce by the government will be considered at the forthcoming meeting of the Working Committee as also the question as to what should be done on that account.

1. Speech at Wardha, 5 July 1931. From The Leader, 9 July 1931.

Nobody can say when we may have to resume the fight or when a settlement be effected. We should be prepared in every way. Meanwhile, the peasants should strengthen their sangathan. I fully sympathise with them in their distress, but I regret I cannot help them beyond giving them consolation as I have no power, for instance, to save them from litigation or from being sent to jail. The only thing I can do is that I can also go with them to jail. I appeal to the peasants for their cooperation in the struggle for Swaraj, as that alone can help them in the removal of their miseries.

I appeal to you to be strictly nonviolent. Satyagraha is an invincible weapon. If there are any excesses committed against you in the collection of rent, you should not reply with violence, nor should you run away leaving your oppressed brethren in distress. You should all face the situation bravely and calmly and remain strictly nonviolent, for violence will only increase your miseries, and will lead to arrests and criminal prosecutions.

I have heard that certain panchayats have been attempting to decide big civil and criminal cases, to impose fines and to advise social boycott. I would discourage such attempts as they may lead to undesirable consequences.

The government order on the remission of rent for the Allahabad district is so complicated that it is not easy for the tenants to understand as to how much and in what proportions the remissions have been made.[2]

Mahatma Gandhi had suggested that the occupancy tenants should pay upto 12 annas and non-occupancy tenants, upto 8 annas in the rupee, though that does not mean that they must carry on the directions at any cost, even by falling into debts and raising money by selling cattle and ploughs.[3] I emphasise the conditions suggested by Mahatma Gandhi that while making payments to the extent recommended by him, receipt should be demanded for the entire liability.

2. In May 1931 the U.P. Government had announced rent remission for Allahabad district amounting to Rs 9.5 lakhs, which was 17 per cent of the total rental demands of the peasants.
3. On 23 May 1931, after an interview with the Governor, Mahatma Gandhi suggested this formula in a manifesto to the kisans. He also advised them to be "thoroughly nonviolent in their attitude and conduct towards the zamindars."

25. To Chief Secretary, U.P. Government[1]

Delhi
July 23, 1931

Dear Kunwar Jagdish Prasad,
I have just returned from Simla and am staying here for a few hours on my way to Allahabad. In the course of the conversations at Simla H.E. the Viceroy expressed the opinion that it would be desirable for us to get into direct touch with H.E. the Governor of the U.P. in regard to the agrarian situation in the province. I am writing to you therefore to say that I shall gladly meet H.E. Malcolm Hailey, should he wish me to do so. I shall remain at Allahabad till I hear from you. On the 2nd of August I have to take part in the six monthly shraddha ceremony of my father and on the next day I shall be going to Bombay for meetings of the Congress Working Committee and All India Committee.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 AICC File No. 63/1931, p. 33, NMML.

26. The Congress and the Kisans[1]

The Congress stands for complete independence and the typical representative Indian is the man behind the plough. The Congress is a peasant organisation and it is the duty of the Congress to better the condition of the tenants. My personal view is that the landlord is a superfluity. That however is not the Congress view and the Congress is keen on bringing about an amicable settlement between the landlords and the tenants. The government does not want the Congress to butt in between the landlords and the tenants. I would ask why the government had not taken adequate and timely measures to avoid all this trouble between the landlords and the tenants before the Congress was forced to come in. There are allegations of brutal treatment of tenants and their womenfolk. No redress is forthcoming. Often, even reports of excesses by zamindars' men are not being recorded by the police and the thanas. What option have Congressmen but to come into the field and share the tenants' suffering? This indifference of the officials towards the serious allegations certainly led the Congressmen to think that the government are not observing the terms of the Delhi Agreement. Mahatma Gandhi and others have gone to Simla to talk matters over, but as yet no final settlement is forthcoming. Mahatma Gandhi is due to sail within another three weeks, but as yet it is uncertain whether he will go or not.

1 Speech at Lucknow, 23 July 1931. From The Hindu, 26 July 1931.

27. To Chief Secretary, U.P. Government[1]

Allahabad
July 29th, 1931

Dear Kunwar Jagdish Prasad,

I presume Pandit Govind Ballabh Pant has sent you the note you wanted.[2] I should like however to draw your attention again to the fact that the really important thing is immediate relief for the large body of tenants—relief from further collections and from coercive processes and repression. Gandhiji has been doubtful about going to England because he was greatly troubled at the continuation of these enforced collections and the consequent misery. He has felt that he could not go away till he felt assured that substantial relief had come and there was no chance of any further general repression of the tenantry or of Congressmen. It was with this object that he made various suggestions at Simla. I showed you a letter containing some of these. He urged that "all coercive processes be stayed, landlords being satisfied with such voluntary payments as are possible" and that the "thousands of tenants who have been evicted by reason of non-payment of rent should be immediately reinstated, subject to special cases being dealt with by a summary enquiry." He further urged that "notices and prosecutions against tenants and Congress workers issued in respect of the agrarian situation should be withdrawn." He had also suggested that a summary enquiry might be made as to the ability of tenants to pay the current dues, collections being suspended meanwhile. I suppose that the government will hardly care to have such an enquiry now and I personally think that it is not necessary. Even without such an enquiry it is fairly obvious that the tenants in the affected areas have been made to pay as much as and often more than they could pay. In most of the affected districts I think they must have paid from 9 annas to 12 annas or more. The season for collection is also past. It would be perfectly natural for the government now to suspend collections and stop all coercive processes. This would immediately relieve the tension and produce an atmosphere suitable for a dispassionate enquiry leading to future adjustments.

1. AICC File No. G-118/1930, pp. 79 81, NMML.
2. Jawaharlal and Govind Ballabh Pant had talks with the Chief Secretary on 28 July 1931. Jawaharlal had contended that the season for the collection of rent was over, that the tenants had already paid from 9 to 12 annas or more in the rupee and that, therefore, further collection should be suspended and coercive processes stopped. A note was sent the same day by Pant giving specific instances of ejectments and prosecutions.

There is just one point however I should like to remind you of. I spoke to you about the punitive tax in Soraon tahsil in Allahabad district. Large numbers of tenants are perturbed and upset because of this and they feel that they are being very unjustly treated. From many of the villages which are being punished in this way, not a single person is being proceeded against. In any case this method of punishing the general population of an area is rather curious, even though a few of the persons who are punished might be guilty. But when the punishment is entirely vicarious a Gilbertian element is introduced. As it happens some of the villages chosen have suffered last year from hailstorms and suchlike natural calamities. It is obvious that the tenants with the best will in the world can only pay a part of their rent. What are they to do when an additional 20% of the rent is demanded from them as a punitive tax? This is unfair both to the tenant and to the zamindar, who is bound to suffer. What is likely to happen is that the great majority of the tenants will not be able to pay and then their houses will be raided and their cattle and goods and chattels will be attached, and the last state of everybody—tenant, zamindar and even the State—will be worse than the first. I do hope that this will be avoided.

I shall be obliged if you could kindly let us have rent and revenue figures for 1901, 1915-16, and for the current year. I do not want to give your office people any additional trouble. I am mentioning these particular years as I understand that these figures have been prepared by the government. Would it be pos[illegible] for us to have a copy of the instructions issued by the government to district officers regarding the calculation of remissions of current dues? I should also greatly value figures of ejectments. If it is possible for you to send all this information, or any part of it, kindly have it sent direct to Pandit Govind Ballabh Pant, Congress Office, Lucknow. I shall be going to Bombay rather early.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

28. Interview to the Press[1]

I cannot say anything about my conversations with the Chief Secretary. We are watching the situation very closely and anxiously. If it shows signs of immediate improvement, the present tension may grow a little less, but the situation is such that the policy of mere watching and hoping is likely to lead to worse consequences. I am not prepared to say that it is almost settled that Gandhiji is not going to London and that a "no rent" campaign will soon be started from Bardoli. Such an opinion might have been formed from my telling people generally that they should be prepared for the revival of hostilities any moment.

1 Allahabad, 29 July 1931 From The Hindu, 30 July 1931.

29. To Chief Secretary, U.P. Government[1]

July 30, 1931

Dear Kunwar Jagdish Prasad,
I enclose copy of an order under Sec. 144 Cr. P.C. issued by the district magistrate of Fyzabad on the 21st of July. This order, I understand, has been served on three Congress workers in Akbarpur tahsil. I had hoped that such orders would not now be passed, but it appears that there has not been much change. The order clearly means that Congressmen should do nothing in regard to the agrarian situation.

1. A.I.C.C. File No G 118/1930, p. 75, N.M.M.L.

I understand that a case under Sec. 392 is proceeding against 4 Congress workers for picketing liquor shops at Ajodhya. In Tanda tahsil of Fyzabad district Barkat Ali is undergoing imprisonment for a year under Sec. 108 Cr P.C.[2]

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

2. Then secretary of the Congress committee of Rajey Sultanpur in Fyzabad district, was arrested for making an allegedly seditious speech.

30. To Chief Secretary, U.P. Government[1]

Allahabad
July 31st, 1931

Dear Kunwar Jagdish Prasad,

I am sorry to trouble you with frequent letters but very disturbing information is coming to me and I feel that I must pass it on to you. It appears that coercive processes both against tenants and zamindars are still being issued and Congressmen and their sympathisers are being specially penalised. Fresh ejectments continue and attempts are being made to get new tenants to take the holdings. I can send you, if you so desire, a long list of instances of great hardship being caused to kisans by these coercive processes, although they have paid a substantial part of their rent and are prepared to pay more if given a little time. I shall only mention here some typical instances:

1 Mohamad Shakir—zamindar of Chail. Revenue demand over Rs. 900. In past years usually paid up full sum by 30th September. Had paid about half when the S.D.O., Mr. Rahman Baksh Qadri, visited the village on 14th July and threatened him with all manner of penalties because a few days earlier he had rented a small house of his to the tahsil Congress committee for their office. Other zamindars who had paid much less and in some cases nothing till then, were given time, but Mohamad Shakir was given no time although he said he would pay full demand by usual date, September 30th. His property had been previously attached. The very next day—July 15th—a notice of auction of his moveable and immoveable property including furniture, vessels etc. was issued and July 30th was fixed for the auction. Subsequently Mohamad Shakir paid some more sums. The balance due from him now is Rs. 163. No auction was actually held on July 30th and it is not known what further steps are going to be taken.

1 AICC File No G-40(KW)(ii)/1931, pp 165 167, NMML

In Chail there have been substantial remissions in some villages for local calamities etc. These remissions have meant considerable loss to the zamindars and Mohamad Shakir has had to borrow to pay what he has paid. It is difficult to borrow more.

2 Jagannath, occupancy tenant of village Gaura, Pargana Karari, tahsil Manjhanpur. Has just been ejected although he offered the full sum of over Rs. 80 having sold and mortgaged his property to the bania for Rs. 60. The tahsildar refused to accept his money and ejected him. He had actually ploughed and sown his fields and some crops were coming up.

3. Bhaila village, Manjhanpur tahsil. Many tenants have paid a substantial part of rent, usually about -/8/- but proceedings for ejectment are being taken against them. Some tenants are very poor and patently incapable of paymg up. They are also being proceeded against.

4. In Bakarganj village, tahsil Manjhanpur, owing to local calamities, kisans in a very bad state. Paid part of rent after selling cattle etc. Incapable of paying more. Many have therefore surrendered their holdings. These lands are being given by the zamindars to other kisans from distant villages.

5. Janka village, tahsil Chail. Hailstorm on 25th February 1931 doing great damage. Applied for remission on this account. In the remission slips issued by patwari this was included but later kanungo said this was a mistake and attempts are being made to realise this part of the rent too.

6. Jagdishpur, tahsil Soraon—Zamindar claims arrears for 2 years—kisans say that they paid up last two years' rent but got no receipt for it. They are prepared to prove this if given the chance. Suit filed for arrears and attachment likely to be made in a day or two.

7. Phulpur tahsil—Matabhik Singh, vice-president, tahsil Congress committee—Rs. 300 security demanded under Sec. 107 Cr.P.C. because he is alleged to have delivered a speech inciting kisans against zamindars. As a matter of fact he did not speak at all at the meeting in question. His case is coming up on August 7th.

8. Handia tahsil—Fresh notices issued under Sec. 107 Cr.P.C. against several Congress workers.

These are some of the cases that came to my notice today. If this kind of thing is continuing in Allahabad where there are many Congress workers, it can be imagined what is happening in out of the way districts. There are at present many ejectment cases pending and those who have already been ejected are not getting back their lands as I had hoped they would. Unless they are reinstated and the coercive processes stop I am afraid there will be no improvement in the situation.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

31. To Chief Secretary, U.P. Government[1]

Allahabad
August 1st, 1931

Dear Kunwar Jagdish Prasad,
I am again troubling you with a letter on the eve of my departure for Bombay.

I am enclosing some papers. One of them is a copy of a confidential G.O. which has been sent to me by the chairman of a municipal board. This order seems to me quite extraordinary under the existing circumstances. The desire of the government to pursue our young workers, even to the extent of preventing their employment in municipal and district boards, is certainly not in keeping with the truce. I do not wish to say anything more about it and will leave it to you to consider it for yourself

The other papers relate to proceedings against a mukhtar of Ballia.[2] The judgment in his case is enclosed. I am not sending you the evidence but this is still more illuminating and shows how cases have been built up out of nothing at all against our people. But even taking the findings in the judgment it is really amazing that a sentence of two years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 500 was inflicted. On top of that comes the High Court order threatening suspension or dismissal. What the High Court will do I do not know. It may not take further action, but even so this persecution of Congressmen is very far from what we expected at the time of the Delhi Settlement.

1. AICC File No. G-40(KW)(ii)/1931, pp. 177-179, NMML.
2. He was convicted on a charge that his activities in the village "seriously affects its peace"

You will remember that when Pandit Govind Ballabh Pant and I saw you in Lucknow we mentioned the Kalyanpur case. This case was decided today and in spite of the fact that the jury gave a verdict of not guilty the judge sentenced the lot—nearly 30 men—to six months each and a fine of Rs. 50. I am afraid it is a little difficult for me to view this case very calmly. I would beg of you to look through the record of the case yourself. Even on the record, which is far from the truth, there is nothing in the case. It is notorious that the whole case was a trumped up affair. There is no proof of violence on the side of the tenants and the prosecution evidence collapsed on an x-ray examination. Yet there was firing and several people were hit and one of our boys nearly died. Having faced and suffered from the firing all of these persons have to go to jail now. One of them was taken away from the Congress hospital this evening. The idea of imposing a fine of Rs. 50 each on a large number of poor tenants in this period of acute distress would be humorous if it was not tragic. It is said that attachments will be issued immediately.

This letter is long enough. It would become intolerably long if I gave details of happenings in Muttra district. There has been no agrarian trouble there of the kind some other districts have experienced. But in spite of this, case after case has been started against Congress workers, specially in Bijhari[3] and Nohjhil[4] circles and in village Chaumuha and the police have excelled themselves in their powers of invention. Apart from cases, actual raids and assaults have taken place. Complaints have been filed by the Congressmen concerned against the police, but they have been dismissed. There can be only one explanation of all this—that in the district of Muttra a determined and persistent attack is being made against the Congress by the local officers. I wish, if you had the time, you would see the record of some of these cases. Indeed I would welcome your asking any impartial person to examine these records.

The kind of evidence that is being given in these cases against Congressmen is well exemplified by the instance I gave you in the course

3 On 20 May 1931 the police raided the houses of Congress volunteers in Bijhari when most of them were away at Mathura to attend a political conference of our conversation. I mentioned the Bachchrawan[5] (Rae Bareli) case in which the police witnesses stated that in the course of my speech there I called upon the tenants to take their lathis and attack and loot the zamindars.

4 The police dispersed a public meeting held at Nohjhil on 26 June by force and arrested some Congressmen.

All this is happening now. These are not instances of even a month ago. Please consider them from our viewpoint and you will get some idea of how we must feel. I am going to Bombay and I shall place all these facts before Mr. Gandhi.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

5. Thakur Bhagwan Baksh Singh, zamindar of Rampur and vice president of Maharajgunj tahsil Congress in Rae Bareli district, had presided over the meeting addressed by Jawaharlal at Bachchrawan on 26 July 1931 and treated the audience as his guests. The district officials in reprisal arrested the zamindar for arrears of revenue though the amount involved was small.

32. Interview to the Press[1]

Question—Are you going to attend the meeting of the Working Committee with the same 'unfavourable' impression about the agrarian situation in the United Provinces as the last meeting or do you possess some material to report improvement in the situation since the previous meeting?

Jawaharlal Nehru: So long as the British Government ruled India, my impression would always be unfavourable.

Q.—Do you find any change in the situation in these provinces?

JN: I do not find any change. The intensity of repression may be less but it is still fairly widespread.

1 Allahabad, 2 August 1931 From The Leader, 5 August 1931.

33. Telegram to Mahatma Gandhi[1]

Bombay
15 August 31

U. P. Government invited Govindballabh Pant sit on Agrarian Committee which considering future revenue policy. I consider under present circumstances his joining inadvisable. Please wire your opinion to Sherwani Elgin Road Allahabad.[2]

Jawaharlal

1. Gandhi Smarak Sangrahalaya, Serial No. 17430.
2. Mahatma Gandhi wired back, "Your wire. Think Govind Ballabh should join committee Have wired Sherwani accordingly." But Pant did not join the committee.

34. To A. Sahay[1]

20/8/31

Dear Comrade,[2]

. . . . As you must know we have again to face a grave crisis and a few days or weeks may see a restarting of the civil disobedience movement. Under these circumstances it is difficult to find time to do any writing work.[3]

With all good wishes,

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. AICC File No. A 5/1929-31, p. 1, NMML Extracts.
2. (b. 1898); worked in Japan for India's freedom, India's commissioner in Trinidad, 1950 53, and in Mauritius, 1953 54, Consul General of India, Hanoi, 1955 56 and ambassador in Thailand, 1956 60.
3. Sahay had requested Jawaharlal to write a preface to his pamphlet.

35. To Private Secretary to Viceroy[1]

Allahabad
September 1st, 1931

Dear Mr. Mieville,[2]
I thank you for your letter of the 28th August. I am grateful to His Excellency for his suggestion that I should go to him in case of need. I would not like to trouble him needlessly, but should any occasion arise when I feel that the difficulties we have to face may be removed by a reference to His Excellency, I shall not hesitate to take advantage of his kind offer. I certainly feel, and Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel and our other colleagues I am sure also feel, that we have to shoulder a heavy responsibility during Mr. Gandhi's absence.

I am troubled specially about the agrarian situation in the United Provinces and at the great distress of the peasantry. They have had to bear the brunt of the suffering caused by recent economic conditions and by an unfair and out of date land revenue system, and large numbers of them have been dispossessed of their lands. I do hope that the U.P. Government will see its way to restore their holdings to them and thus in some measure reduce their present distress. I am encouraged in the hope by His Excellency's kind thought in asking me to seek his help whenever I may have any difficulty.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 A.I.C.C. File No. G-7/1931, pp. 13-14, N.M.M.L.
2 E. C. Mieville (1896-1971); Private Secretary to the Viceroy of India 1931-36; Private Secretary to King George VI, 1937-45, returned to India in 1947 as member of Lord Mountbatten's staff.

36. To Chief Secretary, U.P. Government[1]

Allahabad
September 5th, 1931

Dear Kunwar Jagdish Prasad,
I thank you for your D.O. Nos. 1008-S and 1042-3 dated August 20th and 26th respectively, which I received on my return to Allahabad. I am grateful for the trouble you have taken to enquire into the various complaints I referred to you. In most of these cases the facts as stated by you differ materially from the facts related to us. It may be that a coloured version has reached us through the kisans or our workers. But it is equally possible that the version supplied to you, based on reports of petty police or revenue officials, is far from the truth. I do not know how we can arrive at the truth under these circumstances. Complaints made by us may be denied, but the denial brings little satisfaction when our information appears to us to be correct. In any event, wherever the truth may lie, the result is tangible and solid enough in the shape of prison for our colleagues or security proceedings or ejectments.

1 A.I.C.C. File No. G-40(KW)(iii)/1931, pp. 125-129, N.M.M.L.

The judgment in the case of Barkat Ali, copy of which you have kindly sent me, is interesting reading. An old colleague of ours, long a member of our provincial Congress committee, is referred to as a 'notorious Congress leader'. The meeting is then described. "The audience chiefly consisted of illiterate and fiery-tempered peasants who some 10 years ago divested the area by indiscriminate looting and other previous offences. In short 42 villages were looted completely and the peasants perpetrated all sorts of imaginable atrocities and crimes in this part of the district." The judicial balance and intelligence of the S.D.O. who wrote this judgment is worthy of attention and is an excellent example of the kind of thing we have to put up with. He refers to an audience at a public meeting as consisting of persons who ten years ago perpetrated various misdeeds and then his righteous indignation at these enormities runs away with him. It is a little difficult to appreciate what the events of a past decade have to do with a public meeting or a speech delivered at it. If these ancient matters were enquired into perhaps I could have given the S.D.O. some pertinent information which would have conflicted with his theory in regard to them. I happened to be present at the spot in 1920 within a day or two of the occurrences.[2] Perhaps you will remember that many hundreds of persons were arrested then and tried and convicted to long terms of imprisonment. I do not know if the S.D.O. imagines that these unfortunates, having served out their long sentences, have come out to give trouble again!

It is this outlook and prejudice, common enough in the cases we have to deal with, which vitiate the judgments and convictions. In Barkat Ali's case it appears from the judgment itself that he did not defend himself or cross examine any witness. He merely denied the correctness of the report of his speech. This attitude of the accused should ordinarily have made the judge the guardian of his interests. But it merely made the judge remark that "his general attitude throughout the proceedings has been of defiance of law and authority."

2. Some peasants of Fyzabad district looted the property of a taluqdar in Akbarpur under the instigation of a zamindar who had told them that Mahatma Gandhi wished them to do so.

If a judge is likely to go astray to this extent, it is reasonable to assume that the petty officials and policemen, on whose reports prosecutions are undertaken and statements made to higher officials, are often very far from the truth. You will not be surprised then at our not accepting their statements and preferring the versions of our own workers.

I enclose some notes supplied to me by the Allahabad District Congress Committee on a few of the cases referred to by you.[3] I realise that it serves little purpose to go on repeating the same thing when it is denied. But what else are we to do? In regard to the complaint about village Gamarhata, tahsil Phulpur, it is stated in your letter that the "karinda never tore up the receipt." As it happens the tenant has produced the torn receipt. It may be said that he has torn it himself. To that there can be no reply. But it is extraordinarily difficult to believe that any tenant will do so.

In the Sec. 107 Cr.P.C. case of Matabhik and others in Phulpur tahsil, two persons have been asked to give security for certain speeches they are said to have made. One of these—Kanhaiya Baksh Singh—did not speak at all at the meeting, except to say that it was late and the meeting should end.

I should like to draw your special attention to the complaint concerning village Bhaila in tahsil Manjhanpur. A great part of the rent was collected by the zamindar because of the efforts of the Congress workers. The zamindar had agreed to accept 8 annas from the statutory tenants and 12 annas from the occupancy tenants. Thereupon Congress workers helped in inducing the tenants to pay up and they had a measure of success. Some kisans here are wholly incapable of paying and we are prepared to show this to any one's satisfaction. In spite of all this a number of cases for arrears of rent were filed, most of these being for arrears of previous years. It is an extraordinary fact that, when the tenants are admittedly unable to meet the current demand in full, they should be compelled to pay arrears of past years. I do not know how it is possible to tolerate this. If the law allows it there must be something very wrong with the law. As there is so much dispute as to facts, I shall welcome an informal enquiry, at which we could also assist, in this particular instance at least.

3. They related to ejectments.

I think I have already written to you on a previous occasion about the Bachchrawan (Rae Bareli) case in which 8 persons have been jailed for not furnishing the security demanded. These persons were alleged to have uttered incitements to violence. I am told that the prosecution witnesses further said that I had also, during a visit to Bachchrawan, made similar statements. As I am quite sure that I said nothing of the kind, and I prefer to believe myself even as against the police witnesses, I am naturally led to the conclusion that the others who have been convicted were wrongly charged and convicted.

An interesting Sec. 107 case is now going on here. It is against Thakur Uday Bhan Singh and eleven others of Chata, tahsil Phulpur. The Thakur is a pious old man spending most of his time in puja but his crime apparently has been his presidentship of a circle Congress committee. The writer of the police report grows quite eloquent and refers to Thakur Uday Bhan Singh's activities as a Congressman and to his constant "dreams of Swaraj". To make assurance doubly sure he has added that the Thakur had set fire to some khalyan belonging to another —an allegation which is totally denied. Respectable men connected with the Congress are thus hauled up and harassed and have to face all manner of trumped up charges.

My letter has grown long although I have referred to a few recent instances. But important as they are, they sink into insignificance before the general question of ejectments. I have not received figures for these ejectments yet but in regard to Allahabad district, I think you told me that 5,000 ejectments had taken place. You further said that every effort would be made to give back the land to those who had been dispossessed. You suggested that this was bound to happen in the ordinary course and you asked us to allow matters to drift for a while. We have done so—we have anxiously searched for the effort. We have hoped almost against hope, but no improvement is visible. Indeed far from putting right the wrongs done, the process of ejectment continues.

I enclose lists giving some instances from Allahabad district. Even last month, in August, a large number of ejectments took place. They continue, in spite of assurances to the contrary, and in spite of the fact that the time for making collections is long past, and in spite of the acknowledged distress. Your advice to us to let matters drift and take their natural course—advice which Mr. Emerson also gave me specially in regard to tenants who had been technically dispossessed but were still in possession[4]—has resulted in criminal cases for trespass being brought against the tenants. Particulars in regard to 22 such rent cases in Allahabad are enclosed.

4. This refers to Jawaharlal's talks with the Home Secretary at Simla on 19 20 July 1931.

We were further told that if the dispossessed tenants paid up a fair amount they would get back their lands. Many cases have come to our knowledge where such amounts were paid or offered but the lands were not returned. A list of a few such cases from Allahabad district also is enclosed.

Our figures as regards Allahabad are very incomplete. Regarding other districts I have not received any detailed figures yet. But even the incomplete figures, you will agree, disclose a lamentable state of affairs. It must be remembered that in Allahabad most of the persons dispossessed are occupancy tenants and it is a hard thing to part with land which one's forefathers have held.

There is only one other instance I would like to bring to your notice. In Rae Bareli in two areas—in Arkha in Salon tahsil and in Surajkunda —hundreds of tenants surrendered their lands and are doing nothing. I understand that about 2700 bighas are lying fallow.

I would beg of you to let us know if the government proposes to take any action in regard to ejectments. Are they going to let matters drift and see these thousands of dispossessed tenants starve out? Action has been delayed long enough. May we presume that no further action in this respect is intended?

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

37. Statement to the Press[1]

I do not think there is any improvement, at any rate, in my province and also the Frontier province. The agrarian situation in the United Provinces continues to be bad.

The time for collection is long past, but coercive processes continue. In the district of Muttra during August over 2,000 processes have been issued and the cattle of the tenantry attached in large numbers.

1. Ahmedabad, 11 September 1931. From The Bombay Chronicle, 12 September 1931.

Prominent workers are being removed one after another under Section 108 Cr.P.C. The main trouble, however, is the ejectment of the tenants in large numbers. There could be no solution to the problem till this matter is attended to and relief is given. From other provinces also complaints about official interference with Congress activities continue to come.

38. How They Manage Things In Muttra District[1]

The district of Muttra in the U.P. has gained a measure of notoriety in recent months and it has found prominent mention in the charge-sheet against government framed by Gandhiji. The truce has been observed there by numerous arrests of Congress workers and by police raids on villages and assaults on villagers and Congress workers. The complaints in regard to Bijhari, Nohjhil and Rayah,[2] mentioned in the charge-sheet, were denied by the local government. The judgments in appeal in recent cases show clearly that the government's reply is wrong and the charges, in the main, correct. Congressmen convicted by the first court have been acquitted in appeal. In the Bijhari case the sessions judge has held that the sub-inspector of police, the amin and a zamindar colluded to bring false charges against the accused. In the Nohjhil judgment the judge says:

> "I cannot finish my judgment without observing that it is to be regretted that while the complainant and other Congressmen were holding a meeting some policemen, two of whom were Ghandi and Yusuf Ali, had surely assaulted one Ghure Lal, most probably under the very nose of the S.O. (Station Officer) of the police, Nohjhil. To order further enquiry in this case with respect to the injury received by Ghure Lal, who is not a party to this complaint, may give rise to complications. The names of two of his assailants out of four were not known and in these circumstances I think fit that Ghure Lal may, if he likes, take legal proceedings against his assailants."

1. Article published in Young India, 19 September 1931.
2. On 10 July 1931, a Congress volunteer was beaten with shoes by the police at Rayah and ordered to leave the village.

But the most revealing document is the judgment of another judge in the Kosi Kalan case. This case was made out to have arisen out of a communal quarrel between Hindus and Muslims. Over seventy accused, including most of the prominent merchants in the largest grain market of the district, were tried and the case lasted fifteen months. The judge, perhaps intentionally as the case was supposed to be a communal one, was a Christian. He has written a judgment running into 210 typed pages and has acquitted all the accused. He has held that it was not a communal affray at all and has discredited the attempts to drag in the Congress into it. "I may state at the outset," he says, "that a prosecution case so wretched as this it would be impossible to imagine." Perfectly innocent persons, who had themselves suffered from looting and had been seriously injured, he further says, were implicated "in a serious offence so that bail might not be granted to them and they might thus be prevented from bringing complaints." About a police officer, he says, "it is disgusting in the extreme to find a police officer in his position telling deliberate lies." Referring to a Congress meeting which the police prevented from being held by barbarous methods, the judge says, "the authorities could have prohibited the meeting if they so wanted and if it was attempted to be held in spite of the prohibition it could have been dispersed by a lathi charge. There was no need to prevent it by hooliganism." The police "first arrested everybody whom they wanted to arrest and after that the witness was brought to say that they had all taken part in the riot."

The police officers stated in evidence that they kept a list of Congressmen and of office-bearers of the Congress but the district magistrate refused to produce this list on the ground that it was a confidential document.

Witnesses for the defence were threatened by the police and were actually "prosecuted for alleged offences under Section 34 of the Police Act and other offences."

The sessions judge concludes by saying that a petty affray, which had been made into a communal riot, "and which the police could have easily prevented, has cost the public treasury probably not less than half a lakh of rupees, has wasted nearly a year of the valuable time of the court, has kept a large number of perfectly innocent individuals, many of whom had themselves suffered seriously at the hands of the qassabs, in jail for nearly 15 months and has probably ruined them and also possibly the largest grain market in the district."

The judge has further ordered the prosecution of five witnesses for perjury.

These few extracts from an able and exhaustive judgment will give some idea of this extraordinary case, extraordinary not because such things are unusual, but because it is seldom that they see the light of day in a judgment of a court. This judgment itself is a sufficient condemnation of the methods of the government and the police and a complete answer to the denials of government of the charges made against them.

But the lesson of this judgment has not gone home and the district authorities still continue to follow the even tenor of their ways. In spite of the great economic distress and in spite of the fact that the time for collections is long past, coercion processes, ejectments and attachments continue. Relief has been insistently asked for those who have already been dispossessed but instead of this relief fresh processes are being issued. As late as August a large number of notices for ejectment were issued and many were actually ejected. Exact figures are not available but it is believed that about 2,500 processes for ejectment have been issued. The attachment amins have been increased from 7 before March to 25 now in service to cope with this additional work.

September followed August but the activities of the revenue officials only increased and became even fiercer. It is stated that on the 9th September a large number of revenue officials, including a tahsildar, a naib tahsildar, amin, kanungo and a host of peons went to the village of Parkham, 17 miles from Muttra town, and to Jharwahi, nearby. The usual assaults and beatings were resorted to and people were made to take up the murga position—a posture which is quite a favourite device with the police and revenue officials in the United Provinces. People were made to do without food and even old men were not spared a beating and two of them (Ramchand and Balwant) fainted. At least one woman (named Mango) was maltreated. The cattle, carts and other belongings of the tenants were seized and sold on the spot to any bidder for any price that he was pleased to offer. The revenue force remained in these villages for four days.

On the 13th September when the secretary of the district Congress committee visited the village of Jharwahi for enquiry he found that all the tenants, numbering about 500, had disappeared and hidden themselves in the neighbouring jungles. The village was deserted and there was no one to be found there. It was only after it was known that it was not the police or revenue people but Congressmen who had come, that the terrified villagers came out and gave their statements. Soon after, however, they went back to their hiding places lest the wrath of the revenue peons might descend upon them.

Such is the way they manage things in Muttra district.

39. To Vallabhbhai Patel[1]

September 19th, 1931

My dear Vallabhbhai,
Thank you for your letter sending a copy of your letter to Emerson. Things are pretty bad here and beating and assaults continue. I think I shall write to the Chief Secretary again.

I have sent to Jairamdas a proof copy of our rejoinder, also an article on Muttra. I should like you to see both of them.

The U.P. Agrarian Report which will contain the rejoinder will be issued very soon.[2] You told me that there was no objection to this being issued. A copy of it will be sent to you tomorrow.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal

1 A.I.C.C. File No. G-7/1931, p. 21, N.M.M.L.
2. See Appendix XVII to the U.P. Congress Committee report—Agrarian Distress in the United Provinces, 1931.

40. To Sitla Sahai[1]

September 22nd, 1931

My dear Sitla Sahai,
I have received your long letters. I have no time to reply to them at present. I wish to say however that I do not quite understand the relations between your kisan unions and the Congress. Obviously your work should be done as Congress representative and there should be no conflict between kisan sabhas and the Congress. Rae Bareli matters have been referred to the president of the U.P.P.C.C. He will probably visit you in this connection.

1 A.I.C.C. File No. G-40(KW)(i)/1931 (Pt. II), p. 309, N.M.M.L.

I propose to spend a day in Rae Bareli on the 9th October. I hope to reach there by train from Lucknow at 9.55 a.m. and shall leave at night. Please inform Mahesh Narain[2] and arrange my programme in cooperation with him. This visit of mine is a short one but I cannot give more time then. I may come again later.

Your request for permission to start civil disobedience did not impress me. The instances you gave of breaches were all old ones. Also you did not indicate what kind of civil disobedience you wished to start. You must be more definite.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

2 (1896 1943), a Congressman of Rae Bareli district; imprisoned several times during the civil disobedience movements, president, Rae Bareli District Congress Committee, 1934.

41. To Rampal Singh[1]

September 23rd, 1931

Dear Raja Saheb,

I read your letter in this morning's Leader with great surprise. I have written in reply a letter to the Leader copy of which I enclose for your information.[2] I shall be glad if you will kindly send me a list of specific instances. It is hardly fair to the Congress for you to make vague charges without substantiating them. I can promise you that fullest enquiry will be made into every charge.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. A I C.C. File No. G-140/1931 (Pt. V), p 355, N M M L.
2. See next item.

42. Reply to Charges Against Congress[1]

Sir,

My attention has been drawn to the letter of Raja Rampal Singh appearing in your issue dated September 23rd. The Raja has been pleased to use strong language regarding the activities of the Congress and has not hesitated to refer to them as "mendacious" and "debasing" and as a "deliberate" misrepresentation of facts. He has referred to two specific examples in proof of these charges. One relates to the Bara Banki Congress Committee which is alleged to have made a claim which according to the Raja Saheb was a "misleading travesty of the facts." The other refers to a notice said to have been issued by Syt. Sitla Sahai in Rae Bareli.[2]

I have been unable to find out from the Raja's letter what the claim of the Bara Banki Committee was to which he has taken exception. I am therefore unable to say anything about it.

As for the second instance I had not previously seen the notice. Presumably a translation has been given. If such a notice was issued and the translation is correct I agree with the Raja Saheb that it conveys a wrong impression of what happened. I am sure that Mr. Sitla Sahai, if he issued the notice, must have been under misapprehension, and even if the facts were correct he should not have referred to the conversations which the Chief Secretary had with me. I am asking Mr. Sitla Sahai for the correct facts and if he has made any mistake he will be the first to express his regret for it.

I should like to make it clear however that so far as the government's Agrarian Committee was concerned the Congress had nothing to do with its appointment, and certainly my conversations with the Chief Secretary had no bearing whatever on it. I regret that any such impression should have been created in any person's mind. I regret particularly that private conversations should be referred to in a public notice.

I should like to ask the Raja Saheb however if this error of judgment or misapprehension, whatever it may have been, is a justification for the unworthy language he has used. The Congress is a mighty organisation known and respected the world over today, and it is greater than the vast number of men and women who are privileged to serve

1 23 September 1931. The Leader, 24 September 1931.

2 It was alleged that Sitla Sahai had, in a leaflet to Rae Bareli kisans, claimed that the official Rent and Revenue Committee was set up as a result of Jawaharlal's talks with the Chief Secretary.

it, and through it the nation. It is unbecoming of any one, whoever he or she may be, to speak lightly of it and to make vague and general charges against a very large body of devoted workers. The Raja Saheb has gone even a step further and with the flimsy excuse of a little notice has sought to damn the Congress. Instead of cursing with bell, book and candle, if he will take the trouble to give specific instances where Congressmen have, in his opinion, erred, I promise him that an open enquiry will be made in every one of them and he will be invited to be present at it. When it comes to writing down hard facts and not vague generalisations, he will probably find, if I may venture to prophesy, that there is little to write, and that he was suffering from a grave delusion in regard to the Congress and Congressmen, and that the reports he had heard from his underlings were unreliable and such as no "educated publicist" ought to have put reliance on. And further enquiry will demonstrate to him that the Congress position is the only right position, the Congress way the only way, and the Congress goal the only goal, and his doubts and fears will vanish, "and the cares that infest the day will fold their tents like the Arabs, and as silently steal away."

One thing more I should like to point out to the Raja. The Congress is not much concerned with creating a temporary impression or gaining a petty advantage. We left that stage long ago. We play for higher stakes; we fight for the transfer of power to the people of India, and we shall win.

Yours etc.,
Jawaharlal Nehru

43. To Commissioner, Allahabad[1]

Allahabad
September 23rd, 1931

My dear Mehta,[2]
I have your letter of the 22nd.[3] Certainly we shall try to follow the procedure suggested by you and refer any matter of complaint to you

1. A I C C. File No G-40(KW)(m)/1931, p. 105, N.M.M.L.
2. V. N Mehta, commissioner of Allahabad division at this time.
3. Mehta suggested that the district authorities should be approached first for redressal of any kisan grievance.

in the first instance. We tried to follow this method right at the beginning but the district authorities were not very helpful or encouraging. The recent instance of Badalpur village in Karchchana tahsil is also in point.[4] Three persons, like Purushottamdas Tandon, Venkatesh Narayan Tivary and my wife, visit the village and personally investigate the matter. A report is sent to the district magistrate and an offer is made to send one of our number with him to the village. He prefers to go alone and forthwith issues a press statement denying our version. Our people were under the impression that the matter would not be sent to the press just then Later when our rejoinder was sent to the press we were told by the pressmen that the district magistrate in his capacity as censor had stopped it. This kind of cavalier treatment and summary disposal and denial of grave charges made after enquiry by responsible people may be government's method of doing work, but they do not fill one with joy and gratitude. Am I to blame if I prefer believing Tandon and Tivary and my wife to believing the district magistrate? However, as I have said above, local complaints will in future be sent to you.

I understand that P. D. Tandon, the president of the Allahabad District Congress Committee, will write to you soon about another recent occurrence which took place in Karchchana tahsil in village Sakrawal. I only wish to say here that a number of men and women from this village came to me the other day and I personally saw injuries all over their bodies. The women bore these marks on their shoulders and backs and freshly broken teeth were displayed to me. One woman was badly injured and could not leave the village and no ambulance could go for her on account of flooded areas. All this, we were told, was to recover a paltry sum like Re. 1/- and Rs. 5/-.

I hope you have received the preliminary list of 393 ejectments sent by the local Congress office.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

4. On 1 September 1931, the police, while helping a zamindar to realise rent, harassed the tenants of Badalpur in Karchchana sub-division of Allahabad district. As a result, the villagers left their homes.

44. On the Resumption of Satyagraha[1]

I know that the people do not take delight in warfare but we cannot help fighting if forced to do so. In our second settlement with the government, we have made it abundantly clear that we can start satyagraha, whether Gandhiji is in England or here, if the circumstances demand that step. Of course, we do not wish it, but it is possible that we may be required to start satyagraha for the situation in the country is becoming worse day by day. The truce was but a phase of the fight, a change of tactics. We will have to continue the struggle till we have won complete freedom for our motherland.

1. Speech at Delhi, 24 September 1931 From The Hindu, 25 September 1931

45. To Chief Secretary, U.P. Government[1]

Camp Delhi
September 24th, 1931

Dear Kunwar Jagdish Prasad,
In the Leader dated today there is a long letter from Raja Rampal Singh. In this letter reference is made to a notice said to have been issued by Sitla Sahai in Rae Bareli. I was not aware of any such notice and I do not know if the notice is correctly given. But if any such notice was issued, I should like to express my regret to you for it. Not only is it incorrect in so far as the agrarian committee is concerned, but any reference to our conversations was improper. I am finding out from Sitla Sahai what the facts are. I am sure he would not consciously make a wrong statement.

V. N. Mehta, the commissioner here, has suggested that instead of sending local complaints direct to you, we might send them to him or the district authorities in the first instance. We have willingly agreed to this procedure. Indeed this was our practice but it fell into disuse by the want of encouragement we had from the district magistrate. I enclose copy of a letter I have sent to Mehta on the subject.

1. AICC. File No G-40(KW)(III)/1931, pp 97-99, NMML.

I do not know if your attention has been drawn to recent happenings in Muttra district. Most of our complaints in regard to the activities of the district authorities have been justified by the judgements in the Bijhari, Nohjhil and Choumuha cases. The Kosi Kalan case is a still more revealing document. But in spite of these exposures of official and police methods, the district and revenue authorities in Muttra have continued their coercive and repressive activities. During a recent visit to Muttra I found that large numbers of cattle had been attached and the number of notices for ejectment were said to be about 2500. The number of attachment amins have gone up from 7 before March to 25. It seems very unusual and extraordinary that all this should be done when the time for collections is long past. The actual methods employed to collect rent forcibly are still worse. On the 9th of September the villages of Parkham and Jharwahi were visited by a large force of revenue officials, including a tahsildar, naib tahsildar, amin, kanungo and others and men and women were assaulted and beaten till some fainted. Cattle, carts etc. belonging to the tenants were seized and sold on the spot to any bidder for any price offered. Terror reigned in the villages for some days. It is possible that these facts may be officially denied but responsible people have investigated them and you cannot expect us to disbelieve them.

In Bareilly new developments have taken place which were quite foreign to the city and district before.[2] Our meetings are interfered with and stones are thrown and threats used. In one instance dancing girls were brought to the meeting and were made to perform in order to interfere with the meeting. Nothing of this kind happened before but ever since our committee there was asked by the authorities to desist from picketing foreign cloth, these strange developments have followed. One of our prominent colleagues Damodar Swarup Seth[3] is being proceeded against under Sec. 108 Cr. P.C. It is not unreasonable for us to conclude that all this has resulted because we wished to continue our picketing and the people who are made to obstruct and interfere are mere tools in the hands of others. One of the persons who have taken a prominent part in these objectionable activities is an honorary magistrate.

2 The Chief Secretary in his reply dated 26 October 1931 denied that any harassment, coercion or intimidation was resorted to by the local authorities in Bareilly district.

3 Then secretary, Bareilly D C C He was arrested on 5 August 1931.

In Rae Bareli proceedings have been taken against Raj Bahadur and eleven others who were picketing a liquor or drug shop under Sec. 342 and some of them were sentenced to 3 months R.I. It is probable that if the case is contested up to the appeal court there may be an acquittal here also. But the harassment of peaceful picketers continues.

Another instance of harassment of Congress workers took place at Pakargaon in Rae Bareli on August 6th, when a large crowd of revenue officials and the taluqdars' servants surrounded the village and thrashed Bodh Prasad, Sri Narain, Faiz Mohamad Khan and other Congress workers. Some of them were injured and these three were arrested. They were kept in jail for a fortnight and then released without any case being brought against them.

Soon after the Delhi Settlement the Rae Bareli Congress Committee wrote to the district authorities and asked for the return of property seized on the 20th January from the Maharajganj Congress office. They were told then that a reply would be sent later. A recent letter of the deputy commissioner informs them that the property was sold on the 10th March 1931. This seems to be a clear infringement of the terms of the Delhi Settlement.

On the 18th September, we are informed, the naib tahsildar with armed police and tahsil peons and the taluqdar's men from Pandri Ganeshpur estate visited Bainti in Rae Bareli district and beat the kisans there. I am not sending you details of this and other incidents but I can supply them if needed. The reports are supported by the statements of the kisans.

I have also in my possession many complaints of beating and assaults in order to extract rent forcibly in Gorakhpur district. If you so desire I can send details of these.

I should also like to draw your attention to the fact that in Meerut the joint magistrate has been taking active part in the activities of a "City and Cantonment League" which puts "anti-picketing" in the forefront of its programme of work.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

46. To Deputy Magistrate, Bareilly[1]

Bareilly
30 September 1931

Dear Sir,

I have been informed that ordinary Congress activities in Bareilly town and district have been considerably interfered with for some time past and the police force of the district has taken an active part in this interference or has encouraged and tolerated this interference. It has been the practice of the U.P. Provincial Congress Committee to bring such complaints to the notice of the local government, in order to avoid friction as much as possible, and the local government has frequently enquired into the matter and informed us of the result of their enquiries. It has been pointed out however that this procedure involves delay and that it would be better if the district authorities were first informed of such complaints. In case relief was not obtained locally the matter could be referred to the local government. I am venturing therefore to write to you to bring to your notice certain facts and circumstances which have been mentioned to me. I understand that the secretary of the district committee has already written to you on three occasions and the president on one occasion, but no reply or acknowledgment has been received by them from you.

1. The local Congress committee engaged the hall of the Rohilkhand cinema for a meeting to be addressed by me. The rent for the hall was actually paid. I am informed that the city kotwal sent for the proprietor of the cinema and brought pressure to bear upon him not to permit the use of his hall by the Congress.

2. The kotwal also, it is stated, has told the proprietors or managers of local printing presses that they must not print any notice or leaflet on behalf of the Congress. Policemen have visited presses to find out if any Congress notice was being printed and where any such notice was found it was taken by them.

3. The kotwal sent for the owner of the house where the local Congress office is situated and told him that he must eject the Congress committee. The owner has thus been induced by the kotwal, apparently under threats of penalties, to issue a notice to the committee.

4. Stones were thrown at two public meetings held in Bareilly city. One of the meetings was held on the 3rd September and the other a few days before.

1 A.I.C.C. File No G-40(KW)(iii)/1931, pp 89-91, N.M.M.L.

5. In Kosari, bundles of hay belonging to a Congress volunteer named Dharm Pal Singh were set on fire. This was done on the very day a kisan conference was held there. Damage to the extent of Rs. 100/- was caused by this fire. This took place about the middle of June.

6. In Ballia, towards the end of June, a kisan conference was organised by the tahsil Congress committee and two shamianas were put up. In the course of the night burning balls of cotton were thrown on to the shamianas, one of them being considerably burnt.

7. The police actively stop the villagers and others from attending Congress meetings in the rural areas. They surround the area and more or less picket it. Usually the policemen are not in uniform.

8 The police ordered the owners or drivers of some motor lorries not to take Congressmen or Congresswomen and have thus considerably harassed them.

9. Rowdies have interfered with Congress meetings in rural areas. In village Udra, tahsil Baheri, the tahsildar asked some people who were involved in a criminal case to interfere with and prevent the holding of a Congress meeting in the month of August. He further told them that if they acted according to his wishes the criminal cases against them would be withdrawn.

10. In village Agras, tahsil Bareilly, some people who act as such rowdies were paid by the tahsildar Re. 1/- each, according to them, for the purpose of breaking up Congress meetings. This took place towards the end of July.

11. In village Faridpur, tahsil Faridpur, a Congress meeting was held on the 30th August on land belonging to the president of the Bareilly District Congress Committee. The president not being present his son's permission was taken. The meeting was continued on the 31st August. On this day Thakur Bakhtawar Singh, a retired deputy collector, and an honorary assistant collector came and objected to the meeting being held on that place. He stopped men and women physically from going to the meeting and actually tried to snatch away the flag and misbehaved right through the meeting by making offensive remarks. He also brought two dancing girls and made them sing and dance so as to interfere with the Congress meeting.

12. A few days ago, a chowkidar in uniform in Kadampur near Sheopuri snatched the flag and some clothes from a Congress volunteer.

Most of these matters have already been brought to your notice in the letters of the president and secretary of the district Congress committee. Should you desire any further details I shall gladly send them. I shall be obliged if you will kindly send me an answer at an early date informing me if the facts given above are, according to your information, correct. Some of these facts appear to us to be clear breaches of the Delhi Settlement and hence I am troubling you on the subject.

I am leaving Bareilly this evening. My address afterwards will be Swaraj Bhawan, Allahabad.

Yours faithfully,
Jawaharlal Nehru

47. To Mahatma Gandhi[1]

Allahabad
October 1st, 1931

My dear Bapu,

I returned today from the Punjab, visiting three U.P. districts on the way. On my arrival here I found your letter from the high seas awaiting me. The English newspaper cuttings were interesting reading. I am sending them on, as desired by you, to Vallabhbhai.

There is no marked change to report about the U.P. I get occasional letters from Jagdish Prasad, the U.P. Chief Secretary, and they are always courteous and promise enquiry into complaints made. Sometimes minor relief also comes. For instance you will remember my drawing your attention to the joint magistrate of Meerut joining an anti-picketing association. He has been asked to resign from it. The major question—the ejectments from land—continues unsolved. I am told by government officials that a fair number of the ejected tenants have been allowed to retain possession by private arrangements with their landlords but I have not been able to verify this. I have no further news of Muttra. In another three days I shall go out on a little tour of Bara Banki, Gonda, Bahraich and Rae Bareli and find out locally what is happening. Meanwhile, I have an impression that the local government is trying to restrain its district officials, but not wholly with success. The rains have naturally interfered with activity —both on the tenants' side and the zamindars'. Considerable damage has been caused to the crops by heavy rains during the last ten days. The chief trouble with the ejected tenantry is their fear of losing their crops. This fear induces them to sell and borrow and do anything almost to save their crops for themselves.

1 J N Correspondence, N.M.M.L.

I enclose some newspaper cuttings. Two deal with Hijli. You will be able to judge from Tagore's speech how deeply Bengal has felt in the matter.[2] It has really been a terrible affair. There is a feeling in Bengal that the Congress executive has callously ignored their sufferings in both Chittagong and Hijli. Vallabhbhai has, I understand, written to Emerson asking for an impartial enquiry into the Hijli affair.

The other cuttings contain Aney's award in the Bengal Congress dispute.[3] A compromise has been arrived at, which seems to be fair and reasonable. There is, however, an unfortunate tendency on the part of the Advance[4] party to crow over it.

I have tried my best to keep in touch with Abdul Ghaffar Khan. Kailas, Kamala's brother, was sent to him two weeks ago. I have had no news of him or his work. I do not know if letters are not written or are stopped on the way. Khurshed[5] is of course there. I have been writing frequently to Abdul Ghaffar Khan and his brother Dr. Khan Sahib but have only received one or two brief acknowledgments. I do not know what the present situation is so far as the government is concerned. But the friction between the old Jirga people and the Peshawar Congressmen continues. I had a long talk with one of the latter in Lahore and he was full of complaints. I soothed him and made various suggestions. I feel however that some one of us must go there and personally help in removing this friction. Our resolution about the Frontier P.C.C. and the Afghan Jirga and the Khudai Khidmatgars was a difficult enough one to give effect to.[6] It becomes doubly difficult when the people concerned have little notion of constitutions and the like, and are not fond of letter writing. Abdul

2 On 26 September 1931 Rabindranath Tagore described the Hijli shooting incident at a protest meeting in Calcutta as "tragic and cowardly in its brutality."

3 Under the terms of Aney's award all complaints in the Bengal Congress elections dispute were to be dropped and fresh elections to the Bengal P.C.C. held in January 1932. Till then a joint committee consisting of an equal number of members from the two rival factions was to carry on the Congress work.

4 The newspaper of J. M. Sen Gupta's group in the Bengal Congress.

5. A grand-daughter of Dadabhai Naoroji.

6. The Working Committee had decided that the Frontier P.C.C. and the Afghan Jirga, which had not been part of the Congress organisation, should merge and a new organisation be formed on the basis of the Congress constitution. Khudai Khidmatgars, founded in 1929 by Abdul Ghaffar Khan to promote nonviolence among the Pathans and improve their conditions by peaceful work, was the volunteer wing of the Afghan Jirga. This became the volunteer unit of the Frontier Congress in 1931.

Ghaffar Khan is also having some difficulties with his own people in the Jirga. Some, like Ahmad Shah,[7] have strongly criticised the Working Committee resolution. But Abdul Ghaffar's position in the Jirga is very strong and he can certainly deliver the goods. I am trying to send Rafi Ahmad Kidwai to him. I think Rafi is a good man for the job.

Jaya Prakash is here. He has had a lot of trouble in his family—deaths and illness—and has been absent a lot. He is unhappy and feels unsettled and without any foundations. I do not think he is enamoured of his work with Birla.[8]

Kamala accompanied me to the Punjab but was unwell most of the time. She seems to require complete rest for a period. She has grown very weak and it is only her enthusiasm and will that carry her on.

We read daily of your fresh triumphs and conquests in the land of our rulers. Whatever happens, it seems to be quite clear that your visit has been all to the good and will bear rich fruit. Tomorrow is your birthday and we shall gather together in town and village and think of you and send you our loving homage and good wishes. But a birthday is not needed to remind us of you. You have a strange way of filling the mind and stirring the emotions, and even a cold-blooded person like me feels a little less cold-blooded when thinking of you.

I enclose a copy of the letter I sent to Emerson. This should have gone to you with my last air mail letter but I could not lay my hands on it then.

I hope you received the draft of the Swaraj Bhawan Trust Deed which I sent you some time ago. I shall await your instructions in the matter. Ansari and Perin[9] are strongly opposed to any reference in the deed to a sale of the property. They say that this should not be permitted in any event. I have not heard from Bidhan and Jamnalalji yet. But Jamnalalji's views I know already.

I have written to you fairly regularly since you left—twice a week, by air mail and ordinary post. I hope my letters have reached you. Sometimes I have felt that my letters must be becoming a nuisance to you. Do not trouble to write to me except when you have something special to say.

7 A close associate of Abdul Ghaffar Khan and one of the founder members of the Khudai Khidmatgar organisation, parted company with the Congress in 1931 on the question of the merger of Khudai Khidmatgars with the Congress. Later joined the Khaksar movement.

8 G D Birla (b. 1894), leading industrialist, was on close terms with many Congress leaders Jaya Prakash Narayan worked as his secretary for some time.

9 Perin Captain, grand daughter of Dadabhai Naoroji.

Vallabhbhai writes to me that he has sent you a cable but he has forgotten to send me a copy. Apparently the cable relates to the unholy marriage of the pound with the rupee and the drain of gold from India that is likely to take place.[10] I do not pretend to understand the intricacies of currency and finance but I am very much disturbed at recent happenings. I feel that the English people, or rather their financiers, are bent on making us a pauper and a bankrupt nation by the time Swaraj comes. You must have seen that the People's Bank has failed. I wonder if other Indian banks will follow.

I was glad to read the messages of Madame Zaghlol Pasha and Nahas Pasha.[11] I wish you could visit Egypt on your way back.

Yours affly.,
Jawaharlal

10 In September 1931 Britain separated the rupee from the gold standard and linked it to sterling. As the exchange value of the sterling was falling in terms of gold, the rupee also depreciated in the world market

11. Mustapha Nahas Pasha (1876-1965); Egyptian nationalist leader who became head of the Wafd in 1927; served a number of times as prime minister between 1928 and 1951.

48. To Chief Secretary, U.P. Government[1]

2/10/1931

Dear Kunwar Jagdish Prasad,
Thank you for your letter of the 28th September. As desired by you I am sending you some accounts in original of beatings and assaults in the Gorakhpur district.

From Cawnpore I have received a formidable list of persons who are being proceeded against under various sections. The list comprises two persons being tried under Section 124-A, I.P.C., 12 persons under Section 108 Cr. P. Code, and 55 under Section 107 Cr. P.C.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. A.I.C.C. File No G-40(KW)(m)/1931, p. 63, N.M.M.L.

49. To Mahatma Gandhi[1]

Lucknow
4.10.31

My dear Bapu,
I have had a long letter from Mahadeva from London giving an interesting account of happenings there. The newspapers tell us that Ansari, though absent, fills the picture. He seems to be a little worried about it, quite needlessly, I have told him. He has called an emergent meeting of the Council of the Nationalist Muslims Party for day after tomorrow. I wonder if you have sent him a cable. The more I read about the innumerable claims for special representation the more I feel that it is almost impossible to have anything but a purely nationalist solution. Certainly there can be no peace or solution of the problem by merely agreeing to Jinnah's ridiculous 14 points.

Since I wrote to you last I have had time to find out a little more about the agrarian situation. The tenantry have lost hope to a large extent of any real relief being given to them. Their passion for land is amazing and specially the fear of being dispossessed with the crops ripening has made many of them do almost anything to stick on. A large number of the dispossessed tenants in Allahabad, probably 25% or more, have raised money somehow, by sale of property etc., and paid up the dues fully and thus got back the land. This is bad enough as they will soon find out. What is worse is the effect this is going to have on future remissions. There is a clause in the report of the official rent committee that these proposals will not apply to cases where the zamindar and the tenant have mutually agreed to a fresh arrangement. Altogether the position is most unsatisfactory. Stray reports of beatings of kisans continue to come. Collections also continue.

The Working Committee meets probably at Delhi in the last week of this month.

Love

Yours affly.,
Jawahar

1 Gandhi Smarak Sangrahalaya, Serial No 17973.

50. To Deputy Commissioner, Bahraich[1]

7.10.31

Dear Sir,

I understand that the president of the district Congress committee, Bahraich addressed a letter to you dated 30th September and sent you with this letter a number of complaints of tenants. In answer to this letter you informed the secretary of the Congress committee on October 1st that the tenants should be asked to approach you direct. There are obvious difficulties in this procedure and it has therefore been our practice during the last seven months to inform local and provincial authorities of such grievances. Individual grievances have their importance but the policy of the government or the taluqdars which results in these grievances is more important and this can hardly be grasped in its entirety by the individual tenant. We have been in correspondence with the provincial government in regard to such matters of policy as well as individuals' grievances for many months. It has been suggested to us however that a more expeditious method of procedure would be to send such individual grievances to the local authorities before they are sent to the government. It was with a view to give effect to this suggestion that we instructed our local committees to communicate directly with district officers. If however you do not approve of this procedure in your district then the grievances can be referred directly to the local government.

A notice, appearing above your name, has been shown to me. In this it is stated that if rent for the current kharif is not paid up within a month the remission may be cancelled. I have also seen a number of remission slips given to the tenants on the backs of which this information is given. It is further stated in the notice that no objection of a tenant regarding the rent can be attended to so long as the tenant has not paid up in full the rent for the kharif. The announcements contained in this notice raise important issues and are likely to affect the tenants vitally. If the announcements are in pursuance of a policy of the local government I should like to write to them about it. But before I do so I shall be obliged if you will kindly let me know if they relate to any such general policy or are peculiar to this district.

1 AICC. File No G-40(KW)(in)/1931, pp 71 77, NMML.

As I am leaving Bahraich today I shall thank you if you will be good enough to send an answer to Swaraj Bhawan, Allahabad.

Yours truly,
Jawaharlal Nehru

51. To Rampal Singh[1]

October 12th, 1931

Dear Raja Saheb,
On the 23rd of September I wrote to you enclosing a letter I had sent to The Leader in reply to your letter appearing in that paper.[2] I have had no answer from you. Since then I have noticed that Syt. Sitla Sahai has pointed out that your translation of the notice was incorrect.[3] I have myself seen the original of the notice. I do not think it is happily worded nor do I think that it was desirable for Mr. Sitla Sahai to refer to my conversations with the Chief Secretary. But even so he does not state what you thought he had said. Under the circumstances I shall be glad if you will kindly correct your previous statement. In particular I await a list of specific instances which according to you go to prove that the activities of the Congress are "mendacious and debasing" and a "deliberate misrepresentation of the facts." You will agree with me, I hope, that such charges should either be supported and substantiated by evidence or should be withdrawn. It is hardly fair to a great organisation like the Congress and to those who are privileged to work for it to be accused of this without any basis. I shall be obliged if you will kindly send me an early reply.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. AICC File No G-140/1931(Pt IV), p. 255, N.M.M.L.
2. See ante, items 41 and 42.
3. In a letter to the editor, The Leader, Sitla Sahai reproduced in English his Hindi leaflet, wherein there was no mention that Jawaharlal's talks with the Chief Secretary had led to the appointment of the official Rent and Revenue Committee

52. On Conditions in Balrampur Estate[1]

On my return from a tour of the rural areas of some Oudh districts I have read a long communique issued by the U.P. Government regarding certain occurrences which took place in the villages of Baraipur and Semri of the Balrampur Estate under the Court of Wards in the Gonda district.[2] It is something the government have at last thought that the charges of amorous behaviour and outrage on women were worthy of their consideration, but it is monstrous that such charges and accounts of disgusting and shameful incidents, supported by abundance of direct evidence and held to be substantiated after a personal enquiry on the spot by responsible public men, should be treated by any government in a manner unworthy of the pettifogging lawyer.

The government has quoted from the U.P. Provincial Congress Committee's recent agrarian report. It should know that some petty points it has raised are answered in that very volume. It should further know that not unoften the police terrorise the village folk and prevent them from taking any action. It should certainly know that in one of the cases mentioned, the people arrested and tried were removed from the village before the outrage on women and they could not know anything about it in the jail.[3] There are many other things which the government should know but I shall not add to the list here.

As it happens I visited both Baraipur and Semri villages only last week and met personally many of the victims as well as witnesses of outrages, and I have come back not only with the conviction that the charges are true but with indignation and humiliation in my heart that such things should occur and be tolerated in our country. Women's honour has become cheap indeed here if it can be subjected with impunity to gross indignity by estate officials and policemen and thekedars.

1 Statement to the press, Allahabad, 13 October 1931. The Tribune, 15 October 1931.

2 On 9 May 1931 the police and local officials besieged the tenants of Baraipur for rent collection. The tenants wanted two days' grace but they were beaten up and twenty three of them were arrested. At Semri the thekedar and his men ill treated the women. For three days no one was allowed to draw water from wells until payment was made. Later thirteen men were prosecuted for having used force against the thekedar's men.

3. This happened at Semri.

When I visited Baraipur last week an attempt was made to prevent my going. Several ditches were dug across the road apparently to prevent my car from reaching the village. I survived the ditches. When I reached the village I found that a police guard had been stationed there. I do not know what they were supposed to do. But I was told by many persons that they were trying to prevent people from giving any evidence about the assaults on women. I suppose this is the usual method of finding out truth adopted by the police and the officials of the Court of Wards in the Bahrampur Estate.

53. The Deepening Agrarian Crisis[1]

During my recent tour in the districts of Bara Banki, Gonda, Bahraich and Rae Bareli I went into the rural areas and addressed about 20 mass gatherings of tenants. The remission slips were being distributed at the time and there were a great many objections raised to them at all the meetings I addressed. Quite apart from the original basis of calculation which the government has laid down and which the Congress has considered wholly insufficient, objections were raised everywhere to the method of the application of this basis. So much has been left to government officials that it is possible for them to vary these remissions greatly according to their own predilections or to the pressure brought to bear upon them by various parties. As a rule the zamindars were in a better position to know what was happening and to approach the district magistrates. The tenantry only got to know of the remissions when slips were distributed. They were manifestly dissatisfied with these slips. Two of the factors which agitated them greatly were the public and official announcements that the remissions might be cancelled if full payment was not made within a month; and the further announcement that tenants' objections would only be considered if full payment was made. To call upon tenants to pay up in full and then object is absurd on the face of it, because the contention is that they are not in a position to pay. It is also obvious enough that once they pay they are not likely to get back anything. Even worse is the attempt to frighten them into payment by a threat of cancelling the remission.

1. Statement issued at Allahabad, 14 October 1931. The Leader, 16 October 1931

There has been no relief from collections this year for the tenantry. Coercive processes including steps under Section 21-A for the last rental demand are still continuing. Ordinarily such processes stopped with the coming of the monsoon but this year there has been no such interval. Now a fresh demand is made and threats are held out. It is quite possible that if any payment is made now it will be credited to arrears Then again some classes of tenantry cultivate crops which do not yield much at this time of the year. They will be totally incapable of payment now. Altogether the past and the present policy of the government seems to be to terrorise the tenantry into payment. Many of them in the past have paid up but any inquiry will show that such payment has been made at tremendous loss and even by incurring debts and sale of goods. The desire to hold on to land, specially occupancy land, is so great that a tenant will do almost anything to avoid losing it. The government and the zamindars have played up to this passion for land and extorted the uttermost farthing. Apart from the want of humanity of this procedure it is the worst possible economics; it is bound to lead to an even graver crisis than we have had. I also found during my tour and we are continually getting reports to this effect that assaults and beatings of tenants continue.

Our provincial Congress committee has done its uttermost to find a peaceful solution for this problem by cooperation with all concerned. It seems to us, however, that our efforts have been largely ignored and our advice has hardly ever been accepted by the government. Large numbers of ejected tenants are still to be found in many districts. We made it clear at an early stage that so long as the problem of these ejectments was not satisfactorily solved we could not accept any arrangement as final. The fact that these people have been ejected does not mean so far as we are concerned that the matter is finished. Our provincial committee is now faced with a grave problem and it must come to some decision which may involve far-reaching consequences. We have definitely pledged our word to help the tenantry and we must abide by that. In the absence of Mahatma Gandhi we have tried our best to avoid any action that might be considered to be aggressive, but, if we have no other alternative left, some defensive action may become necessary.

54. To Chief Secretary, U. P. Government[1]

15.10.31

Dear Kunwar Jagdish Prasad,

Mr. R. F. Mudie,[2] the collector of Allahabad, has given some figures to the press to show that the remissions he is giving are fair and in accordance with the principles laid down by the local government. He has also made certain statements that the settlement officers' standard rates were taken as fair rates as these were based on rents fixed between 1271 and 1300 Fasli, i.e. 1863 and 1892. I do not know how far these figures are correct as other figures obtainable from the Gazetteer and Settlement Report conflict with them. In this connection I should like to draw your attention to some of these latter figures and to the amount of remissions given and announced.

In 1338 Fasli the remissions were calculated as follows:

(i) 15 years' increments to be remitted.
(ii) Less than 12½% increments not to be remitted.
(iii) Remissions for rabi only

For 1339 Fasli, i.e. the current year, remissions are supposed to be calculated on the following basis:

(i) 30 years' increments to be remitted.
(ii) Remissions to apply to all increments, including those less than 12½%.
(iii) Remissions are for both kharif and rabi.

Prima facie the remissions for the current year should thus be far greater than the remissions for 1338 F. The actual figures are:

	For fall in prices	For local calamities
In 1338 F	Rs. 5.55 lakhs	Rs. 6.75 lakhs

Total remission 12.30 lakhs.

	For fall in prices
In 1339 F	Rs 9.50 lakhs.

Although the sanctioned amount for 1338 F was 12.30 lakhs, it appears from the collector's statement that only 11 lakhs were distributed. The collector has also stated he gave 7 lakhs for fall in prices and 4 lakhs for calamities. Further he states that the remissions were for

1 A I C C File No G 25/1931, pp 123-129, N.M M L.
2. (b. 1890), Chief Secretary, U P Government, 1939 43; Home Member, Viceroy's Executive Council, 1944 46, Governor of Sind, 1946 47, after 1947 served in Pakistan both kharif and rabi 1338 F although government had previously stated definitely that they were for rabi only.

The total remissions for 1339 F are thus apparently less than they should be even if the 1338 F remissions are taken into account.

In this connection it is pertinent to compare the population figures for Allahabad district for different years, as also the figures for area of holdings and under cultivation.

Population

In	1911	12.96 lakhs
	1921	12½ lakhs
	1931	14½ lakhs

(The population of the municipality and cantonment has been excluded)

Area of holdings

In	1907-08	..	12,37,000 acres
	1925-26	..	12,31,000 acres

Area under cultivation

In	1903-07	..	10,67,000 acres
	1922-27	..	10,47,000 acres

Thus while the population has gone up considerably in the last decade, the area of holdings and actually under cultivation has gone down This obviously puts a greater burden on the tenantry. Mr. Drake-Brockman[3] wrote in his Settlement Report of Allahabad, basing his remarks on the population figures of 1911, that a bigger population could not be maintained economically. The outside margin, according to him, had been reached. Even then there were a large number of un-economic holdings. As the population has gone up by 12% and the area under cultivation has gone down the position of the tenants has greatly deteriorated.

The total rental demand in 1915-16 was Rs. 44.7 lakhs, in 1929-30 it was Rs. 57 3 lakhs. The increase in these 14 years was thus Rs. 12.6 lakhs. If even the 1915-16 figures are taken the amount remitted now for 1339 F (Rs. 9.5 lakhs) is 3.1 lakhs less. But the figures for 1915-16 must be greatly in excess of the 1901 figures and therefore the difference will be all the greater.

Mr Mudie states that a special scheme was sanctioned by the government for Allahabad, Fatehpur and Etawah districts. Under this scheme he need not go, for Allahabad, beyond the last settlement in 1320 F, i.e., 1914-15. The settlement officer's standard rates are said to be based on returns fixed between 1271 F and 1300 F, i.e., 1863 and 1892. This appears to conflict with figures given in Mr. Drake-Brockman's report and in the Allahabad Gazetteer. These figures are as follows:

3 Settlement Officer, Allahabad division, 1912 15, commissioner, Fyzabad division, 1929-32

	Occupancy		Non-occupancy
	1907-08	1914-15	1907-08	1915-16
For Gangapar ..	5.93	6.15	6.16	6.96
For Doab ..	4.71	5.10	5.59	6.38
Average of above two ..	5.32	5.70	5.88	6.80

The figures for 1907-08 are from the Gazetteer and the figures for 1914-15 from Mr. Drake-Brockman's Settlement Report. Jamnapar has not been given as it is taken separately with Bundelkhand.

The figures for 1907-08 given above are likely to be greatly in excess of 1900 figures as rents went up rapidly after the passing of the Agra Tenancy Act in 1901.

Mr. Mudie's figures according to tahsils may also be compared to the Gazetteer figures for 1907-08 :—

		Mr. Mudie's figures	Gazetteer : 1907-08
Bara ..	Occupancy	.. 2.90	.. 2.95 per acre
	non-occ.	.. 2.80	.. 1.87
Chail ..	Occupancy	.. 5.90	.. 5.07
	non-occ.	.. 6.60	.. 6.24
Handia ..	Occupancy	.. 6.10	.. 5.72
	non-occ.	.. 6.50	.. 6.23
Manjhanpur ..	Occupancy	.. 4.70	.. 4.16
	non-occ.	.. 5.70	.. 4.83
Phulpur .	Occupancy	.. 5.90	.. 5.95
	non-occ.	.. 5.90	.. 5.69
Meja .	Occupancy	.. 2.80	.. 2.64
	non-occ.	.. 1.80	.. 1.70
Sirathu .	Occupancy	.. 5.60	.. 4.97
	non-occ.	.. 5.40	.. 5.48
Soraon .	Occupancy	. 6.40	.. 6.33
	non-occ.	6.40	.. 6.75

All these figures go to show that the rents of 1914-15 were as a whole considerably in excess of rents in 1907-08 and it is reasonable to presume that they were still more in excess of those in 1900-01, specially as the Agra Tenancy Act was passed in 1901 and rents went up subsequently. It is thus not correct to say that the figures for 1914-15, taken as a basis by Mr. Mudie, are equivalent to the figures for 1901, which year the government accepted as the basis of calculation. The result of having taken the wrong year as a starting point means a considerable reduction in the remissions.

Allahabad district has been particularly hard hit during the past six months. The large number of ejectments and the attempts made by the ejected tenants to get back their lands at any cost and at any loss has exhausted them completely. Even the most liberal application of the government's directions as to remissions would not have brought relief to them But the present application of this policy based on 1914-15 makes matters far worse.

So far as I know, no notice of payment within a month has been issued in Allahabad. In the adjoining district of Fatehpur this has been done. Apart from the obvious difficulties of tenants paying up within a month there is another point for consideration. It is well known that receipts are often not given. This will make the poor tenant's position still worse as he will not be able to prove payment. Then again arrears are always with him. It is a little difficult to imagine how a tenant, who is given remission because he cannot pay the full demand, is expected to pay arrears. Yet we have seen during the last six months that he was so expected and was ejected for failure to do so.

I am told that every consideration will be shown to the tenant and every facility afforded to him. Our experience during these past months and even now has been unfortunate. The revenue staff seems to look upon the tenant as the enemy of society to be harassed in every way and made to pay up by any means. For him the period following the Delhi Settlement has been one of the most intense suffering and it is a little difficult to conceive that he will get better treatment now. But even if the treatment was good the fact remains that he must be made to pay and whether he can do so or not is immaterial.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

55. Issue Before the Kisans[1]

Under Swaraj, the administration will be carried on by the people who will have power in their own hands. Swaraj is a kind of panchayati raj, for all over the country, panchas will be chosen by the people to decide all matters. The kisans will obviously be the rulers as they form the large majority of the population. Moreover, under Swaraj, everybody will have equal status without any distinction of caste or creed or of high and low.

I feel sorry that the kisans have to toil and labour the whole day while there were others who take away their earnings. It is for ending such sufferings that the Congress started the struggle for Swaraj. Last year the Congress did its best to alleviate the sufferings of the peasants but hitherto its efforts have yielded negligible results. All kinds of sufferings have to be endured in the struggle for attainment of any ideal.

The news received of the Round Table Conference indicates that the conference will yield no result. Swaraj will surely be achieved one day because unity among the people in the country is growing day by day. There is, however, no hope of our achieving it as a result of the Round Table Conference. Mahatma Gandhi may shortly come back empty-handed, and the struggle for Swaraj will then have to be resumed with renewed vigour.

But, meanwhile, we are faced with the question of rent remissions. I do not like the way the district officers are issuing orders that remission will be cancelled if payment is not made within a month of the due date. They are also insisting that the rent should be deposited beforehand in case any tenant desires to file an objection. Though the government have announced that rents should be brought to the level of those paid in 1901, in Allahabad, the district officer has only taken the 1915 rent as the basis for calculating the remissions. The government have sanctioned remission to the extent of 8 annas in the rupee but different methods are reported to have been applied in different districts with the result that in some districts the remission is being given only to the extent of 2 or 3 annas in the rupee.

1 Speech at Bara in Allahabad district, 15 October 1931 From The Leader, 18 October 1931.

The tenants should, therefore, consider whether they could pay even the reduced rent. Any decision for non-payment should be taken after great deliberation for it will lead to great suffering and distress. A campaign against payment of rent also seems to be against the truce, but, when entering into the truce, a reservation was made that the Congress would have the right to advise such an action in case of any oppression.

A decision on non-payment can be taken with the consent of the President of the Congress and the Congress Working Committee. If it is taken, there should be no slackening in its execution, for it will become a fight for Swaraj, though, if the tenants desire, the fight can be confined only to rent reduction.

As the Congress committee has decided to hold a tenants' conference on 23 October, I would like the kisans to send to that conference as many representatives as possible so that the committee is able to take right decisions in the matter.

56. To Chief Secretary, U. P. Government[1]

15.10.31

Dear Kunwar Jagdish Prasad,

I have written to you on many occasions in the course of the last few months and brought to your notice various activities of government officials, the police and zamindars' agents. You have been good enough to enquire into many of these matters and to inform me of the government viewpoint in regard to them. Sometimes some relief has also followed. But, as a whole, the position has not improved, and indeed, it has deteriorated in many respects. We continue to get reports from a large number of districts showing that the tenantry are being ill-treated and Congress workers are harassed, and, what is even more important, that the rent policy of government and its application is causing misery to vast numbers of people. I hesitate to write to you again and again on the same subject. Attempts to communicate directly with district officials have often been met with snubs from them. I do not know if government have any uniform policy in regard to such matters. If they do not want us to communicate directly with district officers, please let me know so that we may issue our instructions accordingly. Would you like our provincial Congress committee to address you directly in regard to all complaints from districts?

1. A I C C. File No. G-40/(KW)(m)/1931, pp 49-57, N M M L.

I have recently visited some rural areas and many complaints were brought to my notice. In Bahraich district a note containing a number of recent complaints from Naapara, Payagpur and other estates was sent to the deputy commissioner. These complaints included charges of molestation and outrage on women. In his reply the district commissioner indicated that he could only take action if the tenants approach him direct. The district magistrate of Bareilly has consistently refused to take any notice of complaints forwarded to him by the local Congress people. I was in Bareilly about two weeks ago and I wrote to him about these complaints.[2] In his reply he has said that he will send answers to them to the local government. From Basti district many complaints have come of the activities of the employees of zamindars.

In Muttra it appears that the thanedars of Chaumuha and Bijhari are again instituting cases under Section 107 Cr. P.C. You will remember that the police of these two places were criticised in the recent judgments of the sessions judge.[3] No steps have been taken against police officers and they appear to be free to continue in the old way.

I presume the government have made up their mind about the Semri and Baraipur occurrences, judging from the long communique they have published.[4] I should like to tell you however that after personally meeting the parties concerned and talking to them at some length, I am quite convinced of the truth of the charges made. You know that the Baraipur occurrences were brought to the notice of the deputy commissioner of Gonda at the beginning of June by the president of the district Congress committee. About Semri I was told that a registered letter containing an account of what had happened was sent to the deputy commissioner the day after the occurrence. I have seen the postal receipt for this. I do not refer here to other facts, such as the reported attempt of the women to lodge a complaint at the police station. The evidence is really overwhelming.

I have drawn your attention on several occasions to the ejectments, specially in Allahabad district. Many of these ejected tenants, driven by their passionate attachment to their land, have got them back, but they have done so at the cost of heavy additional debts and selling their cattle. They are in a bad way and are sinking deeper and deeper into the mire. Their capacity to pay anything in future is being reduced to vanishing point. Collections backed by coercive processes have continued without a break both here and in other districts, in some of which Sec. 12A Oudh Rent Act, is being enforced now.

2 See ante, item 46

3 See ante, item 38.

4 The communique dated 16 July 1931 denied the Congress allegation of harassment and ejectments.

It has been a continuous story of pay, pay, pay or lose your lands and in addition suffer other penalties. Cases of trespass against ejected tenants have been frequent and have resulted in imprisonment and fine. And before the old chapter has ended, a fresh one of payment backed by threats has now begun.

It has been our contention that the basis of the remissions for the new year is incorrect and inadequate. But even worse has been the method of applying this basis. A great deal has been left to the discretion of the district officials and remissions have thus varied in accordance with individual temperaments. In Allahabad district the remissions for the current year as announced are actually less than for the last rabi, although they are meant to be for two seasons while the rabi remissions were for one season only. Apart from this it would appear to be obvious that this year's remissions should be greater than last year's as they are supposed to be based on the 1901 figures. The district magistrate of Allahabad has come out with many columns of figures and contends that the figures for 1901 were the same as those for 1914-15. This is difficult to believe and such figures as we have in our possession go to contradict it. In this connection it is interesting to note that the district magistrate allowed less remissions in rabi last year than the government had actually sanctioned.

The tenants have had practically no opportunity to object to the amount of the remissions. It is now stated that they may file objections provided they pay up the full demand first. This proviso is curious and instructive. The tenants are not flush with money and their difficulty is often that they cannot pay the full amount. If they cannot do so then they are debarred from even raising objections. If they manage to pay by begging or borrowing or selling, then prima facie they are in a position to pay and little value need be attached to their objection.

In some of the districts I have visited, notices have been officially circulated that if the tenant does not pay within a month the remission may be cancelled. I understand that this has been done under directions from the local government. The object of such a direction can only be to frighten the tenant into payment anyhow. So far as I know it is very seldom, if ever, that the full amount due is paid up in November. For many tenants, dealing in particular crops, this is quite impossible as such crops are only gradually collected. Then again if all the tenants have to pay up within the month, this necessarily means that the tenants must sell their produce immediately and more or less together. If a large quantity of grain or other crop is thrown on to the market at the same time this is bound to result in a fall in the price of grain or other crop, and this in its turn will make the condition of the tenant as well as his zamindar worse.

It may be that the government does not intend to enforce rigidly this direction about payment within a month, and that it was meant merely as a threat. Even so many zamindars will take shelter under the direction and profit by it and the poor tenant will go to the wall.

Thus the outlook for the tenant is about as black as it could well be and there seems no way out. If the government policy is enforced, he is doomed to even greater suffering than he has passed through. We have been anxiously considering this and the Allahabad District Congress Committee have felt that they can be no parties to this continuous oppression of the kisan leading to his economic death. They feel that it may be necessary for them to advise the tenantry to withhold payment of rent till a satisfactory solution is found.[5] They do not wish to take any decision, involving far-reaching consequences, without the fullest thought and consideration. As at present advised however they see no other way. They are however calling a representative kisan conference to consider the question, and are also communicating with the provincial and the All India Congress.[6]

I regret greatly that such a step should be contemplated by them, specially at a time when Gandhiji is attending the Round Table Conference. But the question of payment or non-payment is an urgent issue and cannot await the deliberations of the Round Table Conference or the return of Gandhiji. We have tried to avoid raising any issue which might lead to friction and we shall continue to do so. But the fates seem to be against this.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

5 On 15 October the Allahabad D.C.C. passed a resolution seeking permission from the provincial Congress committee to start a no rent and no revenue campaign in Allahabad district

6 For Jawaharlal's speech at this conference held on 23 October 1931 at Allahabad, see post, item 66.

57. To Private Secretary to Viceroy[1]

16.10.31

Dear Mr. Mieville,

You were good enough to write to me some time ago and convey His Excellency's message to me that he wished me to communicate with him in the event of my having any difficulty. I pointed out in my reply that I was greatly troubled at the large number of ejectments of tenants and the coercive processes employed to extort rent from them which they could not ordinarily pay without selling their cattle and other property or borrowing at a heavy rate of interest.[2] I have not written again to you as I did not wish to trouble His Excellency. But I have been writing to the local government and keeping them informed of our difficulties. I believe Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel has also written to Mr. Emerson on the subject.[3]

I am now availing myself of His Excellency's suggestion to write to you, for his information, as the agrarian situation has again become critical.[4] The tenantry have had to face, during the last six months, continuously coercive processes and forcible measures to extort rent from them. Large number of them were ejected from their lands. His Excellency will appreciate what the reaction of a peasant is when he is dispossessed of his land, specially if he has had an occupancy holding which has been in his family for generations. The Indian peasant, like any other peasant, or perhaps even more so, is passionately attached to his land. Thousands of ejectments caused deep distress and misery and repeated attempts were made by us to get the lands returned to them on fair terms. Mr. Gandhi discussed this matter with Mr. Emerson[5] and I have been continually writing about it to the U.P. Government. The problem and the distress were recognised to exist but it was apparently hoped that something would

1. A.I.C.C. File No. G 7/1931, pp. 47-53, N.M.M.L.
2. See ante, item 35.
3. Vallabhbhai Patel wrote to Emerson on 15 September 1931: "The wholesale ejectments in various places and specially the recent issue of notices in Muttra district is creating a grave and unbearable situation."
4. The Private Secretary to the Viceroy replied: "Acting on His Excellency's instructions, I have requested the Home Department to ascertain from the local government the facts as mentioned in your letter."
5. On 15 and 16 July 1931.

happen which would automatically solve the problem and remove the distress. So nothing was done except to continue the coercive processes and to proceed for criminal trespass against those ejected tenants who remained on their lands.

Gradually the poor tenant was beaten down and made to feel that his land was going for ever. His passion for the land was too great for him to put up with this idea and so many sold their cattle and other belongings and often borrowed at heavy rates of interest. They managed to get back their land after paying not only the full demand but also various other charges. Thus the tenant, who was recognised to be very hard hit by the fall in prices and therefore entitled to remission on the usual rental demand, ultimately had often to pay a sum often in excess of the full demand. He did so practically at the cost of selling himself to the moneylender. It was an act of folly for which he and all concerned will suffer, but it is difficult to blame him for it. He has nothing in the world except his land to fall back upon.

Ever since the Delhi Settlement the tenant in the United Provinces has had to face a most difficult situation. He has been treated to every kind of indignity and harassment and every device has been employed to make him pay. The general depression and the economic situation were against him. To this was added the treatment he got from his landlord and from the revenue staff. To both these the tenant seemed to be an enemy to be combated and beaten down. His Excellency knows of the numerous complaints we have made from time to time about the treatment of the peasants. In varying degrees this treatment has continued and there has been no interval or period of rest for the tenants. Ordinarily the period of collections is supposed to close about the time the rains break out and the peasant is left in peace to till his field. There has been no such break or suspension this year and forcible collections for the past season have continued and are continuing. In many cases, the peasant has been allowed to till his field and sow his crop and just when the crops appear and harvest time approaches and he hopes to get some return for his toil, he has been threatened with dispossession and actually dispossessed. Now the new season has begun and the new rental demand falls due. Thus before the tenant has survived the coercive processes of the last season, he is confronted with a repetition of the same processes. The period of the Delhi Settlement has been one of ceaseless war against the tenant.

I do not wish to trouble His Excellency with lists of complaints. We have communicated these from time to time to the local government.

57. To Private Secretary to Viceroy[1]

16.10.31

Dear Mr. Mieville,

You were good enough to write to me some time ago and convey Hi Excellency's message to me that he wished me to communicate wit him in the event of my having any difficulty. I pointed out in m reply that I was greatly troubled at the large number of ejectments o tenants and the coercive processes employed to extort rent from then which they could not ordinarily pay without selling their cattle an other property or borrowing at a heavy rate of interest.[2] I have no written again to you as I did not wish to trouble His Excellency. Bu I have been writing to the local government and keeping them informe of our difficulties. I believe Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel has also writte to Mr. Emerson on the subject.[3]

I am now availing myself of His Excellency's suggestion t write to you, for his information, as the agrarian situation has agai become critical.[4] The tenantry have had to face, during the last si months, continuously coercive processes and forcible measures t extort rent from them. Large number of them were ejected from thei lands. His Excellency will appreciate what the reaction of a peasant i when he is dispossessed of his land, specially if he has had an occu pancy holding which has been in his family for generations. Th Indian peasant, like any other peasant, or perhaps even more so, is pas sionately attached to his land. Thousands of ejectments caused dee distress and misery and repeated attempts were made by us to get th lands returned to them on fair terms. Mr. Gandhi discussed thi matter with Mr. Emerson[5] and I have been continually writing abou it to the U.P. Government. The problem and the distress were recog nised to exist but it was apparently hoped that something would

1 AICC File No. G-7/1931, pp 47-53, NMML
2 See ante, item 35
3 Vallabhbhai Patel wrote to Emerson on 15 September 1931: "The wholesale ejectments in various places and specially the recent issue of notices in Muttra district is creating a grave and unbearable situation."
4. The Private Secretary to the Viceroy replied. "Acting on His Excellency's instructions, I have requested the Home Department to ascertain from the local government the facts as mentioned in your letter."
5. On 15 and 16 July 1931.

us no option. They have suffered enough during the past six months. We cannot be willing parties to any further suffering for them.

I am sorry to have to write at such length. I feel that some explanation is due to His Excellency for the step which one of our Congress committees intends to take. It is with great regret that the taking of such a step has been contemplated, specially at a time when Mr. Gandhi is attending the Round Table Conference. But the question of payment or withholding of payment of rent is a vital and an urgent one for the tenantry and it cannot afford to be shelved till the conclusion of the London conference.

I trust His Excellency is well now.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

58. Cable to Mahatma Gandhi[1]

16/10/31

Agrarian situation becoming critical. Coercive processes attachments forcible collection rent continued right through without interval. Many ejected tenants proceeded against for criminal trespass. Many for fear permanently losing land sold cattle belongings borrowed money. Paid full demand plus extras. Fresh demand now made for current season. Inadequate remissions. Threat that if full payment not made within month remission might be cancelled. Also no objection considered on behalf tenants till full payment made. Condition kisans deplorable. Thoroughly exhausted after past six months continuous harassment forcible measures. Apparently process likely to be repeated this season also. Allahabad District Congress Committee resolved under circumstances ask permission start satyagraha if necessity arises by advising withholding payment rent. Application for permission made to Vallabhbhai and provincial committee. Representative district kisan conference being held next week to decide question. Decision likely have far-reaching consequences but question payment or withholding payment must be decided soon. Vital urgent problem for kisans admitting no delay.[2]

1 A.I.C.C. File No. G-140/1931 (Pt III), pp. 167-168, N.M.M.L
2 On 18 October 1931 Mahatma Gandhi cabled back: "You should unhesitatingly take necessary steps meet every situation. Expect nothing here"

But I should like to mention two cases which have filled us with humiliation and indignation. These are instances of barbarous outrage on women in the villages of Semri and Baraipur in the Balrampur Estate under the Court of Wards in Gonda district. The U.P. Government has issued a long communique denying that anything of the kind alleged occurred. If this is the U.P. Government's view after a private enquiry, I suppose we cannot help it, but it is no one else's view. Many prominent public men have personally investigated the matter with care and are convinced of the truth of the charges. I have myself visited the localities and met the persons concerned. I have no doubt whatever that the outrages were committed. But the U.P. Government has ignored all the direct evidence and put forward certain circumstantial arguments which were not worthy of them. If they are so sure of their facts a public and impartial enquiry would have satisfied everybody. His Excellency will appreciate that people feel strongly where the honour of their womenfolk is concerned.

Our present difficulty is that the new scale of remissions, for the current agricultural year, is not only inadequate in principle, but has been applied in such a way as to reduce even the remissions which ought to have been given under it. Further, it is stated that if the tenant does not pay up in full within a month even these remissions might be cancelled. It is obvious that after all that has occurred during the last six months he is not in a position to pay up anything quickly. He has not got over his last payment yet and if all the tenants tried to pay within a month, they would have to flood the market with their produce and thus further reduce the price of grain etc. This would be disastrous for the tenant as well as the landlord and the State. The prospect ahead of the tenantry is again therefore one of coercive processes, ejectments, harassments, attachments, sale of cattle or property, if they still possess any, and all that has happened this summer will be repeated. They faced this prospect on our advice last season and they have come out of it terribly shaken up. We dare not offer them this advice again. Therefore we may be driven to advise them to withhold payment of rent for the present. One of our local Congress committees, the Allahabad District Congress Committee, has after anxious and prolonged consideration decided to approach its superior body, the U.P. Provincial Congress Committee, and our President, Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel, for permission, should need arise, to advise withholding payment of rent till relief is given in regard to various matters connected with it. This refers to one district only but we realise that this may have far-reaching consequences. Circumstances and the miserable plight of the tenantry appear to leave us no option. They have suffered enough during the past six months. We cannot be willing parties to any further suffering for them.

I am sorry to have to write at such length. I feel that some explanation is due to His Excellency for the step which one of our Congress committees intends to take. It is with great regret that the taking of such a step has been contemplated, specially at a time when Mr. Gandhi is attending the Round Table Conference. But the question of payment or withholding of payment of rent is a vital and an urgent one for the tenantry and it cannot afford to be shelved till the conclusion of the London conference.

I trust His Excellency is well now.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

58. Cable to Mahatma Gandhi[1]

16/10/31

Agrarian situation becoming critical. Coercive processes attachments forcible collection rent continued right through without interval. Many ejected tenants proceeded against for criminal trespass. Many for fear permanently losing land sold cattle belongings borrowed money. Paid full demand plus extras. Fresh demand now made for current season. Inadequate remissions. Threat that if full payment not made within month remission might be cancelled. Also no objection considered on behalf tenants till full payment made. Condition kisans deplorable. Thoroughly exhausted after past six months continuous harassment forcible measures. Apparently process likely to be repeated this season also. Allahabad District Congress Committee resolved under circumstances ask permission start satyagraha if necessity arises by advising withholding payment rent. Application for permission made to Vallabhbhai and provincial committee. Representative district kisan conference being held next week to decide question. Decision likely have far-reaching consequences but question payment or withholding payment must he decided soon. Vital urgent problem for kisans admitting no delay.[2]

1 A.I.C.C. File No G-140/1931 (Pt. III), pp. 167 168, N.M.M.L.
2 On 18 October 1931 Mahatma Gandhi cabled back· "You should unhesitatingly take necessary steps meet every situation Expect nothing here"

us no option. They have suffered enough during the past six months. We cannot be willing parties to any further suffering for them.

I am sorry to have to write at such length. I feel that some explanation is due to His Excellency for the step which one of our Congress committees intends to take. It is with great regret that the taking of such a step has been contemplated, specially at a time when Mr. Gandhi is attending the Round Table Conference. But the question of payment or withholding of payment of rent is a vital and an urgent one for the tenantry and it cannot afford to be shelved till the conclusion of the London conference

I trust His Excellency is well now.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

58. Cable to Mahatma Gandhi[1]

16/10/31

Agrarian situation becoming critical. Coercive processes attachments forcible collection rent continued right through without interval. Many ejected tenants proceeded against for criminal trespass. Many for fear permanently losing land sold cattle belongings borrowed money. Paid full demand plus extras. Fresh demand now made for current season. Inadequate remissions. Threat that if full payment not made within month remission might be cancelled. Also no objection considered on behalf tenants till full payment made. Condition kisans deplorable. Thoroughly exhausted after past six months continuous harassment forcible measures. Apparently process likely to be repeated this season also. Allahabad District Congress Committee resolved under circumstances ask permission start satyagraha if necessity arises by advising withholding payment rent. Application for permission made to Vallabhbhai and provincial committee. Representative district kisan conference being held next week to decide question. Decision likely have far-reaching consequences but question payment or withholding payment must be decided soon. Vital urgent problem for kisans admitting no delay.[2]

1 AICC File No G-140/1931 (Pt. III), pp. 167-168, N.M.M.L.
2 On 18 October 1931 Mahatma Gandhi cabled back: "You should unhesitatingly take necessary steps meet every situation. Expect nothing here."

59. To Mahatma Gandhi[1]

Allahabad
October 16th, 1931

My dear Bapu,
I have sent you a cable today which I am afraid will add to your worries. This cable relates to a decision of the Allahabad District Congress Committee asking for permission to advise tenants to withhold payment of rent for the current year. I am enclosing copy of this cable as well as copies of letters I have addressed to Private Secretary to the Viceroy and Kunwar Jagdish Prasad. You need not trouble to read through these letters specially one of them which is full of figures. I thought, however, they should be with you for facility of reference. I have taken all these steps on my own account more or less privately. But the final communication will be sent by the presidents of our provincial and Allahabad District Congress Committee. It is really deplorable to what a pass we have reduced the tenants largely because of the advice we gave. They followed that advice for a while and talked of paying 8 annas and 12 annas and taking full receipts but it had little effect on anybody and they were proceeded against and finally ejected. Meanwhile of course there were all manner of acts of oppression. Even after their ejectments they hoped that the Congress would do something for them to save them their lands. Nothing happened except numerous cases of criminal trespass. Not only were they ejected from their lands but they were sent to prison and fined for trespass. Ultimately they despaired of getting any help from the Congress and had nowhere to look to for relief. Even then they did not blame us or lose faith in our bona fides. But they certainly felt that we were not in a position to do anything for them. At last, full of despair, urged on by the one desire to save their lands at any cost, they sold up their cattle and borrowed money wherever they could and at whatever rates they could without thinking of the consequences. Only one thought obsessed them—the idea of saving their lands. So they paid not only the full sum due for the current year but often some arrears and heavy costs. They thus had to pay very much more in the end to get back their land than if they had paid the full rent without any remission to begin with. And they got back something much less than they previously had. Their occupancy rights had gone and they became life tenants.

1 J N Correspondence, NMML.

Now they are threatened with the new season's demand and the same processes are likely to be repeated. It is a difficult problem for them and for us. After very careful consideration our district committee felt there was no way out except to advise that rents be withheld. This advice must be given within the next two or three weeks if it is to be in time and effective. Hence the urgency of the matter. Our district and our province will of course take no step without the permission of the Working Committee. The Working Committee meets at Delhi on the 27th of this month. Our provincial committee meets immediately after.

It is clear that any step that the Allahabad district might take would have its effect on adjoining districts which are equally hard hit. The matter may become provincial. You can yourself appreciate the other far-reaching consequences.

I do not know how this will affect your work in London. So far as I can see the Round Table Conference is as dead as a door nail and it does not matter much what effect is produced on it.

I am sending this letter some days ahead of the air mail date. I shall try to follow it up with another letter, if necessary, giving you further particulars.

Yours affectionately,
Jawaharlal

60. To Vallabhbhai Patel[1]

Allahabad
October 16th, 1931

My dear Vallabhbhai,

I sent you a telegram yesterday informing you of the decision of the Allahabad District Congress Committee to ask for permission to start, if need arises, satyagraha, i e, advising tenants to withhold payment of the current rent.[2] I now enclose copies of letters I have sent to the

1 AICC. File No G-25/1931, p 121, NMML.

2 The telegram read "Agrarian situation here growing serious. Allahabad District Congress Committee decided to request permission to start satyagraha if necessary by advising tenants not to pay rents at present. Holding representative kisan conference next week to consider question."

Private Secretary to the Viceroy and Chief Secretary to the U.P. Government. Also a copy of a cable I have sent to Bapu.[3] There will be a district kisan conference next week to consider this question still further. But of course no definite action can or will be taken without your permission. The whole matter might be considered at the Working Committee on the 27th. Any action taken in Allahabad district will involve the province gradually, and any such provincial action will necessarily have far-reaching consequences. So it is necessary for the Working Committee to consider it fully.

I have your telegram informing me that the Working Committee has been definitely fixed for Delhi the 27th at noon. I am glad of this. Do you want me to reach there on the 27th morning or earlier? If you like I can get there a day earlier.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal

3 See ante, item 58.

61. To Purushottamdas Tandon[1]

16/10/31

My dear Purushottamdas,

In pursuance of yesterday's resolution of the D.C.C. I have written some letters and sent a telegram and a cable. I enclose copies of some of these letters for your information—also copy of a cable I have sent to Gandhiji. I have sent these papers to Sherwani also.

I hope that you have written for permission to the P.C.C. as well as to Vallabhbhai. Your letters to them should be fairly detailed and should explain the situation fully and the need for satyagraha. My letters to the various parties are more or less private communications. Vallabhbhai is in Bardoli.

Mehta, the commissioner, saw me yesterday. He tried to make out what special steps government was taking to meet the difficulties of the tenants. He was very keen that some one should meet Mudie before he leaves Allahabad in a day or two. I was under the impression that you were going to see him.

1 AICC File No G-25/1931, pp 115-116, NMML. Purushottamdas Tandon was president, Allahabad D.C.C., at this time.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

62. To T. A. K. Sherwani[1]

16.10.31

My dear Tasadduq,
As you know the Allahabad D.C.C. has passed a resolution yesterday asking for permission to start satyagraha, i.e., to advise tenants to withhold payment of rent for the present. I have written a number of letters in this connection, copies of which I enclose for your information. These are two letters to Jagdish Prasad, one to the Private Secretary to the Viceroy, one to Vallabhbhai Patel and a cable to Gandhiji. I also sent a telegram to Vallabhbhai yesterday.

I have communicated with the President, A.I.C.C., but the formal communication should go from you. I would suggest your asking him or the Working Committee to authorise our P.C.C. Council to take action if it thinks this necessary. This matter might be included in the next Council agenda.

It has been definitely decided that the Working Committee will meet at Delhi on October 27th, 1931. So I think you might have the P.C.C. notices issued for the 31st and 1st as previously fixed.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 AICC File No G-25/1931, p. 119, NMML. Sherwani was president, UPPCC, at this time.

63. To Chief Secretary, U. P. Government[1]

Allahabad
October 16th, 1931

Dear Kunwar Jagdish Prasad,

I enclose copies of two notices under Sec. 144 Cr. P.C. issued by the district magistrate of Sultanpur. You will remember that a very large number of such notices were issued in Sultanpur some months ago and your attention was drawn to the fact that a deliberate attempt was being made to suppress all Congress and kisan activities. These notices gradually expired. Now a fresh batch is appearing. The way these notices are prepared can be imagined by the fact that Pandit Badri Shukla[2] to whom the notice headed B was issued had not even been to the villages mentioned on the dates given in the notice. When this was pointed out to the district magistrate he quietly withdrew this notice and immediately issued another which did not mention any place. It is clear enough that a notice had to be issued; whether there was any reason for it or not was immaterial.

The language of the notices is also worthy of attention. To criticise the zamindars or the Court of Wards is forbidden. Do you think this is a bona fide notice? Or do you not think that it is not bona fide and is solely aimed at suppressing the ordinary activities of the Congress? I might add that the district magistrate was asked to point out what he objected to in any speech made. He has so far not done so.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

64. To Secretary, Jalabad Congress Committee[1]

October 17th, 1931

Dear Friend,
I have your letter and telegram. You should write to us more fully. I understand that you have been told that remissions will be withdrawn if payment is not made within a month. This has been done in several districts. This is most objectionable. The remissions are also very inadequate. Our provincial Congress committee will consider this matter on the 1st November. We may have to take strong action to help the kisans.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. A I C C. File No. G-140/1931(Pt. II), p. 155, N M M L.
Jalabad is in Farrukhabad district.

65. To Jagannath Prasad Agarwal[1]

October 19th, 1931

My dear Jagannath,[2]
Your letter of the 13th.[3] Will you please send definite accounts of oppression? Vague charges do not help us much.

As for Sheikh Habeeb Ullah refusing to take money through you I can quite understand it.[4]

I cannot send you an expert merely to enquire into the remissions in your district. You will have to do it yourself.

I am sorry I cannot yet promise you a day. The political situation is developing so rapidly that I cannot make a promise.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 A I C C File No G-140/1931(Pt II), p 147, N M M L.
2 President, Sitapur D C C
3 He had complained that inadequate rent remission had been granted to the kisans in Sitapur district and coercion for realisation of rent still continued.
4 Taluqdar of Mahmudabad Estate in Sitapur district who refused to accept rent through Congress workers

66. Speech at Allahabad District Kisans Conference[1]

The government officials were told during the Gandhi-Irwin talks that if the tenants were asked to pay the full amount of rent, it would be tantamount to oppression, for they would not be able to comply with the demand. The government then declared that they would consider the plight of the peasants and grant adequate remissions. The Congress, therefore, told the kisans to pay as much as they could.

I am very much grieved to find that during the last six months the tenants have been oppressed a lot. Satyagraha is the only effective weapon which could allay the distress, but that weapon has to be laid aside for the moment on account of the truce. The Congress therefore is helpless, and Congressmen merely content themselves with hearing reports of the tenants' sufferings.

No effort is now needed to foresee the result of the Round Table Conference. The only reply to the insult by the Prime Minister to our leader is that the fight should be resumed with vigour and carried through to the end till victory is attained.[2] The question is when the fight for Swaraj has to be resumed. I hope that it will be resumed as soon as Mahatma Gandhi comes back from England.

But the question before the tenants conference is the consideration of the payment of rents and they cannot afford to wait till the return of Mahatma Gandhi. Because, if the decision about non payment has to be taken, it should be taken at the proper time, and not in the midst of the rent collections. This would enable all the tenants to have equal advantage of the decision. The tenants have to consider whether the present remissions are sufficient.

You know that the district Congress committee has asked for permission to start satyagraha in the shape of a no-rent campaign. Considering your deplorable plight I would say that the peasants have every right to do what they think best to meet the situation. But as a member of the Congress Working Committee I cannot give any definite advice on the subject as it would have an effect on the political situation in the [illegible] untry. So it becomes necessary that the Working [illegible] The [illegible] October 1931.

[illegible] speaking at the Minorities Com[illegible] that the Congress represented the Committee should give its decision. The president of the United Provinces Provincial Congress Committee and the president of the district Congress committee have been specially invited to the meeting of the Working Committee to help the Committee arrive at a decision with their advice. I would like you to express your views on the question of rent at this conference.

This resolution about satyagraha is a sort of invitation to you to go to jail and to undergo repression,[3] which is bound to be acute on this occasion, as the present fight would be the last fight and would go on until Swaraj is attained. Therefore, if you are prepared to undergo such suffering then accept it. So far as my view is concerned, it is this, that for us, for you, and for the whole country, there is no other way out of the difficulty than this.

3 "In case government does not adopt suitable methods for meeting the conditions, the tenants of the whole district will oppose government by resorting to a no rent campaign and they will gladly carry out the instructions of the Congress committee in this behalf."

67. To Sitla Sahai[1]

October 23rd, 1931

Dear Sitla Sahai,

Your letter. I have had no reply from the U.P. Government about Gajadhar Singh.[2] I cannot write to them again as we are on breaking point. As for appeal it is for you and others to judge. I do not know all the facts.

I was told that some of our people in Rae Bareli have been giving security under Sec. 107. This should not be encouraged. Of course if any one wants to give it we cannot stop him. But it is not the Congress policy to give security

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 AICC File No G-140/1931(Pt II), p 143, NMML.
2 He was arrested on 31 August 1931 for picketing a drug shop at Deraigan in Rae Bareli district

68. To Chief Secretary, U. P. Government[1]

26.10.31

Dear Kunwar Jagdish Prasad,

As I told you on the telephone yesterday we shall gladly meet the settlement commissioner and the Allahabad officials.[2] I should have liked this meeting to take place before the Working Committee meets but that I am afraid is impossible. I am leaving shortly for Delhi as the Working Committee meets there from tomorrow onwards. Soon after the provincial Congress committee will meet at Lucknow. As both these committees will have to consider the agrarian situation in the U.P. and specially in the Allahabad district it would have been discreeter if we had met the settlement commissioner and the other officials before the committee meetings took place. Unfortunately that cannot be arranged now. I cannot definitely suggest a date for our informal conference now. It will have to be some time early in November—probably the 3rd. November 3rd, Saturday, at Allahabad, may be provisionally fixed. Unfortunately Purushottamdas Tandon has gone to Lahore. I shall get into touch with him and inform him of this date. If no hitch occurs, and you do not hear from me to the contrary, we shall adhere to November 3rd.

So far as Allahabad is concerned the presence of Purushottamdas Tandon, Venkatesh Narayan Tivary, Lal Bahadur,[3] the secretary of our district committee, and myself will be necessary. I feel however that the questions to be discussed will raise wider issues and it will be desirable if some of our provincial representatives are also present. In particular our president, Tasadduq A. K. Sherwani and Govind Ballabh Pant, should be present. As the provincial Congress committee is meeting soon they will probably decide on a course of action or authorise

1 A.I.C.C. File No G-25/1931, pp. 91-95, N.M.M.L.

2 Jawaharlal had charged the government that the remission in Allahabad district had not been calculated according to the government formula published on 8 August 1931. The Chief Secretary informed him on 25 October 1931 that Congress representatives could discuss the remissions issue with Allahabad district officials.

3. Lal Bahadur Shastri (1904-1966); member of the Servants of the People Society; spent nine years in jail during freedom struggle; general secretary, U.P.P.C.C. 1935-38; Home Minister, U.P., 1947-51; General Secretary, A.I.C.C. 1951, Union Minister for Railways, 1952-56, for Communications, 1957-58, for Commerce and Industry, 1958-61, for Home Affairs, 1961-63 and Prime Minister, June 1964—January 1966 their Council to take the necessary steps. It is difficult for me to commit them without consulting them.

Another difficulty that faces us is this. An important point at issue between the Allahabad District Congress Committee and the local officials has been the manner of calculation of the remissions and particularly the date from which such calculations should be made. But there are other important matters also. For instance, the principle underlying the policy of government in regard to these remissions is itself objected to. Further there is the question of arrears. It is difficult for us to understand how any arrears can be rightly demanded when it is admitted that the full current demand itself cannot be paid. Then there is the question of ejectments about which I have written to you so often. The date of payment is also important in view of the notices issued in many districts that the remissions might be withdrawn if payment is not within a certain date. There are some other points also but I need not refer to all of them here. One matter however I must mention. This is the loss caused by local calamities. It is well known that the recent rains have ruined the crops in many areas. This has to be taken into consideration in assessing the current rent.

I might add that we continue to receive reports from districts which show that the repressive policy of government in regard to rent collections and the like continues. In Bulandshahr, we are informed that the police and kurk amins have been going about attaching property. In Bara Banki quite a large number of Sec. 107 notices have been issued. In Sultanpur district, a notice, dated 19th October, under Sec. 144 Cr. P.C. was issued to Syt. Sitla Sahai last week forbidding him from speaking on the ground that he had been "wandering over the countryside and instructing tenants to withhold payment of rent full or partial." This is a totally wrong statement. He has only been once before in Sultanpur since weeks or months ago and said nothing about withholding payment of rent.

I hope you will get over your indisposition soon.

Immediately after writing the above to you I telephoned to Mr. V. N. Mehta and informed him that November 3rd might be fixed provisionally for the conference. He suggested to me that meanwhile it would be desirable that no aggressive propaganda was carried on on our behalf. I would gladly agree to anything that would avoid friction and make it easier to arrive at an understanding. But certain steps have been taken by us, for instance, the tenants' conference held on the 23rd, which came to certain conclusions. A number of meetings in rural areas have also been fixed up and it was proposed to issue some leaflets. I shall suggest that propagandist leaflets be not issued for the time being, but it is hardly possible or desirable to stop the meetings which have already been arranged. These meetings are held regularly by our workers and they need not be interpreted as constituting any special aggressive campaign.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

69. To T. A. K. Sherwani[1]

30.10.31

Dear Sir,

I enclose a copy of the resolution passed by the Working Committee on the application of the Allahabad D.C.C. for permission to start defensive satyagraha.[2] The Working Committee was of opinion that the U.P.P.C.C. should first consider the matter and forward their opinion before the question could properly be considered by the Working Committee. In order, however, to avoid any unnecessary waste of time in a matter of urgency the Committee has authorised the President, Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel, to deal with the application and to give his decision on it after the P.C.C. has considered it. Will you therefore place the application before your provincial committee, which I understand is meeting soon, and communicate to me their recommendation?

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 AICC File No G 25/1931, p 83, NMML.
2 "If the Provincial Congress Committee felt that the plight of the Allahabad district peasants was a fit case for defensive satyagraha in terms of the Simla agreement, the Congress President might give such decision on the application as he considered necessary."

70. To Vallabhbhai Patel[1]

Lucknow
Nov. 2nd, 1931

My dear Vallabhbhai,
I enclose copies of two resolutions passed by the U.P.P.C.C. today. The Council of the P.C.C. recommended these resolutions after prolonged consideration extending to two days. We have also appointed a small committee to negotiate with government.[2] We meet some officials tomorrow but I am afraid the question of basic principle will hardly be considered then. We shall offer to discuss them with the provincial government. I have little hope of a successful outcome.

I also enclose a note on the Cawnpore report.[3] It has been hastily written but it gives my viewpoint. If you decide on publishing the report, I think it will be desirable to have it printed in Allahabad under Sunderlal's supervision. All the proof correcting and other labour will then fall on him and he will like it. He could also be entrusted with the translation of it.

I am just going to Allahabad.

I was shocked to read of the second terrorist outrage in Bengal.[4] I felt that I was wrong in Delhi when I suggested waiting for further news before passing a resolution. I spoke about these outrages here at the district conference and a resolution was also passed by the conference.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal

ENCLOSURE

RESOLUTION OF U.P.P.C.C.

The P.C.C. has considered the application of the Allahabad District Congress Committee for permission to start satyagraha against the agrarian

1. AICC File No. 54/1931(Pt. III), pp. 365-366, NMML.
2. It consisted of Jawaharlal, Purushottamdas Tandon, Govind Ballabh Pant, Rafi Ahmad Kidwai, Venkatesh Narayan Tivary and T. A. K. Sherwani
3. See post, section 3, item 67
4. At Dacca, there was an unsuccessful attempt made to murder the district magistrate on 28 October 1931 policy of the government by recommending that the payment of rent and revenue should be withheld till such time as adequate relief is given to the agriculturists, and the resolution of the Working Committee passed on this application being forwarded to them by the president of this committee. The committee has also considered reports from various districts which show that the remissions announced by government for the current Fasli year are wholly unsatisfactory and inadequate in principle; that the method according to which they are subject have made them still more ineffective and unacceptable; that no provision is made for the restoration of land to the ejected tenants or in regard to the arrears of rents and revenue and other debts which weigh down the agricultural classes; that no allowance has so far been made for the local calamities which have afflicted numerous districts in the province. The committee has further been informed that coercive processes for the realisation of rent continue and tenants are still being harassed, and many zamindars have been subjected to hardship and indignity to compel them to pay the full revenue demand. The provincial committee as well as many district committees have made continuous efforts to seek relief from provincial and local authorities, but the policy followed by the government during the last six months has resulted in the progressive deterioration of agrarian conditions in the province and has caused great suffering to the peasantry. The committee is of opinion that unless immediate relief is given the Allahabad district and many other districts will be justified in resorting to satyagraha in terms of the Simla Agreement dated 27th August 1931, referred to in the Working Committee resolution. The committee however is of opinion that another effort should be made to obtain adequate relief and authorises its Council in this behalf.

In the event of such relief not forthcoming the Council is given authority to take necessary permission from the President of the A.I.C.C. to allow Allahabad D.C.C. as well as other districts similarly situated to take such defensive action as may be considered necessary.

The Council is further authorised to appoint, should necessity arise, a smaller committee to deal with agrarian matters and to give effect to this resolution of the committee.

The second resolution passed by the P.C.C. is as follows:—

The P.C.C. has noted that local officials in many districts have continued to pursue a policy of direct and indirect interference in Congress activities and of gagging and arresting Congress workers and of encouraging people to indulge in disgraceful practices to break up Congress meetings. The committee has further noted that well established incidents attested to by responsible public men, where atrocities have taken place, have been denied by government without any open and proper inquiries. In accordance with the Congress policy since the Delhi truce the P.C.C. has consistently endeavoured to place all such grievances before the provincial and local officials with a view to obtain relief. In view however of the fact that such occurrences continue and relief is seldom obtained and the truth is frequently denied on behalf of the government, the committee thinks it necessary to reconsider this policy and where Congress work is deliberately interfered with, to take the necessary steps to continue it in spite of this interference. The P.C.C. authorises the Council to consider such cases and to give necessary directions in the matter and if necessary to take the permission of the President of the A.I.C.C. in this behalf.

Peace we can understand and war we are not unused to. But this is neither peace nor war. It is an impossible situation which cannot last for long.

71. To Chief Secretary, U. P. Government[1]

Allahabad
November 3rd, 1931

Dear Kunwar Jagdish Prasad,

The informal conference with the district officials and Mr. K. N. Knox,[2] that was arranged at your suggestion, took place today. I am afraid it did not yield any useful result.[3] We were told that we could not consider the basis of remissions, nor could we discuss arrears or debts or ejectments or local calamities or similar matters. The interpretations put on the Rent and Revenue Committee's report and on the G.O. defining government policy were also novel and extraordinary. It is not quite clear what the purpose of the conference was if no single important matter even relating to Allahabad district could be discussed.

1. A I C C. File No. G 25/1931, p. 41, N.M M L.
2. Settlement Commissioner, Allahabad district.
3. During the discussion the Congress leaders raised the question of the whole policy underlying the remissions but the officials argued that they could only discuss the remissions in Allahabad district The discussions were therefore inconclusive.

I have written to you so frequently on this subject that it is not necessary to trouble you again with a repetition of what I have previously said. I would only add that, so far as we are concerned, the situation is grave and no relief seems to be in sight. The matter has been considered by the All India Working Committee of the Congress and the provincial committee. The provincial committee has directed us to make a further effort to obtain relief from the local government. They have also appointed a special committee for the purpose of meeting representatives of the local government, if the government is agreeable to having such a conference. Our president, T. A. K. Sherwani, will write to you separately about this.

I am a member of this committee but I have to go to Bombay on the 6th and I may not return till the 10th. If the proposed conference is held after the 10th I shall try to be present. But we are anxious that there should be no delay and even in my absence other members can meet you or others whom the government may suggest.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

72. To Rampal Singh[1]

Allahabad
November 5th, 1931

My dear Raja Saheb,

I regret the delay in acknowledging your letter of the 25th October. You have dealt at length in the letter you enclosed with the incidents of Syt. Sitla Sahai's leaflet.[2] I hardly think I need say anything more on this subject. The matter is of little importance. Even if your interpretation is correct, and I do not think it is wholly correct, it simply amounts to this that some of our local workers tried to take the entire credit for themselves of certain happenings. This may have been wrong and unfortunate but it is a human failing and can hardly be dignified by calling it a major sin. So far as I am personally concerned I have already expressed my regret to you for any misapprehension that might have been caused.

1 A I C C. File No. G 140/1931(Pt 1), pp 79, N.M.M.L.
2. Raja Rampal Singh had asserted that throughout the year the zamindars and the taluqdars had tried to secure relief from the government to the peasants

You refer to strong language being used against taluqdars. Further you say, quite rightly, that every person by joining the Congress does not become a saint. The Congress is today a mass organisation. It has the power and the strength and the failings of such an organisation. Unfortunately it has within its ranks undesirable persons also. But it has the advantage of the leadership of a very great person and he has set an ideal before us which though all of us may not follow it none the less raises us in a large measure and raises the tone of public life in this country. I would beg of you to compare the Congress movement with any great popular movement in any country past or present. You will then find that by virtue of our leader's precept and example we have been able to live up as an organisation on a level which has never been obtained by a similar organisation anywhere.

Regarding zamindars and taluqdars I should like to make the position of the Congress as well as myself quite clear. The Congress stands for the removal of the hardships of the masses and the masses being chiefly the peasantry the Congress has to stand for their interests. The Congress is not against the zamindars as such but where there is a conflict between the two interests the interest of the masses must prevail. That is, so far as I have been able to understand, the Congress viewpoint. My personal viewpoint is the same but in addition I am convinced that the zamindari system is a system which is injurious to society. This opinion has nothing to do with good zamindars or bad zamindars and taluqdars. It is based on purely economic reasons. Further I am convinced that this system is utterly divorced from modern conditions and is bound to topple over because of its inherent instability. All the world over one can see this process going on. It is the part of the wise man whether he is a zamindar or a tenant or a mere politician like myself to try to understand what is happening in the world, what economic and other forces are at play and to profit by the experience of others. It would be foolish for any of us to base general conclusions in regard to an economic system on the strength of goodness or badness of certain individuals who are parts of that system. As you know I have very many good friends among taluqdars and zamindars of this province. My contacts have been far greater with them than with the tenantry. How can I wish ill to those whom I have learned to respect in their individual capacities. But I cannot allow the personal question to blind me to the facts and these facts tell me that the existing economic system in India and specially in our province in regard to the land is out of date and it brings terrible misery to vast numbers. I do not believe in allowing fate and other unseen powers to do what they like without any effort on my part. I believe that human beings can control their destiny and so can society at large. If we have an economic depression today which has brought so much trouble to zamindars and kisans alike whose fault is it? Are these economic crises due to an act of god or mismanagement of incompetents who have unfortunately the fate of man in their hands? I have not a shadow of doubt that if existing conditions are allowed to continue both the zamindars and kisans will go to the wall.

I want therefore that the problem should be placed in its proper setting and perspective by everybody so that we might by putting our heads together evolve a satisfactory solution. If, however, some of us, ostrich-like, refuse to face facts they do so at their peril because facts do not disappear into thin air simply because some one does not recognise them.

I do not want to accelerate a class war between the zamindars and the tenants. But I am quite sure that unless a solution is found to the existing problems nothing in the world can avert such an unfortunate struggle.

I trust I have made my position clear. I owe it to you to do so because I do not wish to sail under any false colours or to give any wrong impression about myself to anyone. My views are slightly in advance of those held by the Congress as a whole but as a soldier of the Congress I act strictly within the limitations imposed by the Congress. I have the right, however, to try to convert both the Congress and the public at large to my viewpoint and I live in the hope of being able to convert not only the public at large and Congress but even our taluqdar friends to my viewpoint. For it is obvious that what is good for a part of it, and what is good for India must be good for the taluqdars

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

73. On the Condition of U.P. Kisans[1]

The resolution in regard to the agrarian situation gives a glimpse of the conditions that have prevailed and are now prevailing in the province.[2] It is impossible in the course of a resolution to give more than a glimpse. As a matter of fact the period since the Delhi truce has been one of serious trouble and harassment and misery for the tenants and also to the smaller zamindars. It has not been a period of peace for them but of war carried on incessantly. They have not even had the respite from collections which usually comes with the monsoon. Even now coercive processes and forcible collections are continuing for the last season.

1. Interview to the press, Bombay. From The Bombay Chronicle, 7 November 1931.

A vivid description of what is happening in U.P. has been given in the report of the Agrarian Committee appointed by the U.P.P.C.C. which has been published. In this report very authentic cases of barbarous behaviour and outrages on women have been given. But without any open or impartial inquiry the U.P. Government have denied them, although responsible public men held open inquiries before arriving at the finding.

The crisis that has now arisen is due to the fact that fresh collections have to be made for the new season. The last season's forcible collections resulted in a large number of tenants being ejected from their lands and many of them in despair selling their cattle and other belongings or incurring additional debts. They were thoroughly exhausted and are in a bad way.

Now the government has announced certain remissions which according to us are entirely inadequate. They have further stated that the full demand after deducting these remissions must be paid up within a month, or else these remissions may be cancelled. The tenants have thus to face an immediate crisis and they cannot afford to wait. They have either to decide that they should not pay anything at all or they have to submit to a repetition probably on a worse scale of what took place during the last six months. If they pay whatever they can afford to, it will only be a small amount and the result may be that although they have paid, they will be ejected.

It was for this reason that the Allahabad District Congress Committee and the provincial committee were forced to take action although they were very unwilling to do so while Mahatmaji was in London. But they had no alternative as the decision must be made very soon or not at all. The immediate questions are:—

(1) The amount of remission in the current demand.

(2) The question of arrears and debts—It is clear that if a person cannot pay the full demand even after remission from this, he obviously cannot pay up his arrears and debts. This obvious conclusion has not

2. See ante, item 70, enclosure.

can control their destiny and so can society at large. If we have an economic depression today which has brought so much trouble to zamindars and kisans alike whose fault is it? Are these economic crises due to an act of god or mismanagement of incompetents who have unfortunately the fate of man in their hands? I have not a shadow of doubt that if existing conditions are allowed to continue both the zamindars and kisans will go to the wall.

I want therefore that the problem should be placed in its proper setting and perspective by everybody so that we might by putting our heads together evolve a satisfactory solution. If, however, some of us, ostrich-like, refuse to face facts they do so at their peril because facts do not disappear into thin air simply because some one does not recognise them.

I do not want to accelerate a class war between the zamindars and the tenants. But I am quite sure that unless a solution is found to the existing problems nothing in the world can avert such an unfortunate struggle.

I trust I have made my position clear. I owe it to you to do so because I do not wish to sail under any false colours or to give any wrong impression about myself to anyone. My views are slightly in advance of those held by the Congress as a whole but as a soldier of the Congress I act strictly within the limitations imposed by the Congress. I have the right, however, to try to convert both the Congress and the public at large to my viewpoint and I live in the hope of being able to convert not only the public at large and Congress but even our taluqdar friends to my viewpoint. For it is obvious that what is good for a part of it, and what is good for India must be good for the taluqdars.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

73. On the Condition of U.P. Kisans[1]

The resolution in regard to the agrarian situation gives a glimpse of the conditions that have prevailed and are now prevailing in the can control their destiny and so can society at large. If we have an economic depression today which has brought so much trouble to zamindars and kisans alike whose fault is it? Are these economic crises due to an act of god or mismanagement of incompetents who have unfortunately the fate of man in their hands? I have not a shadow of doubt that if existing conditions are allowed to continue both the zamindars and kisans will go to the wall.

1. Interview to the press, Bombay. From The Bombay Chronicle, 7 November 1931.

I want therefore that the problem should be placed in its proper setting and perspective by everybody so that we might by putting our heads together evolve a satisfactory solution. If, however, some of us, ostrich-like, refuse to face facts they do so at their peril because facts do not disappear into thin air simply because some one does not recognise them.

I do not want to accelerate a class war between the zamindars and the tenants. But I am quite sure that unless a solution is found to the existing problems nothing in the world can avert such an unfortunate struggle.

I trust I have made my position clear. I owe it to you to do so because I do not wish to sail under any false colours or to give any wrong impression about myself to anyone. My views are slightly in advance of those held by the Congress as a whole but as a soldier of the Congress I act strictly within the limitations imposed by the Congress. I have the right, however, to try to convert both the Congress and the public at large to my viewpoint and I live in the hope of being able to convert not only the public at large and Congress but even our taluqdar friends to my viewpoint. For it is obvious that what is good for a part of it, and what is good for India must be good for the taluqdars.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

73. On the Condition of U.P. Kisans[1]

The resolution in regard to the agrarian situation gives a glimpse of the conditions that have prevailed and are now prevailing in the province.[2] It is impossible in the course of a resolution to give more than a glimpse. As a matter of fact the period since the Delhi truce has been one of serious trouble and harassment and misery for the tenants and also to the smaller zamindars. It has not been a period of peace for them but of war carried on incessantly. They have not even had the respite from collections which usually comes with the monsoon. Even now coercive processes and forcible collections are continuing for the last season.

1 Interview to the press, Bombay. From The Bombay Chronicle, 7 November 1931.

A vivid description of what is happening in U.P. has been given in the report of the Agrarian Committee appointed by the U.P.P.C.C. which has been published. In this report very authentic cases of barbarous behaviour and outrages on women have been given. But without any open or impartial inquiry the U.P. Government have denied them, although responsible public men held open inquiries before arriving at the finding.

The crisis that has now arisen is due to the fact that fresh collections have to be made for the new season. The last season's forcible collections resulted in a large number of tenants being ejected from their lands and many of them in despair selling their cattle and other belongings or incurring additional debts. They were thoroughly exhausted and are in a bad way.

Now the government has announced certain remissions which according to us are entirely inadequate. They have further stated that the full demand after deducting these remissions must be paid up within a month, or else these remissions may be cancelled. The tenants have thus to face an immediate crisis and they cannot afford to wait. They have either to decide that they should not pay anything at all or they have to submit to a repetition probably on a worse scale of what took place during the last six months. If they pay whatever they can afford to, it will only be a small amount and the result may be that although they have paid, they will be ejected.

It was for this reason that the Allahabad District Congress Committee and the provincial committee were forced to take action although they were very unwilling to do so while Mahatmaji was in London. But they had no alternative as the decision must be made very soon or not at all. The immediate questions are:—

(1) The amount of remission in the current demand.

(2) The question of arrears and debts—It is clear that if a person cannot pay the full demand even after remission from this, he obviously cannot pay up his arrears and debts. This obvious conclusion has not been accepted by the government The result is that the remission itself is of no value.

2 See ante, item 70, enclosure.

(3) The question of ejectments—A large number of tenants who are ejected are in a deplorable state and something must be done to give them back their lands.

(4) Local calamities—The last rains have spoilt and sometimes ruined the harvest and the crops in a large number of districts. This makes it even more difficult for the tenants to pay. The government however say that unless 50 per cent loss is caused in an area, they must ignore it.

All these difficulties have to be faced by the tenant and it seems to be patent enough that he must succumb unless someone goes to his help.

Remissions are primarily assessed by the fall in prices. This fall is estimated at 55 per cent. To this has to be added the rise in the cost of production which might be down at a minimum of 10 per cent. This brings up the figure to 65 per cent. In the Allahabad district the remissions actually given amount to about 17 per cent. The discrepancy between the figure corresponding to the fall in prices and the actual figure is obvious. When we add to this the numerous difficulties caused by the last six months' forcible collections we will get some idea of the state of the tenantry and their inability to meet the present demand The provincial committee was very much perturbed by this but it felt that another effort should be made to seek relief from the government and a special sub-committee was appointed for this purpose.

A conference has already taken place between Congress representatives and officials regarding the Allahabad district. This related to the district only. I don't wish to say anything about this conference at this stage. An effort is now being made by Mr. Sherwani, the president of our provincial Congress committee, to arrange a conference with the local government to consider the whole agrarian situation in the province. As to what action the provincial committee will take depends on the result of this conference.

Allahabad has been mentioned repeatedly in this respect. This does not mean that Allahabad is the worst sufferer. As a matter of fact all the districts in Oudh are in many respects worse off than Allahabad and there are many districts in the Agra province which are as bad or even worse than Allahabad.

The second resolution passed by the P.C.C. relates to the arrests of Congress workers and to the use of Section 144 to prevent our workers from speaking. Some of our most prominent workers have been proceeded against. Only this week one of the members of our Council, Seth Damodar Swaroop, who was being proceeded against under security section refused to give an undertaking pending a trial and was not only arrested but an attempt was made to handcuff him in the court.

In some districts a new device is being resorted to. Goondas and hooligans are engaged, to our knowledge, at the instigation or even directly by petty officials in order to break up Congress meetings. Last week in Bareilly district some of these goondas came to a meeting. They used drums, and what is worse, they forcibly pushed about people including speakers and the chairman of the meeting. They even tried to gag them by tying pieces of cloth round their mouths.

In one place a number of dancing girls were brought and were made to dance right near the meeting place. Sometimes all the local papers are threatened not to print any Congress notices in them. Only the other day I was to have spoken in a big cinema hall in Bareilly but the kotwal of the place threatened the owner of the cinema, so much so that he withdrew permission to use the hall. These are just recent instances. It is obvious that an attempt is being made by a number of district officials to prevent Congress activities and to weaken the Congress organisation especially in rural areas. I do not know how far this has the backing of the provincial government.

Our position is really difficult on account of the Delhi Settlement.

74. Interview to the Press[1]

While we are still trying our best to get relief for the peasants through the government and are prepared to meet them and discuss the matter with them, the Congress has advised the peasantry of the Allahabad district to withhold payment of rent and revenue pending the negotiations, which have not yet ended.[2] If relief comes, of course we shall advise the tenantry to abide by the settlement; and there will be no

1 Calcutta, 17 November 1931. The Hindu, 20 November 1931.

2. The U.P.P.C.C. resolution of 15 November 1931 said that the tenant had no alternative but to withhold rent temporarily till the negotiations with the government had been concluded.

question of any no-tax campaign. Otherwise there seems to be no other alternative. So far, this advice has been given to the Allahabad district only but the conditions in many other districts are also very bad, and it is possible that the example of Allahabad might be followed elsewhere. This no-tax movement is a purely economic one, and not political as such, though of course we realise that it might affect the political situation. It is a movement which clearly comes within the terms of the Simla Agreement of August 27, where it is laid down that, if relief is not obtained, it will be open to the Congress to start defensive action. We have tried our utmost to avoid such action. Even though we could see that the condition of the peasantry was becoming worse and worse, we wanted to wait till Mahatmaji returned; but the new season, with its prospect of coercive processes being started afresh against the tenantry, made it impossible for us to wait any longer. The U.P. Congress Committee would have been false to the U.P. peasantry, if it had not stood by them at this hour of crisis.[1]

75. To Vallabhbhai Patel[2]

November 21st, 1931

My dear Vallabhbhai,

I am sorry I have not been able to write to you about the agrarian situation here. As you have noticed in the press, certain developments have taken place. The P.C.C., I take it, will write to you direct and send you a copy of their resolution. I enclose copies of three letters which have passed between Sherwani and Jagdish Prasad, Chief Secretary.[2]

As you know the time for collection of rent had come and it became imperative for us to give some advice. The advice given is that pending negotiations payment should not be made. I am afraid there is little chance of any compromise. The no-tax movement will thus have

1 AICC File No G-180/1931, p 14, NMML.

2 On 12 November 1931 Sherwani wrote to the Chief Secretary that the sanctioned rent remissions were inadequate, that arrears should be withdrawn and that the land should be restored to the evicted tenants. The Chief Secretary replied on 17 November that the suggestions were impracticable. On 20 November Sherwani wrote again that the tenants saw no alternative but to withhold payment of rent.

WITH CONGRESS WORKERS AT ALLAHABAD, 1931

AT ALLAHABAD DISTRICT KISANS CONFERENCE, 25 NOVEMBER 1931

to be continued. The consequences will necessarily be grave. It was probably in this connection that the Viceroy had suddenly come to Lucknow. There is a rumour that a number of arrests will take place soon.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

76. To Khan Sahib[1]

November 23rd, 1931

My dear Khan,
Thank you for your letter of the 16th. I am very glad to read that some of the information I have received was inaccurate.[2] I have no doubt that you and Abdul Ghaffar Khan were working along right lines but I was afraid that some of your colleagues might not do so, and so I ventured to write fully and frankly on the subject. Your letter has removed my doubts.

We are getting involved in a no-tax campaign here owing to the economic distress. It is possible that many of us may be arrested before long. Whether we are arrested or not, rest assured that we shall think of our comrades in the Frontier province frequently and with the confidence that whenever the time may come they will play a brave and leading part in the struggle for freedom.

With all good wishes,

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal

1 AICC File No P-17/1931, p. 7, NMML.
2 Jawaharlal had been told that communal slogans and flags other than the national flag were being used in the Frontier province. Khan Sahib denied these charges.

77. Address to Kisans[1]

The Congress has been making efforts to secure relief to the tenants but the efforts had hitherto proved futile. In 1338 Fasli some remissions were announced but they were utterly inadequate. The Congress often thought whether the time had not come to start satyagraha in view of the tenants' sufferings, but it continued to tolerate the situation. The Congress can wait even now but it has become impossible to do so on account of the acute distress caused by the fall in prices to the extent of 9 annas in the rupee, and remissions being given only to the extent of about 2 annas 7 pies in the rupee for the year 1339 Fasli.

In the preceding year you had a bitter experience because you paid on Congress advice even more than you could pay. Still you were ejected and harassed. In view of such a bitter experience the Congress would not advise payments nor can any reliance be placed on the rumours that the tahsildars were going about informing the tenants that no arrears need be paid this year.

Negotiations for a settlement are still proceeding and the district Congress committee acting on the advice of the council of the provincial Congress committee has asked the tenants to withhold payments pending negotiations. We do not desire that a fight should be resumed until all hopes of a settlement have disappeared. Till now no satisfactory reply has come from the government on the demand for relief beyond their doing things which could only lead to trifling results. The question which the district committee faces is whether it should call upon the tenants to pay the rents or start satyagraha.

While the tenants have been advised by the district committee to withhold payments pending negotiations, a tenants' conference has been convened by the committee on November 24 and at that conference you would be called upon to decide for yourselves whether you should pay or start a no-rent campaign.

Though Congressmen are ready to suffer with the tenants the real burden of the no-rent campaign, if it is started, would fall on you. You should, therefore, take a decision after profound deliberations and thought. Not being a tenant myself, I hesitate to give definite advice to you on this question but I must say that the time for begging has gone and the only effective weapon for the settlement of the question is, to my mind, satyagraha.

1. Sadabad in Allahabad district, 23 November 1931. From The Leader, 25 November 1931.

78. To the Kisans[1]

The present zamindari system in India is most detrimental to peasants. Land is considered to be the property of the zamindars. The zamindar does not work on his land but enjoys its fruits sitting at home. He gives his land to the peasants on rent and is always on the look out for extracting as much rent as he possibly can. It is my belief that the land should belong to the person who tills it and not to the zamindar or taluqdar.

We should also try to have Swaraj in our country—not of the capitalist but of the poor and the peasants. If Swaraj means that the Britishers should leave India, and the capitalists, the rajas, and the maharajas should come in their place, the lot of the peasantry cannot be improved. You should therefore take up the campaign of Swaraj in your hands. The present day zamindars and taluqdars are in fact a burden on the country. They do nothing, nor do they produce anything but they fill up their stomachs all right. The taluqdars and zamindars are just leeches attacking the body of the Indian peasants.

1. Home Department (Political) File No. 7/13/34 of 1934, National Archives of India. Translation of a Hindi leaflet over Jawaharlal's signature which was distributed in Ajmer Merwara at Pushkar fair on 23 November 1931.

79. No Half-way Settlement[1]

The Congress has been doing its best for the past several months to improve the condition of the tenants. To me the question of remissions is a petty one. There are millions of people—peasants—starving and homeless, and the question before me is of their life and death. So far the door for negotiations was open and the government could have a settlement but if the government wanted to offer any threat then it should consider the door for negotiations closed. During the last eight months the Congress did its best to effect a settlement on the agrarian question. It was ready to accept a settlement if it brought prosperity to peasants. The question of 2 annas or 3 annas remission was a petty one. If we are to die, we shall die after a fight. I do not want a half-way settlement or a half-way fight.

1. From The Leader, 27 November 1931. This is a report of the speech at the kisans conference in Allahabad on 25 November 1931.

At the meeting of the subjects committee the tenants regarded the resolution under discussion as a very mild one and they wanted to resolve to stop the payment altogether. The negotiations have almost completely failed and therefore they could resolve to start satyagraha or no-rent campaign. But the appropriate thing to say from the side of the tenants or the Congress is that they will withhold payment until their demands are accepted and they will be ready for a compromise the moment they are accepted.

I really wonder how the tenants could have suffered so much. The awakening which is created in them now should have been created 50 years ago. I feel that if the fire of satyagraha is fully lit up the kisans' miseries would disappear in that fire and the kisans and the country would then be free.

80. To Vallabhbhai Patel[1]

November 26th, 1931

My dear Vallabhbhai,

I have received copies of your letters to Emerson and the letter you received from Ram Gopal of Fatehpur, together with your reply to it. I am glad you wrote to Emerson. I am afraid the die is cast and there is no hope of any arrangement being arrived at in the near future. The U.P.P.C.C. office which has shifted to Allahabad are sending you copies of recent correspondence between the Chief Secretary and Sherwani. Yesterday there was a very successful kisan conference of Allahabad peasants. It confirmed the decision of the D.C.C. withholding payment of rent and revenue. I enclose the resolution passed by it. I expect government action to suppress this movement very soon.

1. A.I.C.C. File No. G-160/1931(Pt. I), pp. 50-51, N.M.M.L.

Regarding Bans Gopal's letter it was highly improper of him to write to you and not even to tell you what the P.C.C. had decided regarding municipal and district board elections. The P.C.C. has resolved that no office-bearer or member of any executive committee of the Congress in the province including district and tahsil executives can stand for election to municipal and district boards. This is positive and clear enough. Naturally many aspirants for municipal honours are greatly disappointed but the P.C.C. will stick to its decision and take disciplinary action where necessary. It is absurd to talk of satyagraha and municipality in the same breath.

I am not likely to see Bapu when he returns. I am beginning to doubt if any of you will see him. I also doubt greatly if the Puri Congress will come off.

I wrote to you about the Bengal Provincial Conference. I am getting telegrams from them insisting on my going. I cannot make up my mind. Perhaps circumstances will decide for me. It appears that Rajendra Babu is ill and cannot go. My present intention is to go to two U.P. districts—Unao and Farrukhabad on the 29th and 30th. On the 5th December we have a meeting of the Council of our P.C.C. at Lucknow. If I am free I should like to go to Hubli, Bagalkot and Poona to visit the Seva Dal headquarters and camps. If you are in Bombay I shall of course visit Bombay. But all this is vague and undecided. During Christmas week the U.P. Provincial Conference meets at Etawah.

It is very likely that the agrarian satyagraha will rapidly spread to at least half a dozen other districts. It will of course affect the whole province.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

81. To Syed Mahmud[1]

27.11.31

My dear Mahmud,
I have had no news from or of you for a long time—except for the birthday letter. I have no idea of what you have been doing. Have you forgotten the A.I.C.C. office? I have been pretty busy. Probably very soon—within a few days—I shall be removed from my sphere of activity.

1 Syed Mahmud Papers, N.M.M.L.

I have appointed temporarily an assistant secretary of the A.I.C.C. to act in the office here. His name is Madan Mohan Gaur. He is an M.A. of Allahabad (a recent one) and honours in Hindi and Urdu. He was on the staff of Today. He is doing his work well and deals with a great deal of the correspondence. He will be able to carry on with the routine work in my absence. If I am arrested will you be able to give some time to the office?

Kamala has had a strenuous time and has not been well. Today she developed high fever—probably malarial. I hope she will get over this in a day or two but she requires rest.

Love,

Yours affly.,
Jawahar

82. To Private Secretary to Viceroy[1]

28/11/31

Dear Mr. Mieville,

I am sorry to inform you that all our efforts to secure an honourable compromise for the unfortunate tenantry have failed to achieve any substantial result and we have been compelled to advise the peasantry in Allahabad district to withhold payment of rent and revenue till relief is obtained. I trust you will convey my deep regrets to His Excellency that we should have had to adopt this course. But I can assure him that we tried our utmost to avoid it and to find a way out of the difficulty.

Under the circumstances my colleagues feel that we should publish the correspondence which we have had with the U.P. Government on the subject so that the public may know what steps we took in the matter. If His Excellency has no objection I should like to add to these letters which are being published the letter I addressed to you dated 16th October and your reply to it.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 AICC File No. G-25/1931, pp. 1-2, N.M.M.L.

83. To Krishna Chandra[1]

November 28th, 1931

Dear Friend,[2]
I have your letter.[3] I do not know what advice you expect me to give you. We have almost passed the stage of writing to the government and protesting. If you are prepared for stronger action go ahead. You must be following what is happening in Allahabad. Many other districts are likely to act similarly. It is for your committee to decide what it should do under these circumstances.

I am forwarding your letter to the provincial Congress committee.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. A.I.C.C. File No. P-21/1931, p. 45, N.M.M.L.
2. General Secretary, Mathura District Congress Committee.
3. Krishna Chandra had sought permission to start satyagraha in Mathura district.

84. To Vallabhbhai Patel[1]

December 1st, 1931

My dear Vallabhbhai,
I returned to Allahabad today after a short tour in the rural areas. I have received your telegram about Bapu's programme. I have also received your two letters dated 27th and your letter of the 28th November as well as the copies of letters to and from Emerson and the confirmation order on the appointment of Madan Mohan Gaur. Thanks.

I have seen your interview in today's papers regarding the U.P. agrarian situation. Your letter to Emerson and your interview are in line with our last letter to the U.P. Government.[2] No reply has been received to our last communication. Sherwani has addressed the U.P. Chief Secretary asking him if he has any objection to the publication of the correspondence.[3] I have also written to the Private Secretary of the Viceroy on this subject. May I know if we can publish your correspondence with Emerson on this subject?

1. A.I.C.C. File No. G 60/1931 (Pt. I), pp. 33-34, N.M.M.L.

Regarding the Working Committee it is a little difficult to advise. I am inclined to think that developments will make an emergent meeting of the Committee necessary long before Bapu comes. Perhaps it would be as well to write to all members to hold themselves in readiness for such a meeting and not to fix a date now. As soon as you feel it necessary to call a meeting you might do so. I am sending to you a telegram accordingly. So far as I am concerned I am not making any fresh engagements. My present engagements are: Karnatak 2 or 3 days from the 15th onwards and the Christmas week for the U.P. Conference. But even all of these are of course subject to developments and if summoned by you for the Working Committee I shall come regardless of all other engagements.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

2. In his press interview Vallabhbhai Patel had said: "I would certainly tell the U.P. Congress Committee to suspend their resolution advising the peasants to temporarily withhold payments of rents if I knew that on the other side the collection of rents would be suspended pending the result of further discussion." On 28 November 1931 Vallabhbhai Patel wrote to the Home Secretary that "the government should postpone its recovery work for a short while and the Congress should suspend its resolution." T. A. K. Sherwani in his letter of 25 November 1931 had suggested to the government that the advice to the kisans of Allahabad district could be withdrawn only if the collection of rent was stopped while discussions were going on.
3. On 5 December 1931, the correspondence exchanged since 15 October between the government and the Congress leaders was published in a pamphlet. It was meant to establish that the Congress was in no hurry to resort to satyagraha in U.P. without exploring other means to solve the agrarian problem.

85. To Vallabhbhai Patel[1]

December 4th, 1931

My dear Vallabhbhai,

I have your letter of the 30th. The situation in the U.P. is developing rapidly. Today's paper contains the news that a special ordinance for the U.P. will come out very soon. Day before yesterday Sherwani received another letter from the Chief Secretary. There was nothing new in this. It was a repetition of the statement that in view of the U.P. Council decision to advise suspension of payment, government have to withhold their offer made previously. As a matter of fact no definite offer was made by government at any stage and hence there could be no withdrawal of it. All that government have stated was that they were not prepared to discuss any of the real and important matters. All that they could do was to discuss individual applications of their formula and individual cases of hardship. We had pointed out that this limited scope would not help. But even so we were prepared to discuss any matter big or small. Our object was to gain sufficient relief whatever the method might be. Sherwani has sent a reply on these lines.

The U.P.P.C.C. is bringing out today a printed pamphlet containing the correspondence with the government. They are not giving the whole correspondence of the truce period as this would be too voluminous. They have begun from the 15th October when the question of remissions for the current season was raised by the Allahabad D.C.C. Your letters to Emerson are included as also my letter to the Private Secretary to the Viceroy. I wrote to the Private Secretary for permission to publish and his reply has come that the Viceroy has no objection. We have also given sufficient notice of publication to the U.P. Government and they have raised no objection. We have not heard from you about the publication of your letters to Emerson and his replies. I hope under the circumstances we can presume this permission.

Copies of the printed correspondence will be sent to you, I hope, by this evening. They will also be sent to all the A.I.C.C. members and provincial committees and the press.

1 AICC File No. G 60/1931(Pt. I), pp. 24 25, N.M.M.L.

I am at present on my way to Benares to attend the closing ceremony of an instructors camp of the Seva Dal. I return to Allahabad today and leave for Lucknow after a few hours. Tomorrow we have a meeting of our provincial council in Lucknow to consider further recent developments. I shall return to Allahabad on the 6th evening and shall remain there for 7th and 8th. On the 9th I visit a neighbouring district. On the 10th I have been summoned to appear as a witness in M. N. Roy's case at Cawnpore.

I note that 15th has been fixed by you for the opening function of the women's central camp. I shall try to reach Bombay on the 15th morning. From there I shall go on to Hubli, Bagalkot and Poona. Probably I shall return to Bombay by the 20th. In view of the situation it will be very difficult for me to remain away from the U.P. for several days more. I shall therefore return to Allahabad even though I have to go back to Bombay the same week. As I have told you our provincial conference meets at Etawah during the Christmas week. This clashes with Bapu's arrival. I should like your advice as to what I should do—whether I should attend the early part of the conference and then go to Bapu or meet Bapu first and dash back to be present at the later stages of the conference.

Kamala has been ill and bed-ridden for the last six days. She has apparently got malarial fever. This is bad enough and she has grown very weak. What is worse is that she is fretting greatly that at this time of crisis she should be unable to do anything. I shall try to bring her with me to Bombay. But all these plans are in the lap of the gods and may be we shall not have to worry ourselves too much about them.

With all good wishes,

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

86. To Vallabhbhai Patel[1]

December 7th, 1931

My dear Vallabhbhai,
I returned last evening from Lucknow after our council meeting. Your letter of December 1st awaited me.[2] I am afraid the correspondence had already been published as you know. If we had felt that you wanted postponement of publication I would certainly have asked the U.P.P.C.C. people to do so. But with ordinances in the air the P.C.C. felt that they should place all the letters before the public as soon as possible. So far as the P.C.C. letters are concerned they do not bar the door at all and the publication need not be looked upon as an aggressive step. I am inclined to think that people will realise that our attitude has all along been conciliatory.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal

1 A.I.C.C. File No G 60/1931(Pt. I), p. 13, N.M.M.L.
2 Vallabhbhai Patel had written: "I strongly suggest to you to hold over the publication of the correspondence until the government takes some definite aggressive action"

87. On the U.P. Ordinance[1]

The full text of the new U.P. ordinance has not reached us yet but the extracts that have appeared in the press are enough to make us appreciate and admire the thoroughness with which the job has been done by the government.[2]

1. Statement to the press, Lucknow, 17 December 1931. From The Hindu, 18 December 1931.
2 The U.P. Instigation and Emergency Powers Ordinance of 14 December 1931 made it an offence to advise peasants not to pay rent, empowered the government to detain supected persons, take over property, control transport and impose community fines on the residents of any locality where Congress activities were noticed.

What was sought to be done in the name of violence in Bengal[3] has been done openly to crush an admittedly peaceful movement in the U.P. The whole press of India is made to suffer for the sins of the U.P. Congress Committee, and reversing the biblical concept, the sins of the children shall be visited on their fathers and guardians.[4] It is not for an individual like me to say much at this stage regarding the ordinance.

The answer to it will, no doubt, be given by the Working Committee and the U.P.P.C.C. at the proper time.

It is interesting to note that the government issued the ordinance almost at the exact hour when Gandhiji sailed from Europe.

It is stated that the U.P. Government has attached a very lengthy apologia to the ordinance. A long apology was no doubt needed to explain away the mess which the government had made of the agrarian situation. I shall hold myself in patience till the eleven and half pages of printed foolscap, which the U.P. Government has hurled on an unfortunate public, reach me.

But what little of it has already appeared in the press makes it clear that the U.P. Government's statement is full of false statements and mendacious propaganda. Copious extracts are given from circulars and private letters which the government pilfered in transit.

We have nothing to hide but it is interesting to note how government have been behaving in regard to private correspondence even during the period of truce.

The government state that we started the no-tax movement five days after the Delhi Pact.[5] This is an absolutely false statement and anyone who has been following developments since March must know it is so. We have openly and publicly tried to strengthen our Congress organisation, to train volunteers and to keep ready for all emergencies. No

3. The Bengal ordinance promulgated on 30 November 1931 enabled the government to arrest not only those who committed or were about to commit certain offences, but also those who might be members of terrorist associations or be helping such bodies. It vested special tribunals with extraordinary powers regarding procedure and passing of sentences.

4. Under the ordinance realisation from parents and guardians of money due from their sons and wards was made lawful.

5. The Viceroy wrote to the Secretary of State on 26 December 1931: "The Delhi Pact at all events is dead and gone, murdered by Jawaharlal Nehru and Abdul Ghaffar. Edward Irwin certainly made a great and gallant effort, but it has proved unsuccessful and further proved that, as long as it lasted, it was a great handicap to government in its administration and an enormous advantage to Congress in promoting their activities."

secret was made of this and it is amazing that anyone could imagine that to weaken and wither away before our object was achieved. But so far as the no tax movement was concerned, there was no question of it till last October when the new demands for the current Fasli year were announced.

Previous to this we went out of our way to induce the peasantry to pay what they could, although we saw with anguish the sufferings of the agriculturists. Even when the new demands were decided upon without any reference to the peasantry or the Congress, we tried our utmost to find a way out by writing to and offering to meet the representatives of the local government. But they were adamant and did not even agree to meet our representatives.

Some of the recent correspondence has been recently published by us. We would welcome the publication of the whole correspondence from the very beginning. The report published by the U.P.P.C.C. on agrarian distress in the U.P. deals with our difficulties and our attempts to find a solution and I trust everyone interested in the question will read it.

The U.P. Government refer to 'revolting and obscene propaganda' on behalf of the Congress. Apparently this refers to our giving publicity after the fullest enquiry to cases of barbarous assaults on women perpetrated in attempting to realise rents forcibly. I entirely agree that they were 'revolting and obscene'. Many of my esteemed colleagues and I myself inquired into the matter in as public a way as possible and found that the charges were justified.

We repeatedly requested government either to accept our facts or to have impartial enquiry, but they did neither. They have avoided the truth and, ostrich-like tried to ignore it as it was not pleasant to see, and now they have the temerity to accuse us of giving publicity to it. If they really believe in what they say let them even now, late as it is, have an impartial enquiry.

Reference was made to these incidents in the charge-sheet, published by Gandhiji.

We are accused of fomenting violence. This is an amazing charge. There has been a vast deal of violence but nearly all has been against and at the expense of the poor tenantry. Occasionally some tenants, under great provocation, retaliated and suffered for it. But I make bold to say that there is no instance anywhere of an agrarian movement on such a vast scale and accompanied by so much suffering and repression remaining peaceful to such a remarkable extent. This has solely been due to our insistence on nonviolence. The lesson has been well learnt by the millions.

We are further charged with proclaiming to the tenants that we are out to establish a Peasants' and Workers' Republic and to expropriate wholly the landlords. I am a socialist and my views are well known, but the statements attributed to me are entirely wrong so far as I am concerned and even more so, in so far as they apply to the Congress. There has been no reference to expropriation in the sense referred to. We have often stated that the Swaraj we were working for was a 'Panchayati Raj' in which all would have equal rights. That is a phrase which is easily understood by every peasant.

It is not possible for me to deal with all the wrong statements made in the U.P. Government's lengthy note, that we humble Congress workers of the U.P. have been accused of in common with Mahatma Gandhi and Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel and we are well content to remain in that company.

88. Interview to the Press[1]

Question: Will you return to Bombay to welcome Gandhiji?

Jawaharlal Nehru: I have every intention of returning to Bombay to welcome Gandhiji. I am going tonight to Allahabad to attend the provincial political conference to be held at Etawah this week-end.

Q: Do you intend disobeying the order under Section 144, Cr. P.C. if it is served on you?

JN: Oh! I cannot say what I shall do if a certain hypothetical situation arises. I shall have to decide on the spot having regard to all circumstances

Q: Does the ordinance allow the holding of a conference?

JN: I am not aware of anything which prevents holding of a conference. In this connection I might tell you that the policy of the U.P. Congress Committee is that we should carry on our ordinary work in spite of any obstruction that may be placed in our way. We are not at present going to disobey the law for the sake of disobedience but if any order or ordinance interferes with our ordinary activities then our workers have been advised to carry on those activities in spite of such an order or ordinance.

Q: Will the provincial political conference discuss the no-rent question?

1. Bombay, 21 December 1931. From The Tribune, 23 December 1931.

JN: As usual the annual conference will discuss all the current problems, and it is, therefore, bound to discuss the no-rent question also.

I am sure to come back to Bombay as I am leaving my wife behind in Bombay.

89. To Vallabhbhai Patel[1]

December 23rd, 1931

My dear Vallabhbhai,

I enclose copies of various papers for your information. I propose to start for Bombay on the 26th morning reaching there on the 27th morning. But of course all this is problematic. We are having police raids in all our Congress offices in the city and district and landlords are being coerced into giving us notices.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 AICC File No G 60(1)/1931, p 1, NMML.

90. Telegram to Vallabhbhai Patel[1]

In view new situation[2] provincial Council decided postpone provincial conference to date after Working Committee meeting so as to have advantage of Working Committee's advice on general situation. Sherwani and I propose starting for Bombay twenty sixth morning to welcome Bapu back and attend Working Committee meeting.

Jawaharlal

1 23 December 1931 A.I.C.C. File No. P-21/1931, p. 19, N.M.M.L.
2. The U.P. Government had told the U.P.P.C.C. that nothing should be said or done in the Etawah Conference scheduled for 22 December 1931 to further the no rent campaign The Council and the U.P.P.C.C, in view of Mahatma Gandhi's return to India on 28 December and the meeting of the Working Committee soon after it, postponed the conference.

91. To District Magistrate, Allahabad[1]

December 23rd, 1931

Dear Sir,

On arrival at Chheoki last night I received a notice signed by you purporting to be an order under Section 5 of the U.P. Emergency Power Ordinance of 1931. I am desired in this notice to restrict my activities in a variety of ways and to refrain from leaving the municipal limits of Allahabad without your sanction or that of the superintendent of police I should like to inform you that I am not in the habit of taking orders from anyone except the great organisation of which I have the honour to be a member. It is for the Indian National Congress to order me and I recognise no other authority. It appears to be your desire to make me a virtual prisoner in Allahabad town and to cut me off from my friends and colleagues and prevent me from carrying out the duties which have been entrusted to me. I cannot agree to any limitations to my activities much less can I submit to anything that interferes with my work as the General Secretary of the All India Congress Committee and as an office bearer or member of other committees and boards. So long as I am physically capable of doing so, I shall endeavour to do justice to the work with which I have been charged.

I should like to inform you therefore that I propose to carry on all my usual activities without seeking any permission from you or the superintendent of police. In particular I have to inform you that I shall leave Allahabad whenever any work demands my presence elsewhere. Within two or three days I propose to go to Bombay to meet Mahatma Gandhi and to attend a meeting of the Working Committee of the Congress.

I should further like to make it clear that I shall continue to give publicity to my views in regard to any matter whenever I think it desirable to do so. As it has often happened that the provincial government and the district authorities of Allahabad have given publicity to false and misleading statements in regard to facts, I shall place the truth before the public whenever the necessity for this may arise.

As I can only accept the decisions of the Congress in regard to my public work I am prepared to place, should you so desire it, any communication from you or your government before the Working Committee of the All India Congress Committee or the Council of the U.P. Provincial Congress Committee for their directions.

1. J N Prison Papers, 1931 32, N M M L

I should like to point out that your notice asking me not to leave the municipal limits of Allahabad was served outside these limits. It is not quite clear to me how I was supposed to confine myself to Allahabad town when I was actually many miles away from it at the time of service of notice.

I shall be glad if you will kindly take the trouble to write my name correctly in any communication that you might send me.[2]

I am sending a copy of this letter to the press

Yours faithfully,
Jawaharlal Nehru

2 He had spelt the name as "Jawahir Lall Nehru".

GENERAL SECRETARY
A.I.C.C.

SWADESHI MOVEMENT

1. Circular to P.C.Cs[1]

Allahabad
April 8th, 1931

Dear Comrades,
On my assuming charge of the secretaryship of the A.I.C.C, permit me to send you and our other comrades my greetings.[2] After a year of direct action we have for a while changed our methods of work and have to concentrate on the less ostentatious, but none the less important work of organisation and constructive effort. We may have to face direct action again before long and must therefore prepare ourselves for it. Our office will be happy to give you every assistance in its power in this work of organisation and preparation....

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. A I C C. File No. P-1/1931, pp. 153 155, N M.M L. Extracts.
2. After relinquishing presidentship of the Congress, Jawaharlal became one of the three General Secretaries from April 1931 and was in charge of general administration

2. To Vallabhbhai Patel[1]

Allahabad
April 8, 1931

My dear Vallabhbhai,
I have just arrived here. I am taking immediate steps to issue some circulars containing various directions to the provincial Congress committees and others. Copies of these circulars will be sent to you as well as to Jairamdas.

1 A I C C File No G 40(KW)(iv)/1931, pp 313-315, N M M L.

I enclose a letter from Nargis Captain.[2] In this letter she proposes that a committee of Jairamdas and two others including her brother Jal Naoroji might be appointed to consider all questions relating to the mills The proposal seems to me to be a reasonable one. A local committee in Bombay would deal immediately with a variety of questions. Continual reference to some one in another city delays matters. It would be better for you to nominate a small local committee which would function under the larger committee rather than to leave the matter to the Bombay P.C.C. This need not be interpreted by the Bombay P.C.C. as a slight on it. The question of exemptions etc. of the mills is an all India question and it is right that it should be dealt with independently of a provincial organisation.

It was a pity that Shankarlal's proposal for a large council or committee to deal with swadeshi concerns and the like was not passed in Karachi and was postponed. I hope that this council will be formed at the next meeting of the Working Committee and that it will contain some good people outside the Working Committee. You and Jairamdas should be ex officio members of it No other Working Committee member need belong to it.

We have to face all manner of difficulties here both owing to the Hindu-Muslim tension and the zamindar-tenant question. I shall try to do what I can in the course of the next few days. The tenants are being arrested under Sec. 107 and large numbers of them have been beaten and ill treated. Some local Mohamadans during our absence from Allahabad made a proposal that Prabhat Pheris[3] should be stopped as they interfered with morning prayers. Kailas Nath Katju apparently agreed for a few days with the strange result that some of our Mohamadan groups of volunteers have had to stop their morning rounds because they interfered with prayers. This is a novel demand. However I do not think anything much is likely to happen in Allahabad in spite of the tension. There is of course always some element of risk. The Bakr-Id comes in a fortnight's time and soon after, the Moharrum. I have arranged to address meetings daily in the Muslim mohallas from this evening onwards.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal

2 Grand-daughter of Dadabhai Naoroji.

3. Early morning rounds of Congressmen and their sympathisers singing national songs.

3. Circular to P.C.Cs[1]

Allahabad
June 18th, 1931

Dear Comrades,

I hope to send you soon the resolutions of the Working Committee passed in Bombay.[2] But I should like to draw your special attention immediately to a resolution regarding the boycott of foreign cloth. The committee has repeatedly stated that there can be no relaxation of this boycott and it is not open to any provincial or local Congress committee to make any arrangements permitting the sale of old stocks or in any way countenancing a relaxation even for a period. The Working Committee has again laid stress on this and further it has declared that if any provincial or local committee comes to any arrangement with foreign cloth dealers or others infringing the boycott or the directions issued by the committee in regard to it, the President of the A.I.C.C. will take disciplinary action against such committee. In particular, I should like you to note that on no account and under no circumstances can permission be given for the sale or purchase of any foreign cloth or foreign yarn even though this may belong to old stocks Any arrangement made contrary to this cannot stand and must be set aside.

The Congress policy is clear and unambiguous. We stand for the complete boycott of foreign cloth and yarn and we can only give this advice to all buyers and sellers. Where this advice is disregarded it is open to us to picket peacefully. Picketing may however depend on a variety of considerations and it is for the local committee to consider when and in what manner it should be undertaken. But whether there is picketing or not the Congress policy and advice remains the same.

Occasionally it has come to our notice that Congress committees come to agreements with cloth dealers under which the latter promise not to buy or sell foreign cloth for a period, which may be a year or six months. Such agreements for a period should not be made on behalf of the Congress because our programme of boycott is not for a year only. When such agreements are made there is always dissatisfaction at the end of the period and the cloth dealers feel that they are justified in selling foreign cloth then. It is therefore desirable to make it perfectly clear to all concerned that our boycott is not limited to any period. Of course it is open to any dealer in cloth to say in writing that he will not deal in foreign cloth for a period. We can accept this pledge and can refrain from picketing his shop so long as he honours his pledge. But the period mentioned in his pledge cannot bind the Congress. This should be made clear.

1. A.I.C.C. File No. P 1/1931, p. 127, N.M.M.L.
2. They related to (1) disapproval of certifying the products of a particular mill or the cloth in a shop as "purely Indian material" (2) picketing of foreign cloth shops and (3) formation of a board to prepare a directory of swadeshi goods other than cloth.

Please also note that the Working Committee does not approve of the certification by Congress committees of any shops dealing in cloth or in swadeshi goods generally The Committee has decided to start a Central Swadeshi Board which will issue a directory of swadeshi goods.

Kindly inform your local committees of the contents of this circular so that they may not, under a misapprehension, act in a way which might lead to disciplinary action.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

4. To Secretary, Dhariwal Woollen Mills[1]

June 24th, 1931

Dear Sir,

As you are aware the management of your mill having agreed to make the declaration[2] required by us your mill was placed on the approved list of mills prepared by the All India Congress Committee. In the declaration it is stated that no person connected with the management of the mills will engage himself in propaganda hostile to the national movement or participate in any activity organised voluntarily or at the instance or on behalf of the British Government in India in opposition to the movement.

1. A I C C. File No G 177/1931, p. 201, N M M.L.
2. The mills accepting the Congress conditions for not being boycotted had to declare (1) that they had sympathy for national aspirations (2) that not less than 75 per cent of the share capital was held by Indians and 60 per cent of the directors were Indians (3) that there was no foreign interest in the firm and the partners of the firm were not interested in foreign insurance and import trade and (4) that the mill would assist in propaganda for swadeshi and safeguard Indian interests.

I am given to understand that sometime back some of your employees were dismissed because they came to work with "Gandhi" caps on their heads.[3] I do not know if this dismissal preceded the signing of the declaration by you or not. In any event the dismissal of any employee merely because he wears a white khadi cap seems extraordinary. I trust you will not penalise any one this way and that it will be quite open to any one of your employees to wear khadi should he so choose.

Yours faithfully,
Jawaharlal Nehru

3. The managing director of the British India Corporation denied this.

5. To M. Abdullah[1]

Camp Rae Bareli
June 25th, 1931

Dear Mr. Abdullah,[2]
I received your letter in Ceylon.[3] But ever since then I have been continuously on the move and hence could not reply to it. I hope you will excuse me. Even now I am on tour and cannot write to you at any length. The points you raise in your letter require full treatment. I can only deal with them briefly at present.

I agree with you in regard to the fundamental position that religion must not be allowed to interfere with politics or economics. But what is religion is a difficult thing to say. It includes a large number of social customs and conventions and modes of thought. By saying merely that we banish religion from politics we cannot do away with the habits and conventions of generations. All one can do is to develop

1. J. N. Correspondence, N.M.M.L.
2. A journalist who was associated with the Mussalman published from Calcutta.
3. In his letter of 6 May 1931 Abdullah had written that "if religion was banished from Congress offices and platforms and if Hindus and Muslims were welded together through cultural assimilation", there would be no communal problem.

an outlook which is based on a scientific and reasonable appreciation of modern conditions. So far as I am concerned I have tried to lay stress on this outlook and there are many others who have done so. I have no doubt that this outlook will grow because one cannot for long ignore existing conditions.

I do not think that it is necessary to do away with cultural differences entirely. To some extent it is bound to happen but cultural differences, if they are not antagonistic, enrich national life.

To some extent I may agree with you that Gandhiji's outlook on life is not in keeping with modern thought. But what exactly is modern thought? Almost everything that was supposed to be the basis of modern thought is today being questioned in the West and western civilization itself has largely failed. The essential thing about Gandhiji's outlook is his laying stress on the ethical and moral side of life and politics In the main I appreciate this and agree with it. So far as the Congress is concerned it has not accepted all the views of Gandhiji in regard to the social structure and Gandhiji himself has made this repeatedly clear.

Certainly the mode of living of Hindus should not be thrust on non Hindus and vice versa. I am quite sure that before long there would be a far closer approximation between the various communities in India in regard to many things and specially inter-dining and inter-marriage but what is important is approximation in thought and not the result that comes from it.

I see no great objection to people performing some social ceremonies which have been practised for long unless there is anything radically wrong about them. Gradually these ceremonies may automatically change or die out. Thus there are some things which I consider radically wrong and conducive to superstition. I would not do these in any event. There are other ceremonies and practices which though I may attach no importance to them yet I would not object to taking part in them if I was required to do so by people whom I did not wish to displease. On the occasion of my father's death there were some things personal to me which I had not approved of and which I did not do. There were others in connection with the shraddha ceremony in which I had no personal faith but I was prepared to take part in them and did take part in them because otherwise I would have caused great unhappiness to my mother and others. Besides most of these ceremonies have a dual basis—one is somewhat superstitious and the other is more or less philosophical.

Anyhow I entirely agree with you that religious principles and customs should not influence politics.

The real thing to my mind is the economic factor. If we lay stress on this and divert public attention to it we shall find automatically that religious differences recede into the background and a common bond unites different groups. The economic bond is stronger than even the national one. Working among the kisans, among peasants I have found very little difference when they have this economic bond.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

6. To Bishambhar Nath Gupta[1]

June 30th, 1931

Dear Sir,[2]
Your letter of the 27th June.[3] A list of approved and boycotted mills is being sent. This contains the pledge to be signed by mills. Any mill not signing this pledge is placed on the boycotted list. For purposes of picketing they are to be treated as if they deal in foreign cloth. Ordinarily shops dealing chiefly in foreign cloth should be picketed first but you have authority to picket shops dealing in the products of boycotted mills unless such stuffs are sealed up. Please send 4-1/2 annas in postage stamps, the cost of the directory.

Yours truly,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 A.I.C.C. File No. 177(1)(KW)1/1931, p. 369, N.M.M.L.
2. A Congressman of Farrukhabad, U.P.
3. He had asked Jawaharlal whether a mill which had not signed the swadeshi pledge but produced cloth from indigenous yarn could be boycotted and the shop selling its cloth could be picketed.

7. Reply to Muslim Cloth Dealers[1]

I regret I am unable to follow your argument when you refer to the communal question. The boycott of foreign cloth can by no stretch of imagination be considered a communal question. It is a purely economic issue destined to better the whole nation and, specially, the poorer classes who spin and card and weave and dye and perform the other operations which go to the making of cloth. The weavers being very largely Muslims benefit specially by this boycott. I am surprised to find the statement in your letter that the weaver class has suffered greatly by picketing. It is a well known fact that it is this very class which has benefited, and rightly benefited, by the campaign, and I have no doubt that if you took the trouble to visit the villages you would find the weavers prospering as they have not prospered for long years. You will find that the vast majority of these weavers use hand-spun yarn or spun by Indian mills and you ought to know that the Congress does not boycott either of these. I had not previously heard the statement made by anybody that the weavers had suffered by picketing. I was not aware even of the fact that any weaver in our town or district had ever been picketed. I shall be glad to know from you what justification you had for making this statement.

I shall also welcome your explaining to me how the economic or political interests of the Muslim masses suffer by the boycott of foreign cloth. As I am myself greatly interested in economic questions I shall be glad to be enlightened on this point.

The boycott of foreign cloth necessarily involves loss to those merchants who have carried on the foreign cloth business. But they have taken the risk deliberately when they know that for years past this question has been in the forefront and in the course of the past year it has become one of our most vital issues. I shall be glad to know, however, how this boycott is supposed to injure Muslim merchants specially in Allahabad. So far as my information goes the greatest sufferers have been the non-Muslim merchants whose stocks were far greater, but none the less most of them agreed to seal their foreign cloth. For

1. Allahabad, 30 June 1931. The Leader, 2 July 1931. On behalf of Muslim cloth dealers of Allahabad, Muhammad Hussain, an advocate of Allahabad and two others jointly wrote to the Allahabad DCC, questioning the wisdom of its plan to picket foreign cloth shops when such picketing had often led to communal riots.

the nation is greater than any individual or group and I am glad to say that many foreign cloth dealers have willingly suffered this loss for the sake of the great cause we all served.

I do not know what the unfortunate occurrences at Benares, Agra, Mirzapur and Cawnpore have to do with our peaceful picketing.[2] Our picketing is going to be perfectly peaceful without the slightest element of compulsion in it. It will be directed to the buyer, to whom our appeal will, in the main, be addressed. Those who choose to purchase foreign cloth in spite of our appeal will be perfectly free to do so. And I shall be glad if any shopkeeper will draw our attention to any indecorous behaviour on the part of our volunteers.

I have no doubt that when you consider the question on the merits, you and the other gentlemen who have signed the letter you have sent me, will agree with me that the boycott of foreign cloth has nothing whatever to do with the communal question, and that all of us can and should join wholeheartedly in making it a complete success, so that the nation may prosper and the millions of our poor, Muslims and Hindus, may have one burden at least removed from their weary shoulders.

2 It was contended in the joint letter that communal riots at these places were the result of forcing Congress decisions on the Muslims.

8. To Muhammad Hussain[1]

I am obliged to you for your letter of today's date.[2] I have read it carefully and tried to appreciate your viewpoint but I regret I have not been wholly able to do so. So far as the National Congress is concerned I can speak with a measure of authority as I have been closely associated with its working in the city and district of Allahabad, in the United Provinces and in all India. Speaking with this authority and with the experience which I possess in this connection, which, you will agree with me, must of necessity be far greater than yours, allow me to assure you that your ideas about the Congress have little to do with the facts.

1. Allahabad, 2 July 1931. The Leader, 4 July 1931.
2 It dealt with how picketing of foreign cloth affected communal relations and Muslim weavers.

It is a fact that the Congress contains a great majority of Hindus because Hindus happen to live in large numbers in this country. It is also a fact that a considerable number of Muslims have not yet identified themselves with the Congress. But everyone knows that large numbers of Muslims are in the Congress and that some Muslims are among its most distinguished and trusted leaders and counsellors. Everyone knows also that the Congress contains in its wide fold able and respected representatives of every other community in India—the Sikhs, Christians, Parsees, Jews, etc.

It will serve little purpose for me to waste my time and yours in arguing about the relative numbers or strength of the two main political groups among the Muslims today—those who style themselves nationalists and the others. That is a matter for Muslims themselves to settle and you have no doubt read the recent interesting and illuminating utterances of Dr. Ansari on the subject.[3] So far as I am concerned I can say this that it has been a proud privilege for me to be associated as a comrade-in-arms with many a Muslim friend and colleague.

The Congress has always stood for communal unity and, instead of avoiding this vital question, has put it in the forefront of its programme. As you know well, the difficulties in the way are not of the making of the Congress. But in spite of these difficulties I have no doubt that communal unity will come and nationalism will triumph in the end.

In regard to your charges of the Congress betraying our comrades of the North West Frontier Province may I suggest that you might take the opinion of these very gentlemen on the subject?

I am afraid I must again beg of you to visit certain villages inhabited by weavers before you form any opinion about their past or present condition. It is a well known fact that the machine industry was slowly but surely killing weaving as a cottage industry and throwing out of employment vast numbers of our weavers, who fall back upon the land. This and other causes resulted in the rural population of India actually increasing during the last hundred years or so, although in every other country the urban population has been increasing rapidly. It was with the coming of the noncooperation movement eleven years ago that the poor weaver got his first chance after his long neglect. And in many places, to my personal knowledge, his mud hut gave place to a brick built house.

3 On 29 June 1931 at the Bengal Nationalist Muslim Conference, M. A. Ansari had said that the Muslim League, which through official patronage was going to attend the Round Table Conference did not really represent the vast majority of Muslims in India.

As the swadeshi and hand spinning movements have advanced the weaver has prospered. Our present movement for the boycott of foreign cloth has been of great benefit to him. The great majority of weavers use yarn manufactured by Indian mills. This is encouraged by us and thus there is no question of boycott. A small number of weavers doing very fine work use foreign yarn. In theory we boycott foreign yarn but in practice we do not go to the handloom weaver who uses foreign yarn. Certainly there has not been any question of picketing him or his products. Thus the great majority of weavers who use handspun or Indian mill-spun yarn have greatly profited by our movement and the small number of weavers who use foreign yarn have also as a rule indirectly profited and have certainly not lost as a whole. If you wish to study this question, in order to arrive at correct conclusions, I shall be happy to suggest some books to you. I would also recommend your studying the statistics compiled by various government departments.

The Congress does not propose to interfere with the freedom of action of anyone. I pointed out to you in my last letter that there was no question of force or compulsion. The strength and force of the National Congress is based on the goodwill and confidence of the people of this great country. It has no armies or police forces to enforce its decisions All it can do is to appeal to all the children of this common motherland of ours. If they heed this appeal, well and good. If they do not heed it, they are free to go their several ways and there is nobody to prevent them or coerce them.

The boycott of foreign cloth is a purely economic question. It has nothing to do with the communal question; it has nothing to do, except indirectly, with Swaraj or political rights. It has everything to do with stopping a big drain from India and with raising the standard of the poor, whoever they may be. In this economic campaign all can join whatever their other differences may be.

I visited this morning every cloth dealer in the central parts of Allahabad city and I explained to them what our policy was. I am glad to say that everyone—Hindu or Muslim—whether he agreed with me wholly or not, appreciated my viewpoint. All that our volunteers were doing for the present was to plead in the street with intending purchasers to buy swadeshi cloth only. But if in spite of this appeal they wanted to buy foreign cloth they were free to do so.

You will thus see that the Congress is not forcing anything upon the Muslims or Hindus against their will. We only plead with our fellow countrymen, and I shall live in the hope that when you have thoroughly appreciated our viewpoint you will willingly offer your cooperation in this great undertaking.

9. To President, Nellore D.C.C.[1]

3/7/1931

Dear Sir,

We are in receipt of your letter without date.[2] As requested a list of mills is sent separately. Please send four annas six pies to cover its price and postage.

I am rather surprised at your questions. The Working Committee has made it perfectly clear that no compromise permitting the sale of existing stocks of foreign cloth can be entered into. I enclose a copy of the latest resolutions of the Working Committee. Subject to your not agreeing to any sale of foreign cloth, your agreement is permissible. It is however a little too comprehensive. It would be better to have a few simple clauses which can be adhered to. It would be better for you to give up some of the less necessary clauses and lay stress on immediate sealing of all foreign cloth.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 AICC. File No. G 151/1930, p 69, NMML.
2 He had asked Jawaharlal whether his committee could stop picketing the shops of dealers who would clear their stock of foreign cloth in a short time or keep it for the time being under seal

10. To Muhammad Hussain[1]

I am in receipt of your letter of the 3rd July.[2] I am afraid our correspondence is rapidly going off the rails. We started with the picketing of foreign cloth but we seem to have travelled far from that subject.

1. Allahabad, 6 July 1931. The Leader, 8 July 1931.
2. Muhammad Hussain contended that the Congress had not done anything practical to achieve Hindu Muslim unity though the question had been given great importance in the Congress programme.

You will excuse me, I hope, if I do not give any more time to this vague and general discussion of topics many of which died and were buried long ago. I am busy enough with vital and living questions.

I am glad to find that you are of opinion that a Musalman is a real democrat and a nationalist. This has all along been my opinion in regard to the numerous Muslim colleagues with whom I have been associated in the national movement. But I was afraid that those who were not so associated with us might not agree with me. Your assurance is, therefore, comforting.

11. Circular to P.C.Cs[1]

July 16th, 1931

Dear Comrade,

In view of the fact that all manner of pledges, sometimes conflicting with each other or not in consonance with the Congress policy, have been used in connection with the campaign for the exclusion of foreign cloth, the Working Committee has issued a form of a pledge which I give below. It is desirable that this identical pledge be used wherever necessary. Where pledges have already been given or taken, such pledges should be compared with this. If they are in line with the Working Committee's suggested pledge, they may be allowed to stand. But any pledge which conflicts with this, or is inconsistent with it, cannot be held to be a valid pledge.

In this connection I would again remind you that no compromise permitting the sale of any foreign cloth or yarn, even of old stock or even for a period, can be allowed.

Please communicate the new form of the pledge immediately to your district and local committees, boycott committees, picketing committees and all other organisations interested in the exclusion of foreign cloth.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 AICC File No P I/1931, p 101, NMML.

PLEDGE

Resolved that any pledge in connection with the exclusion of foreign cloth and yarn, inconsistent with the following pledge, shall be held to be invalid.

We pledge ourselves that we shall observe the following conditions so long as the Working Committee of the Congress does not give express permission by resolution to do otherwise:

1. We undertake not to purchase or sell any foreign yarn made from cotton, wool or silk or cloth manufactured from such yarn.
2. We undertake not to purchase or sell any yarn or cloth manufactured by mills that have not accepted the Congress conditions.
3. We undertake not to sell in this country any foreign yarn or silk or wool or cloth manufactured from such yarn or silk that may be lying with us.

12. To S.K. Datt Paliwal[1]

Simla
July 21st, 1931

Dear Paliwalji,

I have received your letter of the 6th July. I have no doubt that there is a good deal of room for well-conducted insurance business in our province. There is also no doubt that insurance is a field which should be developed. In particular, Industrial Insurance Companies of the kind that you seem to have in view are desirable.

Personally I have little technical knowledge of insurance to be able to offer you any helpful advice. I feel, however, that any such undertaking must be run competently and in the most efficient and up to date manner possible. We cannot afford to take risks by running any business that we start inefficiently. This naturally injures the movement for swadeshi. I trust that you will make your company an example in efficient management.

With all good wishes,

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 AICC File No. G-179/1931, p. 165, N.M.M.L.

13. To Mahavir Tyagi[1]

July 22nd, 1931

My dear Tyagi,[2]
I have your letter of the 13th July. I can realise that unless the foreign cloth market in Delhi is controlled it will be difficult to do much in the neighbouring districts. I believe picketing has been started in Delhi. We shall of course try to do our best. But remember this that our picketing and all our propaganda is ultimately meant to impress the consumer. We have succeeded already very largely in doing so. We must carry on because ultimately the success of the foreign cloth boycott will depend on the desire of the consumer to buy swadeshi only. Therefore do not mind very much if you find that your picketing is not as successful as it ought to be. Your real success lies deeper down. You are keeping an ideal before the public and educating it and that is bound to have result.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal

1. A I C C. File No. G 152/1931, p. 165, N M M.L.
2. (b. 1899); then president of Dehra Dun District Congress Committee, member, A I.C C, 1923-65, of Constituent Assembly, 1946-49, of Lok Sabha, 1952 67 and of Rajya Sabha since 1970; Union Minister of Revenue and Expenditure, 1951-53, of Defence Organisation, 1953 57, and of Rehabilitation, 1964 66, Chairman, Fifth Finance Commission, 1968-69.

14. To President, Dharwar D.C.C.[1]

27.7.31

Dear Sir,
I am informed that you have directed the Gadag Congress Committee to picket shops selling American cigarettes. Although it is desirable to carry on propaganda against all foreign goods it seems to me undesirable for you to picket any shops except those dealing in foreign cloth and liquor. This direction was sent to the Gadag Committee and I believe to you also through the Bombay P.C.C. I regret that in spite of it you have continued picketing the cigarette shops. We cannot afford to fritter away our energies at the present moment. We must concentrate on the boycott of foreign cloth and liquor. I hope you will issue necessary instructions in the matter. I am sending a copy of this letter to the president of the Gadag Congress Committee.

1. A I C C File No. G-152/1931, p. 163, N.M M L.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

15. To Shankarlal Banker[1]

21/8/31

My dear Shankarlal,[2]
I enclose a letter for you to answer.[3]
I am receiving complaints from all manner of odd places against the mills on our approved list. In particular the charge is brought that some of them are using foreign yarn. Very responsible persons in Bombay brought this charge. A frequent complaint is also that full lengths are not applied. I mentioned some of these charges to you once but you did not attach importance to them. In view however of persistent complaints I feel that something should be done to enquire into the matter.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. AICC. File No G 177/1931, p. 41, NMML
2. Then secretary, All India Spinners Association and Congress Textile Mills Exemption Committee.
3. A letter from Meerut Congress Committee complained of certain mills in the approved list not observing the conditions of the swadeshi declaration

16. To Shankarlal Banker[1]

1/9/31

Dear Sir,

I have your letters of the 26th and 28th Aug.[2]

I agree with you entirely that we should ask the mills in Indian states to limit their hours of work to ten and that we should not give them recognition till they do so.

I also agree that in case a reduction in wages is made we may have to place these mills on the boycott list. But this should be done only after every effort has been made to get them to desist from such a course.

I enclose two letters for you to dispose of.[3]

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 A.I.C.C. File No. G 177/1931, p. 23, N.M.M.L.
2 The letters complained of mills in the Indian states working more than twelve hours a day while the Congress had fixed ten hours in British India, and also of the mills which had refused to restore the reduction in wages.
3 One letter from a millowner suggested a labour policy for the consideration of the Congress and another from the Meerut Congress Committee alleged the use of foreign yarn by some mills included in the approved list.

17. Swadeshi as a Creed[1]

All of us should try to promote swadeshi and check smuggling of foreign cloth into India from Japan and elsewhere. So far, foreign cloth boycott has been an instrument of war, but now we should make it our creed under all circumstances. Our aim should not be to injure others but to benefit ourselves. Dependence on other countries leads to degeneration and it has been the cause of India's decline.

1 Delhi, 24 September 1931. From The Hindu, 25 September 1931.

18. To G.R. Khanna[1]

October 4th, 1931

Dear Sir,[2]
Your letter of the 26th September.[3]

In case a foreign cloth dealer persists in the business and refuses to come to terms with you, you are entitled to picket his shop completely asking people to refrain from buying even swadeshi stuffs from that shop. The reason is that buyers may be deluded into buying foreign stuff. Whether you should picket a shop in this way or not is for your committee to decide having regard to local conditions. But you certainly have the right to do so.

Boycotted mills are in the same position as foreign cloth and you are entitled to picket their cloth also. You may see, however, if the shopkeeper is persisting in getting goods from the boycotted mills or if he has merely got some old stock. In the former case you must treat him as if he is dealing in foreign goods. In the latter case you need not be so strict in picketing but you will of course ask people not to buy such goods.

If you are going to begin picketing I might suggest that you should first have patrolling for a week or so. The next step should be gentle picketing, that is to say, you should ask people not to buy foreign cloth at any shop. Later, if found necessary, you can start strict picketing of individual shops. But all this your committee must decide having regard to local conditions.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. A.I.C.C. File No. G-152/1931, p. 61, N.M.M.L.
2. Secretary, Muzaffarnagar Town Congress Committee.
3. The correspondent had asked for Congress instructions on peaceful picketing.

19. Statement to the Press[1]

I am surprised to find that some people have misunderstood the recent resolution of the Working Committee warning mills working more than ten hours a day.[2] The Committee by doing so has obviously not approved of the ten-hours day. It has not approved or fixed the working hours for factory labour by this resolution. All it has done is to say that it will boycott some of the worst offenders among the textile mills specially in the Indian states.

It is unfortunate that most of our mills still adhere to the ten hours day and the Committee hopes that they will take early steps to reduce the working day. Meanwhile, however, we could not tolerate even for a short while the glaring exploitation of workers by some of the mills working even more than ten hours. I am glad that the Committee's resolution has had effect immediately and hours have been reduced in some mills in Indian states.

The Working Committee has not definitely laid down what the working day should be, but in the resolution on the Fundamental Rights it has been clearly stated that the working hours must be reasonable. I have no doubt that we should aim at at least eight hours a day, and 48 hours a week. The next step, however, in these mills, should be nine hours a day and 54 hours a week.

I hope that mill owners will realise that efficiency of labour is greatly increased by lessening the hours of work. Complaints are made that Indian labour is not efficient enough. It is absurd to expect efficiency if you keep a man at work for ten hours and give him a paltry wage.

1 The Bombay Chronicle, 6 October 1931.

2 By this resolution the Textile Mills Exemption Committee was asked to urge the mills which worked more than ten hours a day to follow a ten hour day schedule and also those which had cut wages to restore them.

20. To Kurur Nambudiripad[1]

October 25th, 1931

Dear Nambudiripad,[2]

.... Regarding picketing I do not understand what you mean by any picketing other than peaceful. In any event our picketing must be peaceful. You may, if you like, write to the Bombay P.C.C. but you may expect little help from them. Ultimately whatever you do will be out of your own strength. If the Christian shopkeepers do not listen to you it shows that you have not touched the Christian buying public yet. It is for you to do propaganda among them as well as to carry on peaceful picketing before their shops. It does not matter if the picketing is not wholly successful. It is the best propaganda and is a continual reminder of the boycott. You may in particular concentrate on one or two big shops.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. A I C.C. File No. G 152/1931, p 69, N M.M L. Extracts
2. (b. 1896), a Congressman of Trichur who participated in Vaikom satyagraha, salt satyagraha and the temple entry movement.
Nambudiripad had written to Jawaharlal that Christian shopkeepers had not taken the boycott pledge. He had also suggested that the Bombay P.C C. should try to stop the flow of foreign cloth from Bombay to the west coast of India.

21. To Secretary, Bombay P.C.C.[1]

Camp Bombay
November 7th, 1931

Dear Friend,

The Working Committee considered your letter of the 22nd October as well as the representation of your Foreign Cloth Boycott and Swadeshi

1. A.I C C. File No. G-150/1931, p. 43, N.M.M L.

Committee.[2] The Working Committee would have liked to have the views of your P.C.C. in the matter. As you know this question is full of difficulties and we have considered it on several occasions. We have felt that, desirable as it is, it might be difficult for the Working Committee to take charge of certification of swadeshi articles and the like. We wanted this to be done for two or three months by other organisations and then to review the situation with a view to ultimate control. One of the difficulties in our way was the feeling that swadeshi work should not be made to depend on political changes and campaigns. If it was so dependent it may be disorganised on the resumption of the civil disobedience campaign.

But we realise the obvious difficulties of this attitude and we propose to consider it afresh. Meanwhile I am collecting some information as to what has already been done. I should like to know from you if it is possible for your committee or a sub committee of your committee to cooperate with the Bombay Swadeshi League and the Indian Merchants Chamber in the production of a really good swadeshi directory. I feel that with this cooperation good would result. This is a personal suggestion from me and it does not come from the Working Committee.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

2 The committee had represented that the P C Cs had no scope for swadeshi activities as the All India Spinners Association and Textile Exemption Committee had unitary control in this respect, also that there was no machinery for certifying to the manufacturer of indigenous goods that his articles were swadeshi

22. To Vallabhbhai Patel[1]

November 21st, 1931

My dear Vallabhbhai,
Your letter of November 18th regarding the swadeshi directory. I am sorry that some confusion has arisen owing to the action I took in the matter.[2] I did so in complete ignorance of the correspondence you refer to. The matter was considered, as you will remember, at the Delhi Working Committee meeting. The Bombay P.C.C. had written on the subject. The consideration of this was adjourned and I was asked to find out how matters stood. I wrote accordingly to the Bombay Swadeshi League. No mention was made in Delhi about the correspondence with the Federation. Again the matter was brought up by me at the Bombay Working Committee meeting this month. There was no mention then also of the steps that had already been taken. The Working Committee accepted my suggestion that the three organisations I had mentioned might be entrusted with the task of preparing the directory. I wrote accordingly to all the three of them as well as to the Federation.

1 AICC File No G-180/1931, pp 12 13, NMML

You will remember that the question of the formation of the Swadeshi Board as well as the preparation of the swadeshi directory was considered by the Working Committee on two occasions when Bapu was here. Jal Naoroji attended the Working Committee once also and Jairamdas and I attended a meeting of the Merchants Chamber. I gathered from Bapu at the time that the preparation of the directory should be left to the Swadeshi League and Indian merchants organisation. The latter were certainly fitted to do the work but there was one danger to be considered. They were after all intimately concerned with the matter and there was a possibility of some wider national interests being overlooked. It was for this reason that the Bombay Swadeshi League was included. It was also made clear that the Congress would not commit itself for the present but would watch developments and later give its opinion. I had this in mind when I placed the matter before the Working Committee and later when I wrote to the various parties concerned. As however I now find that at your suggestion the Federation has taken a number of steps already it is certainly desirable to allow them to carry on their work. I am not yet quite sure about the desirability of a formal authority being given to the Federation on behalf of the Working Committee. Meanwhile I am writing to the Federation and to the Bombay P.C.C., the Indian Merchants Chamber, Bombay, and the Bombay Swadeshi League, in accordance with your direction. I enclose copies of my letters. I think it will be best if future correspondence on this subject was carried on with the Ahmedabad office to prevent any overlapping or confusion.

2. The Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industries in collaboration with the Indian Merchants Chamber and Bombay Swadeshi League had undertaken to compile a swadeshi directory on Mahatma Gandhi's suggestion and at the request of the Congress President Jawaharlal, not having known about this arrangement wrote to the Federation that it should not make it known that the directory was being compiled on behalf of the Working Committee.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal

HINDUSTANI SEVA DAL

ts to Allay Panic[1]

nefited neither the Hindus nor the Muslims.
uble at Allahabad still I wish that some precauon on behalf of the Congress. To allay panic curity in the minds of traders, I propose to enrol be posted at certain localities. They would appeal entertain any fear of trouble and suppress false event of danger protect shops.

1931 From The Bombay Chronicle, 10 April 1931

24. On the Training of Volunteers[1]

The burden of the great work that was done by the Congress last year fell largely on the volunteers who came forward to do their duty to their motherland in her hour of need. All over the country, from city and from village, young men and women came forward and offered their services and suffered for the sake of India's freedom. The credit for any achievement is theirs.

In particular I should like to mention the services of the Hindustani Seva Dal. The Seva Dal has always laid stress on training and discipline and has thus raised the efficiency of the individual as well as of the nation. The work of the volunteers is still unfinished. We have travelled a good way towards our goal but a long way still remains to be traversed. We must, therefore, continue to train our young men and women as volunteers for national service and sacrifice. The Hindustani Seva Dal proposes to have a large number of training centres in the United Provinces and also to have a camp early in June. I hope that young men and women will join these centres and the camp in large numbers and thus make themselves trained and efficient servants of the nation. I hope also that the people of the province will help the Seva Dal in every other way.

In Allahabad it has been decided to start a training centre under the auspices of the Seva Dal almost immediately. I hope that young men and women here will join this centre, so that we may have a trained and disciplined volunteers' corps in Allahabad, worthy of our city and of the great cause for which we labour.

1 Statement issued at Allahabad The Leader, 13 April 1931.

25. Appeal for Flag Day Celebration[1]

Over two years ago, the Hindustani Seva Dal fixed the last Sunday of every month as a flag day when the national flag is hoisted and honoured simultaneously all over the country. The lead given by the Seva Dal was eagerly taken, and the last Sunday of each month has become the recognised day for this observance. The Dal has now fixed Sunday, April 26th, as a special day in honour of the national flag. The great campaign for freedom of the past year has brought honour to our flag and made it very dear to us. Under its shelter, men and women have performed deeds of heroism, and it has become a source of inspiration for us, a symbol of the yearning for freedom in our hearts. It is well that we should honour it. I hope therefore that Sunday, April 26th, will be duly celebrated all over the country and our brave tricolour will be everywhere in evidence, floating gallantly against the blue Indian sky. And as we salute it and carry it in procession, we shall remember that though much has been done, much still remains, and the freedom for which it stands is still to be achieved. Under it and through it, we shall salute those who have died for our country and those who have suffered and sacrificed for her freedom. And we shall resolve to carry on their great work till India is completely free and independent.

1. The Hindu, 22 April 1931.

26. Circular to P.C.Cs[1]

Allahabad
July 16th, 1931

Dear Comrade,
Among the resolutions passed by the Working Committee in Bombay one of the most important related to the Hindustani Seva Dal and the volunteer organisation of the Congress.[2] As you are aware, the Seva

1. A.I.C.C. File No. G-8/1931, pp. 147-150, N.M.M.L.
2. By this resolution the Hindustani Seva Dal was recognised as the central volunteer organisation of the Congress and Jawaharlal was appointed the member-in-charge and Hardikar, the organising secretary.

Dal has been functioning for over seven years and has built up an efficient organisation of volunteers in various parts of the country. Apart from the Seva Dal, however, there have existed all over the country large numbers of Congress volunteers working under provincial or local committees. A third group of volunteer corps are those which are not affiliated to the Congress and are in no way subordinate to it, but which have often cooperated in Congress activities. Yet a fourth group consists of volunteers who have nothing whatever to do with the Congress and who do not cooperate with us in any way.

We may leave out of consideration the fourth group as it has nothing to do with us

During the past few years there has been a very marked growth in the volunteer movement in the country and last year at least a hundred thousand volunteers participated in the civil disobedience campaign. But most of these volunteers had little discipline and there was no uniformity in their training or organisation. A great deal of energy was thus wasted and efficiency sacrificed. It was obvious that a radical improvement must be brought about in the volunteer organisation in the country if the nation is to take full advantage of it. And there was no time to lose. We live in changing and stirring times and any day we might be called upon to put forth the last ounce of our strength and energy for the great cause of which we are such willing servants.

The Working Committee therefore gave its earnest attention to this problem and passed the resolution to which I have already drawn your attention. This resolution will have to be supplemented by rules and regulations before it is completed. It is also right that the resolution be considered by the All India Board of the Hindustani Seva Dal as it is vitally affected by it. All this, it is hoped, will be done soon and you will have all the help and guidance we can give to enable your committee to build up a strong and efficient volunteer organisation in your province, uniform and coordinated with the central and other provincial organisations.

But you need not wait a day for any additional rules before taking action in the matter. The principles and rules laid down by the Working Committee are sufficient for you to begin immediately. In this connection the following facts must be borne in mind:

1. The Hindustani Seva Dal becomes the Central Volunteer Organisation of the Congress. It will train officers and instructors and certify them and at the same time keep a permanent All India Corps of volunteers at its headquarters.

2. All P.C.Cs are required to form duly recognised volunteer corps. These corps must have, as officers, holders of certificates from the Seva

Dal, and all these members must be members of the Congress and must conform to the Congress creed.

3. If any P.C.C. so chooses it may ask the central organisation, that is, the Seva Dal, to organise volunteer corps in its province.

4. No volunteer board or corps not recognised by the Working Committee can work in future in any province in the name of the Congress.

5. Every volunteer will have to take a pledge. The form of this pledge will be intimated to you as soon as the additional rules are sanctioned by the Working Committee.

6. The volunteer movement must strictly keep aloof from party politics. No volunteer, as such, can take part in them without risk of dismissal.

7. Volunteer Boards of provinces should consist in the main of experts and not laymen. It is proposed to have a Central Volunteer Board for the Seva Dal consisting of the member-in-charge, the organising secretary and three experts. Provinces might well follow this procedure and, instead of the present lay boards, appoint a member of their executive council as member-in-charge and three or four experts to form a provincial volunteer board.

8. The course of training to be followed for the present and till further notice must be the training prescribed by the Hindustani Seva Dal.

9. Existing volunteer units, whether of men or women, should be permitted by provincial committees to continue to function, provided they conform to the conditions laid down by the Working Committee. A unit which has been functioning as such develops an esprit de corps and it will be undesirable to break this or remodel it to such an extent that it loses this sense of common discipline and comradeship.

10. The central volunteer authority will take early steps to appoint an examining board for officers and instructors. Lists of officers and instructors who desire to appear for examination and certification should be prepared immediately by provincial committees, in duplicate, one copy being sent to Dr. N. S. Hardikar, Hindustani Seva Dal, Hubli, Karnatak, and the other to me, A.I.C.C. office, Swaraj Bhawan, Allahabad. These lists should give full information about each person. In particular they should state :—

(i) Qualifications and training—whether Seva Dal course or any other.
(ii) Period of service as a national volunteer, mentioning various places and corps he has served in.
(iii) Age.
(iv) How long he or she has been a Congress member.

(v) Part taken in noncooperation movement of 1920-22 and civil disobedience campaign of 1930-31. Periods of imprisonment and sections under which convicted.

(vi) Is the applicant prepared to serve under the Congress and in conformity with the Congress creed, and will he or she undertake not to take any part as a volunteer in party politics?

Examinations of officers and instructors may be arranged locally where necessary

11 It is proposed to issue two grades of certificates for junior and senior officers.

12. Provincial committees are requested to send a report as early as possible of the various Congress volunteer corps in their province—their locations, numbers, discipline, relation to P.C.C. etc. This report should include those corps also which are not at present under the P.C.Cs but which cooperate in Congress activities. Every corps should be asked if it is prepared to agree to the conditions laid down by the Working Committee. A copy of this report should be sent to Dr. N. S. Hardikar, Hindustani Seva Dal, Hubli, Karnatak.

I shall be greatly obliged if you will send the information asked for above at the latest by the 30th July. Even if the information and figures you can send by that date are incomplete, your report should reach us in time. The next meeting of the Working Committee takes place on the 4th August and we have to prepare our recommendations for it.

I shall be glad to give you any further help or information you require.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

27. Speech at Seva Dal Conference[1]

Those who opposed the decision to bring the Hindustani Seva Dal under Congress authority had not understood the present situation in the country. I am surprised to hear those objections from Seva Dal volunteers.

1. Bombay, 9 August 1931. From The Bombay Chronicle, 10 August 1931.

WITH VALLABHBHAI PATEL IN AHMEDABAD, 1931

I do not know how it can be said that after a few years no one would hear anything about the Dal except its name. What would happen after four or five years is that either we become a free nation or perish in this struggle. Whatever happens one thing is certain that we are not going to live like dumb driven cattle. Either we will be free or go to hell.

It had also been decided to bring the entire Khudai Khidmatgar organisation under the control of the Congress. But a fear had been expressed that that army which now numbered over 50,000 and whose number was increasing every day, would not keep up the Seva Dal principles in the manner that they should be maintained. Such a fear is based on a mistaken view about the work of the Congress and the way in which the Congress is doing things.

28. Message to the Khudai Khidmatgars[1]

I convey the greetings of the Hindustani Seva Dal and my personal greetings to our brave comrades, the Khudai Khidmatgars. We have been comrades in a great cause for some time past but now we are on the threshold of a closer association and I should like to extend to the gallant soldiers of freedom of the Frontier Province my warmest welcome. The Khudai Khidmatgars have already proved their mettle and the country has admired their courage and fortitude under the most adverse circumstances. Difficult and anxious times lie ahead of us when all of us will be put to the test. In the struggles ahead I have no doubt that we shall be true comrades of each other and will stand by each other and share alike in suffering and the ultimate triumph. May freedom come soon as the result of our united efforts.

1 A.I.C.C. File No. P-17/1931, p. 195, N.M.M.L.
The Khudai Khidmatgars became the Congress volunteer organisation in the N.W.F.P. in accordance with the Working Committee's resolution of 4 August 1931. Jawaharlal greeted the new association with this message sent in a letter dated 12 August to Abdul Ghaffar Khan.

29. Volunteers and Other Organisations[1]

Rule 10 of the rules for Seva Dal volunteers passed by the Working Committee lays down that no volunteer shall belong to any communal organisation or any other political organisation. This rule has led to some doubts and references have been made to the headquarters of the Dal for elucidation of the rule. The purpose of the rule was to prevent communalism from creeping into our volunteer organisation and also to prevent people who may bear allegiance to other organisations which are sometimes hostile to the Congress from coming in. The volunteer must feel that his chief function is volunteering and his organisation is the Congress. He cannot have a divided allegiance. It may be difficult, however, to apply this rule very strictly to all other organisations. Nor is it necessary to do so in the case of many organisations which do not conflict in any way with the Congress. The following interpretation of the rule should, therefore, be followed. Communal organisations, membership of which should be barred for our volunteers, are such as demand political and economic rights on the basis of religion. In regard to political organisations, any organisation whose objective or activities conflict with those of the Indian National Congress is barred. It may be added, however, that the membership of any other organisation is seldom desirable for a volunteer, as it disturbs his attention and takes away from his efficiency as a volunteer.

Provincial Congress Committees are requested to bear the above interpretation of rule 10 in mind. In case of doubt the matter might be referred to the member-in-charge.

1. Statement to the press, Ahmedabad, 11 September 1931. From The Leader, 13 September 1931.

30. To N. S. Hardikar[1]

Camp Ahmedabad
September 14th, 1931

My dear Hardikar,

.... I spoke last night to Vallabhbhai about the flag salutation. He agreed with me entirely that the bending of the knee and the nodding

1. Hardikar Papers, N.M.M.L. Extracts

of the head should be done away with. I think you had better make this clear. I am sure if our point of view is explained to our other colleagues they will agree. We have too much of bendings in this country and we had better not encourage them. I also dislike the way people point to the flag when singing the flag song. I shall expect to get your chapter heads for the manual soon.[2]

Get your office to move along with expedition and rapidity. We have to show that the Dal can get things done rapidly and efficiently.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

2. A Seva Dal manual giving relevant information for the use of volunteers was being prepared by N. S. Hardikar.

31. To N. S. Hardikar[1]

Camp Cawnpore
October 4th, 1931

My dear Hardikar,
On my return to Allahabad I found a sheaf of letters from you and from Lokhare. I am glad that your office is showing some pep. More power to your elbow. You have caught me at an unfortunate moment when not only have I got a huge amount of work but I am also continually moving about specially in the rural areas. However you can rest assured that the Seva Dal work will have precedence. I am dictating this in the train. I shall be out of reach of letters for a week after which I return to Allahabad....

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. Hardikar Papers, N.M.M.L. Extracts.

32. To N. S. Hardikar[1]

Allahabad
12.10.1931

My dear Hardikar,

. . . The Benares camp is running us into heavy expenditure. I have been thinking about this matter and I feel that we are drifting in a wrong direction. What are we driving at? Large scale training of thousands and thousands. Are we going to do this by means of expensive camps? We simply can't do it. We cannot reproduce in our volunteering the expensive educational methods of the English in India. Nor can we take western models. We must have our poverty in view and our kisans. We are at present, in some of our camps, giving a higher standard than that of the lower middle class, with the result that we make our volunteers dissatisfied with their lot later when the standard is reduced. Also we are making it more and more difficult to have camps because our funds are not inexhaustible....

Another matter about the Benares camp. You have laid stress on the camp being a sainiks' camp and rightly so. But under the extraordinary circumstances prevailing at present we are not likely to have much time for repeated camps with intervals in between. Both time and money are against us. Suppose we train 75 sainiks in Benares. They get spread out and cannot train anybody unless they are brought together again for another camp for instructors. It is far easier to pick out the promising ones and carry on with them and give them additional training. Benares offers special facilities for intellectual training and the present campers will probably be quite qualified in the intellectual subjects. I suggest therefore that after the conclusion of the sainiks' camp of 5 weeks, the smart people should be kept on for another three weeks and given additional training for instructorship. At the end of this period if they pass our tests we can appoint them 'provisionally' as instructors subject to any further training or instruction that we might give them later. This will immediately release a number of persons to work in their own districts and a great push will be given to the volunteer movement. Otherwise we shall proceed at a snail's pace....

Yours sincerely
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. Hardikar Papers, N.M.M.L. Extracts.

33. To Nandkumar Deo Vashishta[1]

Allahabad
October 12, 1931

Dear Nandkumar,[2]
I had a long talk with Sampurnanandji yesterday about the Benares camp. I hope to come there myself on the 16th but as some matters have troubled me I am writing to you immediately on the subject.

The first is that there seems to me to be too much of the spirit of extravagance in the camp specially in regard to food. I understand that men who do hard work require sufficient nourishment but other facts have also to be borne in mind. Our workers, peasants and volunteers who picket, and the residents of the Sabarmati Ashram and the like have to do hard physical work also. We cannot possibly introduce into our camp a standard of living far higher than the prevailing standard. This would necessarily mean that we cannot extend our activities to the masses because at this rate we would require lakhs and lakhs of rupees if not crores. Our objective is to train vast numbers as rapidly as possible. If we set a wrong standard in our provincial camp that is sure to be followed in other camps with the result that very soon there will be no camp left at all.

When I come to Benares I should like to go into this matter more thoroughly because this question of extravagance in food is a very basic question and we cannot allow any drift in regard to it. I am really surprised to learn that it was proposed to spend some hundreds of rupees on milk alone.

I have an impression that the Jhansi camp was also run extravagantly. I do not want that impression to be confirmed by the Benares camp. Otherwise we shall have to revise completely our system of having camps. We must always remember that we have to fit in with Indian conditions. It is no good our aping western models specially in regard to standard of living....

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 Hardikar Papers, N.M.M.L. Extracts
2. A Seva Dal organiser who had conducted the volunteers' camp at Varanasi

34. To Secretary, Bengal P.C.C.[1]

October 18th, 1931

Dear Sir,

....The Hindustani Seva Dal is straining every nerve to push the Hindustani Seva Dal movement in the country and in every province. We seek your full cooperation in this work. We may have to face a crisis before long and we may not have time then to build up our volunteers. Therefore we cannot afford to waste a single day. I hope your committee will give this matter the attention which it so urgently deserves.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. Hardikar Papers, NMML. Extracts.

35. To N.S. Hardikar[1]

Allahabad
19 October, 1931

My dear Hardikar,

I have come back from Benares. There are many things about the Benares camp and other camps that I should like to discuss with you. They will have to wait till you come. Two or three matters, however, I might mention.

There seems to me too little staff work about our undertakings. We do not make sufficient preparation before we plunge in and then we seek to cast the blame on others. This cannot and must not happen in the Dal. I was amazed to find that even now no sufficient arrangements had been made for charkhas and spinning in the camp. There is absolutely nothing required in the camp that cannot be procured or prepared within three days and it is gross carelessness and inefficiency on the part of some one if the camp lacks anything. This point must be made clear to persons in charge of camps.

1. Hardikar Papers, NMML. Extracts.

In your formal application please do not have any column of enquiry about caste....

In the Benares camp I was surprised to find one man aged 54. Obviously such a person should never have been taken in the camp. As a matter of fact the medical examination of the recruits showed that only about 10% of them were really fit....

Yours sincerely,
J. Nehru

36. On the Hindustani Seva Dal[1]

Congress volunteers are as old as the Congress itself. Every year, during the session of the National Congress, volunteers have been enrolled to preserve order in that great Assembly and to perform a hundred and one acts of special service. But little attempt was made in the past to train these volunteers. During the noncooperation movement of eleven years ago a new type of volunteer came into existence and thousands of his kind were found in the cities and villages of India. The chief purpose they had before them was to disobey peacefully certain selected laws and orders of the British Government and thus to court jail. As is well known many thousands of these young men and women did go to prison and although the prisons were filled to overflowing, there was no lack of aspirants for the honour of entering them in India's service.

With the suspension of some parts of the noncooperation programme, disobedience for laws was stopped and the volunteer organisations were gradually disbanded. There had been very little training and there was not enough cohesive force to keep them together.

It was felt by many that the old methods of enrolling volunteers were wasteful of energy and enthusiasm as the same process had to be repeated again and again without attaining any substantial results. The lack of proper training resulted in want of efficiency and still more so in the temporary volunteers forgetting very soon what little they had learnt. In spite of repeated attempts there were hardly any well trained volunteers or disciplined corps of men and women in the country. Stress had been laid on numbers and enthusiasm and the capacity to suffer and go to prison. But enthusiasm is often wasted unless controlled and properly directed; and numbers are almost always a hindrance unless they are disciplined and know how to cooperate with each other, and the capacity to suffer for a great cause, precious as it is, yields richer results if it has training behind it.

1. The Bombay Chronicle, 21 October 1931.

It was therefore, considered necessary, soon after the noncooperation movement, to start a new All India Organisation with the object of giving this training and discipline and building up an efficient body of men and women for national service and, whenever necessary, for disciplined sacrifice for the attainment of Swaraj. With a view to give effect to this proposal, an All India Volunteer Conference was held in Cocanada in December 1923, during the sessions of the Indian National Congress. Out of the deliberations of this conference, the Hindustani Seva Dal saw the light of day.

The Seva Dal was formed as an All India Organisation "to train and organise the people of India for national service and disciplined sacrifice with a view to the attainment of Swaraj by peaceful and legitimate means", and "to control and bring under uniform discipline all the existing volunteer organisations and to establish new ones wherever and whenever necessary."

The Cocanada session of the Congress welcomed the formation of the Seva Dal and passed the following resolution in regard to it.

> This Congress is of opinion that in order to train the people of India and make them effective instruments for carrying out of the national work on the lines laid down by the Congress, it is necessary to have a trained and disciplined body of workers. This Congress, therefore, welcomes the movement for the formation of an All India Volunteer Organisation and calls upon the Working Committee to take all necessary steps to form such a body of trained workers in cooperation with the organisers of the movement and to keep control and supervision over it, while giving it freedom of internal management and administration.

It will be noticed that from its very inception the Seva Dal sought to function under the control and supervision of the Working Committee of the Congress. At the same time it desired, and was given, freedom of internal management and administration. It was an autonomous body serving and following the policy and programme of the Congress and subject to the Congress supervision. An All India Board elected by the conference formed the Executive of the Dal.

For six years the Seva Dal continued to function in various parts of India and gradually but effectively built up trained bodies of volunteers. The work was not spectacular and the progress not rapid, as stress was always laid on training and efficiency and not on numbers. Many training camps were held and courses of training drawn up. A junior section for boys and girls was also started. Annually, the conference took place and at this the All India Board for the year was chosen. The Central Board cooperated with the provincial Congress committees in the formation of the provincial Seva Dal Boards. At Bagalkot, in the Karnatak, an Academy of Physical Culture, open to volunteers from all parts of India, was started by the Dal.

The great stress that was always laid on training and efficiency by the Seva Dal not only resulted in creating trained volunteers of the Dal but it set a tone for other volunteer organisations in the country and the whole standard of volunteer training was raised thereby.

In December 1929, following the lead of the National Congress, the Seva Dal made the "Independence" of India its objective, and, subsequently, the Dal threw all its resources into the great national struggle of 1930-31. That heroic struggle called out of their homes men and women by hundreds and thousands, to face prison and the brutal lathi and sometimes death. Only a small proportion of this great number had training, but even those who were not trained showed what splendid material we had to build up a great country-wide volunteer organisation.

Soon after the Delhi truce the Working Committee considered the whole question of volunteering and the Hindustani Seva Dal in the light of new developments and the experience gained during the civil disobedience campaign. It was clear that the training of volunteers on a large scale for national service had become an essential and an immediate work for the Congress. The Working Committee thereupon passed a resolution on the 11th July 1931, recognising the Hindustani Seva Dal as the Central Volunteer Organisation of the Congress and bringing it directly under its own authority and control. The old Seva Dal gladly accepted this fundamental change in its constitution which put an end to its separate autonomous existence and made it into the volunteer department of the Congress. For seven and a half years it had sought to serve the Congress and through it the nation and had drawn repeated attention to training and efficiency. The time had come when its sphere of action should be enlarged and the Congress itself should take charge of its great work.

The Hindustani Seva Dal today is the Volunteer Department of the National Congress and it functions in accordance with the rules framed by the Working Committee and the Central Volunteer Board appointed by the Working Committee. These rules will be found in the Seva Dal Manual, to be issued in the course of a week or two. It must be remembered, however, that the Seva Dal is not a static body. It is a dynamic organisation, ever growing, ever adapting itself to changing conditions and environments, and constant only in its desire to be of service to India in the struggle for independence and to train and organise the men and women of India and make them into disciplined and efficient soldiers of India's peaceful army. The task is a mighty one, but the Congress has undertaken it in earnest; and with the help of our great organisation and the active cooperation of our comrades all over the country, success should come to us in a large measure. Already, the provinces are astir and training camps are growing up and sending out trained sainiks and instructors to carry on the good work in their respective districts. Soon we hope that the badge of the Seva Dal will be a familiar sight in the towns and villages of India. It will be the badge of service and discipline and sacrifice. It will be a badge of honour for those who are privileged to wear it.

The Hindustani Seva Dal is the Central Volunteer Organisation of the Congress. It will have a central corps and institutions for the training of officers and instructors. Provincial Congress Committees have been given autonomy in the organisation of their volunteers. But this autonomy is subject to the general supervision of the Central Board in regard to training and technique of organisation. All officers and instructors must have the certificates of the Central Board and all volunteers must be members of the Congress and must take the prescribed pledge.

The Seva Dal Manual contains all the rules so far framed by the Working Committee and the Central Board. These rules and regulations are being added to from time to time and may be varied by the Board whenever necessity arises. Suggestions for the improvement of the organisation will be welcomed by the Board from all who are interested in the work with which the Working Committee had charged the Board.

37. To All Provincial Seva Dal Boards[1]

Allahabad
6th November '31

The Central Board of the Hindustani Seva Dal has framed courses of training for sainiks and instructors and has drawn up rules for the organisation of the Dal. In accordance with the wishes of the Working Committee, the board is endeavouring to bring about uniformity in volunteer training all over India and to raise the standard of efficiency. The board wishes to make it clear however that it has no desire to limit the autonomy of the provincial Congress committees and their provincial boards in regard to their voluntary organisations, except in so far as the basic rules passed by the Working Committee are concerned. The board further realises that conditions differ in various provinces and an absolute uniformity may not be possible or desirable. Provincial boards and provincial members-in-charge will, where they consider it quite necessary, vary the courses drawn up by the Central Board. In case this is done information should at once be sent to the Central Board. But it is hoped that such variations will not be great and will not lower efficiency.

The volunteer movement in India is still in its infancy and it is not easy to arrive at final decisions in any matter relating to it. The Central Board will not hesitate to change any of its own previous decisions if it feels that such a change will help in the work they have undertaken. Provincial boards are requested to point out their particular difficulties so that the existing rules might be improved upon as occasion arises for this.

It should be noted that the head of the volunteer organisation in any province is the member-in-charge acting under the provincial board or the P.C.C. He will be the final authority in that province for all volunteer work, camps etc.

Jawaharlal Nehru

1. Hardikar Papers, N.M.M.L.

38. Appeal to the Youth of Bengal[1]

I should like to appeal to the young men and women of Bengal to join the Congress Volunteer Organisation and to take the necessary training to make themselves into efficient servants of the nation. The Hindustani Seva Dal has been taken over completely by the Congress and functions now as the volunteer department of the Congress, subject to certain fundamental rules laid down by the Working Committee. The provincial Congress committees have been given autonomy in the matter of organising their Seva Dals. The general technique and organisation is laid down by headquarters. Apart from this, it is for the provincial Congress committees to take all necessary steps for the organisation of volunteers. This work has been going on at a rapid pace in many provinces. In Bengal the B.P.C.C. has recently formed a volunteer board called the Bangiya Seva Dal. I hope that this board will receive the cooperation and the support of the people of Bengal and that the splendid material that Bengal offers will soon be trained and organised under the banner of the Congress. The Seva Dal desires to train both men and women. For this purpose training camps are started. I trust that these camps will be helped with necessary funds and materials. We have to work with a time-limit before us and therefore I trust that there will be no delay. Our future work must necessarily depend on trained and efficient volunteers, and Bengal, I have no doubt, will give more than its quota.

Jawaharlal Nehru

1 Calcutta, 19 November 1931 J N Miscellaneous Papers, N M M L.

39. Address to Women Volunteers[1]

The Seva Dal is only a branch of the Congress organisation. The volunteers of the Dal are the soldiers of the Congress and it is for the President to command them. It is, however, a matter of gratification

1 Bombay, 15 December 1931. From The Bombay Chronicle, 16 December 1931. The speech was made at a training camp for women volunteers in Bombay opened by Vallabhbhai Patel that the President has personally come to bless our efforts. We all know what an excellent part the women of India have played during the last war. There were very few of them trained then. It was the inextinguishable fire of patriotism which supplied the energy and the driving force to your wonderful sacrifices. To be a soldier, you must have the spirit of a soldier and not merely his drill. However the training is necessary for better discipline and organisation. The Seva Dal is not an army of artificial and mercenary soldiers. Our war is of a different kind and mere artificial methods would not carry us an inch forward. We had fought the last war but a new war is almost on us again.

We have no more time to lose in reorganising our forces. Things are happening at a terrific speed in the country. In a national war, there is no question of either sex or community. Whoever is born in this country ought to be a soldier. In the last campaign there were not more than 5,000 trained volunteers but the soldiers who fought the war could be counted by lakhs. The camp that you are opening is merely an ideal or rather a nucleus which would serve as an inspirer to the whole volunteer organisation. Like the President I am also not sure if we would really reach the end of the camp. Very soon we shall be compelled to go to the other camp which is a bigger camp and perhaps our steps ought to move in that direction in the near future. When the time to go to that camp comes, we should remember the vow we had taken as soldiers of our country under the tricolour flag

40. On British Criticism of the Seva Dal[1]

The attack of the British press on the Seva Dal movement showed that they were afraid of the Seva Dal. But there is no need for that panic on their part. Whatever the Congress does, it does openly. The work of the Congress during the last ten or twelve years was there, and there was nothing to warrant the fear that the British press seemed to entertain. The Congress is accused of the breach of the Delhi truce, but it is an entirely baseless charge. The truth is that the government were unable to crush the nonviolent activity of the Congress, and, therefore, they have to resort to vilification of, and base attacks on the Congress, but that will not deter Congress from its path.

1 From The Bombay Chronicle, 17 December 1931.
Report of a speech at the Hindustani Seva Dal volunteers' camp in Bombay on 16 December 1931.

If we had a national government we would have opened camps like this all over the country. Every citizen of the future Swaraj government must be a well-trained soldier able to face any responsibility during peace or war. The volunteers who were under training in the camp were expected to spread the zeal for freedom throughout the country. Their work would be to rouse the people for the freedom's fight. It was comparatively easier to fan that fire, but it was really difficult to control it, and it was to achieve the latter object that they wanted trained men.

41. Address to Volunteers[1]

You have just taken a pledge. The Seva Dal is today a part of the Congress and functions under the Working Committee of the Congress. Your responsibility is therefore great. You cannot forget the pledge you have taken to fight under the Congress flag. The Congress is an all-pervading organisation and your responsibility is great. The honour of the country is in your hands. Friends and foes alike will criticise you. Don't stain the name of the Congress. If you do anything that will bring a bad name to the Congress, it will be contrary to your object. Everyone will watch your actions.

The object of the Seva Dal is to fight for freedom and get it. It is not merely a thought for the moment, but every action in the day and dream at night must be freedom. The time is coming when you will have to face the hard work and sufferings. You pledge that you will serve to bring about communal unity. Freedom is not merely for a community or a province, but for the whole of India. India cannot be divided. Either the whole becomes free or remains in slavery. It is impossible for one part to be free and the other to be in bondage. During the communal riots in Cawnpore, while doing his duty, Syt. Ganesh Shankar Vidyarthi offered his life. If such a contingency occurs, be prepared to act in the same way. You must leave all communal differences and point the way to freedom to the people. Show what the Congress and the Seva Dal workers can do when trained.

1 Hubli, 19 December 1931. From The Bombay Chronicle, 20 December, 1931.

42. Circular to All Provincial Seva Dals and Members-in-charge[1]

21.12.31

Dear Comrade,

We need hardly draw your attention to the rapidly developing political situation in the country. The Round Table Conference has ended and we await the return of Mahatma Gandhi and the meeting of the Working Committee for further directions as to the work we have to do. Meanwhile the government have promulgated the Bengal Ordinance and the U.P. Ordinance and in both these provinces as well as in the Frontier province a full-fledged offensive has been launched by government against our comrades. The business of the Seva Dal is to train workers for Congress work and our sainiks and sainikas and other workers have to hold themselves in readiness for such work as may be entrusted to them by their P.C.C. We would suggest that provincial boards and members-in-charge might confer with other authorities of the provincial Congress to determine what work has to be done in future. The Seva Dal will of course continue to function despite ordinances and other notifications. We take orders from the Congress only and from no other authority. The present camps should therefore continue, but a situation may arise when workers are needed for other purposes. In such a contingency it will be open to the provincial officer in charge to suspend the training and offer all his volunteers to the provincial Congress for such work as they may direct. This offer indeed might be made even now, while training is going on, so that our organisation and our volunteers may be ready for the work demanded of them.

We shall endeavour to communicate with you from time to time, but as our communications are interfered with, it is possible that they may not reach you. Whether they reach you or not, we are confident that you and our other comrades in your province will bear with fortitude and goodwill all the trials that may be in store for us in the service of the motherland. Ours is the high privilege of being the trained workers of the Congress. We will do nothing that may bring discredit to that great organisation or to the flag to which we have sworn allegiance.

Officers, instructors, sainiks, sainikas and all other workers of the Hindustani Seva Dal, we send you our comradely greetings and look to you to be worthy of the Dal in the hour of trial.

Your comrade,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 Hardikar Papers, N.M.M.L.

GENERAL

43. Circular to P.C.Cs[1]

Allahabad
April 9th, 1931

Dear Comrades,

Audit and Inspection—The period of truce between the Congress and the British Government has given us an invaluable opportunity to put our house in order. We must utilise it to perfect our organisation and to put all our Congress committees on an efficient and working basis. We propose to have an audit and inspection of the P.C.C. offices soon. We are requesting Mr. Rangaswami of the A.I.S.A., who was good enough to audit the P.C.C. accounts in 1929, to undertake the work again. Other auditors will also be appointed and they will communicate with you direct. Please therefore keep your accounts and books ready for inspection. Please also prepare statements of accounts and profit and loss statements for the auditors. I would further suggest that you should get all your district Congress committees to get their accounts audited. Their statements of accounts should be kept in your office for the inspection of our auditors.

II. Elections—Fresh elections must now take place in all provinces from the local areas upwards. In this connection care should be taken to avoid anything which may savour of partisanship. In particular, it should be borne in mind that every person, who fulfils the conditions laid down in the constitution for members, is entitled as of right to become a member. No rule or bye-law which limits his right to membership is valid. Complaints reach our office from time to time that receipt books for membership are not supplied as it is feared that persons belonging to a rival group might thereby become members. This is wholly improper and where proved must vitiate the whole election. Please make it clear to all your district committees that persons offering to become members and fulfilling the conditions, must be made members and no obstructions should be placed in their way.

1. AICC. File No. P-1/1931, pp 147-148, N.M.M.L.

III. Future Work—Instructions regarding future work will be issued to you directly by the President or Shri Jairamdas Doulatram from Ahmedabad. I should like to lay stress on the fact, however, that P.C.C.s should impress upon all D.C.Cs, etc. that the terms of the provisional settlement between the government and the Congress should be strictly carried out. It is not becoming or dignified for us to seek shelter in quibbles and the like when the word of our great organisation has been given. When the time comes again for a resumption of our struggle we shall do so with right goodwill. Meanwhile let us abide by the truce.
IV. Volunteers—Large numbers of volunteers were working for Congress committees at the time the truce was announced. Many of these have been disbanded. It is desirable however that groups of trained and disciplined volunteers be kept by each Congress committee both for present work and as nuclei of future volunteer corps. Congress volunteers are particularly necessary at present in areas where any Hindu-Muslim trouble is feared. Our volunteers must protect shops and residential quarters. Their presence will inspire confidence in the shopkeepers and residents. Of course they must be made to understand clearly that the part they play must be an absolutely peaceful one and, if necessary, they must follow the noble example of Ganesh Shankar Vidyarthi.

Volunteers in order to be efficient must be trained and drilled and should have a distinctive uniform. Without a uniform they cannot be recognised and are lost in the crowd. The uniform may be very simple in rural areas—just a coloured khadi shirt. In towns a slightly more elaborate uniform may be used.

It should be remembered that we cannot pay our volunteers or attract them in any way except by the lure of national service and sacrifices.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

44. To Pattabhi Sitaramayya[1]

April 12, 1931

My dear Pattabhi,
I have your letter. I agree with you that the questionnaire suggested by you should be sent to provincial Congress committees and to the press.[2] I am very much interested in this flag question but I may be away for the next few weeks. I am therefore giving you below some very rough ideas of mine on the subject.

1. Ordinarily I would be greatly averse to changing the present flag which has become very popular but having regard to the circumstances perhaps some change is necessary. This change however should not interfere too much with the present flag.

2. We should make it perfectly clear that our flag is not based on communal considerations. No colour represents or will represent a community.

3. The present arrangement with white at the top is bad as the white does not show unless there is a colour background. Therefore in any event the white should either be put in the centre or should give place to another colour.

4. The present flag is, I believe, identical with the Bulgarian flag. This is undesirable.

5. I am inclined to think that the colour white should give place to a basanti colour or light saffron. My reason for this is not that the Sikhs desire it as their colour but because this colour is an old Indian colour and is associated with sacrifice in our past history. Further this colour has been adopted by the women of India and it would be a graceful and deserving tribute to the women to adopt this colour. The exact shade of the colour should be carefully considered. The place of the colour in the flag must also be considered from an aesthetic point of view. Thus it may be either at the top or at the centre.

6. I should like to retain both red and green as they are beautiful colours.

1. A I C C. File No. G-57/1931, pp. 53-55, N M M.L.
2. On 2 April 1931, the Working Committee appointed a committee, which included Jawaharlal and Pattabhi Sitaramayya, to examine the criticism that the colours of the national flag had communal significance and to suggest a new design acceptable to the Congress. Sitaramayya circulated a questionnaire to elicit opinion on the issue.

7. The final design chosen should be that which satisfies the aesthetic sense and should be in accordance with heraldic principles.

These are some suggestions made on the spur of the moment just to give you some idea of what I have got in my mind.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

45. To Mustafa Ali[1]

Allahabad
April 14th, 1931

My dear Mustafa Ali,[2]
Yours is to hand. I hasten to reply. If I write a short and business-like epistle I hope you will excuse me. I am awfully busy. I was also delighted to meet you and your friend at the station and am looking forward to seeing you again at Aligarh.

As to your questions:

(1) There was no Unity Conference at Delhi. The Karachi Congress had appointed a small committee to meet the Muslim leaders.[3]

The committee met the Muslim leaders who presented their demands in a most uncompromising spirit. Then these Muslim leaders met in an All India Muslim Conference and passed most vile resolutions which have nothing to do with communal demands but which go to show that these friends are working in the interests of a third party.[4]

(2) The Mahatma and in fact all the Hindus (with very few exceptions) are quite willing to give separate electorates to the Mussalmans but the nationalist Muslims oppose this. In our opinion separate electorates will ruin the Mussalmans and give them over to the communal Hindus.

(3) The attitude of the Congress is clear. You should see the Karachi resolution No. 15,[5] a copy of which I herewith enclose.

1. A I C C. File No G 40(KW)(iv)/1931, p 47, N M.M.L.
2. Resident of Aligarh at that time.
3. Mahatma Gandhi, Vallabhbhai Patel and Jamnalal Bajaj were members of the committee
4. On 4 April 1931 the All India Muslim Conference passed a resolution describing the satyagraha as "a mere sham and unclean political stratagem which will lead to a state of civil war in India."
5. Resolution on Fundamental Rights and Economic Changes which guaranteed the protection of the rights of minorities.

(4) The Muslim nationalists are meeting on the 19th in Lucknow and we hope we shall be able to bring about some satisfactory settlement between the Hindus and Muslims.[6] I should like to hear what happens on the 26th.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

6. The conference decided that apart from a provision of fundamental rights and protection of personal laws, the future constitution should be federal and representation in the federal and provincial legislatures should be based on universal adult franchise, joint electorates and reservation of seats in the federal and provincial legislatures on the population basis for minorities less than 30 p c with the right to contest additional seats.

46. To M. John[1]

June 28th, 1931

Dear Comrade,

I am in receipt of your letter of the 19th June.[2] I do not remember receiving any letter from you dated the 24th March. I am therefore unable to reply to it. But even without seeing it I can fully appreciate the hardships which hundreds of our comrades who came out on account of strike must be experiencing. I really do not know what can be done to help them. All over India there are large numbers of unemployed today owing to trade depression. You know also that the trade union organisation in the country is as weak as possible. The National Congress is in the middle of a great struggle. Till the Congress gets real power it can do little or nothing.

However if you wish me to place any communication before Mahatmaji I shall certainly do so.

Yours fraternally,
Jawaharlal

1. A.I.C.C. File No. G-71/1929, p 53, N M M L.
2. John had written that 500 strikers of the Golmuri Tinplate Workers' Union were still unemployed and wanted Jawaharlal to speak to Mahatma Gandhi about them For more details of this strike, see Selected Works, Vol. 4, pp. 72-79.

47. To Vallabhbhai Patel[1]

30/6/31

My dear Vallabhbhai,

In accordance with your directions[2] I went to Benares yesterday and had a long talk with Syt. Bhagavan Das,[3] Sundarlal and Manzar Ali. The other members of the committee were not there but were due to arrive in a day or two.

I am afraid it is not possible to get this enquiry committee to report in time for the Working Committee meeting. At the very earliest they will finish by the 12th July. This report is evidently going to be a historical survey of the Hindu-Muslim question from the earliest times. This requires time for study. Personally my viewpoint is somewhat different and I would not have laid so much stress on past history. But having appointed your committee you must accept what they give you.

The enquiry committee now propose to send you a letter explaining their difficulties and their manner of approach to the question and perhaps sending you a brief abstract of the report. This letter will reach you before the Working Committee meeting.

I enclose a copy of a letter we have received from the Sachin State and my reply to it.[4]

It is just possible that I may have to go to Naini Tal before the Working Committee meeting. Anyhow I hope to reach Bombay on the 7th morning.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. AICC File No. G-60/1931 (Pt. I), p. 123, N.M.M.L.
2. On 20 June 1931, Vallabhbhai Patel had asked Jawaharlal to visit Varanasi and help the committee inquiring into the Kanpur riots of March 1931 to expedite the completion of its report, so that before the House of Commons discussed the matter, the Congress account was published.
3. (1869-1959), founder member of Central Hindu College of Banaras Hindu University, and of Kashi Vidyapith; participated in noncooperation and civil disobedience movements, member, Central Legislative Assembly, 1935-37, and of Constituent Assembly, his publications include Social Reconstruction of Modern Societies, awarded Bharat Ratna, 1955.
4. Not available.

48. To Mata Prasad Misra[1]

July 1st, 1931

My dear Mata Prasadji,

I have your letter of the 30th June.[2] I enclose a copy of the letter I have sent to the post master, Rae Bareli.[3] I have also written to the provincial Congress committee on the subject. Please let me know if Kalka Prasad is in Rae Bareli or Lalganj or what his address is.

Just before leaving Rae Bareli I told Sitla Sahai that I did not want him to accept any kind of office in Rae Bareli. I do not want any of our good workers to get entangled in election disputes. Their efficiency suffers. We are trying to build up a convention that good workers keep away from office and can influence work even though they might not be office-bearers. A good worker is bound to be appreciated whether he holds office or not. I would therefore suggest to you also to keep out of office in Rae Bareli. You will find that this will add greatly to your capacity for work and prestige. Some foolish persons may criticise you but that will mean nothing.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. A.I.C.C. File No. G-59/1931, p. 41, N.M.M.L.
2. Mata Prasad had written that letters to the Rae Bareli District Congress office had been withheld by the post master as Kalka Prasad, a Congressman of Rae Bareli who held no office, also claimed them.
3. Not printed. In this letter Jawaharlal had asked the post master to deliver all letters, addressed to the Rae Bareli D.C.C., to Mata Prasad Misra.

49. To President, Bangalore City Congress Committee[1]

2/7/31

Dear Friend,

Your telegram reached me this morning. As it has been censored I am quoting it below:

1. A.I.C.C. File No. G-145/1931, pp. 61-62, N.M.M.L.

National flag staff newly erected Gandhisagar permanent sixty feet high made of cast iron poles supported by guy wires on which you hoisted national flag entirely destroyed. Hacked to pieces. Guy and staff cut and pieces thrown into tank last night. Flags on private residences also stolen. Great dishonour to Congress and country. Congressmen fasting. Pray make question all India and advise.

I have sent you the following reply:

Your telegram. No good fasting because cowards and miscreants injure flag in secret. Try find out real facts. Inform police also immediately. Put up another flagstaff and arrange guard it by volunteers. Send full particulars.

From your telegram it appears that the destruction of the flagstaff was done in secret at night. And yet it seems strange that the destruction of cast iron poles should be done without attracting attention. I should like to have full particulars after you have enquired into the matter. To fast merely will not help much. I hope you will immediately put up another flagstaff and arrange to have it guarded night and day by volunteers.

The attack on the national flag is annoying but the very method of secret attack shows that people dare not do it in public. It is no dishonour to the Congress or the country if thieves and miscreants misbehave in secret. You should utilise this unfortunate incident to strengthen the Congress organisation and to appeal to people to use and display the national flag even more.

I do not understand what you mean by suggesting that this question should be made into a national question. Unless we have more facts we can do nothing more.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

50. To Secretary, Indian Journalists Association[1]

July 4th, 1931

Dear Sir,
I have your letter of the 1st July.[2] I am afraid I cannot give you any accurate figures of the number of Muslims who suffered imprisonment. The figure 12,000 which has often been mentioned is a rough estimate made by my colleague, Dr. Syed Mahmud. We are now trying to get as accurate figures as possible and they will be incorporated in our annual report. But in no event are we likely to get accurate figures for different communities as our records are not made in this way.

Yours truly,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. A.I.C.C. File No. G-1/1931, p 31, N.M.M.L.
2. The addressee had asked how many Muslims had suffered imprisonment in the 1930 civil disobedience movement.

51. To Anjani Kumar[1]

Simla
July 21st, 1931

Dear Anjani Kumar,[2]
Your letter of the 30th June reached me many days afterwards in Bombay.[3] I understood from Sitla Sahai that the matter you wrote about had been settled.

It seems to me that you were a little precipitous in your action. We cannot afford to get excited in politics. We must preserve our balance and not rush into any action without proper consideration. Such action

1. A.I.C.C. File No. G-59/1931, p. 13, N.M.M.L.
2. (b. 1905); a Congressman of Bachchrawan in Rae Bareli district.
3. Anjani Kumar had reported that along with some volunteers he went on a hunger strike on 30 June 1931 before the manager's house in the Sheogarh estate in Rae Bareli district in protest against the ill treatment of tenants by the manager.

as we take should not be individual as far as possible. If we do so we lose the benefit of collective action and of an organisation. I hope you will bear this in mind.

Please also remember that the mere fact that you did not get an immediate reply from me did not mean that I had no reply to send or that I approved of everything that had been done. As it happened your letter even did not reach me in time.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

52. To B. S. Ramaswami Iyengar[1]

July 24th, 1931

Dear Friend,[2]
I have just received your letter on return to Allahabad.[3] As you know Mahatma Gandhi wrote to Sir Mirza Ismail regarding the Bangalore flag incident. I do not know what reply he got. I understand, however, Sir Mirza wrote to Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel. I entirely sympathise with you and appreciate your keen desire to vindicate the honour of the flag. I feel, however, that you must wait for the issue of Mahatmaji's communications with Sir Mirza Ismail. It will always be open to you, other means failing, to resort to satyagraha and the like but this should not be indulged in so long as there are other ways of obtaining redress. Please keep Mahatmaji fully informed of developments.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. A.I.C.C. File No. G-145/1931, p. 27, N.M.M.L.
2. President, Bangalore City Congress Committee.
3. Ramaswami Iyengar had written on 15 July 1931 that many were prepared to offer satyagraha if Mahatma Gandhi's negotiations with the Dewan of Mysore on the right to hoist the national flag did not lead to an honourable settlement.

53. On the New Design of the National Flag[1]

The Working Committee has not accepted the recommendations of the flag committee.[2] There is unanimity of opinion in both the committees on the principle that the national flag does not and should not have any communal significance. The Working Committee has recommended a slight change in the flag but that change is in no way derogatory to the prestige of the present flag in whose honour the country has made such immense sacrifices. Of the three flags, namely the old one, the one recommended by the flag committee and the third recommended by the Working Committee, I maintain that the last one is the best as it has three colours representing the aspirations of the Indian nation. Suggestions received from various quarters have been carefully considered and very many of them have been incorporated in the new flag designed by the Working Committee. I hope that now at least the controversy over the flag question will be forgotten.

1. Report of Jawaharlal's speech on a resolution on the new design of the national flag at the A I C C meeting at Bombay on 7 August 1931. From The Bombay Chronicle, 8 August 1931.
2. The flag committee had recommended that the national flag should be of saffron colour having the charkha on it in blue. But the Working Committee desired to have as little change as possible in the existing flag and decided that the flag be as before, with saffron, white and green colours horizontally arranged from top to bottom, with the charkha in dark blue in the centre of the white stripe.

54. Note on Foreign Branches of the Congress[1]

In compliance with the directions of the All India Congress Committee I am submitting this note to the Committee.[2] I regret, however that owing to the absence of old records in the Allahabad office, I am unable to give all the details and I crave the indulgence of the Committee for not being as exact as I should be in such a note.

1. The Bombay Chronicle, 8 August 1931.
2. Acting on this note, the Working Committee disaffiliated the London branch of the Congress on 4 August 1931.

The London branch was formed in the latter half of 1928. In December 1928 affiliation was granted to it. In 1929 the branch paid its affiliation fee. During 1929 I had to draw the attention of the branch on more than one occasion to the fact that its general attitude to the parent body was undesirable. Resolutions were passed by it repeatedly in strong criticism of the Congress and I pointed out to it that it seemed to mistake its function and position in the Congress organization. It was none of its business to dictate policy to us from London.

Soon after the leaders' manifesto which was issued early in November 1929 from Delhi, on the statements made by the Secretary of State for India and the Viceroy regarding the proposed Round Table Conference, the London branch passed a resolution of condemnation of this manifesto. The language used was, as usual, very strong and, in particular, violent attacks were made on Congress leaders. The Congress itself was also attacked. Thereupon I wrote to the branch and told them that they had no business to act in this manner and that they could not continue their association with the Congress if they acted in this manner. They continued however their attacks on the Congress and its prominent leaders.

Early in 1930 I wrote to them again and told them that as they were persisting in an attitude of hosblity to the Congress and were carrying on activities contrary to the Congress policy, they could not continue their affiliation to the Congress.[3] I suggested to them that as an independent body, unconnected with the Congress, they would have full liberty to act in any manner they chose and it would be fair to us as well as to them if they would of their own initiative ask us to put an end to the bond that connected them with the Congress. If however they were not prepared to do this, then I asked them, as President of the A.I.C.C., to show cause why they should not be disaffiliated. So far as I can remember no answer came to this letter.

It is difficult to be positive that they did not answer, as our foreign letters were often tampered with by the British Government; a little later the civil disobedience movement started and most of us went to prison.

I have no exact knowledge of what happened during the movement but when I came out of prison for a brief period in October 1930 I have a recollection that the acting Secretary of the A.I.C.C. complained to me of some of the activities of the London branch. I could not take any action as I was re arrested eight days later.

3. See Selected Works, Vol. 4, pp 124-128.

The Delhi Settlement in March 1931 was immediately followed by a violent attack by the London branch on the Congress and its leaders, and specially on Gandhiji who appears to be the bete noire of the branch. Ever since then there has been a succession of such attacks.

Gandhiji and other prominent Congressmen have been referred to as traitors betraying the interests of the country and the masses.

Syt. S. Saklatwala, a leading member of the branch, has taken a particularly prominent part in these attacks.

A proposal was made in the branch recently to take out a black flag procession to meet Gandhiji on the day of his arrival in London as the sole representative of the Congress. There was some opposition to this and ultimately a compromise was arrived at that there should be no such hostile demonstration but that there should also not be any welcome.

On the 27th June 1931 an Indian Political Congress was held in London under the presidency of Syt. Vithalbhai J. Patel. At this conference Syt. S. Saklatwala and several other members of the London branch created a disturbance and the conference had to be adjourned. Syt. S. Saklatwala circulated a leaflet at the conference in which he referred to "the treachery of the Indian National Congress leaders at Karachi under the arch-hypocrite, Gandhi." The "Congress crowd" is said to have brought about "a betrayal of liberty and a consolidation of the forces of exploitation and profiteering". Their "apostle", it is added, "is the cotton-wool saint, Gandhi, the arch-hypocrite." Further reference is made to "the low and disgusting intrigue of Gandhi, the faithful ally and servant of British suzerainty in the East."

Syt. S. Saklatwala, in spite of his horror at and disgust with the Congress and his open repudiation of the Congress creed and policy, continues and insists on continuing his membership of the London branch. He can do so because he has strong support in the branch, otherwise action would have been taken against him and other members of his way of thinking. Instead of this, however, the president and treasurer of the branch, Syt. S. S. Mohamedi, who disagreed with Syt. Saklatwala, has recently had to resign from his offices as well as from the membership of the branch.

Owing to the activities of the London branch most of the Indian residents of London have kept aloof from it. On behalf of many of these, as well as some members of the branch, Syt. S. S. Mohamedi has requested the President by cable and a letter to disaffiliate the branch.

We have not been in communication with the London branch for a considerable time. We have read of many of their activities in the public press. I believe we have not received their annual affiliation fee since 1929.

I should like to add to this note that of our foreign branches, the New York branch was disaffiliated early in 1930. I regret to say, however, that a gentleman[4] still describes himself as the president of this branch and it may be that some people in America consider him to be our representative.

The Kabul branch has not functioned at all for a long time past. No action has been taken against it, but it may be considered to have ceased to exist.

Jawaharlal Nehru

4. Sailendranath Ghose.

55. To Secretary, Frontier P.C.C.[1]

12/8/31

Dear Comrade,

You are already aware of the decision of the Working Committee regarding future work in the Frontier Province. I trust you and our other comrades in the Frontier will give their cordial cooperation to the new arrangements and will work with all goodwill and earnestness with Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan. We have difficult times ahead when all of us will be tested to the utmost. Let us prepare for them so that we may be ready to shoulder all the burdens that come our way.

With all good wishes,

Very sincerely yours,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 A.I.C.C. File No P-17/1931, p. 197, N.M.M.L.

58. To C. Chattur Singh[1]

August 26th, 1931

Dear Mr. Chattur Singh,[2]
I thank you for your letter of the 9th June.[3] It is always a pleasure to have news of our countrymen abroad. I hope, therefore, that you will write to us from time to time and let us know how Indians are faring in Fiji

We are having a critical time here and it is not possible to say what the near future will bring us. Whatever that may be, one thing is certain that India will continue her fight for Swaraj till full freedom is attained. We feel that we cannot do much for our countrymen abroad so long as we are not free here. As soon as India achieves her freedom there will be no difficulty in bettering the conditions of our countrymen abroad.

With all good wishes,

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. A.I.C.C. File No. F.D. 15/1929-1931, p. 61, N.M.M.L.
2. An Indian settler in Fiji who collected and sent money for Congress work.
3. Chattur Singh had written that unless the Congress helped the Hindus in Fiji, the Muslims would succeed in securing separate electorates.

57. To Secretary, Bangalore D.C.C.[1]

September 18th, 1931

Dear Sir,
I regret the delay in answering your letter of the 5th September.[2] I wished to consult my colleagues before I answered.

1. A.I.C.C. File No. G-145/1931, pp. 3-4, N.M.M.L.
2. The secretary of Bangalore D.C.C. wanted to know whether direct action could be taken against the Mysore Government's ban on hoisting the national flag and on the volunteer organisation.

The Mysore Government is not technically bound by the truce between the Congress and the government. Nor are you bound by it so far as the Mysore Government is concerned because the obligations must be mutual or not at all. Therefore it is open to you to take such defensive action as your committee may think fit and proper both in regard to the flag question and the picketing of liquor shops. But I should like you to realise that whatever you may do you will have to do relying on your own strength. You should not expect any help from outside. I say this to you not because you happen to be in an Indian state but because this is our usual advice and policy in other places also. No action can succeed unless there is local strength to carry it on.

In regard to the flag I would suggest that, to begin with, you should not hoist it in a public place but you should encourage private houses and shops to display the flag. You should also encourage the wearing of flags and emblems such as buttons etc. This should be done not in a spirit of bravado and defiance but in the ordinary course of Congress activities. In particular you should do this on the last Sunday of every month, these being flag days.

Thus your committee is given liberty to take such action in regard to picketing and the flag as you may consider necessary for defensive purposes. It is obvious that we cannot agree to the winding up of Congress activities anywhere. We have tried our best to come to some terms with the Mysore State on the matter in dispute and we have given them every chance to alter their policy without any loss of prestige. They have, however, not made any substantial change.

You will please let me know how the situation develops and what you propose to do.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

58. To Vallabhbhai Patel[1]

Delhi
September 24th, 1931

My dear Vallabhbhai,
I wrote to you yesterday as I was leaving Allahabad.[2] On my journey up here I read long accounts of the Hijli affair in Bengal and I was shocked by it.[3] I have been discussing it with Ansari. He feels also that the matter is too serious a one for us to ignore. Bengal is naturally and rightly very exercised about it. I feel that a visit by you to Calcutta in the near future is very desirable. Ansari agrees with this view. We both of us also feel that perhaps it might be desirable to have the next Working Committee meeting in Calcutta on the date fixed. But this is for you to decide having regard to all the circumstances.

Would it not be advisable for you to write to the Viceroy about Hijli? The demand of the detenus as well as of other people of Bengal is that an impartial inquiry should be held. Nothing could be more reasonable. In the Assembly even men like Sir Abdur Rahim supported this. The government has merely ordered a departmental enquiry. A brutal and bloody assault inside a camp prison resulting in two deaths and serious injuries to about 20 persons is a very grave affair and it is an insult to ask a couple of government officials to enquire into the matter departmentally.

The Advance seems to be continuing to write offensively against Subhas and B.P.C.C. Its comment on Subhas's resignation was in the worst of taste. I am afraid Sen Gupta and his party are putting themselves entirely in the wrong. I wish Aney could do something in the matter.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. A.I.C.C. File No. G-60/1931(Pt. I), p. 79, N.M.M.L.
2. Not printed. The letter dealt with the appointment of a whole-time auditor for the A.I.C.C. office and referred to the organisational difficulties of the Frontier P.C.C.
3. On 16 September 1931, the detenus at Hijli were fired upon following their alleged attack on the sentries. Two persons were killed and 20 injured. An official inquiry held later said that the firing was unjustifiable.

59. To Prithvi Raj Singh[1]

October 2nd, 1931

My dear Thakur Saheb,[2]
I have your letter. I see a great many difficulties in the way of creating the trust you propose. Firstly I am of opinion that no Congress committee should possess zamindari rights and lands. This is bound to lead to difficulty. Secondly so far as I am concerned I would not like to be associated with a zamindari even on a small scale. Thirdly the income from the property is not much and I do not see how much can be done with it. It is quite likely that in the hands of the public trust the villages may become the reverse of income-yielding.

I do not therefore see how this trust is likely to function. Personally I would suggest your helping the Congress with a money donation or your tenants in some direct way.

I am returning the village papers that you sent.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. A.I.C.C. File No. G-40(KW)(i)/1931(Pt. I), p. 115, N.M.M.L.
2. A zamindar in Bareilly district.

60. To Ali Gul Khan[1]

October 3rd, 1931

My dear Khan Saheb,[2]
I have received the copy of your letter dated 20th September which you sent to the President.[3] As he has referred all matters relating to the Frontier Province to me I have written today at some length to Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan[4] I enclose a copy of my letter to him. This copy was to have been sent to the secretary of the P.C.C. Will you kindly hand it over to him after reading it and informing our other colleagues of its contents.

1. A.I.C.C. File No. G-17/1931, pp. 153-155, N.M.M.L.
2. Then vice-president of the Frontier P.C.C.
3. It mentioned the difference of opinion between Abdul Ghaffar Khan and Congress workers regarding the Working Committee's resolution to merge Congress and Afghan jirga volunteer organisations.

I had a long talk in Lahore with the friend whom you sent there and I hope he has told you about it. I fully realise your difficulties and I am sure you appreciate our difficulties also. The Frontier Province is of course important enough by itself. It is however doubly important for us today because of the all-India effects of what may happen there. We have therefore to keep many matters in view. I am sure you will realise all this and help us in arriving at a solution of the problems that confront you and us. On you and our colleagues in the Frontier we must necessarily place our full reliance.

You will notice that I have suggested that a provisional committee should be formed and that all the old members of the executive of the Frontier P.C.C. should resign to enable the provisional committee to be formed. There is no other way out of the present difficulty. Whenever there is a transitional stage we have such provisional committees. And a provisional committee can only be formed if the old committee ceases to exist for the moment by formal resignation. This of course does not mean that old members resigning keep away from future work. It simply means that they wish to assist in the reorganisation. Indeed even in the resignation they should, and I hope they will, offer their full cooperation.

I propose asking Rafi Ahmad Kidwai to visit your province for a few days to discuss all these matters with you and Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan. I am sure he will be a great help.

I was very sorry to learn of the conflicts that arose in regard to picketing in Peshawar.[5] The only way to put an end to them is to have one central directing committee and I hope the provisional committee suggested by me will be this.

4 Not printed. Jawaharlal had suggested in this letter that the organisational problems of the Frontier Congress could be solved in accordance with the "constitution, rules and programme of the Congress".

5. Congress volunteers stopped picketing a cloth shop in Peshawar when the dealer assured them that he would not import foreign cloth in future and he would export his existing stock to Afghanistan. The Red Shirt volunteers later picketed the same shop though they knew of the agreement with the Congress.

I hope you will not hesitate to write to me and to ask for any help that I might be in a position to give.

With all good wishes,

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

61. To Khurshed Naoroji[1]

October 3rd, 1931

Dear Khurshed,

I enclose copy of a letter I have sent to Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan. This letter is fairly detailed. I hope you will help in elucidating it and in getting the provisional committee formed. As I think I wrote to you the other day I want to send, if I can, Rafi Ahmad Kidwai to the Frontier Province. He may be able to go there in about 10 days' time. He will only stay for a few days. His presence ought to be helpful in bringing about a solution of the present difficulties. The whole matter requires careful handling and tact all round. As I am notoriously deficient in this quality it is up to you to provide it.

In my letter to Khan Abdul Ghaffar I have mentioned that it is open to the Frontier P.C.C. to recognise any other volunteer unit on fulfilling our conditions. What I meant by this was that the existing P.C.C. volunteers may be recognised as a separate unit. They will of course function under the provisional committee. It would be a pity to wind them up formally. However that is a matter for consideration by people there.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 AICC File No. P 17/1931, p. 131, NMML.

62. To Abdul Ghaffar Khan[1]

October 3rd, 1931

My dear Khan Saheb,

I enclose a formal letter addressed to you in answer to your letter sent to Sardar Vallabhbhai.[2] You have a very difficult task ahead of you and you can rest assured of all the help that we can give. You will not hesitate, I hope, to seek any assistance in our power. I should come myself to give you this assistance personally but you know our difficulties. I am trying to send Rafi Ahmad Kidwai to you. I think he will be a great help to you. He will not be able to stay long but even a few days will enable you, I hope, to put matters on a satisfactory basis.

I have had a letter from Gandhiji. He is anxious to know how matters are proceeding in the Frontier Province. I hope you will write to him direct. His address is Kingsley Hall, Bow, London. You had better send your letter by air mail. If you like, however, you can write to me and I shall forward your letter to him.

A few days ago I wrote to Dr. Khan Sahib. I hope he communicated the contents of my letter to you.

I enclose samples of the saffron and green colours to be used in our flags. We want uniformity in these. Kindly acknowledge this letter.

With all good wishes,

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. A.I.C.C. File No. P-17/1931, p. 157, N.M.M.L.
2. In his letter of 9 September 1931 Abdul Ghaffar Khan sought Vallabhbhai Patel's advice as to what he should do about the defiant members of the Frontier P.C.C. who had refused to resign from the committee.

63. To Vallabhbhai Patel[1]

Gonda
7.10.31

My dear Vallabhbhai,
I expected a telegram from you here or at Bahraich but none has come. I am anxious to know the date and place of the Working Committee meeting as my programme will be affected by it. You will remember that I suggested Calcutta. Whether you have Calcutta for the Working Committee or not I hope you will be able to pay a short visit to Calcutta, probably before the Working Committee. There is a very strong feeling of neglect there and a visit from you will do a world of good. I could go of course but my doing so would be almost an individual affair. Your going would have official significance.

It seems to me that Ansari's suddenly called meeting of the Muslim Nationalist Party means that he received a cable from Bapu.[2]

I suppose developments will take place rapidly at the R.T.C. now.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal

1. A I C C. File No 52/1931, pp. 159-160, N M M L.
2. At a meeting of the Working Committee of the Nationalist Muslim Party on 6 October a resolution was passed investing Ansari with full powers of negotiations on the Hindu Muslim question and to take such action as he thought necessary. Mahatma Gandhi, who was very anxious to call Ansari to London despite the opposition of the Muslim delegates to the Round Table Conference, had in a cable sent on 1 October informed him how difficult it had been even to discuss the possibility of his coming to London.

64. To Khan Sahib[1]

October 14th, 1931

My dear Khan,
I was very glad to receive your letter.[2] It is good that after two months of effort you have been able to write. Thank you for the two snapshots. I find that neither you nor your wife has changed much during the last 19 years since we met, terrible long time is not it?

Kailas[3] came to see me yesterday. I am glad that you liked him. He has told us a lot about his visit. I wish I could come too. Perhaps I shall be able to do before very long.

I am sending you a parcel containing 1,000 copies in Urdu of the Congress resolution on Fundamental Rights. Could you pass them on to Utmanzai for distribution?

I hope that you will help in fixing up the office at Utmanzai. An organisation must necessarily have a proper office. Otherwise it exists in the air.

You are perfectly right in saying that there is no proper publicity for you. That is why some competent man must be put in charge of your office and he should have no other work.

Do write to me from time to time.

Ever yours,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. AICC. File No. P17/1931, p. 95, NMML.
2. Khan Sahib had written on 6 October about the difficulties in looking after the correspondence of the Frontier PCC and in doing publicity work.
3. Kailas Nath Kaul, brother of Kamala Nehru.

65. To Khurshed Naoroji[1]

October 14th, 1931

Dear Khurshed,
I have received quite a sheaf of letters from you dated September 30th, October 3rd, October 5th and 11th. Some of these Kailas has given

1. AICC. File No. G40(KW)(i)/1931 (Pt. I), p. 23, NMML.

67. Note on the Kanpur Riots Enquiry Report[1]

I have read the Cawnpore Enquiry Report.[2] The Working Committee expressed the opinion some time ago that the terms of reference of the enquiry committee did not contemplate an enquiry or a dissertation on early history. I think that the committee has gone beyond these terms in so far as they have discussed these early periods. I realise that there is a great deal of misapprehension about the spread of Islam in India and it is generally believed that this took place by the sword and that this necessitated a continuous conflict with Hindu India. This widely accepted belief is certainly one of the causes of the present tension between Hindus and Muslims and the sooner it is shown to be incorrect the better. I agree with the main argument of the early chapters of the report, and my own limited reading of history convinced me long ago that the sword played an inconsiderable part in the spread of Islam and Hindu-Muslim relations were generally peaceful, apart from political conflicts, and a common culture was gradually being evolved. Invasions and conflicts, though often given a religious colouring, were almost always due to political reasons.

I should like this point of view to be developed and placed before the public, specially the Hindus. I feel however that the Cawnpore Enquiry Report was hardly the place for it. Apart from the interpretation of the terms of reference, there is some risk of this point of view not being fully appreciated in its present setting. The way it has been done in the report, able and laborious as it is, is not happy. There is too much of quotation. This was perhaps necessary as an argument, novel for many persons, requires substantiation. But none the less it gives too much of a patchwork appearance. It is neither a brief survey nor a detailed history. It is something between the two, and it suffers from obvious disadvantages.

In spite of my agreement with the main historical argument I have had the feeling, while reading the report, that there was an appearance of special pleading for Muslims and that too much stress was being laid on one side. If I had this impression, it is likely that many others

1. Lucknow, 31 October 1931. AICC. File No. 62/1931, pp 1-5, N.M.M.L.
2. The Congress Working Committee considered the report of the enquiry committee along with this note of Jawaharlal on 29 December 1931. The report, when published, was proscribed.

would have it in a larger measure and this would defeat the very object in view. It might also detract from the value of, and the impression created by, the part of the report dealing with the actual occurrences at Cawnpore.

I would like to add here that although I accept the general historical argument I do not agree with all the statements made, especially the comparisons between India and the West. It is stated for instance that the idea of territorial patriotism or nationalism, as it existed in Italy in the middle ages or in the city states of ancient Greece, did not exist in India till recently on account of caste and creed divisions. This statement is likely to give an entirely wrong impression of the facts. The modern idea of nationalism is of recent growth not only in India but also the West. In the middle ages there was no such thing as nationalism in Europe. Feudalism and nationalism are incompatibles. The attachment to a particular city which we find in ancient Greece or Italy of the middle ages was very far removed from nationalism. I feel therefore that it is wholly wrong to say that while nationalism of a kind existed in Europe of the middle ages or earlier it did not exist in India on account of caste and creed divisions. Nor am I prepared to accept the assertion made in the report that India exhibited greater diversity in religion, in social division and even in general culture than Europe of the middle ages. I feel that too much stress is laid in the report on what is called "the moral and religious basis of Indian civilization" as compared with "the economic and political basis of western civilization." I do not think there was any fundamental difference between Europe of the middle ages and India. Both had outwardly a moral and religious basis, and both were fundamentally governed by economic laws. The coming of the machine age transformed Europe even outwardly. India remained largely feudal.

There is reference in the report to the untold misery caused to the people of India by wars. And yet it is shown in this very report that Europe was torn into bits by numerous sanguinary conflicts, often religious, while India remained far more peaceful. As a matter of fact India has had less of wars than perhaps any equal area in Europe, certainly of western and south-eastern Europe.

India gradually begins to feel herself a political entity, it is stated in the report, after a century of British rule. This is certainly true in a sense, but only in a limited sense. A common subjection and the impact of the new idea of nationalism has made India a nation in the modern sense. But ever since the dawn of history, India has been in a sense a political and cultural unit and her people have always looked upon her as such, even when she was divided into a hundred

67. Note on the Kanpur Riots Enquiry Report[1]

I have read the Cawnpore Enquiry Report.[2] The Working Committee expressed the opinion some time ago that the terms of reference of the enquiry committee did not contemplate an enquiry or a dissertation on early history. I think that the committee has gone beyond these terms in so far as they have discussed these early periods. I realise that there is a great deal of misapprehension about the spread of Islam in India and it is generally believed that this took place by the sword and that this necessitated a continuous conflict with Hindu India. This widely accepted belief is certainly one of the causes of the present tension between Hindus and Muslims and the sooner it is shown to be incorrect the better. I agree with the main argument of the early chapters of the report, and my own limited reading of history convinced me long ago that the sword played an inconsiderable part in the spread of Islam and Hindu-Muslim relations were generally peaceful, apart from political conflicts, and a common culture was gradually being evolved. Invasions and conflicts, though often given a religious colouring, were almost always due to political reasons.

I should like this point of view to be developed and placed before the public, specially the Hindus. I feel however that the Cawnpore Enquiry Report was hardly the place for it. Apart from the interpretation of the terms of reference, there is some risk of this point of view not being fully appreciated in its present setting. The way it has been done in the report, able and laborious as it is, is not happy. There is too much of quotation. This was perhaps necessary as an argument, novel for many persons, requires substantiation. But none the less it gives too much of a patchwork appearance. It is neither a brief survey nor a detailed history. It is something between the two, and it suffers from obvious disadvantages.

In spite of my agreement with the main historical argument I have had the feeling, while reading the report, that there was an appearance of special pleading for Muslims and that too much stress was being laid on one side. If I had this impression, it is likely that many others would have it in a larger measure and this would defeat the very object in view. It might also detract from the value of, and the impression created by, the part of the report dealing with the actual occurrences at Cawnpore.

1 Lucknow, 31 October 1931. A I C C. File No. 62/1931, pp 1-5, N M M L

2 The Congress Working Committee considered the report of the enquiry committee along with this note of Jawaharlal on 29 December 1931. The report, when published, was proscribed.

I would like to add here that although I accept the general historical argument I do not agree with all the statements made, especially the comparisons between India and the West. It is stated for instance that the idea of territorial patriotism or nationalism, as it existed in Italy in the middle ages or in the city states of ancient Greece, did not exist in India till recently on account of caste and creed divisions. This statement is likely to give an entirely wrong impression of the facts. The modern idea of nationalism is of recent growth not only in India but also the West. In the middle ages there was no such thing as nationalism in Europe. Feudalism and nationalism are incompatibles. The attachment to a particular city which we find in ancient Greece or Italy of the middle ages was very far removed from nationalism. I feel therefore that it is wholly wrong to say that while nationalism of a kind existed in Europe of the middle ages or earlier it did not exist in India on account of caste and creed divisions. Nor am I prepared to accept the assertion made in the report that India exhibited greater diversity in religion, in social division and even in general culture than Europe of the middle ages. I feel that too much stress is laid in the report on what is called "the moral and religious basis of Indian civilization" as compared with "the economic and political basis of western civilization." I do not think there was any fundamental difference between Europe of the middle ages and India. Both had outwardly a moral and religious basis, and both were fundamentally governed by economic laws. The coming of the machine age transformed Europe even outwardly. India remained largely feudal.

There is reference in the report to the untold misery caused to the people of India by wars. And yet it is shown in this very report that Europe was torn into bits by numerous sanguinary conflicts, often religious, while India remained far more peaceful. As a matter of fact India has had less of wars than perhaps any equal area in Europe, certainly of western and south-eastern Europe.

India gradually begins to feel herself a political entity, it is stated in the report, after a century of British rule. This is certainly true in a sense, but only in a limited sense. A common subjection and the impact of the new idea of nationalism has made India a nation in the modern sense. But ever since the dawn of history, India has been in a sense a political and cultural unit and her people have always looked upon her as such, even when she was divided into a hundred kingdoms. India was more of a unit, in this limited sense, than any area of equal size, and than many a modern nation.

This note has so far dealt with the historical survey in the report. There are many other points touched upon in this survey which provoke thought and sometimes criticism. But the note is already too long. In spite of these criticisms, however, and in spite of my feeling that the historical survey is somewhat out of place in the report, I think it ought to be published.

The principal part of the report dealing with the Cawnpore occurrences has been very well done and the horror of the numerous tragedies and evil deeds is nakedly brought out. The enquiry committee has obviously taken great pains over it and it has succeeded in producing a convincing, though painful, version. It may be that people who read it, whether Hindus or Muslims, will be excited by it and some may have their communal passions aroused. But that is the fault not of the report but of the truth itself. I feel that the truth must be faced whatever the consequences. Probably the result will be good. People should be made to realise how communalism ultimately makes men behave like disgusting brutes. I am clearly of opinion therefore that this part of the report should also be published.

One small point might be mentioned. Ganesh Shankar Vidyarthi is often mentioned in the report and much is said in praise of him. It might be inferred that he was a prominent Congressman but nowhere is it clearly stated, except to a small extent in Syt. Purshottamdas Tandon's note, that Ganeshji was the leading Congressman in Cawnpore. Outsiders, who had not heard of Ganeshji, might be misled by this reticence. It should have been clearly stated that Ganeshji was not only the leader of the Congress in Cawnpore but was the president of the U.P. Provincial Congress Committee and as such the head of the provincial Congress organisation. It is well that this point should be stressed to show how one who was not only our dearly beloved brother but the responsible head of our Congress behaved in this crisis.

I suggest therefore that the whole report should be published as presented. Perhaps some of the appendices might be left out. I would also suggest that the report should be translated and published in Urdu and Hindi.

I have arrived at this conclusion apart from other considerations. But the fact that the Anglo-Indian newspapers have challenged us to publish it makes it doubly incumbent on us to publish it. Non-publication would definitely injure us.

In publishing it I would suggest that the President might state that the report has not been considered by the Working Committee yet and the Committee does not necessarily accept any statement of fact or opinion contained in it, especially in the historical survey or the remedies suggested.

Jawaharlal Nehru

68. To Saadullah Khan[1]

Allahabad
November 10th, 1931

My dear Saadullah,[2]

In Bombay I met Mr. Bahadurji[3] and also had a long talk with Miss Khurshed Naoroji. Both of them told me that a great deal could be done to improve your publicity and office arrangement. Complaint is sometimes made that enough publicity is not given in this part of the country to what is happening in the Frontier Province. This is perfectly true. But publicity can only be given when we have the material for it and such material is totally lacking. I understand that Mr. Bahadurji made various suggestions in regard to this matter. He wanted some information about certain cases but this was not supplied to him at the time nor has it come to him later. I should like Khan Sahib and you to appreciate that with the best will in the world we cannot give publicity unless you on your side give us the facts. Also that such facts must be authentic and capable of substantiation. One wrong or exaggerated statement made by us is immediately pounced upon by the government and the result is that even the true statements we might make lose their value. The National Congress today is a great and powerful organisation with a reputation to keep up and heavy responsibility to shoulder. We have thus to be careful in regard to the statements we make.

In most of our big offices we have gradually trained up people in doing accurate and responsible and efficient work. I remember well that a dozen years ago when our workers were not so trained, exaggerated statements were frequently made by them. A dozen years' strenuous

1 Maharashtra Government records, Police Commissioner's File No. 50134/II/III/1931 42.
2 Son of Dr Khan Sahib and was secretary of the Frontier PCC.
3 D N Bahadurji, a leading lawyer who became the first Indian advocate general of Bombay.

work however, with continuous checks and inspections has made a tremendous difference. In the Frontier Province this type of political work is more or less new and I can well appreciate the difficulties that you must have to face because we ourselves had these difficulties not many years ago. We realised, however, that any great national movement cannot be built up on popular enthusiasm only but that the basis of it must be efficient organisation. We concentrated for this reason on having proper offices and trained and reliable workers and thus built up the great reputation which the Congress possesses today. The Congress today claims to be ready to take charge of the Government of India and I have no doubt that it will before long do so. It can put forward this claim only because it has developed the power of organisation and efficient working. Governments are not run merely by popular enthusiasm but by the organisation at the back of them. Similarly national movements, if they are to be effective and to succeed, must have organisation and efficient workers behind them. You will forgive my laying stress on this repeatedly but I have a feeling that this point is not sufficiently appreciated in your province.

The human material that the Frontier Province has got is splendid. In many ways it is better than the material we have got but full advantage cannot be taken of this material unless there is an efficient organisation at the back of it. So far as political organisation is concerned we have a little more experience than our comrades of the Frontier Province and to some extent we are experts in the job. Because of this we can make even bad material go a long way. I feel therefore, we could help you greatly on the organisational side. But we do not know exactly how to do so. Obviously we do not wish to do anything without consulting Khan Sahib. We could send you good organisers and people who would look after your publicity and help you in office work but we do not wish to thrust any person upon you. As you know Mahatmaji induced Miss Khurshed Naoroji to leave the important work she had been doing here to go to the Frontier. She could be spared with great difficulty from here but we wanted to send our best to you. After some months' work she has come back and apparently the work that she has done will not have any lasting effect as it will not be continued. We sent some others but they also did not fit in with the kind of work that was being done there. Hence our difficulty. I do not know whom to send. I am told that so far as office work is concerned the whole burden is cast on you. This burden, as I know from experience, is very great and requires constant attention. In your case it is much greater because you have to reorganise your whole province from the very beginning and you have to face too many difficulties. You have to be in continuous touch with all your districts and workers and send frequent letters to them. You have also to keep in touch with us and nowadays you have also to communicate with officials. All correspondence has to be kept in files and copies of letters have to be kept for reference. Ordinarily letters have to be answered immediately without any delay. You have to keep records of official repression and atrocities and to verify them and to report them to us and to the Indian papers. All this requires a tremendous amount of labour. If, however, an office is run methodically and efficiently the work is simplified to some extent. The real difficulty which you have to face is to build up a proper office. Once you have done that you will find an amazing transformation in the whole province. You will feel how much stronger you are and your organisation can then pit itself against the organisation of the government when occasion arises for it.

I have written to you repeatedly about the necessity of applying the Congress constitution in its entirety to the Frontier Province and thus to bring your provincial organisation in line with the rest of the nation. Only in this way can we build up our strength. The greater the uniformity the greater our strength. Hence it becomes necessary to have uniform rules, one flag, uniform slogans and one outlook. The strength of India today is in this uniform outlook. It is necessary that all our common folks must understand this outlook and our techniques of nonviolent struggle. As you know, the time comes when all our leaders are removed and then the rank and file have to act for themselves. It is for this reason that we make the rank and file sign the Congress creed of nonviolence as well as sometimes other pledges. It is also for this reason that we continually keep before the masses the ideal of a common Indian nationality and try to make them forget provincialism and communalism and everything else that divides them into sects and groups. Always we have to lay stress on this and all our slogans and our flag and rules and demonstrations are meant to create this common national outlook. India in the past has had quite enough divisions between province and province, religion and religion, sect and sect. We must put this down and create one strong nationality based on the goodwill and well-being of the masses.

I have been reading in the newspapers about Obaidullah's[4] hunger strike in prison. I have been very much concerned about this, but I do not know what we can do in the matter. I understand that he has been sent to prison for non-payment of revenue. Is this an individual case or is it a part of a movement of non-payment? If it is an individual case then to that extent it is not political. If on the other hand there is movement for the non-payment of revenue owing to economic distress, I would like to know if your committee has passed any resolution on it and whether you propose to make it a general movement. If such is the case the matter should be referred to the Working Committee.

4 Nephew of Abdul Ghaffar Khan. A hartal was observed in Peshawar on 25 October 1931 as a protest against his conviction and imprisonment for non-payment of land revenue

I have written to you at length because between us there should be absolute frankness. We must understand each other's difficulties and each other's viewpoints. This letter is meant for Khan Sahib. I do not know where he is as he tours about a lot. But I hope you will show it to him as soon as you have the chance. And I hope he and you will write to me fully and frankly. Unfortunately I seldom get a chance of speaking to him at leisure. Whenever he comes south he has to return quickly. I have repeatedly requested him to come to the U.P. This was not so much because we wanted propaganda and the like but because I wanted to have the chance of being with him and of having many long talks with him. Unfortunately I have not succeeded so far and I am afraid that the immediate future holds out little hope.

Should Khan Sahib desire us to send any person or persons to help in publicity and office work we shall try to send some one. I would suggest your writing to Miss Khurshed Naoroji about it and also to me.

With all good wishes,

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

69. To Prafulla Chandra Sen[1]

November 16th, 1931

Dear Friend,[2]
Your letter.[3] There are only two ways of proceeding. One is to negotiate with the government and bring such pressure upon them by public agitation as is possible. The other is satyagraha or a no-tax campaign. Before you start such a campaign you must of course exhaust the other method and prepare your people for it. It is not possible for other districts to help you in any local struggle and the burden of it must fall on you You must consult your provincial committee.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 A I C C File No. P 6/1927 31, p 133, N M M L.
2 (b. 1897); member, Bengal P C C; imprisoned several times during freedom struggle, Chief Minister, West Bengal, 1962 67.
3 P C Sen had written on 12 November 1931 that the government had undertaken settlement operations in Hooghly district against the wishes of the people and asked Jawaharlal for advice as to how to stop the operations.

70. To Sampurnanand[1]

November 21st, 1931

My dear Sampurnanand,
Your letter.[2] I think it is quite clear that Congress office-bearers and members of the executive committees should not stand for the chairmanship of the municipality. The principle applying to membership applies with greater force to the chairmanship. Besides it seems rather absurd for a Congressman to become a chairman when all his colleagues

1 A I C C File No P 21/1931, p. 69, N.M M L.
2 In his letter of 19 November Sampurnanand asked Jawaharlal whether the P C C had barred Congressmen from becoming chairmen of municipalities not know what we can do in the matter. I understand that he has been sent to prison for non-payment of revenue. Is this an individual case or is it a part of a movement of non-payment? If it is an individual case then to that extent it is not political. If on the other hand there is movement for the non-payment of revenue owing to economic distress, I would like to know if your committee has passed any resolution on it and whether you propose to make it a general movement. If such is the case the matter should be referred to the Working Committee.

I have written to you at length because between us there should be absolute frankness We must understand each other's difficulties and each other's viewpoints. This letter is meant for Khan Sahib. I do not know where he is as he tours about a lot. But I hope you will show it to him as soon as you have the chance. And I hope he and you will write to me fully and frankly. Unfortunately I seldom get a chance of speaking to him at leisure. Whenever he comes south he has to return quickly. I have repeatedly requested him to come to the U P. This was not so much because we wanted propaganda and the like but because I wanted to have the chance of being with him and of having many long talks with him. Unfortunately I have not succeeded so far and I am afraid that the immediate future holds out little hope.

Should Khan Sahib desire us to send any person or persons to help in publicity and office work we shall try to send some one. I would suggest your writing to Miss Khurshed Naoroji about it and also to me.

With all good wishes,

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

in large numbers. It is stated over a thousand young men have been interned under the old ordinance and the new. The European Association is breathing fire. Dacca recently gave another example of hooliganism encouraged by certain officials and the police.

The joint B.P.C.C. is not functioning with any efficiency. It is merely carrying on.

I could not meet Subhas as he was not in Calcutta.

There is going to be a special provincial conference at Murshidabad on the 6th and 7th December. Great stress was laid on some Working Committee member attending this. I think it will be desirable if some one could go. I should have liked to go myself but it seems difficult. Rajendra Babu might perhaps be able to go. I hope there will be no meeting of the Working Committee to clash with this.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal

73. To Gopinath Singh[1]

November 26th, 1931

Dear Gopinath,[2]

I have received your letter from prison. I am sorry for the slight delay in answering it.

As regards furnishing sureties and bonds for good behaviour, the President of the A.I.C.C. has recently stated that this is undesirable. He has even said that bail applications should not be encouraged. I would therefore recommend to you not to worry about furnishing sureties etc. or in regard to bail.

As regards your case in the High Court I am sending your letter to the P.C.C. You have every right to defend this case but we are gradually reaching a stage when defence will not be encouraged. However in so far as your case is concerned if we can be of any help we shall certainly help you.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. A.I.C.C. File No. G 40/1931(Pt. III), p. 479, NMML.
2. (1901-1967); a Congressman and journalist of Kanpur.

who might have supported him in carrying out a forward policy have been kept out.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

71. Telegram to Vallabhbhai Patel[1]

22-11-1931

Bengal arrests under ordinances continuing. Approaching one thousand. Large numbers Congress workers arrested many districts. Dacca recently. Repetition smaller scale Chittagong. Europeans continually demanding more repression.[2] Believe government agreed to this. Great resentment young men. Difficult hold them in check.

Jawaharlal

1 AICC. File No G 60/1931 (Pt. I), p. 60, N.M.M.L.
In reply to Vallabhbhai Patel's telegram of 22 November 1931 which read: 'Bapu wires 'wild rumours prevalent situation Bengal'....can you send me full accurate information?" Jawaharlal was in Calcutta on this day.

2 Following the incidents at Hijli, Chittagong and Dacca, the European Association of Calcutta started a "Royalist Movement" and appealed to the government for retaliatory action against Congressmen.

72. To Vallabhbhai Patel[1]

Allahabad
November 24, 1931

My dear Vallabhbhai,
I returned from Calcutta yesterday after three strenuous days there. I addressed many meetings and met the new B.P.C.C. Joint Committee. I am afraid conditions in Bengal are very unsatisfactory. On the one hand government repression is very severe and people are being arrested in large numbers. It is stated over a thousand young men have been interned under the old ordinance and the new. The European Association is breathing fire. Dacca recently gave another example of hooliganism encouraged by certain officials and the police.

1. AICC. File No. 54/1931(Pt. IV), p. 403, N.M.M.L.

The joint B.P.C.C. is not functioning with any efficiency. It is merely carrying on.

I could not meet Subhas as he was not in Calcutta.

There is going to be a special provincial conference at Murshidabad on the 6th and 7th December. Great stress was laid on some Working Committee member attending this. I think it will be desirable if some one could go. I should have liked to go myself but it seems difficult. Rajendra Babu might perhaps be able to go. I hope there will be no meeting of the Working Committee to clash with this.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal

73. To Gopinath Singh[1]

November 26th, 1931

Dear Gopinath,[2]

I have received your letter from prison. I am sorry for the slight delay in answering it.

As regards furnishing sureties and bonds for good behaviour, the President of the A.I.C.C. has recently stated that this is undesirable. He has even said that bail applications should not be encouraged. I would therefore recommend to you not to worry about furnishing sureties etc. or in regard to bail.

As regards your case in the High Court I am sending your letter to the P.C.C. You have every right to defend this case but we are gradually reaching a stage when defence will not be encouraged. However in so far as your case is concerned if we can be of any help we shall certainly help you.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 AICC File No G-40/1931(Pt. III), p 479, N.M.M.L.
2 (1901 1967), a Congressman and journalist of Kanpur.

74. To Vallabhbhai Patel[1]

November 26th, 1931

My dear Vallabhbhai,

I enclose a cutting from a Bengali paper—an organ of the Sen Gupta party.[2] It contains a violent attack on me because I am supposed to have run down Bengal.[3] What I had done is this. After praising Bengal a lot I stated at a students meeting that Bengal had suffered greatly by internal dissensions and internecine struggle and on account of these even the great province of Bengal had gone down in the estimation of other provinces. The great response of Bengal last year, great as it was, would have been tremendous if there had been full cooperation between all groups. Therefore I called upon the young men and women to put an end to these quarrels of their elders and put Bengal again in the forefront. Even this gentle rebuke has touched our Bengal friends on the raw. I am afraid I have not added to my popularity in Bengal. Of course I said nothing against any individual or against any party. Probably both parties will join in the game of rending me now. Perhaps it is as well that I keep out of their provincial conference.

At a meeting of the joint B.P.C.C. Council in Calcutta two members of the Sen Gupta group misbehaved very much over a trivial matter. Because they did not agree with an interpretation of the chairman they walked out dramatically although their leaders accepted the interpretation. It was a very simple matter and there was absolutely no occasion for wrath. I must say that I was greatly irritated but fortunately I held my peace.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal

1. A.I.C.C. File No. G-60/1931(Pt. 1), pp. 52-53, N.M.M.L.
2. An editorial of the Advance of 22 November stated "...the Pandit (Jawaharlal) has told us that he had to hang down his head in shame, whenever reference was made to Bengal. We are not ashamed of Bengal's record...Let him compare Bengal with his own province and also Bombay and he will soon understand where the shame is and what his illusion is about."
3. For Jawaharlal's speech at a students' meeting in Calcutta, see post, section 4, item 22.

75. To D.R. Thengdi[1]

December 4th, 1931

Dear Comrade Thengdi,

I have your letter of the 26th November.[2] I am afraid it is not possible for the A.I.C.C. to make grants like the one you suggest. Even when they fully sympathise with an object all they have done is to raise funds privately and not to make official grants. The only exception they made to my knowledge was the grant of Rs. 15000/- for the Meerut Defence Fund. Even that procedure cannot be repeated as we have now got a definite rule that we cannot go outside our budget without special reference to the A.I.C.C. or unless extra provision is made independently. Even apart from this it would be difficult for the Working Committee to take the steps suggested by you as this will give rise to many complications. There are so many political cases today and so many of our comrades are being tried that the Working Committee cannot differentiate. Besides we are now recommending that no defence should be offered.

I am sorry therefore that I cannot be of great assistance to you. I am, however, enclosing on my own behalf a cheque for Rs. 50/-. This is a small amount but I hope it will be of some use to you.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. AICC File No. G-40/1931(Pt. II), p. 243, NMML.
2. Thengdi had written: "I would propose that you should grant a donation from the funds of the A.I.C.C. to make up this liability of the C.D. Fund."

76. To Khan Sahib[1]

December 5th, 1931

My dear Khan,
The curtain seems to have fallen on the happenings in the Frontier Province.[2] That these are pretty bad is obvious enough but news seems to be stopped by the censor. We can well imagine that you are having a hard time. Remember that we think of all of you very often and we know that you will face all trials to come without flinching. Very soon we in the U.P. are also going to have a stiff time. All the better.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal

1. A.I.C.C. File No. P-17/1931, p. 3, N.M.M.L.
2. The N.W.F.P. Government had sought to suppress the increasing popularity of the Khudai Khidmatgar movement through the imposition of section 144 and other extra-judicial measures. In November 1931, Abdul Ghaffar wrote: "When I hear and see the cases of robbery, dacoity and murder...I arrive at the conclusion that there is certainly the hand of government in it."

77. To Vallabhbhai Patel[1]

December 7th, 1931

My dear Vallabhbhai,
Your telegram. It will be a difficult job for me to go to Ahmedabad for the Working Committee and I am afraid most members will find it very inconvenient. At the earliest I can reach there on the 13th night or the 14th morning. As I have wired to you I propose to take

1. A.I.C.C. File No. G-60/1931 (Pt. I), p. 12, N.M.M.L.

Kamala to Bombay on the 12th reaching Bombay on the 13th morning. That night I can start for Ahmedabad returning to Bombay for the 15th.

About the celebration of Bapu's arrival I think something should be done but I am not quite clear what can be done. Perhaps we might consider this at the Working Committee meeting. You might call for meetings all over the country to pass an identical resolution conveying our affection and gratitude to Bapu and an assurance to stand by him in the struggle for independence and put up with all the sufferings that the struggle may bring.

Thank you for returning Dr. Datta's letter.[2]

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

2. Presumably S K Datta, Indian Christian representative to the Round Table Conference who had written to Jawaharlal from London informing him of the developments there.

78. To Vallabhbhai Patel[1]

Allahabad
8/12/31

My dear Vallabhbhai,
Your telegram correcting the 13th to the 30th. Certainly I shall attend this meeting if all goes well. Probably I shall be in Etawah till the 27th. Would you like me to be in Bombay when Bapu arrives? If so I shall try to get away from Etawah on the 26th.

I propose now to leave Allahabad with Kamala on the 13th morning, or may be the 12th, for Bombay. I hope to meet you there.

I am sorry about Imam Saheb's[2] condition.

1 A I C C. File No 52/1931, pp. 7 8, N M M.L.
2 Imam Saheb Abdul Kadir Bawazir, worked with Mahatma Gandhi in South Africa, joined noncooperation movement in India in 1920 and was imprisoned, participated in the raid on salt depots at Dharasana in May 1930; died in December 1931.

I read in the papers that the Bombay Government has objected to the flag song—Jhanda uncha rahe hamara.[3] This is one of our best known songs and is prescribed by us for all flag ceremonies. It is surprising that the Bombay Government should suddenly wake up after we have had this song for a number of years.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal

3. Written by Shyamlal Gupta 'Parshad'

4

POLITICAL SPEECHES AND STATEMENTS 1931

1. On the Riots in Kanpur[1]

We the undersigned deeply deplore the terrible tragedy of Cawnpore resulting in a large number of deaths including the death of Syt. Ganesh Shankar Vidyarthi, one of the noblest of workers who was trying to rescue those who were in danger. All accounts go to show that this true servant of the nation was a true nationalist free from any communal taint and respected equally by both the parties. We ask all lovers of peace to work in their respective areas so as to remove every cause of distrust or suspicion and seek occasions for both the communities to meet together and promote the common good.

We are convinced that there are more points of contact and common interest between us and infinitely less of differences. Chief among the former is the economic life which is impossible to be led in isolation. Common birth makes us interdependent in daily life. It is easy enough to see that both must perish if each lived its daily life apart from the other. He therefore who parts the two and sets one community against the other is the enemy of his own and must be treated as such.

At this juncture we cannot lay too much stress upon the necessity of not magnifying every petty quarrel into a communal grievance and using it as a signal for strife. On such occasions a Hindu should make it a point of honour to run to the rescue of his Mussalman brother and a Mussalman in similar circumstances to his Hindu brother and thus by mutual help lay the foundation for a true unity.

1 AICC File No. 34/1931, p. 5, N.M.M.L.
This joint appeal drafted by Jawaharlal was signed among others by Mahatma Gandhi, M. A. Ansari, M. M. Malaviya, Vallabhbhai Patel, Abul Kalam Azad, Sarojini Naidu, Kutubuddin Abdulwali and Sardul Singh Caveeshar and issued early in April 1931.

2. Appeal for Ganesh Shankar Vidyarthi Memorial Fund[1]

Shri Ganesh Shankar Vidyarthi was a veritable ornament of our country. The death of such a beloved and indefatigable public worker in the midst of the shameful communal disturbances at Cawnpore is a matter of deep sorrow to us all; but the rare courage with which he met his end raises the stature of our country. This is the noblest sacrifice that the country has made in the cause of Hindu-Muslim unity; and it places before us all a new ideal. The life and death of Ganesh Shankar shall ever be a treasured memory for our countrymen, and shall serve as a beacon light for millions of Hindus and Muslims so that they may keep to the right path in the midst of gloom and darkness. The body of Ganesh Shankar has been reduced to ashes; but his grateful countrymen will keep his memory green. His death imposes upon us certain duties that must be fulfilled immediately. We must shoulder some portion of the responsibilities that were his own, and then we must also give such form to our grateful affection as would perpetuate his memory and be dear to his soul....

1. The Hindu, 13 May 1931. Extracts.

3. On Hindu—Muslim Unity[1]

I have attended many a meeting, several of them late in the night, but I have never had such a lively time as I have this night. When I came to the meeting I thought that you must have been tired as it is so late in the night, but I am glad to find you so enthusiastic.

I declare that for me there is no room for the Hindu-Muslim question. My Muslim colleagues and myself, who are fighting for freedom, know that the question does not exist at all for us.

1. Dongri (Bombay), 9 June 1931. From The Bombay Chronicle, 11 June 1931.

We feel that our fight is for the poor; the Hindu-Muslim question is created and fostered by the monied classes and the educated people who want power for themselves. I had a short span of ten days' freedom when I was released in October last after my first conviction in connection with the civil disobedience movement. I had then said that I would ask the Muslims to write out their demands and I would accept them without the least discussion about them.

The noble part played by the Pathans in the fight for freedom was the best guarantee for Muslims' rights and I repeat it now. I appeal to Hindus and Muslims to stand shoulder to shoulder in the present struggle which is to improve the lot of the poor, to give them bread and to free them from the various disabilities under which they are labouring.

4. On Minorities and Nationalism[1]

In India, the question of minorities is approached in a wrong way. Personally for me the Hindu-Muslim question, as it is understood now, does not exist. I venture to say that in spite of the gravity the problem does not exist because it does not affect the masses. I have once likened it to ghosts. There are foolish people who believe in the existence of ghosts and get frightened, but that does not mean that wiser people should also believe in ghosts. Similarly for me the Hindu-Muslim problem does not exist because it does not affect the masses. The Indian communalists usually demand representation in legislatures and share in the spoils of office. Both these things benefit only a few persons at the top. It is true that they give power to those who go into legislatures or get services. But I do not believe that it is power for their community or a group as such. It only gives them power in their individual capacity. It also gives them a chance for nepotism. However, the ordinary man, the man in the street, the man in the field and the man in the factory is not affected by it.

1. Report of a speech delivered at the Christian Nationalist Party meeting at Bombay on 13 June 1931. From The Bombay Chronicle, 14 June 1931.

After all, what is it that the average man wants? The average man wants food if he is starving, wants clothes to remove his nakedness, wants a house to live in, money to spend. He aspires for a higher standard of living and comfort. Now in India there is appalling poverty. In the face of that poverty to talk of state jobs is to show the most callous ignorance about the real issue which is economic. In the future India parties will be formed with economic ideals. There will be socialists, anti socialists, zamindars, kisans and other similar groups. It will be ridiculous to think of parties founded on religious or communal basis. Religion ought to have nothing to do with politics and economics.

I repeat that the communal problem does not affect the masses. It only affects the few at the top; if it affects the masses, it is only because the shouting done by those interested few percolates to the masses, and sometimes when their passions are roused they break each other's heads.

The problems of the minority really pertain to freedom of language, script, religion and culture. In western countries the minority problem does not include any political demands. The examples of Germany's tyranny over the French in Alsace-Lorraine and the most recent example of Italy's efforts to "Italianise" the people in the newly acquired Austro-German territory after the Great War, show that in Europe it means the domination of a national majority over a minority. The division of political power will mean the creation of one state within another state, and that will be a most dangerous thing.

Nobody denies that every communal group should enjoy perfect freedom of religion, language, script and culture. The All Parties Committee Report has accepted it. The Congress also has declared it in its Karachi resolution.[2] The only question that remains is of representation in legislatures and share in the spoils of offices. But that is a fundamentally wrong view of the subject.

Where does political power ultimately rest? It rests in the inner strength of a group. If that strength is not there, no amount of paper guarantees will help it. There should be goodwill prevailing among the different groups. It is all the better if there are both; but if there is neither then the weaker must go to the wall.

The system of separate electorates is harmful not only for the nation but also for the minority. Logically it is not conducive for developing a national consciousness.

2. The resolution on Fundamental Rights and Economic Programme passed at the Karachi Congress on 31 March 1931.

The Congress attitude to the problem has been defined in its Lahore resolution. It has stood by it so far and will continue to stand by it. The attempt made by the All Parties Committee is in my opinion the biggest attempt ever made to solve the question and I doubt if any better attempt were possible unless it is on absolutely national lines without any tinge of communalism.

The Congress stands for a national settlement but it is prepared to accept an agreement arrived at by the parties. I have personally explained to the supporters of separate electorates how foolish it is on their part to put forward that demand. But if they insist on committing that folly I do not want to stand in their way. If one wants to go to the devil he must have that right also, and in order to take the right lead he must be allowed to take the wrong path for some time, if he so chooses.

Personally I am thinking of something quite different from both joint electorates and separate electorates. I am waiting for a chance to sweep away both. What I am aiming at perhaps may be a "Socialist Republic". But, meanwhile, I would prefer the introduction of joint electorates as it would help bring the two communities together.

I maintain that a great majority of thinking Muslims favours joint electorates. A majority of unthinking Muslims demands separate electorates. But the latter should not expect the Congress to sit upon their Muslim colleagues who stand by them and work with them and hand them over to those who sit on the fence, while the fight is on. If they expect that, it will be simply an amazing expectation. Much as the Congress wishes to solve the question, it cannot sacrifice one minority for another.

If there is any difficulty it is only about the classes who are really backward educationally and economically, and I personally hold that when Swaraj comes the resources of the state should be concentrated on their uplift and on bringing them first in line with the advanced section of the community.

I strongly repudiate the mischievous suggestion that Muslims have not participated in last year's fight. It is a gross libel on the community. Our people were shot down in other places but nowhere except in the predominantly Muslim province, namely, the Frontier Province, were they killed in their hundreds. The common suffering has created a feeling of camaraderie and if the minority question is left to me and my colleagues it can be solved within a few minutes because in our case there will be no bargaining but every party will be ready to give more and hesitate to accept more.

The difficulty is due to those who sat quiet while the struggle was going on and now are shouting loudly. I appeal to you to realise that the question is not so grave as is sought to be made out by some people, or as it appears from reading newspapers. I want you to remember that in a country of 330 millions, while a few clashes occur here and there, there are millions and millions who live in perfect peace and amity.

5. The Congress and Mill Workers[1]

All communities in every province participated in last year's satyagraha movement. The movement was so strong that it shook the mighty British Empire with all its strength. But the real strength of the Congress lies in the peasants and workers. It is for their freedom that we had fought and we have now become conscious of our strength. Our success is certain, whether it is in the near future or at a little distant date.

The question before you is what you should do. My advice is that you should join the Congress in large numbers and bring it round to your views. The Congress is carrying on a fight for the poverty-stricken masses. It is already influenced by the masses. Still, as it is an all-India organisation, bringing in its fold all classes, its decisions are influenced sometimes by other classes also, and thus they may not be exactly to the liking of the workers in all details. I therefore, want the workers to join the Congress and bring it round to their viewpoint.

The Congress has now really become a mass organisation and if any section of the Indian community keeps aloof from it, it will in no way do any harm to the Congress but it will certainly weaken that section. So wisdom demands that all should join the Congress. The Congress has just come out of a struggle successfully. It may have to resume it if the demand for freedom is not granted. Therefore I appeal to every Indian to strengthen its hands by offering full support and cooperation to it.

I appeal to the workers to join their unions and to strengthen the trade union movement. Workers have to solve their problems and for that a proper organisation is necessary. I deplore the weak state of trade unionism in the country. I regret the present split in the Trade

1. Bombay, 13 June 1931. From The Bombay Chronicle, 14 June 1931.

Union Congress, and sympathise with the efforts that are now being made for achieving unity.[2] I fear that if unity is not achieved soon all that we have achieved during the last ten or twelve years will be undone. I feel that if honest and sincere efforts were made by the trade union leaders, unity is quite possible. I appeal to you to combine your unions and impress upon your leaders the necessity of bringing about unity.

It is my firm conviction that there is nothing like a communal problem in India. All demands for safeguards are put forward on behalf of the minority community by persons who are after power and position. A minority, if represented on the legislatures, cannot become a majority. The real problem before us is economic.

The Congress fight is for Swaraj—for the workers and toilers. Otherwise it cannot be Swaraj. It will be a mockery. The Karachi Congress has definitely stated that the Congress stands for the masses. The Congress is a mighty institution and the Congress power is derived from the workers. The Congress is for the masses. So join and capture the institution. Also join the trade union to strengthen it. Then you will not be denied the fruits of your labours.

2. At this time there were three trade union organisations—the All India Trade Union Congress, the Indian Trade Union Federation and the Trade Union Congress. Efforts were made by trade union leaders like R. R. Bakhale and N. M. Joshi to bring about unity between different sections of the trade union movement.

6. On H.S. Suhrawardy's Allegations[1]

Our attention has only now been drawn to the statement which Mr. Suhrawardy[2] is alleged to have made in the course of his address to the Muslim Volunteers' Conference held at Bombay on June 1. In

1. The Leader, 15 June 1931.
Jawaharlal, along with Syed Mahmud and Jairamdas Doulatram, the other General Secretaries of the Congress, issued this statement.
2. H. S. Suhrawardy (1893-1963); leader of the Muslim League; Chief Minister of Bengal at the time of partition; founder of the Awami League in Pakistan; Prime Minister of Pakistan, 1956-57.

the press report it is alleged that Mr. Suhrawardy stated that 'some of those Muslims who supported joint electorates were paid to carry on Congress propaganda though at the same time he acknowledged that there were those who were honest and sincere in their views.' It is good of Mr. Suhrawardy to acknowledge that there are some Muslims in the Congress who are honest and sincere but, evidently, according to him there are others who have been bribed by the Congress to carry on propaganda in favour of joint electorates. This is a statement which we challenge and repudiate and shall be glad to know what grounds Mr. Suhrawardy had for making it. The Indian National Congress works in the open, its accounts are audited and published from time to time and anyone can see that. It is a surprise, therefore, to us to find that any person who claims to be responsible in any way can make a statement like the one attributed to Mr. Suhrawardy.

7. On the Defence of the Accused in the Delhi Conspiracy Case[1]

I had the good fortune to interview the under trials in the Delhi Conspiracy Case in jail.[2] There I learnt of the paltry offer which the government have made to help them financially in their defence, and of the demand put forward by the accused. The government's reluctance to give more shows how little anxiety it has to secure a fair trial for the accused. But in spite of this I ventured to advise the accused not to make receipt or non receipt of petty sums of money a matter of principle and reason for non-attendance in court.

The defence committee also is of the same opinion. I am glad to learn that our comrades ultimately, though not without reluctance, agreed to follow our advice. The defence committee has undertaken to make good the deficiency in funds and the lawyers appearing in the case have also agreed, I am glad to say, to cooperate by reducing their fees.

1 Delhi, 23 June 1931 From The Hindu, 24 June 1931.

2 The arrest of revolutionaries in connection with discoveries of arms dumps, dacoity in Delhi and the attempt to blow up the Viceroy's train in December 1929 was followed by the Delhi Conspiracy Case The accused refused to appear in the court in protest against the government's refusal to increase the defence counsel's fees. Following Jawaharlal's intervention on 23 June 1931 the accused attended the court.

I do not know anything about the probable promulgation of an ordinance for enabling the trial to be proceeded with in the absence of the accused, but any new ordinance will be an excellent commentary on the way the government is living up to the spirit of the truce.

8. On the Congress Attitude towards Harijans[1]

If temple-entry cannot be secured to the untouchables on equal terms, the temples with all their property will lapse to the government. The untouchables will not be subjected to any political disability. This has already been made plain in the Congress resolution at Karachi. There can be no place for communalism in a democracy.

However the policy of the Congress is to show every sympathy to the untouchables and bring them within the Congress fold. The untouchables too must learn to behave as if there was no such thing as untouchability. Temple-entry is an urgent problem and the Congress is doing its best to mould public opinion in favour of it. But the very nature of the question is such that the ultimate solution of the problem must depend on the united strength of the untouchables themselves.

1 From The Bombay Chronicle, 26 June 1931.
P N Rajbhoj, a Harijan leader, had asked Jawaharlal in an interview at Poona on 24 June 1931 about the Congress attitude towards the temple entry movement and the Congress policy towards the minorities and the Harijans

9. Reply to Depressed Classes' Welcome Address[1]

We are all untouchables because the present government has reduced us to a state of political slavery and made us powerless. There is no reason why you alone should be branded with that label.

I advise you not to labour under an "inferiority complex" simply because you have been branded as "untouchables" by others. Swaraj is the panacea for all your present sufferings and grievances under which you are labouring.

1 Bombay, 9 July 1931. From The Hindu, 13 July 1931.

10. On Terrorist Occurrences[1]

Not being a regular reader of the Pioneer and similar journals, I am afraid I do not keep in close touch with their attempts at misrepresentation. So far as the Congress is concerned, it is not our habit for each one of us to give expression to our opinion and sentiments whenever anything important occurs. It is enough for us that our leader Gandhiji does so. He speaks not only with the voice of the whole Congress organisation, but with the voice of India, and it would be presumptuous on the part of each one of us to give separate expression to our reactions to current happenings. It is clear enough that if anyone has to regret terrorist outrage in India, it is the Congressman.

1. Allahabad, 30 July 1931. The Pioneer, 30 July 1931.
The Simla correspondent of the Pioneer had reported that "comment is prevalent that the Congress camp remains strangely quiet" about the assassination of the sessions judge at Alipur.

It is impossible for this peaceful struggle to be carried on simultaneously with a contrary method. Therefore, it becomes essential for us even from the lower ground of expediency, to counteract with all the strength that we have, any attempts at violence. Apart from this, terrorist outrages on individuals are bad from every point of view. They are confessions of despair and only when an individual or a country is full of despair are they indulged in. They demoralise and let loose the spirit of violent revenge. Thus they must be condemned on human grounds as well as on political grounds. I am exceedingly sorry that at a moment when the country is facing a critical situation such unfortunate occurrences should take place, and divert our attention from the real issue.

11. On Political Violence[1]

I am for a clear-cut policy as against methods of "fencing". We can have either nonviolence or violence but certainly we cannot play with both. Last year we have shown our strength in the wonderful fight we have given to the government. We have to decide once for all the exact way by which we want to go. We cannot change our way because the government are changing theirs. If we really believe in nonviolence we must follow it irrespective of what the government do. If we do not believe in it we must have the courage to say so openly.

1 From The Bombay Chronicle, 7 August 1931.
These were Jawaharlal's remarks at the A I C C. meeting in Bombay on 6 August 1931 when it discussed Mahatma Gandhi's resolution condemning all political murders and deploring the attempted assassination of the acting Governor of Bombay and the assassination of the sessions judge at Alipur.

12. On Protection of Women Workers[1]

Women want "attention" and not "protection". I am personally unconcerned even if the House accepts the amendment in preference to the original article. I will still prefer the original clause. There could be no better instance of inferiority complex than Mrs. Kamaladevi's objection to the word "protection".[2] I do not understand what is humiliating in "protection".

I agree with several of the suggestions made in the amendments. But I do not think it is necessary to include them in the clause. Mr. Munshi[3] has remarked that I am in an awkward position because as a member of the Congress cabinet I have to agree to certain things with which I may not personally agree. But I am not in need of Mr. Munshi's sympathy, at least in this case, although I admit that there were occasions when I personally wanted to go a long way but could not carry the Committee with me.

1. The Bombay Chronicle, 9 August 1931.
   Article 4 of the Fundamental Rights and Economic Policy read. "Protection of women workers, and specially adequate provisions for leave during the maternity period" When it came up for discussion at the A I C C. meeting in Bombay on 8 August 1931, Kamaladevi Chattopadhyaya wished to replace it by "The State shall pay attention to the needs of women workers including the children when their mothers are at work, and adequate provisions during maternity period"
2. Kamaladevi had said that all women would emphatically protest against the word "protection" as it denoted an inferior position, they were not going to tolerate protection from anybody, not even from the State
3. K M Munshi (1881 1971), member, A I C C, 1931-37, suffered imprisonment several times in connection with the freedom struggle, Home Minister, Bombay, 1937-39, founder president, Bharatiya Vidya Bhawan, 1938 1971; Union Minister of Food and Agriculture, 1950 52; Governor, Uttar Pradesh, 1952 57, founder member, Swatantra Party; author of many books in English and Gujarati.

13. On Formation of the National Government in England[1]

The breakdown of the capitalist system in England seems to be proceeding more rapidly than the world had expected. It is curious and interesting that Mr. Ramsay MacDonald should be one of its last defenders. India is likely to be little affected by the proposed change so far as we are concerned. A National All Party Government has always existed in England.

1. Interview to the press, Delhi, 24 August 1931. The Bombay Chronicle, 25 August 1931.

14. Address to Mill Workers[1]

I want Swaraj for the masses—a Swaraj in which the masses will have a hand in the administration.

To me the meaning of Swaraj is to remove the foreigners from our country. There would be real Swaraj only when the reins of administration are in the hands of the kisans and labourers. That is the Swaraj which the Congress aims at and which we are trying to achieve for you. I do not want Swaraj on paper. I want Swaraj which gives you bread.

The kisans and labourers take interest in the fight because they know that several of their grievances will be redressed when they get Swaraj. There can be no final settlement till power is transferred to the kisans and the mazdurs.

1 Ahmedabad, 10 September 1931. From The Tribune, 13 September 1931.

15. On the Firing at Hijli Detention Camp[1]

The firing at Hijli detention camp has shaken Bengal from one end to the other.

Respectable and educated young men, whose only fault has been their patriotism, have been detained in the camp. They are not charged with any offence nor are they convicted of any specific offence. To shoot down such people is altogether inhuman and unpardonable.

Officials are systematically breaking the truce, and, though we would not like to resume satyagraha while Mahatma Gandhi is in England, yet, if forced, there is every likelihood of our resuming it.

1. Delhi, 24 September 1931. From The Tribune, 25 September 1931.

16. On the National Flag[1]

Consider the national flag as a symbol of freedom and not merely a piece of tricolour cloth. It is not the flag of any king or emperor, but it represents unity and strength of the teeming millions of India. I condemn cries of "Down with Union Jack", which have now been stopped by the Congress. The people of the Punjab should organise and discipline themselves to prepare for the next bigger struggle for freedom. India does not lack courage and sacrifice. The greatest need of the day is organisation and discipline. Last year the country sacrificed much at the call of the Congress. You must now prepare yourselves for greater sacrifice to win freedom for the country and this freedom will be won under this national flag.

1 Speech at the hoisting of the national flag at the Punjab Political Conference at Jhang, 26 September 1931. From The Tribune, 29 September 1931.

17. Speech at Punjab Political Conference[1]

You have had songs and poems in this conference. But I regret I am neither a singer nor a poet. I therefore will neither sing nor recite any poem. The time for songs and poems will come, and come very soon, when I will also join you in your rejoicings. But today I want to point out some of the defects in your working, not because I live in another province but because I love the Punjab much. I want to remind you that in the capital city of the Punjab we passed the resolution of complete independence. What has the Punjab done to achieve that goal? Certainly you have not done much to fulfil my expectations. I know that the Punjab is a province of brave men and women. I do not like to compare its work with that of other provinces; but I can say without fear of contradiction that next to Bengal this is the province which has made supreme sacrifices for the country. But the Punjab lacks method, organisation and discipline. It is the imperative duty of the Punjab Congress workers to reorganise themselves at once and instil into the minds of the people proper discipline and strength of organisation. This is the greatest need of the province. Those who do not like to follow the creed and principles of the Congress should remain outside its fold. Its door is open to all, but those who enter it must obey and honour its creed and principles. The last year's struggle carried on by the Congress has entirely changed the whole outlook of the people. The country has become new and men and women have been infused with new life and new ideals.

Last year when the Round Table delegates went to England they only displayed their debating skill and forensic eloquence. They made eloquent speeches and came back to India. But the Congressmen and women were suffering in jails. The government was compelled to release them eventually, and invited the Congressmen to the Round Table Conference. The Congress does not like to make a show of its eloquence or debating skill. Therefore, it has sent only one delegate, namely Mahatma Gandhi. This "naked fakir" has galvanised the whole world. His words are being very carefully heard by the whole civilised world. The respect that is being shown to Mahatmaji is only due to our sacrifices.

1. Jhang, 26 September 1931. From The Tribune, 30 September 1931.

I condemn communalism and declare that the Congress stands for Swaraj for all the people of India. The time has now gone when the Congress used to pass merely protest resolutions. The Congress is today standing on a footing of equality with the bureaucracy. We should not be afraid of repression. We must bravely face all troubles like brave men and women. Petitions and protests must now cease.

The young men of Naujawan Bharat Sabha are moving in a vicious circle. They are only passing protest resolutions against the arrest and conviction of their comrades and in turn the movers of the resolutions are also going to jails. Some of them are only engaged in collecting money for the defence of the accused in the conspiracy case. This is not enough work for the youth of the Punjab. Then some Naujawans have taken into their heads to condemn the Congress and its creed. If they cannot follow its creed let them carry on a vigorous programme. This method of sitting on the fence is wrong. It will lead them nowhere. They claim to speak on behalf of the workers and peasants. But they have done very little work for these people. On the other hand, when the Congress is working for the organisation of the peasants and workers, the Naujawans do not support the Congress. I call upon the Punjab Congressmen to immediately reorganise themselves and strengthen our movement. I advise them to stop all useless public lectures for some time and devote all their time to organising their forces. In the United Provinces the whole force of the Congress is being used for the organisation of the peasants. The U.P. Congress has practically become a Congress of the peasants. Let the Punjab prepare itself for the next struggle.

18. On Mahatma Gandhi's Birthday[1]

Not many words are needed to speak on this resolution.[2] At present Gandhiji's name is widely known throughout Europe and America. His fame has reached almost all the civilized world as one who is fighting

1. Allahabad, 2 October 1931. From The Leader, 4 October 1931.
2. The resolution sent greetings to Mahatma Gandhi on his sixty third birthday and assured him of the country's loyalty to the cause of independence.

for the cause of truth. I know that Gandhiji has gone to London not with the idea of bringing Swaraj to India but to represent the Congress view. When the late lamented patriot, Gopal Krishna Gokhale, visited South Africa after Gandhiji had left that country, he saw what an extraordinary person Gandhiji was and remarked that he had a wonderful power of making heroes out of clay.

19. On M.N. Roy's Defence[1]

I am interested in Mr. M. N. Roy's defence as a member of the Roy Defence Committee but I do not personally believe in such defence.

In the past, Mr. Roy has often criticised me very strongly but that does not make any difference. I met Mr. Roy in Moscow four years ago and since then I have followed his career with great interest. Whether one agrees with him or not, one has to recognize his great ability and his great sacrifice for India's freedom. I admire Mr. Roy for this and that is why I consented to be associated with the defence committee. I hope that Mr. Roy will get all sympathy and help which he so richly deserves.

The treatment he is receiving in the jail is very bad. He has been deprived of interviews, newspapers and the like. For a man of Mr. Roy's type, it is easy enough to do with physical discomforts but this mental starvation is far worse. It is shameful that government should treat a great opponent in this way and treat him for offences which occurred many years ago.

1 From The Bombay Chronicle, 9 November 1931
Jawaharlal wanted to interview M. N. Roy in the Kanpur district jail to enquire from him about the disabilities of which he had complained. Jawaharlal was refused permission on the ground of Roy's declared intention to exploit his trial for revolutionary propaganda. Interviews had been restricted to his relatives and legal advisers only.

20. On Hijli and Chittagong Occurrences[1]

It is not our habit to pass mere resolutions. Repression is not a new thing in India. It is to put an end to such things that we have resolved to sever our connection with the British Government and carry on the fight for freedom. To weep and curse the government over such occurrences is becoming of neither man nor woman.

How is it that the Hijli outrage has assumed such an importance? We have heard of the ten commandments of the Bible, but there is an eleventh commandment which was discovered by Moses written on a tablet and it is: "Never be one caught doing anything." Officials thoroughly practise this eleventh commandment. In the case of Hijli, unfortunately they have been caught napping. The authorities tried to dispose of stealthily the bodies of detenus but other prisoners in the camp resisted such a thing. They made it plain they would have to shoot them also if they tried to remove the bodies. The prisoners said the bodies could be passed on to the relatives of the deceased. For twenty four hours discussion between the prisoners and authorities continued and it was only when the authorities found that they would have to enact another tragedy if they forcibly tried to remove the bodies, that these were delivered to their relatives.

We are faced with a new peril these days. Chittagong has shown there is a movement on the part of non official Europeans in some cities, particularly Calcutta and Bombay, to organise goondas and pit them against the nationalist forces. It seems to me that we will have to fight this new menace in every city of India sooner or later.

I condemn the new Bengal Ordinance under which the government can arrest anybody they like, even a man with a big moustache, if he appeared disagreeable to them. In this way an attempt is being made to crush the Congress organisation in Bengal or for that matter all national work.

1. From The Tribune, 17 November 1931.
At a public meeting in Allahabad on 14 November 1931 a resolution was passed expressing indignation at the Hijli and Chittagong occurrences. The meeting also condemned the Bengal Ordinance and sympathised with the people of Bengal in their sufferings.

21. Harijans and the Congress[1]

I regret the social leaders keeping these poor people aloof from all social connection with the so-called caste Hindus. It is a humanitarian duty to help these people and give them proper education to enable them to realise their position in the country. The time has come when questions of caste and untouchability cannot have any place in the mind of the nation. The Indian National Congress under the leadership of Mahatma Gandhi, who has practically dedicated his life to the cause, is trying to remove this stigma from the country.

Many big men are now coming forward extending high hopes to this wretched lot and one of them is Dr. Ambedkar[2] who has claimed separate electorates for the untouchables at the Round Table Conference. You should not accept this mischievous proposal for it will only divide the country and with the help of that division and disunion, these persons, who have given high hopes, will serve their own purpose.

Everybody is now crying for Swaraj which is certainly not a bird in the air. If they really wanted Swaraj they will have to work for it. If Swaraj is explained as the removal of poverty of every community that object will be fulfilled not by division but by union. Real Swaraj requires the complete removal of poverty and so long as this is not done, Swaraj is far off. The Congress is always by the side of the poor and if they really wish to get Swaraj of this nature they should all come and rally round the banner of the Congress under the leadership of Mahatma Gandhi.

I strongly appeal to the youth and women of the country to get ready for another fight, which is about to take place, to achieve our desired goal. Another fight is inevitable if we really want Swaraj.

I am surprised at the conduct of the Aga Khan, Maulana Shaukat Ali and such other delegates at the Round Table Conference who pose big roar. It was a call given by the entire country. Many of us had heard it but had not tried to know how this came about. Such moments come when the vast masses of a country move to perform some heroic action. Many of us, therefore, while taking part in the great civil disobedience movement last year, realised what the real joy of life was.

1 Calcutta, 19 November 1931. From The Bombay Chronicle, 24 November 1931

2 B R Ambedkar (1891-1956); Harijan leader and one of the principal drafts men of the Indian Constitution, signatory to the Poona Pact, 1932 which rejected separate electorates for Harijans and enabled Mahatma Gandhi to end his fast, member, Viceroy's Executive Council, 1942-46; Law Minister, Government of India, 1947-51.

I want the young men of Bengal to be live men who can act when the time comes just as you acted last year. The movement during the last year was not confined to certain classes or groups of people but it had permeated all classes and communities in India.

Another aspect of the movement has been that quite unintentionally it has tried to remove numerous social evils that we are suffering from. That it is a live movement, has affected our social customs, in particular, it has affected our womenfolk, is evident from the participation of women in the last movement. The emancipation of women in the last movement was not our objective but the movement swept along with it the evil system of purdah and seclusion of women. Many women took charge of the movement and directed it. Men did not feel ashamed to follow them.

If you visit the rural areas you will realise how last year's movement had penetrated into the peasantry who had suffered for long from a variety of evils. No doubt they are the most exploited people of India but none the less they are affected by the movement. Of course, the ultimate solution of their problems depends on the final solution of the Indian question. Still, they could not but have gained something from the national struggle. The movement has therefore affected the whole domain of Indian life. It has affected them culturally, politically, socially and in a variety of other ways. When the urge for freedom becomes apparent, it develops itself in all its aspects.

The movement has affected us yet in another way. There was a time and not so long ago, when an Indian was not given due respect in foreign countries. Today, the situation has changed. He is now respected when he goes out of this country. We may still be slaves in our country. Our position is perhaps worse because of the new ordinances; still an Indian carries with him something of the glory of the last year's struggle when he is in a foreign land. Now the real power is not with the government but with the people. We are definitely nearer Swaraj as a result of the last year's fight. Our main concern should be how to develop our strength so that we are in a better position to face our enemies and make them realise the futility of confronting us.

As regards Bengal, I would say that although Bengal possessed splendid material, it was left far behind by other provinces in the last struggle. Bengal lagged behind even the little peasant of Gujarat. Why was it themselves to be the sole representatives of the Muslims of India but oppose the establishment of real Swaraj due to communal considerations.[3]

These gentlemen certainly are not the real representatives of the entire Muslim population of India and their views cannot be accepted as the views of Muslim India.

3 On 13 November 1931 they had submitted a memorandum to the British Prime Minister demanding, in addition to the maintenance of statutory rights, special representation through communal electorates and a declaration of civil rights.

22. To the Youth of Bengal[1]

Let me at the outset assure the people of Bengal that the Congress Working Committee has not turned a deaf ear to the cries of anguish that are heard in Bengal.

The days of truce are numbered and it is only a question of weeks or days when we give it a decent burial. When the fight is resumed, the underlying basis of the last year's movement will have to be adopted once again. I do not want you to be vegetables; I want you to be live men going headlong for the joy there is in working for a great ideal. Personally, I would exchange a place in the Cabinet for the joy I experienced last year while fighting for the national cause.

Soon after the Lahore Congress the country was gradually being prepared for a direct and definite action. Many of us were apprehensive but many of us were also optimistic about the final outcome of the last year's movement. Soon after the salt satyagraha was started by Mahatma Gandhi, many of us thought that it was ludicrous to challenge the mighty empire. There was loud laughter at high places of the government. But that laughter did not last long. Those who took part in the movement heard it as if the noise came from a distant wave. The noise disturbed many of us, but at the same time it found an echo in many a heart; a noise that became louder and louder until it sounded like a

1. Calcutta, 19 November 1931. From Amrita Bazar Patrika, 20 November 1931.

Although the number of persons who courted imprisonment during the last struggle was the largest in Bengal, Bengal's record was not bright because of the lack of Congress organisation and also due to factional fights which were not to be found in Bombay and Gujarat.

23. Call to Eschew Violence[1]

Let us seriously think and ponder over the great things in Lala Lajpat Rai's life and draw inspiration from them for more resolute and firmer action to achieve what he wanted.

It is physically impossible for any part of India to be oblivious of what is happening in other parts. It is impossible to forget what Bengal has been to the freedom movement in India. I often remember how, in my younger days, tales of Bengal's heroic achievements thrilled me and filled me with admiration for her young men. Since then the rest of India has looked up to her for political inspiration. Therefore, I say, it is physically impossible for the national workers of any part of India to ignore what is happening in Bengal today. It is impossible to divide India into compartments, either provincially, or, as what is called British India and Indian India. Therefore what happens in one part of the country vitally affects the other parts. It is obvious that if the government succeed in crushing the nationalist movement in one province it will be a terrible thing for the rest of India. Take it from me that it is impossible for India to forget Bengal. Bengal has always been in the vanguard of the freedom movement and it is for her to take the lead again. But if you say that the rest of India or that the Congress Working Committee does not pay much attention to what is happening in Bengal, you must remember that India of today is not the India of Jallianwala Bagh days. India has ceased to pass mere pious resolutions of protest and indignation. The Indian National Congress is today a powerful body—a body which is recognized as powerful not only in India, not only by the British Government, but by other governments and other countries.

You and I all know that it is almost impossible—why should we say almost?—it is impossible to achieve what we want without a fresh

1 From The Bombay Chronicle, 23 November 1931.
Report of a speech at the meeting held in Calcutta on 17 November 1931, to mark the anniversary of the death of Lala Lajpat Rai.

so is the problem that has to be faced by the youth of Bengal. There was a time when other provinces in India used to look to Bengal for inspiration. Now they find Bengal hopelessly divided. Its chief concern appears to be to form parties and indulge in mutual quarrels. The newspapers of this province have also fanned the fire of factionalism. It is sad and depressing to find even young men and women allowing themselves to be exploited by the people belonging to rival factions. This fight has been carried on for a long time, and by their actions they had defamed this province enough. This should now be stopped. I am not afraid of party politics but this kind of fighting, more or less on personal grounds, is a most degrading spectacle.

The Congress rules over this country not by force but by its service. Gandhiji had once suggested to us that when Swaraj comes, we, the Congressmen, should take the pledge that we shall not hold any office of the State. When the British go away, Congress workers may accept office but in an honorary capacity only. We should set this example before our young men that our motto would be service and not salary.

While in other professions of life, experts are needed for particular jobs, I am bewildered to find that everybody seems to be an expert in politics without the least training although they had to deal with the most difficult material. Public life and public service should be absolutely the expert's job. Lenin's motto was that revolution can be made possible only by experts. I do not know what changes would take place in our country, but I have no doubt that, in future, only the experts will have control over the destiny of the country.

We should also remember that our fight is not against an individual but against a machinery. We differ with our moderate friends because we have found out that when the best type of Englishmen and Indians are thrust into the machine which runs the government, they act and behave alike.

I am not a believer in the motto that if one gave me a slap on the right cheek, I should show him my left cheek. However, from practical experience and from the measure of success that we had gained during the last year's struggle, it is quite apparent to us what a tremendous power nonviolence has proved to be. If there is nonviolent atmosphere in the country, violent activities have no place. On the other hand, if there are violent activities in the country, it would be injurious to nonviolence. I therefore appeal to you that when nonviolence is the creed of the Congress, we should all help in creating an atmosphere of nonviolence in the country so that the Indian National Congress is able to carry out its policies smoothly and without any hindrance.

We do not follow the military method. The beauty is that ne man can fight a whole army. It is a fight of the soul, of the strength. As long as there is even one man left, we shall con- he fight and I am sure the masses will win and destroy the forces loitation.

situated as we are the municipality cannot go very far or do Political conditions must change and power must come into the of the people. Municipal work is important. Much can be done favourable circumstances.

To the People of Gadag[1]

u have gathered in thousands. I do not know whether you have to see me or to hear something from me. I have been touring in province to see how far you are ready for satyagraha. If you are Swaraj will be got for India soon. But if you have simply come of curiosity to see Jawaharlal Nehru, it is of no use. If you greet md shower affection on me it is because I took part in the fight. ember there are hundreds and thousands of others who have done c deeds. Thousands of sainiks and sainikas have done great ser- . But their names never appear in the newspapers. They are not nded.

e real strength of the movement lies in the fact that thousands of and women in the villages had a share in it. A handful of people ot do very much. The government has realised that the Indian ement today cannot be put down. You know that it is not because ne's personal difficulties that one fights, for Swaraj is not for peo- like me who live in comfort. People may say when you court suf- g and trouble: "Wait for another five years." If you are hungry thirsty can I say to you: "Why such hurry; why not wait for four ive years?" I have seen and you have seen the strength of India. world has seen and the government too knows it.

Gadag, 19 December 1931. From The Bombay Chronicle, 20 December 1931.

struggle. We shall have to enter that struggle soon. Therefore the only question now is whether we start the struggle today, next week, next month or thereafter. Of course we should have very much liked to start satyagraha with our captain Mahatma Gandhi with us. But we made it clear to him and he made it clear to the government that we would start satyagraha if we thought it necessary even when Gandhiji was in London. It is however better to start it with our general with us because it is going to be a big struggle. If Bengal wants to start satyagraha immediately it is for her to decide.

I appeal to the youth of Bengal to adhere scrupulously and absolutely to the path of nonviolence. I want you to appreciate my reasoning. I have arrived at this conclusion not because Mahatma Gandhi says it or anybody else says it, not because I am a religious votary of ahimsa but after a process of painful and lengthy reasoning and argument with myself and others, I have arrived at the conclusion that for India today there is no other path open than the path of nonviolence. Individual violence is a ridiculous and discarded method. It is emblematic of despair. Let us face facts because it is not a matter of a few brave words and a few brave acts. You and I have to decide the fate of more people. We cannot act in a fit of emotion or just because we want to figure as heroes on the platform or at the altar. I say and I say it definitely, and I challenge anyone to contradict me, that individual terrorism today in this country or in any other has always been resorted to just to wake up and rouse the people and to remind them that there are some who do not tolerate alien rule; but it has never succeeded in freeing a country.

Satyagraha is not a weapon of the weak. It is a mighty and wonderful weapon which has shaken the foundation of the British empire and drawn the attention of the whole world. Today you will find that in the provinces, where there have been occasional outbursts of violence, the organisational side of the Congress has suffered. You will find that there has been mutual conflict and the like. You will find that the Congress movement has not been able to achieve quite so much though there is excellent material in these provinces. Have you any doubt, young men of Bengal, that if you had desired, you could have achieved far greater things than any other province?

Of course it is true that many of us will have to give our lives before India is able to attain freedom. We will give our lives when the time comes and when we can achieve something by that. But do not give your lives in such acts which will not help you to achieve but will actually hinder the national fight.

24. On Bengal's Sacrifices[1]

Certain words of mine uttered at a students' meeting in Calcutta recently appear to have given pain to friends in Bengal.[2] I regret very greatly that anything that I have said should have caused this pain. I do not know how I was reported, but I gather that I was supposed to have drawn comparisons unfavourable to Bengal, regarding the civil disobedience campaign last year. If such was the effect of my words, I can only say that they were ill chosen and that they grievously misrepresented my feelings. When every province did its best and rose bravely to the occasion it would be churlish for any one to make comparisons. In the case of Bengal, with her splendid record of sacrifice last year, it would be foolish and utterly wrong to endeavour to depreciate the gallant fight which her sons and daughters put up. I may be foolish but I am not so ignorant of the great deeds that were performed in Bengal last year as to make a statement which was patently incorrect. In particular it would have been the height of ingratitude for me to run down the brave young men and women of Bengal whose guest I was on the occasion, and who had repeatedly honoured me with their affection and confidence.

In the course of my address to the students I had laid stress on the tremendous sacrifices of Bengal. I had pointed out, however, that the effect of these sacrifices would have been even greater if mutual distrust and dissension had been absent. For many years I have been intimately connected with the Congress organisation and perhaps because of this I have always laid stress on the organisational side of our work. I ventured to point out to the students I was addressing that mutual friction resulted in weakening the organisation and I appealed to them to strengthen the Congress organisation so that they could produce even greater results than they had done in the past from the fine material they had.

1 Allahabad, 7 December 1931. From The Leader, 9 December 1931.
2 See ante, section 3, item 74

25. Reply to Address of Gadag Municipality[1]

I have come from a thousand miles away. Wherever I have been I have received love from sisters and brothers, comrades and soldiers in India's army of freedom. India is one, no matter where one lives. The fight for India's freedom is also one. You do not greet me because I am great—you will find greater and wiser ones—but because I am ready for the fight. You realise that this is not the time for pleasure but for fighting. I trust you will take the fullest part in it. You know what is happening in the U.P. I can hardly think or speak. Lathis and bullets are being showered on us. I can only say that this fight which has begun in U.P. will spread and involve the whole country.

I have great interest in municipal work and have seen such work in foreign countries. But the time is such that with thousands suffering, I can hardly offer any advice. But you must remember the test of municipal work is judged by the houses and conditions of the poor and not the few mansions of the rich. But unfortunately municipal money goes mostly towards providing more conveniences and comforts for the rich. As long as it does not do something to remove the sorrow and the wretched conditions of the poor, it shows it has failed. So it is with the question of Indian freedom.

Peasants and workers realise today that it is for them that the fight is carried on. It is for the hungry, the naked and the thirsty. The last fight was suspended following the truce, not because we meant to stop the fight. That was to see if our object can be achieved through any other means. We can get some kind of Swaraj even now—a Swaraj where a handful of Indians will gain good positions and become high officers; but the conditions of the masses will remain the same.

Gandhiji is on his way back.[2] What is to happen we do not know. You know what is happening in Bengal, and the U.P. peasants in my province are poorer than most of you. They have been suppressed. We shall not give up this fight until their lives are saved from this misery. Perhaps the same fight will come to your province as well and you will have to follow their example. This is a new kind of fight. On one side is a huge army and facing it stand crowds of hungry and naked kisans. We do not follow the military method. The beauty is that even one man can fight a whole army. It is a fight of the soul, of the inner strength. As long as there is even one man left, we shall continue the fight and I am sure the masses will win and destroy the forces of exploitation.

1. Gadag, Dharwar district, 19 December 1931. The Bombay Chronicle, 20 December 1931.
2. Mahatma Gandhi had left London for India on 5 December 1931.

But situated as we are the municipality cannot go very far or do much. Political conditions must change and power must come into the hands of the people. Municipal work is important. Much can be done under favourable circumstances.

26. To the People of Gadag[1]

You have gathered in thousands. I do not know whether you have come to see me or to hear something from me. I have been touring in your province to see how far you are ready for satyagraha. If you are ready Swaraj will be got for India soon. But if you have simply come out of curiosity to see Jawaharlal Nehru, it is of no use. If you greet me and shower affection on me it is because I took part in the fight. Remember there are hundreds and thousands of others who have done heroic deeds. Thousands of sainiks and sainikas have done great services. But their names never appear in the newspapers. They are not garlanded.

The real strength of the movement lies in the fact that thousands of men and women in the villages had a share in it. A handful of people cannot do very much. The government has realised that the Indian movement today cannot be put down. You know that it is not because of one's personal difficulties that one fights, for Swaraj is not for people like me who live in comfort. People may say when you court suffering and trouble: "Wait for another five years." If you are hungry and thirsty can I say to you: "Why such hurry; why not wait for four or five years?" I have seen and you have seen the strength of India. The world has seen and the government too knows it.

1 Gadag, 19 December 1931 From The Bombay Chronicle, 20 December 1931.

You will have to carry on a fierce fight, for we have to replace the government machinery. Even if the whole lot of English officers leave and we put in Indians, the poor will not benefit. Only a handful of people will gain. We do not want such big offices. We want government and power in the hands of the poor. We must do away with big governors, Viceroys and other big-salaried officers. We are not out to create rajas, maharajahs and the like. We want the raja and the praja to be one. We want a panchayat raj consisting of elected servants of the country who can be removed if they fail to do their duty. We shall replace lathi raj by panchayat raj, and the power will be in the hands of the people. We are waiting for Gandhiji and we shall follow whatever advice he gives.

Remember that on January 26th 1930 we took a pledge that we will fight until Purna Swaraj is won. Suspension of the fight does not mean that it has ended. We may stop sometimes or fight from the right or sometimes from the left. This is only a change of the style of fighting. The responsibility of the coming fight will be on you and not on a handful of leaders who will all be arrested soon. You will have to carry it on until you reach the goal and come to release us from the dark cells where we shall be lying.

27. Reply to an Address at Hubli[1]

I have been presented with many addresses, but due to the pressure of time they were requested to read them. Some of them come from organisations that are dear to me. Trade union workers are old friends of mine. I was once their president. I wish today to say a few words, therefore, to the textile mill workers. No matter in what condition or state of life you may be, you must decide to work for the freedom of the country. Until then your grievances will not be removed. We must see that when freedom comes, it does not bring power to a few. Kisans also need to organise. They are a great power and strength, when formed into an organisation. The trade union movement was once a great organisation, but the trade union leaders themselves quarrelled and today the movement has lost its vitality.

1. 19 December 1931. The Bombay Chronicle, 20 December 1931.

The Congress is out to destroy untouchability. It will not consider India free until it has been done. It is bound to do so when it gets the power. Being long in subjection, we had got into the habit of considering ourselves helpless and looking to others for help. But now we are getting strong and are able to raise our heads in pride. We have gained confidence in ourselves. So we cannot sit quiet. If these depressed classes also gain confidence, they cannot remain long in that state. At the Round Table Conference, the depressed classes' representative demanded separate electorates, but Gandhiji refused it as he did not wish to perpetuate this condition. Their progress and salvation cannot be judged if they attain high offices and get seats in the legislature.

We are plunged today into a terrible fight in order to bring in the rule of the people. Panchayati raj alone will remove the sufferings of the people. So, please stop the cries of Maharaja, Rajadhiraja, 'Prince of India', etc. applied to myself and leaders, which I have been hearing for the last two days. Call out only in the name of the country and if you like, 'Mahatma Gandhi-ki-jai'. I want you to stop the custom of touching the feet of leaders. We have bowed to others long enough. Let us now learn to stand erect.

28. Imminence of a Struggle[1]

When I was asked to address a meeting here I hesitated to consent thinking that Gandhiji is soon coming and we should leave the speaking to him and prepare ourselves to do what he will ask us to do.

I refute each and every point of the attack against me contained in the U.P. Government circular. I deny the veracity of the facts mentioned in the government communique which contained statements pilfered during transit. The Congress never made a secret of its preparing for a fight; in fact it has declared from the house-tops that in case the Round Table Conference failed there will be a revival of the civil disobedience movement and the fight for freedom. Those who think otherwise are either simpletons themselves or take the Congress to be so But the Congress is not so foolish.

1 Speech at Bombay, The Leader, 20 December 1931.

Mr. Sherwani has been charged by the government with having issued a circular asking the Congress workers in U.P. to win over the kisans to the side of the Congress. But that is the object ever in view before the Congress. In fact it was its primary object. To work for the good of the kisans was its first and foremost task and it would never relinquish it. I am personally accused of attempting to establish the rule of peasants. My views on the subject are well known to the country. I am certainly working for a government in which the peasants have an effective voice in the administration of the country, but there was no idea of expropriation of the lands of the zamindars. Mr. Sherwani, the president of the committee, is himself a zamindar. Their secretary is also a zamindar and at least four or five out of the 12 members of the Council are good zamindars. So if Sherwani wants to adopt some other path there are others to prevent him from doing so.

As a matter of fact I always use the phrase panchayati raj among the kisans. I believe that so long as the peasants who formed the bulk of the Indian population had not an effective voice in the country's administration there would be no real Swaraj and, therefore, I am working for that end. That is also the objective of the Congress. As to the zamindari system prevalent in the U.P. even the officials including Sir Malcolm Hailey admit that it cannot work and it is collapsing. The question before them is how best to replace it.

I know what is happening in Bengal. Perhaps the same thing would be repeated in the U.P. My family and I did not originally belong to the U.P. but we have lived in that province for a sufficiently long period. I would only warn the government that it was the U.P. which had seen the greatest battles in Indian history which had decided the destiny of the country. If the final battle for India's freedom is to be fought in that province, the country would only welcome it.

I do not want to indulge in heroics. I feel that the strength of the Congress has immensely increased during the past few months; while if there was any increase in the power of the government it was to do more and more wrong. It is evident from the incidents that the country witnessed at Hijli and Chittagong. I warn the people that such incidents might be repeated at various places but we should in no case swerve from the path of nonviolence which we had adopted. It was relying on the nation's strength and its capacity to suffer that we launched the movement last year and if there be occasion to revive it those will be our weapons again.

29. Message to Karnatak[1]

I came to Karnatak at the invitation of my colleague Dr. Hardikar to attend the convocation ceremony of the Hindustani Seva Dal and to give certificates to the sainiks who had undergone the training of the Dal. Owing to the development of the situation in the U.P., I was hard put to it to find time to come. But I am very glad that I could ultimately do so and visit some parts of Karnatak. It was not my intention to undertake a tour of the province but the demands of friends and comrades were so insistent that I could not say 'no' to them. Even so it was impossible to go to all the places I should have liked to visit.

I know that Dr. Hardikar and office-bearers of the Karnatak Provincial Congress Committee had difficulty in arranging my programme so as to include as many important places as possible. They did their utmost but it was in the nature of things impossible to go everywhere, and so at my request, some centres, where good work has been done, have been omitted. The fault, if any, is mine and I must ask forgiveness for it. I could only visit the places on the way to my destination and could not afford to leave the main route for lack of time. I am deeply grateful to Dr. Hardikar, Syt. Karnad Sadashivarao,[2] president of the provincial Congress committee and Syt. R. R. Diwakar,[3] member-in-charge of the Karnatak Seva Dal and all other comrades for the great pains they took over the arrangements for my tour.

My four days in Karnatak have been busy days, full of engagements, but they have also been joyful days as wherever I went I saw enthusiasm and readiness to meet all the trials to come. It was a revelation to me to see the vast crowds that gathered everywhere in towns and countryside and the love and affection they poured on me were overwhelming. I know that this love and enthusiasm was not for a mere soldier like me

1. 20 December 1931. The Bombay Chronicle, 22 December 1931.
2. (1881-1937); president, Karnatak Provincial Congress Committee for many years.
3. (b. 1894); a leading Congressman of Dharwar; suffered imprisonment several times during the freedom struggle, member Constituent Assembly, 1946; Union Minister for Information and Broadcasting, 1948-52; Governor, Bihar, 1952-57; chairman, Gandhi National Memorial Fund since 1957, author of several books in English and Kannada.

but for the great cause which for the moment I was supposed to represent. I am going away from Karnatak full with memories of that land of ancient glory and achievement and with a conviction that the Karnatakis will not fail in the hour of trial which is soon to descend on us.

May Karnatak add another glorious page to her splendid history!

5

MISCELLANEOUS

1. To C. Chattur Singh[1]

April 9, 1931

Dear Mr. Chattur Singh,

....Please rest assured that our countrymen overseas are always present in our minds. We shall gladly be of service to you whenever we can. We feel however that ultimately the battle of India's freedom as well as the freedom of our countrymen abroad must be fought in India. We are concentrating all our energies on this fight here and when freedom comes to us you will certainly profit by it....

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. A I C.C. File No F.D. 15/1929, p. 41, N.M M L. Extracts.

2. To Bharati Sarabhai[1]

Bardoli
8.6.31

My dear Bharati,[2]

You are perfectly justified in your complaint, but then I warned you of my failings! And being a 'public man' I have to cover up these failings from the public gaze and so my friends get the full benefit of them. I am a fairly good letter writer so far as business letters are concerned. But I hate writing personal letters in a hurry and unless I am in the mood for them. So very often, the personal letters get delayed, and while I write trivial and not really important communications to all manner of people, the letters I would wish to write remain unwritten. This is all very involved, is it not?

In Ceylon I had a huge pile of letters to dispose of and I had no typist or secretary. I separated some of my personal letters and attacked the others with considerable success. Just as I was beginning to look forward to writing to the friends whose letters I had kept carefully by,

1. J N Correspondence, N M M L.
2. (b. 1912), daughter of Ambalal Sarabhai, playwright in English and Gujarati.

some accidents happened which prevented me from doing any writing. I was unwell and later we started going about from place to place with a heavy programme everywhere. For nearly a month now we have been constantly on the move, chiefly by car, with speeches and public functions and the like, and no rest. Yesterday we reached Bombay and I found a summons waiting for me from Bapu to come here—and so here I am. Tonight we go back to Bombay, and later I suppose I shall find myself in Allahabad

I am glad you are having a quiet time in Simla. It is not an ideal place to live in but at any rate it offers a change from civil disobedience, and let us hope it fits one for another dose of C.D. Go to Narkanda if you can. It is a short trip from Simla and it is worthwhile.

Our travels in Ceylon and South India have been very fascinating. They have not been restful but they have certainly provided a change from the usual routine.

Yes, I have read Isadora Duncan's life.[3] I liked it, because a frank and straight book always appeals to me. But I cannot say that I agree entirely with Isadora's outlook on life. I can well imagine how such a book would interest you. But Isadora's is too personal an outlook. It has its charms and its appeal for all of us, but it is often very limited and rather selfish Most of us can only taste of real greatness if we lose our individual selves in a great task. And perhaps only then can the real joy of life come to us.

I shall try not to be a sinner in future and when your letters come I shall not be too long in answering them. I am a bit of a machine in my work, but with my friends I would like to be human, and that means that I give in to my moods and even to my failings.

My good wishes and love to you and to Mridula.[4]

Yours affectionately,
Jawaharlal Nehru

3 Isadora Duncan (1878 1927), U S. dancer, the reference is to her autobiography, My Life, published in 1927.

4 Mridula Sarabhai (b. 1911); daughter of Ambalal Sarabhai, member, Bal Sena 1920 25 and youth movement, 1925 30; appointed one of the general secretaries of the Congress, 1946, was imprisoned several times from 1930 onwards in connection with the freedom struggle, worked closely with the Jammu and Kashmir National Conference after 1938, organized relief and rehabilitation of refugees including abducted women in India and Pakistan.

3. To Bharati Sarabhai[1]

In Running Train on way to Bombay
6-7-31

Dear Bharati,

What a good writer of letters you are! and how clever you are becoming with all your reading and thinking I feel rather small when you write to me of the books you have read, which I have not read and have no chance of reading. For life has caught me in its whirlpool and tosses me about hither and thither, and leaves little leisure to me to improve my mind or to pay homage to the arts and the softer side of life Long long ago I tried to learn from books and perhaps I learnt something from them. But all my later lessons have been learnt from men and women—humanity in the mass. It is a hard school but an efficient one, but it has little place in it for the graces, and sometimes memories of the days gone by come to me and I hanker after the graces and the arts, but life says no and I pass on and perhaps it is as well for I would hardly feel at home in that distinguished company. But secretly sometimes I steal an hour and go to some book which makes me forget my worries and troubles and I enter another world and let my fancy roam about in its lanes and byeways. But only sometimes.

Why do I delight in warfare? Well, to begin with I do not really delight in it. But I do delight in adventure and in taking risks and in facing danger and it is because I get this adventure and this sense of danger out of the struggle that I like the struggle. And I love the struggle because peace is so welcome and so pleasant when it follows strenuous action. But I am a man of peace, provided peace does not mean stagnation and fear and too much love of doing nothing and taking no risk even for a great cause.

I am glad you liked Rani Rajwade.[2] We have known each other for a great many years and have been good friends. Ever since she drifted to Gwalior I have seen little of her.

Go back to your college if you feel like it. There is no harm in it unless you have to give any objectionable undertaking. You may learn something useful there. Intellectual training is very necessary but by itself it is very barren. As you yourself say, how much you learnt last year in the heat and burden of the fray. How you have grown and felt yourself merge for a while in the larger unit that is Indian humanity, and felt your pulse beat in unison with that of a million others. It is a great feeling and worth having and those who have had it will often hanker for it again. I have no doubt that the time will come again when we shall be tested and it will be a more difficult test than ever before. Keep ready for that time.

1 JN Correspondence, NMML.
2 Rani G Laxmibai Rajwade, wife of Ganpatrao Raghunath Raja Rajwade, army minister of Gwalior Government in 1931, chairman, sub-committee on women's rights, National Planning Committee of the A.I.C.C., 1938.

I am on my way to Bombay. I am afraid there is little chance of my going to Ahmedabad. I must rush back to the U.P. for millions of peasants are in trouble there and I cannot desert them.

Au revoir—and don't get too frightfully clever.

Yours,
Jawaharlal

4. To Will Durant[1]

As at Sabarmati
July 22, 1931

Dear Friend,[2]

Your letter of 5th June. Your fame had preceded you. Whether it was your publisher or some friend who sent it I had your book which contains references to myself.[3] But the book was taken away from me by an American friend as soon as it was received. Hence I was unable to glance through its pages. Anyway I knew you then to be a well known author.

Now for your questions.

(1) Life for me is real as I believe it to be a spark of the Divine.

(2) Religion not in the conventional but in the broadest sense helps me to have a glimpse of the Divine essence. This glimpse is impossible without full development of the moral sense. Hence religion and morality are, for me, synonymous terms.

1. J.N. Papers, N.M.M.L.
2. William James Durant (b. 1885); popular writer on philosophy and history; best known for his The Story of Civilisation.
3. The Case For India (1930); at one place in the book, the author had contrasted the attitude of Motilal Nehru and Jawaharlal to civil disobedience and had said that "the younger Nehru, Jawaharlal, destined to be one of the major leaders in 1930, refused to commit himself to the avoidance of violence, laws made by alien tyrants were not to be respected as laws"

(3) Striving for full realisation keeps me going.

(4) This strife is the source of whatever inspiration and energy I possess.

(5) The goal is already stated.

(6) My consolation and my happiness are to be found in service of all that lives, because the Divine essence is the sum total of all life.

(7) My treasure lies in battling against darkness and all forces of evil.

You have asked me to write at leisure and at length if I can. Unfortunately I have no leisure and therefore writing at length is an impossibility.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

5. To Will Durant[1]

Allahabad
August 20th, 1931

Dear Mr. Durant,

You have done me an injustice by suggesting in your letter that your name is unfamiliar to me. Ignorant as I am of many things that I ought to know, I was not unaware of your books or of you. My only regret is that a somewhat busy life has not left me leisure enough to read all your books. The only one I know is your Story of Philosophy. But I hope that the fates and the British Government will combine to give me another opportunity of extending my knowledge and reading some more of the books I have long wanted to read. Most of my reading during the past few years has been done in the peace and quiet of a prison cell. With luck I may visit this again soon and then I hope to have the pleasure of reading your other books.

Your letter raises fascinating questions—fascinating and yet rather terrible. For your argument leads to the inevitable conclusion that all life is futile and all human endeavour worse than useless. You have done me the honour of putting these questions to me, but I feel my utter incompetence to answer them. Even if I had the time and leisure, which unhappily I have not at present, I would find it difficult enough to deal with the problems you have raised.

1. JN Papers, NMML

Indians are supposed to find pleasure in metaphysics but I have deliberately kept aloof from them, as I found long ago that they only confused me and brought me no solace or guidance for future action. Religion in its limited sense did not appeal to me. I dabbled a little in the various sciences, as a dilettante might, and found some pleasure in them and my horizon seemed to widen. But still I drifted and doubted and was somewhat cynical. Vague ideals possessed me, socialistic and nationalistic, and gradually they seemed to combine and I grew to desire the freedom of India passionately, and the freedom of India signified to me not national freedom only but the relief of the millions of her men and women from suffering and exploitation. And India became a symbol of the suffering of all the exploited in the world and I sought to make of my intense nationalism an internationalism which included in its fold all the nations and peoples that were being exploited

I was troubled by these feelings and felt my helplessness. There seemed to be no obvious way of realising my heart's desire. Then came Mr. Gandhi and pointed a way which seemed to promise results, or at any rate which was a way worth trying and afforded an outlet for my pent up feelings. I plunged in, and I discovered that I had at last found what I had long sought. It was in action that I found this—action on behalf of a great cause which I held dear. Ever since then I have used all my strength in battling for this cause and the recompense I have had has strengthened me, for the reward has been a fuller life with a new meaning and a purpose to it.

This is hardly an answer to your question. But not being a philosopher, but just a man who feels at home in action, I cannot give you a very logical or scientific answer. I have believed in science and logic and reason, and I believe in them still, but at times they seem to lack something and life seems to be governed by other and stronger forces—instinct or an irresistible drive towards something—which for the moment do not appear to fit in with science or logic as we know them. History with its record of failure, the persistence of evil in spite of all the great men and great deeds of the past, the present breakdown of civilisation and its old time ideals, and the dangers that lurk in the future, make me despair sometimes. But in spite of all this I have a feeling that the future is full of hope for humanity and for my country and the fight for freedom that we are waging in India is bringing us nearer the realisation of this hope. Do not ask me to justify this feeling that I have for I can give you no sufficient reasons. I can only tell you that I have found mental equilibrium and strength and inspiration in the thought that I am doing my bit for a mighty cause and that my labour cannot be in vain. I work for results of course. I want to go rapidly towards my objective. But fundamentally even the results of action do not worry me so much. Action itself, so long as I am convinced that it is right action, gives me satisfaction.

In my general outlook on life I am a socialist and it is a socialist order that I should like to see established in India and the world. What will happen when the world becomes perfect I do not know and I do not very much care. The problem does not arise today. There is quite enough to be done now and that is enough for me. Whether the world will ever become perfect, or even much better than it is today, I shall not venture to answer. But because I hope and believe that something can be done to better it, I continue to act.

I am afraid I have avoided your principal question—what is the meaning or worth of human life? I cannot answer it except by telling you how I have looked upon life and what motives have driven me to action.

Sincerely yours,
Jawaharlal Nehru

6. To Sri Prakasa[1]

30.8.31

My dear Prakasa,

Please refer to The Statesman dated August 28th. The leading article 2nd paragraph asks for an enquiry into "the failure of the Congress committee to take disciplinary action against the Benares branch for the murder of Agha Mohammad Jan." This is a highly objectionable and libellous statement. I do not know how far it is actionable at law. The Benares committee ought to take legal advice and send a notice to The Statesman. Gandhiji saw this article and was clearly of opinion that some action should be taken.

I do not know what happened in the case against the captain of the Benares volunteers or his brother, who were arrested after the murder of the Agha. Please let me know.

1 A.I.C.C File No. P-21/1931, p 257, N.M.M.L

I hope to be in Allahabad up to the 5th when I shall go to Muttra and thence to Ahmedabad for the Working Committee meeting.

Yours affectionately,
Jawaharlal Nehru

7. To George Slocombe[1]

31.8.31

Dear Mr. Slocombe,
The Free Press Journal of Bombay of the 29th August 1931 has reproduced an article by you from the Evening Standard. The article is on Mr. Gandhi. There are a number of statements in this article which are inaccurate. But I should particularly like to draw your attention to the story of Mr. Gandhi meeting the Prince of Wales. As reported, this story runs thus:

> "The other incident, never until now disclosed is even more characteristic of Gandhi. It happened during the visit of the Prince of Wales to India. Gandhi and Mohamed Ali had proclaimed a boycott of the royal visit. Hartals had been organised in every great city in India. The authorities were helpless. The visit was hastily curtailed and many functions abruptly cancelled. One day in Delhi, Gandhi had called informally at Government House to discuss a private matter with an Indian member of the Government of India. He was in the member's room when the door suddenly opened and in walked the Prince of Wales, followed by an aide-de-camp.
>
> The Minister was aghast. The Prince of Wales looked embarrassed. And then Gandhi did an unexpected thing. He went swiftly forward, bent to the floor and with both hands embraced the feet of the Prince of Wales—the eastern gesture of homage. And, still crouching at the Prince's feet, he appealed to him, "Sir, be kind to India." I am told that the Prince, greatly moved, murmured something inarticulate, shook hands with the kneeling figure and fled. Afterwards it was said that there were tears in his eyes."

1 AICC. File No. 57/1931, pp. 1-2, NMML.

Those of us, who have been associated with Mr. Gandhi, had never heard of this dramatic incident. We did not know that he had met the Prince anywhere, or that he had visited Government House in Delhi in those days, informally or otherwise. Nor were we aware of his indulging in the "eastern gesture of homage"—embracing the feet of another—to anyone. To make sure, however, we enquired from Mr. Gandhi, just before he sailed for Europe, if he knew anything of the incident referred to by you in your article. He was equally ignorant of it and he asked me to write to you and ask you to let us know your authority for the story. May I therefore request you to enlighten me on this point?[2]

Sincerely yours,
Jawaharlal Nehru

2. In his reply George Slocombe expressed regret but added that he had got the story from a reliable source.

8. To S.A. Brelvi[1]

September 7th, 1931

My dear Brelvi,
Your letter.[2] I am afraid I am most unfit for writing an article on Gandhiji. I am surprised at your asking me to do so. No person with whom one is intimately connected in public and private life can ordinarily be made the subject of an intelligent article. Some years ago, however, I did write an article on him for a French symposium.[3] I wrote it in English but my article appeared in French. I have lost the original in English but if you can trace it in French you can publish it in French. The book is called, I think, Annales de l' Inde.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. A.I.C.C. File No. G-40(KW)(i)/1931 (Pt. III), p. 559, N.M.M.L.
2. Brelvi had asked Jawaharlal to contribute an article for Mahatma Gandhi's birthday issue of The Bombay Chronicle.
3. This article is not available.

9. To S.B. Patel[1]

September 18th, 1931

Dear Patel,[2]
I am sorry for the delay in answering your letter of the 7th September.[3] As you know I have been out of Allahabad.

I am certainly interested in M. N. Roy's defence and would like to help him as much as I can. So far as I know there is no central organisation for the defence yet. There are two or three local committees. The T.U.C. has also appealed for funds for the defence. In Cawnpore there is a local committee which elected me as their chairman. I have asked them not to have me as chairman as I shall not be able to give much time to the committee, but I have agreed to serve as a member of the committee. Should you desire to contribute any money to the defence fund you could send it to Dr. Jawaharlal,[4] Civil Lines, Cawnpore. You can rely upon him that the money is properly utilised.

I am acting in this matter of course in my personal capacity and not as Secretary of the A.I.C.C.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. AICC File No P-11/1931, p 37, NMML.
2. Secretary, Bombay PCC
3. The addressee had asked to whom the contribution for the defence fund for M. N. Roy should be sent
4. He was in charge of the defence committee for M. N. Roy set up in Kanpur.

10. To Mahatma Gandhi[1]

Allahabad
September 19th, 1931

My dear Bapu,
In my desire to send you duplicates of the letters I send by air mail I am getting into quite a muddle and I am afraid I must have puzzled you also. Sometimes the copy must have reached you before the original. The enclosures with the original could not all be repeated with the copy. However I shall carry on in this haphazard way in the hope that something reaches you.

1. J N Correspondence, NMML.

I enclose a draft trust deed for Swaraj Bhawan.[2] I shall be glad if you could let me have your approval of it. In particular I should like your opinion on the point raised by Jamnalalji and referred to in my note.[3]

An article on Muttra district sent to Kumarappa for Y.I. is also enclosed for your information.[4] Our district officers, whose salaries and future emoluments you will no doubt be asked to guarantee for ever and ever, are carrying on merrily. Only two hours ago I had a visit from a group of kisans from near Allahabad. They bore signs of injury on their bodies and even their womenfolk had bruises and blood and broken teeth. Those who were more seriously injured could not come to us. All this was merely the result of gentle persuasion to pay up the balance of the rent due. And as I thought of these gentle methods my mind went back to a well remembered clause: "Such picketing shall be unaggressive and it shall not involve coercion, intimidation, restraint, hostile demonstration, obstruction to the public" etc., etc.[5]

It is a strange world we live in and daily we add to our experiences. In London city there is peace and harmony—at any rate I suppose so—and the future of India is being discussed and fashioned out. Here, the future seems so distant. The present absorbs our attention. Enough for the day is the evil thereof, and it is a little difficult to feel vastly interested in the constitutional problems that are being discussed at the R.T.C.—direct or indirect election, second chambers etc. I wonder when you will come to grips with the real question.

I am sending you separately by air mail one Agrarian Report. There are a number of misprints in it. I have not myself read the whole of it yet as it is just out of the press.

I went to see Chintamani yesterday. He is pretty bad and he is hardly likely to be well enough to go to the R.T.C. He is very much cut up at not going as he had apparently set his heart on taking up a strong line in opposition to Sapru

Love,

Yours affectionately,
Jawaharlal

2 Not printed.
3. See enclosure.
4 See ante, section 2, item 38.
5 Seventh clause of the Gandhi Irwin Settlement.

ENCLOSURE

NOTE ON THE SWARAJ BHAWAN TRUST

Jamnalalji has pointed out that the draft deed of trust may not permit sale of the property should necessity for this arise and he wants this power to be given It is probable that the present draft will not allow this to be done. In any event as the question has been raised it ought to be cleared up, one way or the other.

My own feeling is that it will be very unfortunate if Swaraj Bhawan has to be sold for any reason and I know that father was averse to this also. Swaraj Bhawan has a certain cash value no doubt but its real value is one of association and sentiment. A principal object of creating the trust was that the site itself should remain a national possession and should not go into other hands.

At the same time I feel that I should not allow my sentiment to intrude too much in this matter. It is possible that a contingency might arise when the purposes of the trust might be served better by a sale of the property. As I cannot apply my mind impartially to this question I am requesting the proposed trustees to favour me with their opinions. I am also requesting Gandhiji for his advice in the matter. I am very sorry for the additional delay, but perhaps it is best that the matter be cleared up.

A possible suggestion is the addition of the following clauses to the deed of trust:

> "It shall not be open to the trustees to sell or otherwise alienate the property, but under very special circumstances, if it is clear that the purpose of the trust will be served better by such sale or alienation, the trustees may do so, provided that no such decision will be arrived at unless the trustees are unanimous and unless the Working Committee of the National Congress approves of such a decision.
>
> In the event of such sale or alienation taking place the monies realised shall be invested in other properties for the furtherance of the objects of the Trust."

This is not in legal language but the meaning is probably clear enough.

Jawaharlal Nehru

11. To Jawaharlal Rohtagi[1]

September 22nd, 1931

Dear Rohtagi,
You must know that the superintendent of the Cawnpore jail has refused to allow me to interview M. N. Roy. I enclose a copy of the letter I have received. Will you kindly ask M. N. Roy's lawyer to inform him of this and tell him that I am very sorry I have been prevented from seeing him?

Please also ask the lawyer to tell him that I received a message from Roger Baldwin of New York expressing a wish to help Roy and enquiring from me what he could do in the matter. I have sent a cable to Baldwin suggesting that financial help might be sent. I have also written to him to this effect.[2]

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. A.I.C.C. File No. G-40(KW)(i)/1931 (Pt. II), p 311, N.M.M.L.
2 See ante, section 1, item 26.

12. To Mahatma Gandhi[1]

Delhi
24.9.31

My dear Bapu,
I am on my way to the Punjab to attend the Punjab Provincial Conference at Jhang.

Shocking incidents have happened at Hijli in the detenus' camp in Bengal. You may have received cables about them if the censor has not stopped them. I enclose some newspaper cuttings. Bengal is in a bad way and the non-official and official Europeans seem to be making a dead set against Congress activities on the one hand and the detenus and their colleagues on the other. I feel we have been neglecting Bengal and we cannot afford to do so. Subhas has resigned from the

1 Gandhi Smarak Sangrahalaya, Serial No. 17843.

B.P.C.C.—and so have many others.[2] But Sen Gupta's group is not acting very graciously.

I did not send you the U.P. Agrarian Report by air mail after all but sent it by ordinary post. The charge for the air mail was 12/- and this seemed to me to be monstrous. I felt you would not approve of this extravagance.

Love

Yours affly.,
Jawaharlal

You seem to be shifting your headquarters in London but I am continuing sending my letters to Bow.

The newspaper cuttings are sent separately.

2. On 18 September 1931 Subhas Chandra Bose resigned as president of the Bengal P.C.C. as Mahatma Gandhi had suggested that his resignation would help settle the dispute between him and Sen Gupta.

13. To D.N. Bahadurji[1]

Allahabad
October 14th, 1931

Dear Mr. Bahadurji,

I have just received a letter from Nargis Captain in which she tells me that you are not likely to come this way by the 20th. I shall probably be here till the 24th or 25th. If you can possibly pass this way by that date I shall be happy to meet you. But I do not want to put you to any unnecessary trouble.

When you go north you should first go to Dr. Khan Sahib, 3 Michin Road, Peshawar. He is the brother of Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan. I cannot give you much information about the places you might visit and the people you should see. I am afraid you will have to find this out after you reach there. Dr. Khan Sahib and Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan will be your guides. Khurshed Naoroji will of course be there and she will give you every help. There will be no difficulty about arrangements but I am afraid that you may not have a very comfortable time.

1. A.I.C.C. File No. G-40(KW)(i)/1931 (Pt. I), p. 7, N.M.M.L.

Civilisation has not penetrated very far in the north and you may find many of the habits rather trying. Even more trying will be the childlike and unmethodical nature of the Pathan. He has no conception of offices and method and writing and the like. He can concentrate with difficulty on a particular bit of work or even on a subject. Like most children he gets tired soon of one subject. But he is seldom tired of talking. He has many fine points of course and is often very loveable.

I really have no further suggestions to make. Please write or wire to Khurshed Naoroji the time of your arrival. Her address is C/o Dr. Khan Sahib.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

14. To Chief Secretary, U.P. Government[1]

Allahabad
October 16th, 1931

Dear Kunwar Jagdish Prasad,

I am really very sorry to trouble you with so many letters. I am writing this about M. N. Roy whose case is being tried in Cawnpore. Perhaps you know that I was not permitted to interview him in jail. I am a member of his defence committee and am interested in his defence as he has practically no relatives or friends to help him. But not only was I not permitted to see him but all manner of restrictions have been placed on visitors and counsel for him. As the trial is held inside the jail this also keeps out almost everybody interested in him. Roy's letters even in connection with his case are held up and he is harassed in a variety of ways. I am sure that this treatment cannot be due to any orders of the provincial government. Roy is a man of ability and note who has held a very high position and who has an international reputation. Ordinarily he should be treated with every courtesy and given every facility. But he is not even given the facilities given to ordinary undertrials. I hope the local government will consider his case and direct that he be treated with the consideration he deserves.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 A.I.C.C. File No G-40(KW)(m)/1931, p 23, N.M.M.L.

15. To the Manager, Gauhr-i-Hayat Office, Kanpur[1]

October 19th, 1931

Dear Sir,
I have your letter of the 16th.[2] I dislike greatly my name being used for any saleable articles. I object still more to the name being associated with patent medicines. As for my picture appearing on any such articles I have the strongest objection to it.

Yours faithfully,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 A.I.C.C. File No. G-5(KW)(1)/1931, p 107, N.M.M.L.
2 A pharmaceutical company in Kanpur, selling a medicine under the name of Jawaharlal, had sought permission to print his picture also on the label.

16. To Vallabhbhai Patel[1]

Allahabad
21.11.31

My dear Vallabhbhai,
In Calcutta I had a long talk with Rabindranath Tagore about various matters. I also met some of his other people and I found from them that he was in great financial need for Santiniketan. The need was so great that there was danger of the institution collapsing—and yet the immediate amount wanted was only Rs. 10,000/-. I was told that Tagore felt that if Bapu had been here he would have helped him to get this sum. For various reasons Bengal is not helping him at present. What is to be done? It would be a great pity if an international institution like Santiniketan and Viswabharati collapsed. I told them that

1 A.I.C.C. File No. 54/1931 (Pt. IV), pp. 399-401, N.M.M.L.

I would try to introduce them to a few friends in the U.P. but obviously the U.P. could not give much. We are paupers. However we might give him 1000/- or so. He wants me to give letters of introduction for Bombay people. I suggested that this was outside my province and it would be best if he consulted you on the subject. Probably therefore Tagore's secretary will go to see you. I shall give him a brief letter of introduction.[2] There are many people who do not care to contribute to Congress funds but who might give something to Tagore. Anyhow I feel that we ought to help the old man in his troubles.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

2. Not printed

17. To Vallabhbhai Patel[1]

November 24th, 1931

My dear Vallabhbhai,
I have today registered the deed of trust for Swaraj Bhawan. I enclose a copy. There has been great delay in doing this. I hurried matters today as I was afraid that in case of my arrest matters might hang over for an indefinite period. I trust you approve of the deed.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. AICC File No G 60/1931 (Pt. 1), p. 55, NMML.

18. To P.R. Lele[1]

26/11/31

Dear Sir,[2]

I am in receipt of your letter.[3] I do not know what has offended you. I am not aware of having made any personal attack against Dr. Ambedkar. I have never met him and till recently I had not heard of him. There is thus no question of my having any personal grudge against him. I strongly criticised his policy and attitude as being injurious to the country and to the depressed classes. I also pointed out that his behaviour to Gandhiji had been exceedingly discourteous.[4] If this fact is incorrect I shall gladly withdraw the remark.

You are probably quite correct in comparing me to my disadvantage with Dr. Ambedkar. Not knowing Dr. Ambedkar I cannot compare, but knowing myself rather well and being very conscious of my many shortcomings, I can well believe that Dr. Ambedkar excels me in many ways. Dr. Ambedkar, as you say, might well have been on the High Court bench. Certainly there never was a chance of my becoming a judge of any court. But Dr. Ambedkar's excellence or my frailty or autocracy should have little to do with the consideration of national problems and should in no event be a substitute for courtesy.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. AICC. File No. G40/1931 (Pt. III), pp. 457-458, N.M.M.L.
2. An advocate of Bombay.
3. He had alleged that Jawaharlal referred disparagingly to Ambedkar in a speech at Calcutta. See ante, section 4, item 21.
4. In his speech of 8 October 1931 at the Round Table Conference, Ambedkar had said: "The Mahatma has been claiming that the Congress stands for the depressed classes, and that the Congress represents the depressed classes more than I or my colleagues can do. To that claim I can only say that it is one of the many false claims which irresponsible people keep on making, although the persons concerned with regard to those claims have been invariably denying them." Later, he wrote: "Unfortunately, the Congress chose Mr. Gandhi as its representative. A worse person could not have been chosen to guide India's destiny. As a unifying force he was a failure. Mr. Gandhi presents himself as a man full of humility. But his behaviour at the Round Table Conference showed that in the flush of victory Mr. Gandhi could be very petty minded...."

19. To K.F. Nariman[1]

November 27th, 1931

My dear Nariman,
Thank you for your telegram informing me that you have sent Rs. 1300/- to Cawnpore.[2] If you could add another 200/- this ought to carry them through. Any further money collected will be useful for the future.

I am glad to learn that you are going to the Murshidabad Conference.[3] I am afraid I will not be able to go. On that very day we are holding an important meeting of our Council. Besides I have succeeded unwittingly in irritating many of our Bengal friends. They are very sensitive. I tried to lay stress on the desirability of the youth of the country putting an end to the mutual conflicts that have been going on in Bengal so as to give Bengal its rightful place in the struggle. Even this was too much for them and was taken as a personal affront by many people. I wish you better success.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. A.I.C.C. File No G-40/1931 (Pt. III), p 467, N.M.M.L.
2. The money was sent to the committee for the defence of M N. Roy.
3. The Bengal Provincial Conference held at Murshidabad on 6 December 1931.

20. To Vallabhbhai Patel[1]

November 28th, 1931

My dear Vallabhbhai,
Your letter of the 25th with its enclosures.[2] I have already written to you about the reactions to my visit to Calcutta.[3] The English newspapers are quite mild. You should read the Bengali papers, specially the cuttings I sent you, to realise fully what a miserable worm I am.

1. A.I.C.C. File No. G-60/1931 (Pt. I), pp. 41-42, N.M.M.L.
2. Vallabhbhai had written that much financial help for Santiniketan could not be expected from Gujaratis and Marwaris as Tagore had recently called for a boycott of the products of non Bengali mills.
3. See ante, section 3, item 74.

I should really have liked to go to the Murshidabad Conference but I feel I cannot leave the U.P. during the next week. I am glad, however, that some one is going on behalf of the Working Committee.

I learnt in Calcutta about the attempted boycott of non-Bengali Indian mills. I did not know that Tagore had recommended it. But I know that Acharya P.C. Ray had delivered a very aggressive speech recommending a boycott of all non-Bengali articles.[4] This created a bit of a furore. Ultimately, I believe, he had to express his regret over his lapse.[5] The fact remains, however, that he feels in this way.

I did not get your first telegram about the date for the Working Committee. In reply to your second I think I suggested the 14th. If I am free till then, which is doubtful, I should like to go to Bombay and from there to Hubli and Bagalkot to inspect the Seva Dal headquarters.

I am delighted to learn of the camps that are being opened for volunteers in Gujarat.

I expect within the next few days a dramatic coup by government rolling most of us in, specially those connected with the no-tax movement here. The Pioneer yesterday referred to the possibility of deportations.

We intend publishing the correspondence between the U.P. Government and the P.C.C. Will you have no objection if we include your letter to Emerson in it?

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

4 (1861 1944); well known scientist, author of History of Hindu Chemistry. He held the view that "the Bengali unfortunately has given too wide a scope to idealism at the expense of practicality... taking advantage of (Bengal's) inertitude and weakness, the powerful and enterprising foreign and non Bengali traders and merchants have captured all her avenues of wealth...the Bengali is knocking about here and there for a morsel of bread."

5 In a statement dated 4 October 1931 he said "The only way to save the dying Bengalee race from economic ruin is to organise and develop her own resources .. It is my firm conviction that indiscriminate picketing is bound to degenerate into selfish aggrandisement causing unhealthy rivalry between ourselves and between different provinces... I strongly disapprove of any such picketing on provincial basis as I believe it will be detrimental to our national interest and will ultimately prove advantageous to the foreign exploiters."

21. To K.F. Nariman[1]

December 4th, 1931

My dear Nariman,

...I understand that Kumari Lajjavati[2] of the Punjab has been appointed by Hardikar as the commander of the women's camp. I think this is a good choice. Lajjavati is a capable and enthusiastic woman and she should do well. Kamaladevi of course will be there to help but she was not prepared to take entire charge.

I am afraid it is quite impossible for me to visit Coimbatore. It is difficult enough to be out of the U.P. at present even for 2 or 3 days. Apart from this I have a rule not to preside at conferences now. I try to avoid even attending them, but presiding I bar completely. I also feel that under present circumstances the only conferences that we should encourage officially are conferences under direct Congress supervision and auspices. Not that youth conferences are bad but it is very difficult to draw the line and one does not usually know much about local conditions in the place where the conference might be held. Sometimes it is a counterblast to the Congress.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal

1 AICC File No G 40/1931, (Pt II), pp 263-265, NMML. Extracts
2 (b 1887), a leading Congress worker and vice president for many years of Arya Kanya Mahavidyalaya, Jullundur

I should really have liked to go to the Murshidabad Conference but feel I cannot leave the U.P. during the next week. I am glad, howev that some one is going on behalf of the Working Committee.

I learnt in Calcutta about the attempted boycott of non-Bengali India. mills. I did not know that Tagore had recommended it. But I know tha Acharya P.C. Ray had delivered a very aggressive speech recommendin a boycott of all non-Bengali articles.[4] This created a bit of a furore. Ultimately, I believe, he had to express his regret over his lapse.[5] The fact remains, however, that he feels in this way.

I did not get your first telegram about the date for the Working Committee. In reply to your second I think I suggested the 14th. If I am free till then, which is doubtful, I should like to go to Bombay and from there to Hubli and Bagalkot to inspect the Seva Dal headquarters.

I am delighted to learn of the camps that are being opened for volunteers in Gujarat.

I expect within the next few days a dramatic coup by government rolling most of us in, specially those connected with the no-tax movement here. The Pioneer yesterday referred to the possibility of deportations.

We intend publishing the correspondence between the U.P. Government and the P.C.C. Will you have no objection if we include your letter to Emerson in it?

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

4. (1861-1944); well known scientist; author of History of Hindu Chemistry. He held the view that "the Bengali unfortunately has given too wide a scope to idealism at the expense of practicality... taking advantage of (Bengal's) ineptitude and weakness, the powerful and enterprising foreign and non Bengali traders and merchants have captured all her avenues of wealth... the Bengali is knocking about here and there for a morsel of bread."

5 In a statement dated 4 October 1931 he said. "The only way to save the dying Bengalee race from economic ruin is to organise and develop her own resources .. It is my firm conviction that indiscriminate picketing is bound to degenerate into selfish aggrandisement causing unhealthy rivalry between ourselves and between different provinces... I strongly disapprove of any such picketing on provincial basis as I believe it will be detrimental to our national interest and will ultimately prove advantageous to the foreign exploiters."

23. To Syed Mahmud[1]

Sultanpur
9.12.31

My dear Mahmud,
I received your letter last evening and was much grieved to read it. Only the day before I had heard of your troubles. I hope that in spite of your pessimism your brother will recover. But whatever may be in store for you, you cannot and must not give in to despair. Misfortunes have to be faced manfully and overcome. Do not talk of 'ruination' and the like. There is no such thing. The wheel of life goes on, blindly and cruelly sometimes, and it is futile to grieve. Each one of us has his job. We do it or do not do it and go our way. Let us then get on with the job and the future will take care of itself and will gradually become the present and then fade off with the past.

I am here for a day. I propose to go to Bombay with Kamala on the 12th morning. From there I have to visit some places in the Karnatak. I shall return on the 22nd and go off immediately to the Etawah Conference. From there I shall probably go to Bombay or Ahmedabad to meet Gandhiji. As you perhaps know the Working Committee meets on the 30th at Ahmedabad.

Kamala is still unwell. One of the reasons why she is going to Bombay is her treatment.

Love,

Yours affly.,
Jawahar

1. Syed Mahmud Papers, N.M.M.L.

24. To Syed Mahmud[1]

10/12/31

My dear Mahmud,
I wrote to you yesterday from Sultanpur. I little knew then what news would await me on my return. Kamala and I are deeply grieved to learn of your great loss. But you must bear up. Do not go to pieces. Great work awaits us all and so long as there is work to be done we must carry on.
Love,

Yours affly.,
Jawahar

1 Syed Mahmud Papers, NMML.

25. To the Income Tax Officer, Allahabad[1]

Allahabad
December 23, 1931

Dear Mr. Banerji,
I have just received your letter of December 18 on my return from Bombay. I think there is some misapprehension about what I told you. I said that I would send you Rs. 10000/- within two or three days and would try to send another Rs. 5000/- or so by the end of the month, making Rs. 15000/-.[2] Accordingly I sent you Rs. 10000/- immediately after. The balance would be paid, I stated, as early as I could manage it. I was myself eager to have done with this affair, but not having the necessary cash with me I could only pay after realising money from my securities. I offered to transfer my shares in railway companies to the government at the market rate but you have now informed me that government are not prepared to accept these. Under the circumstances

1. A.I.C.C. File No. G-25/1931, p. 133, NMML.
2. Presumably this relates to the income tax arrears of Motilal Nehru.

I have to endeavour to raise the money from sale of property or shares. I have already sent a motor car to Bombay for sale.

I should like to point out to you, however, that in case certain developments take place it may become very difficult for me to pay the balance. On arrival here last night I was served with a notice from the district magistrate restricting my activities in a variety of ways and making me virtually a prisoner in Allahabad city. Further it is quite possible that my property might be attached soon and I may be arrested. It is difficult enough for me to arrange for large payments and if I am arrested these difficulties increase greatly.

There is another aspect of the question which troubles me and which I should like you to consider. If the government treat me as an enemy person and harass me in every way I cannot be expected to cooperate with them in the payment of[3] Ordinarily, under these circumstances, I would have *[4] to pay anything at all. But I hesitate to do so because I gave you my word that I would pay. The situation having changed greatly during the last few days by the issuance of the U.P. Ordinance, I must consult my colleagues before I can finally make up my mind. I propose however to lay the matter before the Working Committee of the Congress which meets next week, and to abide by their decision. I shall communicate this to you at an early date.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

3 & 4 Moth eaten.

SIXTH CONVICTION[1]

Eleven months after[2]

ırrested at Iradatnagar (Iradatganj?) as we were travel-
' the mail to meet Bapu and attend meeting of Work-luge crowd to see us off at Allahabad station. Many 'hheoki including mother, Nan, Ranjit, Betty, Uma
i &c. As train was starting from Chheoki we heard /ould be arrested at Iradatnagar where the Bombay lly stopped for the purpose.
ırrested us. Rajendra Babu also in the train. Just Upadhyaya went on to Bombay. We were arrested ıance which prohibited us from leaving municipal and elsewhere. Big meeting which had been onnection with Abdul Ghaffar's arrest.

also reaches Naini. Is kept strictly apart in the ıre in our old house ın barrack No. 6. Some but the garden gone.
la. Also wrote to her and Indu. Wrote also 3etty & Ranjit. My trial apparently not 'ly Govt. feeling pulse of country and to see what happens after Bapu's arrival.

Jawaharlal, in N[illegible] prison from 26 December reilly jail fr[illegible] February to 6 June 1932 ıne 1932 t[illegible] ecember 1932 is printed.
period hav[illegible] terspersed chronologically.
n the N[illegible] The omission of personal

January [illegible] Naini jail.

they are not going to go back on it, and I shall be sorry if they did. It is well as it is. Measures the S.P., when he brought us from Iradatnagar, was very glum and did not look at all happy.

Tasadduq's old friend, Sohanlal Srivastava, a deputy collector, is going to try us.

Rumours of dissensions among local workers in Allahabad reach us —petty things exaggerated. How poor our leadership is and how difficult for most people to take the larger view!

News of a delightful incident from Bakulia in Rae Bareli district. The police party which went there to attach goods for non-payment received with all courtesy—doors of houses all left open and the police invited to go wherever they wanted to. Some attachments of cattle &c. made. The villagers then offered pan supari to the police and revenue officials! Retirement of the police party, looking very small and shame-faced!

The moderates have definitely ranged themselves against us. Even some individual Congressmen lukewarm on the no-tax question. Difficult to be gallant and brave when one's pocket is touched. Gradually, whether one wills it or not, the class orientation creeping in. That is the real measure of the reality of our political struggle.

Poor British Empire! To what a pass it has been reduced. The statements accompanying the U.P. & the Frontier announcements and the Viceroy's brave speeches are illuminating. Behind the show of might one can almost hear the thumping of a frightened heart. When the empire goes what will happen to its soul mate, the Indian moderate? Widowed just when expectation ran high of a closer union. Fortunately the breed is rare.

TO MAHATMA GANDHI[3]

Naini Prison
Dec. 30, 1931

My dear Bapu,

Your letter came this evening and, need I say? both Sherwani and I were delighted to receive it.[4] We have returned to our old haunts, happy in the thought that you are back home. Sherwani's friendship with Naini is even older than mine. It dates back to 1921. We are

3 Gandhi Smarak Sangrahalaya, Serial No 18417.

4 Mahatma Gandhi had in his letter of 28 December 1931 written: "your arrest did not come upon me as a surprise"

Dec. 28

Bapu must have arrived. The grand welcome has been given up because of our arrest and Abdul Ghaffar's. It would have been good to have been present and to have a glimpse of Bapu again. No luck!

Another interview. Make the most of the undertrial period and get as many interviews as possible—afterwards there will be weary waiting for the मुलाकात का दिन [day of interview].

Tandon & Krishna Kant in barrack 5 where Malaviyaji used to be. Have not seen them.

Dec. 29

Weight on little machine in early morning 124 lbs. Tasadduq's weight 210 lbs.

Had a glimpse of Khan behind the bars in his barrack as I went to the interview yesterday. Strange to meet him here after so many years. Our last meeting was 19½ years ago in July 1912 at Victoria station in London (or was it Charing Cross?) where he came to see me off. I was returning to India after my "education". Awful creature I must have been then with my 'education' and snobbishness.

Often invited Khan to visit me in Allahabad. He has come at last!

Dec. 30th

Had a short letter from Bapu.

At interview Raj and Kunwar came also. Also Rafi.

Dec. 31st

Wrote to Bapu and Kamala. Soon after received letters from Kamala & Indu.

I am told that strong rumour in city—and even among officials—that Tasadduq and I will be discharged on Jan. 4th when our trial comes off. Evidently a case of the wish being father to the thought. The circumstances of my arrest must have been somewhat disconcerting to the officials. They were obviously put in the wrong by stopping me from going to the Working Committee meeting. But right or wrong

THE TRIAL[9]

The Magistrate: I would allow you to read the statement only after clearing the public out of the court. Have you anything to say after hearing the prosecution evidence?

Jawaharlal Nehru: I am not at all attentive to what is happening as I have little interest in it. But, I may say something if the court wants me to make a statement.

M: I would permit a statement if it is connected with the charge but if you want to make a statement of a political nature then I would hear it after getting the court room cleared of the visitors.

JN: I consider it an extraordinary procedure. The magistrate has the right to convert a public trial into a private one, but I would make a statement about the basic things.

M: May I request the superintendent of police to ask the visitors to leave the court room?

JN: The morale of the people here is very good. They are not likely to be prejudiced by what I would say. I am, however, not reading my written statement but would only say that I am not particularly interested in the present proceedings against me. But I should like to express my deep gratitude to the peasantry in these provinces who have given me this fresh opportunity of service and I would also like to say that I am proud of my kisan brethren in these provinces, specially in my district of Allahabad.

M: I have had a foretaste of the statement which you are going to read as I perceive from the last sentence of what you have stated that it refers to the kisans and so I cannot permit it.

JN: Have not all the proceedings of the trial and the ordinance under which they are being held the question of the kisans in the background or foreground?

M: The proceedings are concerned with only that part of the ordinance which relates to the disobedience of the order of the district magistrate. As you are going into the basic things, my only course is to clear the court of the audience before I hear you.

9 Allahabad, 4 January 1932. Case No. 16. Records for 1932 in the office of the District Magistrate, Allahabad.

going back gradually to our old routine, as if there had been no interruption. There is just one twinge of regret that we missed seeing you. We were looking forward to it so much. But we shall have plenty of meetings yet.

Kamala's illness worries me a little, but I am very much comforted by her being at 78, Nepean Sea Road.[5] She could not have more loving care and attention anywhere else. I am only afraid that she might decide to dash about in quest of adventure before she is fit enough to do so.

My letters to Indu can rest in a convenient drawer or pigeon hole for a few months or years as the case may be.[6] I am sorry you gave much time to them.

We are delighted to learn that the return voyage has done you good and you are in fit condition. You will need to be!

We are told that our trial will take place on Jan 4th.

With love and all good wishes from Sherwani and myself,

Yours affly.,
Jawaharlal

New Year's Day 1932

My fourth New Year's Day in prison—not consecutive—1922, 1923, 1931, 1932.

News of moment. We are on the verge of all India C.D.[7] perhaps even before my trial—the die may be cast.

Heard of a political hunger striker in Naini. He is Prag Dat[8] of the Lakhimpur Explosives Case. Because he had not been doing his full task one of the jailers assaulted him. Also punished with fetters and solitary confinement. As a protest he took to hunger strike and today was his eighth day. Has grown weak—was removed to hospital today but even now fetters are kept on. Supt. apparently not even informed that he was on hunger strike till the 6th day.

5 The residence of Jal Naoroji in Bombay.

6. Published as Glimpses of World History.

7. The decisions of the Round Table Conference having been found inadequate, the Working Committee on 1 January 1932 called upon the nation to resume civil disobedience.

8. Convicted in Lakhimpur Kheri Conspiracy Case, 1931 and serving a sentence of six years.

Jan. 4th

Bapu arrested—also Vallabhbhai under old regulation and interned.[12]

Our trial by Sohanlal Srivastava. I am given the maximum sentence under the ordinance—2 years R.I. and fine of Rs. 500 in default 6 months R.I. (under Sec. 13 of the U.P. Emergency Powers Ordinance).

Tasadduq gets 6 months R.I. and 150/- fine, in default 3 months R.I. under same Section.

So we can settle down for a while!

Jan. 6th

The 4th of Jan. turned out to be quite a red letter day for Allahabad. Lathi charges, deaths, arrests and from all accounts amazingly peaceful and disciplined behaviour of the people. Poor Allah Bux[13] beaten to death—survived! Ranjit, Tewary, Narmada Prasad and many others arrested. Ranjit & Narmada Pd join us in our barrack on January 5th evening. Tewary goes to No. 5. The others remain in Malacca jail.

Four new ordinances on January 4th.[14] Quite a lot happened on that fateful day.[15] Probably lathi charges &c. all over the country.

Allah Bux not dead. He was badly beaten but has survived. Two others died.[16]

Jan. 7th

Extraordinarily good news of Allahabad—Cheered us up tremendously.

Padmaja has sent me some delightful books—Got them today. A feast in store. They are as follows:

12 On his return to Bombay on 28 December 1931 after attending the Round Table Conference, Mahatma Gandhi was arrested on 4 January 1932. Vallabhbhai Patel, the Congress President, was also arrested on 4 January 1932.

13 A Congress volunteer.

14. The Viceroy promulgated four ordinances to meet the situation created by the resumption of civil disobedience. The old press ordinance was reintroduced for the whole of India, the Working Committee of A I C C. was declared unlawful and peaceful picketing was declared an offence.

15 As a protest against the arrest of Congress leaders and in defiance of the ordinances issued on 4 January, hartals were observed on that day in several places.

16 There was a lathi charge on a meeting and a procession organised by the Congress leaders in Allahabad on 4 January in defiance of the prohibitory orders. Two spectators, Madho Prasad and Jagannath Mahajan, were beaten to death.

JN: I wish to lay before the court in a few sentences my motive for what I did and I think that it is necessary for you as the presiding officer to understand what I did and it may also help you to decide about the sentence.[10]

WRITTEN STATEMENT IN COURT[11]

I wish to say nothing about the present proceedings against me. But I should like to express my deep gratitude to the peasantry of these provinces for the fresh opportunity of service that they have given me. And I should like to say how proud I am of my kisan brethren of my province, and specially of my district of Allahabad. They have lighted a fire which will spread and burn brightly till it has consumed and reduced to ashes the British domination and exploitation of this country, which has sucked the life-blood out of them, and till it has put an end finally to the system which has ground them down and deprived them of the fruits of their toil, and reduced them almost to the level of the beasts of the field. For long years I have laboured to this end and so long as any strength is left in me I will carry on this fight. Inside prison walls I shall think of many things but most frequently my mind will dwell on the villages and fields where my kisan brethren live and labour and suffer, and my good wishes will go out to them, and I shall pray that success may come to them in this great struggle, so that their present sufferings and misery may become an evil dream of the past. Till such success comes there can be no compromise and no peace.

Jawaharlal Nehru

Jan. 2nd

Prag Dat induced by Supt. to break his fast.

10. Jawaharlal was sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 500/-, in default, to six months' further imprisonment. The fine was not paid and it was recovered by attachment and auction of a motor car for Rs. 1,150. Although this sum exceeded the fine, the balance was not returned.
11. 4 January 1932. J.N. Miscellaneous Papers, N.M.M.L. Jawaharlal was not permitted to read this statement.

Jan. 27th

A fortnight since I wrote last. Mohan Bhai has come and joined us for a month or so—I have been on the point of leaving Naini but at the last moment have had to stay on—I have been unwell—and today news comes that Nan & Betty arrested and removed to Malacca jail.[21] Relieved and glad to hear of their arrest. They have worked hard and deserve rest. They have got it at last!

Yesterday was Independence Day—Well celebrated in Allahabad—apparently no great interference by police.

Swaraj Bhawan in possession of police.[22] The Union Jack up—guarded night and day by armed sentries! Yesterday a new national flag put up on Anand Bhawan, high up on a long pole. Challenging the Union Jack across the way.

I was to have gone to Meerut yesterday to give evidence in the conspiracy case today. I was all packed and ready in the evening but at the last moment I was informed that I would not be sent.

For the last five days have been unwell—feverish in evenings—sometimes feel dizzy and weak. Some pain also on the right side. Have given up all exercise for fear that it may cause some activity in lungs.

Leila Row[23] came to see Ranjit this morning. It was she who told him of Nan's & Betty's arrest.

Jan. 30th Saturday

Tasadduq Sherwani gone off to Gonda jail. Narmada Prasad transferred to No. 5 Circle and given 'B' Class treatment. Both of them went on the 28th. Feel rather lonely since they went.

I have been feeling physically a little better. The temperature is down, but I have been somewhat depressed. I heard today that mother had been much upset by an exaggerated account of my ill health. She came to see the superintendent. Later Dorothy Crishna[24] came. The Supt. sent her to our barrack to see me so that she could report to mother first hand. Decent of the Supt.

21. They were arrested in Allahabad for defying the orders against holding of a meeting in connection with the Independence Day celebrations.
22. Swaraj Bhawan, where the Congress office was located, was occupied by the police on 13 January 1932
23. Leading tennis player, married Hareshwar Dayal, India's ambassador in Nepal from 1960 till his death in 1964.
24. Daughter of Man Mohanlal Agarwal, an advocate of Allahabad, was a family friend

Sven Hedin: Across the Gobi Desert
Nicholas Roerich :[17] Altai Himalaya
Trebitsch-Lincoln : Autobiography
Modern Plays: 2nd Volume

Bomford[18] the D.M. visited the jail today. Did not come to our barrack.

I have been reading and reading Bernard Shaw's plays in the collected edition.

Jan. 8th

Our weights
Mine	:	126½
Sherwani	:	210¼
Narmada Pd	:	169½
Ranjit	:	140

Jan. 12th Tuesday

Interview yesterday—mother, Nan & Betty. Nan looking quite worn out with work and anxiety—will have plenty of rest soon—Allahabad doing well—Lathi charges continue—Uma Bhabi arrested on 9th.[19] A girl of 17 died as result of lathi beating on 9th.[20]

Likelihood of my being transferred to some other jail soon.

Wrote to Kamala, Indu & Padmaja.

Jan. 12th

Ranjit's case—also Narmada Pd's.
Ranjit sentenced to one month's simple—light let off.
Narmada Prasad one year rigorous.

17. (1874-1947); Russian artist and a renowned landscape painter; spent five years exploring the Himalayas, settled down in Kangra valley after 1935.
18. Sir Hugh Bomford (1852-1939); I.C.S., 1906, member, Board of Revenue, 1936.
19. Uma Nehru was sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment.
20. As a result of a lathi charge on a Congress procession, several persons were injured.

AT CHHEONI STATION ON THE EVE OF ARREST, 26 DECEMBER 1931

Ravi Wanchu[25] dashed into our barrack this afternoon. Delightful child, full of beans—He shook us all up. He had come with Mohan Bhabi & Rup[26] &c for an interview with Mohan Bhai.

February 1st Monday

Nan & Betty sentenced to one year rigorous each. Nan also to a fine of Rs. 300—I am told they are very proud!

Bernard Aluwihare suddenly rolls up. Has been transferred from the District Jail.

Feb. 2nd Tuesday

Krishna Kant's case[27]—I gave evidence, so did Tewary & Narmada Prasad. My evidence was trivial and of no importance but it turned out to be quite a field day for interviews. Many people had come to the trial which was held over the jail office. As I went to the office the first person that I saw, to my great surprise, was Indu. She had just come from Poona & Bombay.

The long interview with many friends and the good news from various parts of the country and specially Allahabad district cheered me up tremendously. One gets unused to such long spells and I felt slightly intoxicated with everything! My temperature went up to 99° in the evening.

Feb. 3 Wednesday

Ranjit's interview with mother & Indu & children.

Beltie Shah[28] suddenly transferred to Fyzabad today—probably because he was supposed to give us news of happenings outside—He was very depressed and we all felt his departure.

A crowd of boys have been transferred from Cawnpore to Naini. Almost all under 20, arrested in processions, picketing &c. I have not seen any of them, but from all accounts a fine spirited lot. They have

25. Grandson of Mohanlal Nehru.
26. Daughter of Mohanlal Nehru.
27. Was prosecuted for publishing two poems entitled Inqilab Zindabad and Khatka in Abhyudaya
28. Beltie Shah Gilani (b 1893); a Roman Catholic who sought to promote nationalist feeling among Indian Christians.

got into some trouble already and four have been sentenced to fetters. Every morning they have the jhanda prarthna in their barrack. What splendid material we have in our movement!

Feb. 4th Thursday

Gandhi Day—just a month to Bapu's arrest and also a month to Sherwani's and my conviction! It is said that there is hartal—Procession, meeting &c. No obstruction by police. But the day before—on the 3rd—a batch of people arrested while meeting privately—Prabha, Dandekar, Sadiq &c.
The Income Tax Officer visited me in jail today! Told him that I would pay nothing to the enemy govt. and they could do what they pleased—take Anand Bhawan!

Feb. 5th Friday

Supt. informed me that I was going to be sent to Bareilly very soon—probably the next day. He was therefore allowing me an interview today. Mother, Indu, Tara & Rita came. Mother a perfect brick. It is wonderful how she is bearing up. Little Rita asking dismally for her mummie. Tara puzzled at everything!

I sent a letter to the Income Tax Officer.

Today was again supposed to be Frontier Day, fixed by the Moslem Conference[29]—last Friday in Ramadan—Wonder what happened.

Feb. 6th Saturday—Father's anniversary

Supt. brought Girdharilal to see me. He had expressly come from Bombay as Kamala was anxious about returning to Allahabad. Sent message to her not to worry or hurry.

Orders to go to Bareilly. I leave this evening.

Left Naini Prison at 4.45 p.m. in a purdah lorry with 2 constables. Amavas day—Crowds everywhere. Drove via Canning Road, Purushottam Park—the scene of many a lathi beating—Stanley Road, Curzon

29. On 24 January 1932 a conference of Muslim leaders called upon all Indian Muslims to protest against the repressive policy of the government in N.W.F.P. by observing the last day of Ramzan as Frontier Day, and described MacDonald's statement after the second Round Table Conference as entirely unsatisfactory to Muslims.

: released from Naini Prison on January 26, 1931

Re-arrested and brought back to Naini

December 26, 1931

Trial & conviction - January 4, 1932

we have the female ward, on the other the civil ward. I understand that there are 7 or 8 politicals in the female ward, all 'C' class. Damodar Swarup is said to be in the civil ward—also 'C' class. He has got one year's simple under Sec 108. Old case before the new campaign started.

Our circle contains two long barracks—the usual ones for prisoners with cement tomb-like structures. There is a well, which is good.

Har Govind Pant[30] has been here for three weeks. Probably others will join us soon.

I suppose I shall get used to the new conditions soon enough. I am likely to be much more cut off from the outside world here than I was at Naini. I am far from Allahabad and Anand Bhawan. In Naini Allahabad news trickled through rapidly enough as warders and others were going out and some had an interview every few days. The standard of living will also come down! After many months' stay at Naini last year we had managed to fix up a fairly civilized manner of living. That will have to go here. But that does not mean discomfort. I shall have more quiet here & more time for work of any kind. It is just the psychological aspect which is a little depressing.

The jailer seems to be very keen on obliging me and getting anything I may want. The superintendent—Colonel Newlands?[31]—who is the Civil Surgeon—paid me a visit. I hear his visits are very rare.

Feb. 8th Monday

The sun is a late comer to our ward and barrack. In the wider world outside, they say it rises before seven. It reaches us after half past eight. It has twentyfour feet of wall to cross before it can come to us. And in the evenings, it leaves correspondingly early. Perhaps in summer this may be an advantage.

For the first time after many years—since Nabha—I was locked in my barrack at night. It was done tactfully and so as not to inconvenience, but still there we were, not only locked in the ward but in the barrack also. Previous to my coming it appears locking up was very early and Har Govind Pant used to feed at 4 p.m. in the evening. This

30 (1885-1957), a leading Congressman of Kumaon region, U P; along with Badri Dutt Pande, worked for the abolition of forced labour in Kumaon; swarajist member, U P. Legislative Council, 1923 29, and U.P. Legislative Assembly, 1937 39, deputy speaker, U P. Legislative Assembly, 1952; member, Lok Sabha, 1957 till his death

31 B. E M. Newlands, of the Indian Medical Service; Civil Surgeon, U P. 1920 33.

Bridge and over. At Phaphamow our car waiting with mother, Indu, Girdhanlal & Upadhyaya. They followed the police lorry—We stopped at Sarai Gopal. The train was late and so I had over half an hour with mother & Indu. The police people were very decent and kept right away. Quite a crowd gathered and there were usual jais.

I found that the day had been observed by Congress as mourning day with fasting &c. I had not realised this and had not fasted. Mother and Indu had had nothing at all all day and proposed to take nothing till the next morning—a 36 hour fast. I was quite ashamed of myself for having fed in the morning and afternoon. Anyway decided to keep a little fast till next day.

It was good to have a nice long interview with mother & Indu. Learnt that Nan & Betty and others from the District Jail were sent to Lucknow last night.

A first class was converted into a second for us and so we travelled in comfort. My companions were the two constables—one of them a head constable. The smallest escort I have ever had and even these two were asleep most of the time. At most of the stations there were crowds and jais up to Rae Bareli.

And so on to Bareilly!

My number in Naini: 11763

BAREILLY DISTRICT JAIL

February 7th Sunday

Arrived here in the early hours, an hour late. Quite a reception by a number of police officers. A couple of hundred yards from the station a strong force of lathi police had been hidden in a building for emergencies. But there was no emergency. Hardly anybody knew that I was arriving.

The outside of the jail, offices &c, new and imposing. But I had a bit of a shock when I entered the ward for 'A' class prisoners. Krishna Kant was here last year and he had told me all manner of good things about it. As soon as the gate was opened I found that I had to descend a good bit into the circle. The level was at least six feet lower than the general jail level. The surrounding walls must be the highest I have seen—at least 24 ft. and probably more. The six feet have perhaps been added to the usual 15 or 16 ft. Our circle was meant for juveniles and is therefore apart from the main prison. There are three circles in a line adjoining the main wall—Ours is the middle one—On one side

There is, or was, a time watch in our ward. Every hour in the day time and every half an hour at night a warder came to give it a twist, or whatever it was, to mark his advent. Fortunately this watch has been taken out of our ward and fixed outside somewhere. In Naini there was no such timing in the day time—at night they did it every hour. But this was at the main wall and not inside a ward.

The money with me—Rs. 21/15/—has been taken away by the jail people. We were allowed to keep it in Naini, though perhaps it was a stretching of the rules.

As I was writing in this book Badri Dutt Pande[35] suddenly burst into our barrack. He had been transferred from Almora. Complained bitterly of the cold there.

Feb. 10 Wednesday

Squirrels abound here. They are bold and venturesome and come right up to one's foot. I am reminded of the Lucknow jail where sometimes they used to climb up my leg.

It was Id yesterday—Id-ul-Fitr. Among our visitors was the head warder! He looked a mighty person. I am told that he has been in the jail for over forty years and is more or less the boss here. He gets Rs. 22 a month or thereabouts but, on dit, that he has purchased landed property worth many thousands and owns a tonga and a variety of other things denoting a measure of affluence!

The Supt. came again today to enquire about my health.

Feb. 11 Thursday

It is Vasant Panchami today—the anniversary of our wedding![36]

Last evening our quiet was suddenly disturbed by frenzied shouting. There were the usual slogans and for a little while we thought that some young boys or girls were shouting outside the jail. The 'outside' is quite near us—only twenty four feet of wall separate us. But soon we discovered that the shouting was coming from the female ward adjoining ours. Some women there were evidently greatly excited about 35 (1882-1965), a leading Congressman of Kumaon region in U.P.; swarajist member, U.P. Legislative Council, 1926-29, member, Central Legislative Assembly, 1937-44, member, Lok Sabha, 1955.

36. Jawaharlal was married on 8 February 1916 which was the Vasant Panchami day.

was too much for me and I said that it was impossible for me to have my evening meal at 4. The jailer as usual was prepared to do everything to meet my wishes. He has given me a Muslim youth—Ismail by name—to look after me, cook &c. Quite a smart boy. He is a C.O. He was not locked up at the usual hour and so I had my simple dinner of bread & milk and salad at about 7.30 p.m. Soon after nine when I was reading in bed the warder came and quietly locked our barrack. I hardly knew it was locked. In the morning when I got up at 6 I found it locked and had to shout for the warder to open it.

Har Govind is by way of being orthodox. His food, bath &c. everything is in the orthodox style. There is a bathroom but he apparently prefers to bathe—[illegible][32]—in the open by the well. He puts on a tremendous number of clothes. Strange how people from the hills put on layer upon layer of clothes even in the plains.

I have my midday meal with Har Govind.

Morning & evening we go outside our ward for a little walk by the main wall. The walk compares unfavourably with the Naini jail outings. In Naini there was space and expanse even inside jail. Not so here.

On my way to Bareilly I wondered if I would meet M. N. Roy who was also in some jail in Bareilly. On arrival I learnt that he was in the Central Jail. I am in the District.

Wrote a letter to Kamala and a note to Indu with a message for Bebee.

We had a distinguished visitor in our barrack today—Sir Sita Ram![33] He told us that he had found several graduates in 'C' class politicals in this jail. He also went next door in the Female Ward and had an ocular demonstration of the treatment given to the women politicals there. The warders spoke offensively to them in his presence & the jailer's & Sita Ram says he had to remonstrate.

He gave us an instance of Palmer's[34]—the I.G.—innate humanity! Last year Sita Ram described a jailer in his inspection note as a 'humane disciplinarian'. The jailer begged him not to say anything about his humanity as this was at a discount in high official circles. But Sita Ram insisted as he could not imagine that any harm would befall the jailer because of his description. Result: a little later Palmer had the jailer transferred to a distant place. 'Humane' persons were not to be encouraged in the jail department.

32. According to ritual.
33. At this time, president, U.P. Legislative Council.
34. C. E. Palmer, of the I.M.S.; Inspector General of Prisons, U.P., 1926-35.

There is, or was, a time watch in our ward. Every hour in the day time and every half an hour at night a warder came to give it a twist, or whatever it was, to mark his advent. Fortunately this watch has been taken out of our ward and fixed outside somewhere. In Naini there was no such timing in the day time—at night they did it every hour. But this was at the main wall and not inside a ward.

The money with me—Rs. 21/15/—has been taken away by the jail people. We were allowed to keep it in Naini, though perhaps it was a stretching of the rules.

As I was writing in this book Badri Dutt Pande[35] suddenly burst into our barrack. He had been transferred from Almora. Complained bitterly of the cold there.

Feb. 10 Wednesday

Squirrels abound here. They are bold and venturesome and come right up to one's foot. I am reminded of the Lucknow jail where sometimes they used to climb up my leg.

It was Id yesterday—Id ul-Fitr. Among our visitors was the head warder! He looked a mighty person. I am told that he has been in the jail for over forty years and is more or less the boss here. He gets Rs. 22 a month or thereabouts but, on dit, that he has purchased landed property worth many thousands and owns a tonga and a variety of other things denoting a measure of affluence!

The Supt. came again today to enquire about my health.

Feb. 11 Thursday

It is Vasant Panchami today—the anniversary of our wedding![36]

Last evening our quiet was suddenly disturbed by frenzied shouting. There were the usual slogans and for a little while we thought that some young boys or girls were shouting outside the jail. The 'outside' is quite near us—only twenty four feet of wall separate us. But soon we discovered that the shouting was coming from the female ward adjoining ours. Some women there were evidently greatly excited about was too much for me and I said that it was impossible for me to have my evening meal at 4. The jailer as usual was prepared to do everything to meet my wishes. He has given me a Muslim youth—Ismail by name—to look after me, cook &c. Quite a smart boy. He is a C.O. He was not locked up at the usual hour and so I had my simple dinner of bread & milk and salad at about 7.30 p.m. Soon after nine when I was reading in bed the warder came and quietly locked our barrack. I hardly knew it was locked. In the morning when I got up at 6 I found it locked and had to shout for the warder to open it.

35 (1882-1965), a leading Congressman of Kumaon region in U.P., swarajist member, U.P. Legislative Council, 1926-29, member, Central Legislative Assembly, 1937-44, member, Lok Sabha, 1955.

36 Jawaharlal was married on 8 February 1916 which was the Vasant Panchami day.

Har Govind is by way of being orthodox. His food, bath &c. everything is in the orthodox style. There is a bathroom but he apparently prefers to bathe—धर्मार्थ[32]—in the open by the well. He puts on a tremendous number of clothes. Strange how people from the hills put on layer upon layer of clothes even in the plains.

I have my midday meal with Har Govind.

Morning & evening we go outside our ward for a little walk by the main wall. The walk compares unfavourably with the Naini jail outings. In Naini there was space and expanse even inside jail. Not so here.

On my way to Bareilly I wondered if I would meet M. N. Roy who was also in some jail in Bareilly. On arrival I learnt that he was in the Central Jail. I am in the District.

Wrote a letter to Kamala and a note to Indu with a message for Bebee.

We had a distinguished visitor in our barrack today—Sir Sita Ram![33] He told us that he had found several graduates in 'C' class politicals in this jail. He also went next door in the Female Ward and had an ocular demonstration of the treatment given to the women politicals there. The warders spoke offensively to them in his presence & the jailer's & Sita Ram says he had to remonstrate.

He gave us an instance of Palmer's[34]—the I.G.—innate humanity! Last year Sita Ram described a jailer in his inspection note as a 'humane disciplinarian'. The jailer begged him not to say anything about his humanity as this was at a discount in high official circles. But Sita Ram insisted as he could not imagine that any harm would befall the jailer because of his description. Result: a little later Palmer had the jailer transferred to a distant place. 'Humane' persons were not to be encouraged in the jail department.

32 According to ritual.
33 At this time, president, U.P. Legislative Council.
34 C. E. Palmer, of the I.M.S.; Inspector General of Prisons, U.P., 1926-35.

Feb. 16 Tuesday

For oak and elm have pleasant leaves
That in the springtime shoot:
But grim to see is the gallows-tree,
With its adder bitten root.

The gallows-tree functioned today in this gaol. An unhappy person who is said to have killed his brother was the victim.

I did not go out for our morning walk. We have to pass up and down opposite the gallows enclosure. We were allowed to go out after a while when the hanging was over but I had no stomach for the walk almost in the shadow of the gallows.

Feb. 17 Wednesday

Letter from Kamala from Bombay.

Also Henry George's[37] book—Progress & Poverty which Gregg[38] has sent from America straight to jail!

Feb. 18

Govind Ballabh Pant arrives this evening. He was arrested this morning in Haldwani, tried immediately there, sentenced, and motored over to Bareilly. He is very welcome in our barrack.

Feb. 21 Sunday

Interview today with mother, Indu & Ranjit. Ranjit coming straight from Bombay. I was informed this morning. Was all expectation. The interview took place under the close supervision of not only the jailer but also a police official who stood right near us with pen and paper taking notes. Most offensive and aggressive way of doing it. I was put off and the interview lost some of its savour. Good news generally of Kamala & Nan & Betty. Nan & Betty apparently losing weight. Perhaps this is natural to begin with. Kamala still in Bombay. Wants 37 American economist, and propagator of the 'Single Tax' scheme; author of Progress and Poverty published in 1879.

38 Richard Gregg (b 1885), an American disciple of Mahatma Gandhi who lived for some time in Sabarmati, author of Economics of Khaddar, Power of Nonviolence and other books.

something. It was very painful for us to hear their slogans and not to know what the matter was and not to be able to do anything. No jail official was easily accessible just then. A little later the women tried to speak to us by shouting over the wall. Their grievance appeared to be that one of their number had suddenly been discharged! They said that there must have been some foul play or else why should she be released before her time—which was 3 months. Attempts are made to force apologies out of politicals and hence this fear of foul play.

This morning we asked the jailer. He said that the magistrate had ordered the release and so he had to discharge her. So far as he was concerned there was nothing wrong or irregular and yet he had been sworn at by the other women!

Feb. 12 Friday

I felt rather lively this morning and so I indulged in some mild physical exercises. In the afternoon my temperature was slightly higher than usual—nearly 99°F. I wonder if this was due to the morning exercise—or was it due to a longish discourse I gave to my colleagues! Anyway it was annoying and I am afraid such exercises must be off. I have been taking sun baths also in the mornings.

Our women colleagues in the adjoining ward are singing national songs. Their voices float across to us over the high walls. They are pleasant to hear and they thrill. How wonderful is their enthusiasm. They are C class prisoners and we are in 'A'! The thought of it brings a blush of shame. And yet what is one to do?

Feb. 14 Sunday

I sent a short letter to mother today informing her of the date for my interview. This letter will not be counted as a regular fortnightly letter. I can have the interview any day from the 19th onwards.

Aeroplanes have been buzzing over us all day for the last two days. They are giving joy rides at an exhibition.

Feb. 15

Beautiful fruit and other things from Kamala! Unexpectedly they came this morning. Some one had brought them all the way from Bombay. There was no letter.

Feb. 25 Thursday

Father's barsi today—I am fasting the whole day and till tomorrow morning—36 hours. I am not quite clear why I should fast but I was so annoyed with myself on February 6 when even Indu fasted and I did not, that I have to do something of the kind now—my companions are also more or less fasting.

I have been thinking a great deal of father lately. Not because of the barsi but because I am in jail. Almost all my latest memories of him are jail memories, and being again in prison my mind goes back to him again and again.

A messenger from Ranjit came from Allahabad today bringing two charkhas and a basketful of beautiful flowers. He has sent his own charkha—Probably mine has disappeared. Also the new box Yeravda one. I shall spin today on charkha after a long interval. I have been spinning on a takli for some days.

Two days ago I had a brain wave—I sent Punch by post direct to Nan & Betty, District Jail, Lucknow. The Supt allowed it. It is pleasant to think of even this bit of direct touch with them. They will appreciate it also and I shall try to keep it up.

The Supt is evidently a little worried about my health. Morning & evening his assistant comes to enquire about my temperature—I have begun keeping a chart. As a matter of fact I have been feeling fitter although there is a slight rise in the evenings.

Feb. 26—Friday

The fast went off quite well. A 36 hours fast seems to be quite a bagatelle! I fasted yesterday after a long interval—The last longish fast was the Naini one of 72 hours over a year ago.[40]

The fast or something had some remarkable results. My temperature for the first time for many weeks did not go up above 98°F in the evening. But, apparently to make up for it, it went up to 99.2°F this evening.

Many politicals seem to have arrived today. There were cries and zindabads and jais. Good to hear them. Every evening we hear singing of the flag song and other songs from the Female Ward. It heartens amazingly.

40 He had then fasted for three days from 18 to 21 December 1930 to express sympathy for political prisoners flogged in U.P. jails.

to see me next time here but this will give her little time in Poona. Have suggested that she should stay a month in Poona.

The reaction after the interview rather marked today—a feeling of emptiness! Perhaps because here in Bareilly I am more cut off than in Naini. Also I am not likely to see Indu for a long time now as she is going to Poona—Ranjit will probably be arrested again soon on his return to Allahabad.

Feb. 22 Monday

I behaved like a pig yesterday—somehow everything went wrong and I could not straighten it out. The interview to which I had looked forward to for many days was a disappointment. The sight of the police official, nosing in, put me off completely, and although outwardly nothing happened during the interview, I was feeling miserable all the time. Ranjit apparently had a lot to say about Kamala &c. but under the circumstances he refrained. This put me out still further. I am sure I must have looked disagreeable and given mother & Ranjit the impression that I was unhappy. What a thing to do! Having misbehaved in the morning, I cursed myself all day for it and felt thoroughly depressed. Temperature went up to 99°F probably due to the excitement and subsequent depression. Before going to sleep wrote a long letter to Kamala with a note to Indu—Bad night.

Felt better this morning. The Supt. came and gave me some powders! As if I am in need of powders.

Later three books which Ranjit had brought were sent to me—also a packet of foreign periodicals brought by mother. This cheered me up greatly. A basketful of beautiful roses and other flowers followed—Probably sent by Dwarka Prasad[39] at mother's suggestion. She said she would ask him to send me fruit & flowers regularly. The flowers made a vast difference to our barrack. All of us felt tremendously bucked up. A great difference from yesterday's depression. I felt lively all day and was quite sure I would not have a marked rise in temperature. But at 5 in the evening again 99°F!

I sent my letter to Kamala this morning to the Supt. It contained a rather strongly & sarcastically worded description of the double supervision on my interview yesterday—The police official specially came in for a bit of frank expression of opinion on my part—I wonder if the Supt will object to any part of the letter.

39. (1892-1945); Congressman of Bareilly; imprisoned several times in the freedom struggle; member, U.P. Legislative Assembly, 1937-39.

how one's mood varies and the two months appear an age or but a few days. On the whole I have not been able to settle down this time as I have done in the past. Perhaps a slight touch of ill health—perhaps my transfer—perhaps my missing my old companions—perhaps a certain want of satisfaction with things and happenings in general—perhaps so many other things! The charkha has brought me some peace of mind.

Today also is the anniversary of the "truce"! How well I remember that fateful day in Delhi—or rather night—and inevitably one thinks of the might have beens. Always when thinking of the truce people start guessing what might have happened if father had been there and there appears to be a general consensus that events would have taken a very different turn. Foolishly I said so in Delhi a few hours after the truce—How Bapu was pained at my remark!

If father had been alive! How my mind wanders unconsciously and dwells on him and how empty I feel at the thought that he is not there. For months and years we lived far from each other—when I was in Europe—but it did not matter so much. Always one had the feeling that he was there and one could always go to him for help and counsel. Now there is an emptiness.

I was asked by the jailer today if I wanted to see Jivraj Mehta.[41] Jivraj had written to the Supt. offering to see me. The Supt. apparently does not want him to see me as a doctor but has no objection to his seeing me in a private capacity. I replied that there is no point in Jivraj taking the trouble to come here for a private visit. The Supt. has so far not taken the trouble to examine my chest or indeed any part of me. It is a great favour that he comes once a week to ask me how I am getting on.

Last evening there was a terrible hou ha in the women's barrack. Lot of shouting and cursing—After some time one of the politicals—a girl—shouted out to us and said that the C.O. (woman) had cursed them in the vilest language. We told her not to pay much attention to what the wretched lambardarin might say. I spoke to the jailer today. He confessed that the C.O. is offensive but said that the women politicals are also very aggressive and use strong language. I was much put out last night by this incident. Rumours also reach us that the C Class politicals in this jail are not being properly treated. But we are well isolated and it is very difficult to know anything definitely. Just enough comes through to upset one without giving one the chance to do anything useful. And yet what can one do? Surely the A & B & C Classes are an invention of the evil one.

41 (b 1887), a leading doctor and Congressman of Gujrat, imprisoned several times in the freedom movement, Minister, Bombay Government, 1949 60 and Chief Minister, Gujrat, 1960 63, High Commissioner in Britain, 1963 66.

Feb. 29 Monday

Leap Year Day—which means an odd day thrown in extra for prisoners!

March 1 Tuesday

A visit from the Supt. Told me that although the slight rise in my temperature in the evening is somewhat abnormal, in the absence of any other trouble it did not matter and it might be considered as "normally abnormal". That explains everything!

March 2nd Wednesday

Fruit & vegetables in abundance "with the compliments" of D. Prasad! Also a cake of Godrej No. 2 soap.

I sent a postcard today to Dhan Gopal. This was an extra—besides my fortnightly letter. It was in answer to Dhan's letter received here asking me if he could write to me and send me books. The authorities were gracious enough to permit me to send a reply.

3rd March

I am worried at not having received a letter from Kamala or even the acknowledgement receipt of my letter. This should have come at the latest on Monday and it is Thursday today. Perhaps she has gone to Poona. Even so it is late. The day of my interview is approaching and I am not sure yet if Kamala has stayed on in Poona or has come up to Allahabad.

Am feeling rather poorly again. Temp. 98.8 and a slight pain on the right side. I have been gradually increasing my morning exercises and as for sun bathing I am become quite a sun-child and my back is all tanned. The sun is hot enough now and yet I enjoy it.

March 4 Friday

Kamala's acknowledgement came today from Panchgani. Her letter has also come in the office but it has not been delivered to me yet.

Today was Gandhi day—two months to his arrest. I spun more than usual. Today also I complete two months since my conviction—only 22 months remaining, not to mention the fine and its alternative! Strange Mother bearing up bravely. Indu insisted on going to Bombay travelling 3rd class in the train much to mother's dismay. As a result mother insists on going 3rd also. At her age and specially at night this is bad. She is so weak and frail. But she rejoices in the thought that she is doing her bit and depriving the Govt of revenue.

Our car has gone on account of my fine.[43] Mother is being told by many people to dismiss Baiju, the chauffeur, as also some other servants who are not wanted. But I have asked her to stick on to all our old servants even if they have nothing to do.

Last night I wrote till late to Kamala & Indu. The letters were sent to the jail office this morning. The receipt has not come yet.

I am definitely not feeling well. The pain in my chest continues and the temperature continues about 99°. I have decided to take myself in hand and put an end to these vagaries of my system. From today I shall adhere to a strict programme of rest &c.

Ranjit did not come for the interview yesterday as he was very busy. He is doing good work—I missed him. News of Nan & Betty not satisfactory. I am specially worried about Betty. She must feel terribly bored. And yet it might be good for her. Still it is hard luck on her.

A month today to my coming to Bareilly Jail.

March 9 Wednesday

The Supt. descended on us again this morning and for the first time condescended to examine my chest &c. with a stethoscope, take my pulse &c. Declared that he could hear nothing abnormal.

As a matter of fact I have felt slightly better today—I walked more and was more active than I have been for many a day—Spun also after some days' gap.

A huge basket of fruit came from Allahabad today.

Damodar Sarup, it is whispered, has been transferred suddenly to some other jail. Why this tremendous air of mystery?

Of all the ordinary prisoners with us the lowest in the social scale—the sweeper,—is the smartest, cleanest and most intelligent looking. He is the only person who can read Hindi with some ease. And the most unintelligent and illiterate are the two Brahmans! I have given a Hindi book to Shibbu the sweeper and primers to others—not the Brahmans who are not very keen about learning anything. Every evening after they 43 Jawaharlal's car was attached and removed to the police station to realise the fine imposed on him. Later, it was auctioned for a sum of Rs. 1,150.

March 5 (Saturday)

Kamala's letter has come at last. On the whole good news about her. But she is worrying a lot about me. On March 1st she sent a telegram to the Supt. of this jail enquiring after my health. She got a reassuring reply. In a fortnight's time I may see her—It will just be three months then since we met last.

I wrote to the Post Master General, U.P., about the telephone bill for the Congress office that he had sent me. Just to relieve my feelings and to have the pleasure of telling him that his office is inefficient &c.

I continue to have some pain in my side. Also my temperature tries to misbehave. I must give up all exercise—except a gentle walk—and reduce even the sun bath.

Today was Shivaratri—my companions fasted—I was the only protestant. I am afraid I am rather out of my element in my present company and I must get on the others' nerves to some extent. Govind Vallabh is very decent—so indeed are all of them. But Govind Vallabh has a measure of psychological understanding which the others lack. Also he is more intellectual company. He is a lovable person.

March 7 Monday

The interview came off yesterday—mother came and Madan Atal. Madan was not allowed to see me as a doctor. I have the honour of being under the Supt.'s treatment and what right has any other doctor to interfere. True the Supt. has not taken the trouble even to examine me cursorily. But has he not ordered his assistant—a worthy entirely lacking in the rudiments of intelligence—to take my temperature morning & evening?

The interview was more satisfactory this time than on the last. Partly because I was used to the new condition, partly because the police officer who was again present was less aggressive and kept in the background; but chiefly because I was determined that it must not be a failure like the previous one. The general news from outside cheered me up. Jal arrested. Also Janak.[42] Of Jivraj Mehta's arrest I read in the Bharat even before the interview—Also Hansa. But it was not the arrests that cheered me—It was the report of the functioning of the organisation in spite of everything.

42. Janak Kumari Asghar (b. 1906); daughter of Ladli Prasad Zutshi.

I refuse to pay anything to a usurping foreign power which is waging war against my country. Besides, I fail to see what the Bombay Collector has got to do with the matter. Have the U.P. provincial officials ceased to function?

March 12 Saturday

Four-thirty a.m.—distant cries awoke us. Vande Mataram. Mahatma Gandhi ki jai. Even my name did not sound unlovely in the early morning. Some fresh arrivals, transferred from some other jail.

It was a good beginning to a memorable anniversary—Dandi March day.

The weather changes suddenly here. Less than three weeks ago it was quite cold and three good blankets were hardly enough covering. And now it is like summer and for the first part of the night no covering is needed. In the day time a fan is welcome. And yet early this morning there was a cold snap and I woke up feeling chilly and searched for another covering. The neighbourhood of the hills—cold wind swoops down on us.

March 14 Monday

Another billet doux from the income tax people—this time from a person calling himself "Certificate Officer of the 24 Parganas"—After Bombay, Calcutta. I wish them joy of their work and whatever they can seize of mine, they are welcome to. But they will not get a rupee out of me willingly. Strange I have no attachment to property and money as such. It does not worry me in the slightest to think that they can get hold of money belonging to me. I would feel bored if they deprived me of some things which have personal associations. And I do not think I would like the idea of being separated for good from Anand Bhawan. But of this I have no fear for whatever may be done to Anand Bhawan, it cannot be transported or removed. Indeed I would like the British to take possession of A.B. for a while. They would upset all our books & papers & things and many of these will be lost for ever, but still it will be a good thing for them to take possession of the house and drive mother out. Still the thought of police living there & the Union Jack flying from A.B. angers. It is bad enough to think of Swaraj Bhawan with the British flag. But it will not be there for long, not for long!

are locked up Shibbu & the others sit round a miserable lamp and try to read—Shibbu being the teacher. This is done after work hours, after lock up in the barrack for the night. Still the warder objected to it and threatened to report to the jailer!

We are close neighbours to a railway station. A goods siding seems to be right next to the jail wall. All day & night trains pass and engines shunt up and down and whistle, and sometimes make the night hideous with their noise. One might almost be living in the waiting room of a station. To add to the din there is a tube well, apparently belonging to the railway, adjoining the jail wall. This well functions almost all the 24 hours and belches forth smoke. Obviously this is not a place for any one suffering from insomnia—like Sherwani. But I am not a victim of insomnia—fortunately!

March 10 Thursday

The summer is on us—Even the nights are getting warm. Officially summer is supposed to begin on April 1st and we shall probably be allowed to sleep outside the barrack in the open then. Meanwhile, we sit in the open in the evening twilight and large numbers of bats fly over and about us. How silently they fly and one can just see them against the darkening sky. Eerie things. Always I am afraid lest they might hit me in the face. They seem to come so near. I have a horror of them.

The roofs of our barracks seem to shelter a variety of animals—bats, pigeons and squirrels abound. They seem to get on well together. At any rate there is no obvious conflict.

I tried to send two books & some foreign periodicals to Betty to the Lucknow Dist Jail today. I do not yet know if I have succeeded.

March 11 Friday

The Bombay Collector has sent me a demand for Rs. 20839-13-0 plus 2/- fee to be paid within 20 days of receipt of notice—otherwise he will attach and sell my property! It was a surprise to receive this notice from the Bombay Collector. The Allahabad man apparently shies at taking possession of Anand Bhawan or the moveables therein. Perhaps it is the Delage car they are after—I wrote as follows on the copy of the Bombay notice:

March 15 Tuesday

I wage ceaseless war against mosquitoes, bugs &c. A jail is outwardly clean and well swept but no effort is made to keep the prisoners and their clothes and blankets clean. Result bugs. The sight of a bed bug in my bed galvanized me into activity and since then a campaign was opened by me. The bed had a bath of boiling water with potassium permanganate. Also Flit. This process is repeated at intervals. Flit is sprayed in the barrack at least twice a day and thousands of mosquitoes are slaughtered daily. Still they come. This slaughter reminds me of the effect of gases in war time. Why should not men be gassed off in this way? They are worse and more savage I suppose in some ways at least than mosquitoes!

The campaign has extended to the prisoners living with us. I mean the non politicals who are supposed to serve us or keep guard on us or the main wall here. I give each one a cake of soap every week for washing his clothes—Another cake is put out for them to wash their hands and faces and they have been bidden to soap their faces twice a day at least —an unusual experience for them.

It is a sore trial to have to live with people in a barrack. Always together—no privacy—and the same persons from morning to evening—day after day—time without end! It is terrible at times and one is tempted to prefer solitary confinement even. This close association in a barrack has most of the disadvantages of married life with none of its advantages. How people get on each other's nerves and how every little failing of another seems to grow and grow on one till it becomes almost intolerable.

We are only four of us here and I am quite sure that I succeed in making life miserable for the other three. Fact is many things they do upset me and it is difficult not to misbehave. Govind Ballabh is very decent & we get on well together in spite of many differences—Har Govind & I have little in common but we function in different circles to a large extent. . .

Father has been very much in my thoughts. His picture seems to haunt me, and there is an emptiness in the heart.

March 18 Friday

My temper was none of the best when I wrote last in this—I was needlessly hard on one of my companions here.

TO MOTHER[44]

My dear Mother,

Allow the police to search Anand Bhawan if they come there to do so. Do not allow your activities to be disturbed by their arrival. Continue your work—or rest—as usual, but keep someone with the police to go with them wherever they go. If Upadhyaya is there, he could stay with them. If he is not there call in someone like Ladli Bhai, Shyam Bhai or Kishan Prasad Dar. The police should be asked to wait till some one among our relations or friends turn up. You need not go around with the police.

Let the policemen go wherever they want to. You need not keep any room or box open in advance, but whatever box or room they want to be opened should be opened for them.

It is not necessary to send anything out of the house. Let everything remain as usual. If you need anything in particular, pack them in a box and send them to Ladli Bhai or someone.

If the police or magistrate order you to go, or detain you from going out of Anand Bhawan or to any particular part of the city, then tell them quite clearly that you will do as you wish or think proper. Of course, it is a different matter if they arrest you or detain you.

If they occupy Anand Bhawan or ask you to go out, you should arrange to do so at your convenience. There is no need to hurry. It depends on the conditions and the situation. But I can see no reason why you should not move out at your convenience, in two or three days. If this problem arises, call in any one of the above mentioned persons or any friend. In case you have to leave the house, in my opinion, you could stay in the cottage attached to Swaraj Bhawan. If the police do not object, you could calmly take the clothes, tables, chairs, carpet etc., which you consider necessary. Whatever you do, do it openly and after obtaining permission. Do not do anything in secret. If the cottage cannot be got ready at once—or there is any difficulty in shifting—then for some time you could go to Mohan Bhai's house.

Love,

Your son
Jawahar

44. J.N Correspondence, N M M L. Original in Hindi. This undated letter was presumably written from jail in early 1932.

We celebrated Holi today, not in the traditional way—tomorrow is the day for that—but by having a feast of puries &c. which the Pants provided.

March 29 Tuesday

I have been bored, fed up, angry with almost everything and everybody—with my companions who often get on my nerves, with the country in general for not being as aggressive and active as it might, with Sarojini for having gone and stayed with Fazl-i-Husain in Delhi, with the British Empire (but that is a permanent feeling), but above all with myself.

I have been getting a substantial rise in temperature daily for ten days. Kishan Bhai came some days ago and was given a special interview. He told me that I ought not to work in the evenings—I must rest and contemplate the sky! So I must give up even my gentle evening walks. As for running this is not to be thought of for years—I must get used to living like an invalid. This idea has obsessed me and oppressed me. I will not believe it but there it is! Then there is the feeling that nothing is being done about my treatment. I feel it is infra dig to complain to the Supt. He came today after nearly 2 weeks and casually asked me if my pain continued.

The new Commissioner[47] came with the Supt. To my surprise and slight annoyance—as I took it to be not in very good form—he folded his hands—नमस्कार and said in Hindi: मेरी आपसे मुलाकात पहले नहीं हुई है[48] or something to this effect. I answered briefly in Hindi, not over-cordially as I suspected his intention! Then he relapsed into English.

There was a slight flare up this evening when Badri Dutt ventured to suggest that I ought to go out on parole for treatment. I gave him a bit of my mind. This resulted in one good thing at least. I felt relieved and was more cheerful this evening than I had been for some days

For the last three days have been continuing the series of Letters to Indu. Have hardly been in the mood for them or indeed any work, but Indu's enquiry about them made me feel that I must be up and doing. But this compulsion hardly pays. I am not writing well at all.

47 A C Holmes, served in the U P Civil Service from 1899 to 1934; retired as member, Board of Revenue, U P.

48 Namaskar I have not met you before.

As a matter of fact we all get on very well—largely because every one else is very accommodating to me and puts up with my idiosyncracies and temper.

The Supt. came two days ago and examined me fairly thoroughly. Said nothing was the matter with me. Yet the doctor continues to come morning & evening to take my temperature which is certainly not normal. But I have been feeling better generally—Sometimes there is a little pain at the side.

The jailer used to come to us daily. He even sent apologies to us if he could not come any day. Now he does not honour us with visits except brief ones every fourth or fifth day.

This jail is fairly efficiently run—so far as the maintenance of discipline is concerned.

I sent a bundle of foreign papers to Betty today—or at any rate I sent them to the office, to be sent on to Betty.

Kamala's letter has come. It is in the office still. I have been eagerly expecting it for four days. And I am looking forward greatly to the मुलाकात [interview] probably next Monday.

March 20 Sunday

Kamala's letter has not been given to me yet—nor has the packet of papers been sent to Betty, although this is the end of the third day. I have deliberately not asked for it. I do not even know if tomorrow is my interview. I expect so & hope so. Kamala ought to be here tomorrow morning.

I finished reading Andre Maurois'[45] Byron today. I was strangely fascinated by the story. Disgust and admiration—with disgust preponderating. Harrow & Trinity Cambridge seem to offer links.

March 21 Monday

Kamala's letter came today—and Indu's—And soon after there was the interview with K and mother & Ranjit—Girdharilal & Upadhyaya cooling their heels outside the jail! A good and almost satisfying interview. K looked well. Good news from Bombay & Allahabad. I felt greatly bucked up. Rumour in Bombay that the Lothian Committee[46] wants Bapu & me to come out of jail soon—this month!

45 (1885 1967), French writer, author of Ariel, Byron, Disraeli and other works

46 Appointed in 1932 with Lord Lothian as its chairman to continue discussions in India on the electoral franchise

Bebee has sent me Wells'[49] book on biology—The Science of Life—It is a mighty opus—I was wanting to read it but when? I find I can do little reading. I have been carrying on with German with no great results and I am getting tired of it. Wells' book which Bebee has sent bears the imprint of a Cape Town bookseller. Sarojini must have bought it there and Bebee promptly deprived her of it and sent the book to me.

Indu, from all accounts, feeling very lonely and depressed. I am worried about her. But even more I am worried about Betty. Poor girl! How terribly bored and fed up she must be in the Lucknow Dist. Jail.

Heigh-ho! I feel better today—But, oh, the contempt in my mind & heart for the chicken-hearted animal called the Indian moderate—the Sivaswamy Iyer breed! It will not be necessary to punish them for their poltroonery and betrayal. They will give up the ghost themselves when their soul mates and protectors—the British—have to depart from India. But they are a lowly breed.

April 1 Friday

Some excitement today—I heard early this morning that the women politicals next door were hunger striking—Indeed that they had been fasting already for over three days.[50] Reason not quite clear except trouble with the lambardarin who has been a nuisance for a long time. I was much put out—Asked jailer to come & see me. He would tell me nothing at all. Then I wrote to Supt. Late in afternoon Supt. and Dist. Magte. (Nethersole) came to our barrack. Didn't like the idea of my seeing the girls—Went away to see them but did not succeed in convincing them. Came back to us and ultimately agreed to my seeing the women—I saw two of them. Their grievance, apart from lambardarin, was that other politicals had been badly treated—so they had heard. They wanted the Supt. to proclaim publicly that no illegal punishment will be given to the politicals. After some argument they agreed to my request to break their fast. One of their number was very ill and had previously been sent to the Dufferin Hospital. She was being discharged.

49 The Science of Life was written by H. G. Wells in collaboration with his son, George Philip Wells, and Julian Huxley and published in 1931.

50 Women political prisoners, who were not separated from the women convicts, went on hunger strike in protest against the abusive language of the lambardarins—the female convict overseers.

the usual rise was up to 98.7°F. Later it became 99°, and now it is 99.2°. The pain in the chest and side has also become a little more persistent. Thinking that perhaps resting in the evenings might do some good, I have even given up, for two weeks now, the little evening outing I used to have from the barrack. But this does not seem to have made any difference. I feel sure that with my vitality and general health I ought to be able to get over any internal derangements or troubles. But I am intrigued at not understanding what the matter is with me, and it is naturally not very pleasant to be a passive spectator of the progressive deterioration of my body. All my life I have been used to exercise and not to be able to indulge in this is a novel and painful experience for me.

My present trouble occurred for the first time, though in an even milder form, in January last year. I was examined then repeatedly, and thoroughly, by three doctors—Dr. M. A. Ansari of Delhi, Dr. J. N. Mehta of Bombay and Dr. B. C. Roy of Calcutta. They treated me for it and within a month or two my temperature became normal, that is, it did not use to rise beyond 98.0°F in the evenings, and I had no pain or discomfort in the chest or sides. I kept well for several months and it was only in January this year in Naini Prison that I again experienced a feeling of lassitude and giddiness accompanied by the slight rise in temperature and the pain in the side.

I feel that it might be of considerable help to any final diagnosis or treatment of my trouble if my present condition could be compared to my condition last year. This would help in making it clear if I am having the same trouble now. More important still, it might indicate any deterioration from last year. This comparison can only be made by the doctors who treated me last year. Unfortunately two of them—Dr. M. A. Ansari and Dr. J. N. Mehta—are not available as they are in prison. Dr. Mehta, I believe, wrote to you on the subject but soon after he was arrested. The third doctor, Dr. B. C. Roy, might perhaps be available, although he is a very busy man and in addition to his professional work is the Mayor of Calcutta. I feel that it would be a very desirable thing if it was possible for you to have a consultation with Dr. Roy about me. I would welcome this and my people would also appreciate it greatly. If you think this can be done, you could communicate directly with him, or, if you prefer, I could write to him. His address is: Dr. B. C. Roy, 36 Wellington Square, Calcutta.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

not make out why this special change. Anyway I expected mother & Kamala and got ready for the मुलाकात [interview] and waited and waited —Nothing doing all the morning. After 3 in the afternoon the interview came. It was not the usual interview with mother & Kamala. Raj came as a special favour on her way to Naini Tal. She looked cheerful and better than she was when last I saw her. Talkative as ever.

I received Kamala's letter today. Nothing from Indu.

Our barrack was not locked last night. From April 1st summer is supposed to begin and we are graciously permitted to sleep out. But it is pleasant & cool still in the evenings and at night.

The Supt. is apparently sending a report about my health to Govt. in response to an enquiry.

April 4 Monday

Interview with mother, Kamala & Ranjit. Surprised to see Ranjit. He had just come back from Bombay. A budget of news. The hour passed rapidly enough and it was not pleasant to come back alone to the barrack.

I wrote to the Supt. at some length about my health and suggested Bidhan being asked to examine me.

4/4/32[52]

TO SUPERINTENDENT, DISTRICT JAIL, BAREILLY

Dear Colonel Newland,

I am troubling you with this letter as you are busy and may not be able to come to our barrack for a few days.

I find that my people are very much put out about my health. I have all along tried to assure them not to worry as apart from one or two abnormalities, I was keeping tolerably well. But the persistence of an abnormal temperature in the evenings and the slight pain in the side makes them anxious and I do not know how to assure them that all is well. The very fact that from early boyhood I have kept excellent health makes my present fall from grace somewhat alarming to them. I have now had the rise in temperature for two and a half months almost continuously and judging from the temperature chart there is a slight, but progressive, deterioration. When I came here from Naini prescribed iodine (internally) and Kalzana, and iodex massage. The superintendent also seemed to think that perhaps something might be wrong with the base of one of my teeth—some gland might have formed. But it is difficult to be sure without further investigation. About a year ago I had all my teeth x-rayed in Bombay and as a result one was pulled out. Since then I have frequently visited the dentist to have an artificial tooth made for the gap. I lost one of them and so had to visit him again. My teeth were examined by the dentist within a week of my arrest and he told me they were in good condition. I have had no pain or other trouble with them since.

52. J N Prison Papers, N M M L

I am not worrying in the least about myself but I would like you very much to examine me. My mother and Kamala would feel greatly relieved if you could do so and assure them not to be anxious. In particular, I would like you to compare my present condition, after examination, with last year's, when you and Ansari and Jivraj Mehta and Sir Nilratan examined me. You would then be able to say if there was any marked change or not. It will be difficult for you to leave your Corporation and hospitals and your other multifarious activities, but perhaps you could fix up a short visit to Bareilly, if an opportunity presents itself.

I suggested to the superintendent therefore that you might be requested to examine me and have a consultation with him about me. For the present he has suggested that I should write to you and ask you to communicate with him direct. Please let him know how I was when you examined me last year. His address is:

Col. B. E. M. Newland I.M.S.
Supt., Dist Jail, Bareilly.

In case you are permitted to visit me and examine me please inform Kamala and she will make the necessary arrangements for your stay here.

I need hardly add that I am leading a regular and restful life here.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

Dear Col. Newland,

As suggested by you I have written to Dr. B. C. Roy and I am sending this letter on to you for being passed. I feel however that a personal visit and examination by him would be far more satisfactory and only then could he compare my present condition with last year's. In view

6/4/1932[53]

TO B. C. ROY

My dear Bidhan,

Perhaps you know that I have not been keeping very fit lately. For the last two and a half months I have been running a slight temperature and there has been some little pain at the side. You will remember examining me last year when I had more or less the same trouble. After my visit to Ceylon[54] I seemed to have got over it. Anyway there was no rise in temperature and no pain and on the whole I felt fit. The worry and strain of work, however, before long put an end to this feeling of fitness and I used to get tired rather easily. There was no other apparent trouble and I concluded that I was overworking and tried to take a little rest in the day time whenever I could manage it.

After my arrest on December 26th last I tried to resume my full exercises, running etc. in Naini Prison. For a fortnight I kept well but then I began to feel more tired and eventually I noticed, about the third week of January, that I had a slight rise in temperature in the evenings accompanied as a rule by a pain at the side. I gave up my exercises and was given a tonic and iodex to rub etc. Then I was transferred to Bareilly. I felt a little better for the first few days but the rise in temperature continued. The morning temperature was usually 97°F. The evening temperature at first went up to 98.7° or 98.8°; then it reached 99.0°. Now it goes up to 99.2° as a rule. The maximum temperature in the evening has been 99.4. All these are mouth temperatures. The pain in the side has continued and become a little more persistent, although it is still not much. When taking a deep breath I sometimes feel a slight catch there.

Apart from this there is no other trouble, except a slight feeling of lassitude occasionally. I have absolutely no cough. My bowels move regularly. My weight has remained steady at about 126 lbs since December last when I was arrested. Thus you will notice that apart from this abnormal temperature and the pain in the side I seem to be normal. In regard to these two abnormalities there has been some slight deterioration in the course of the last two months.

The superintendent of the jail, Col. Newland, has examined me several times. He did not at first notice anything wrong inside but today he suspected a little patch in the right side where I have the pain. He has

53. J N Prison Papers, N.M.M.L.
54. See Selected Works, Vol. 4, pp. 517-531.

It appears to be a touch of dry pleurisy in the side. Don't worry about me. I shall flourish like the green bay tree in spite of everything.

I have many companions here—apart from human beings. There are pigeons and squirrels and bats and monkeys and mosquitoes and bugs and beetles—to mention some of them. With the squirrels we are friendly and they are getting over-bold. The pigeons are pleasant to see and hear. The bats I dislike but I put up with them. The monkeys amuse me greatly. They growl and make faces—they are used to being ill-treated. But they were surprised to notice that I treated them in a different way. Instead of cursing at them and throwing stones I simply stood and smiled and whistled at them. They are rather put out by this. Then rather fatuously they turn and try to ignore me! With the mosquitoes and bugs &c we wage ceaseless war and daily I slaughter vast numbers with flit. Whenever I use flit I think of the use of gas in modern warfare and of human beings dropping off as mosquitoes do in our barrack!

I am glad Betty is practising shorthand. Do not spend too much time over novels and the like. Some regular hard intellectual work should be done in jail. That is why I took up German.

Bebee has sent me Well's Science of Life. It is a tremendous book. Have you read it? You should read all three of Wells—The Outline of History, The Science of Life and his latest opus.[56] Of course if you and I live long enough you may get an Outline of History written by me! I shall send you The Science of Life when I have finished it. That will not be soon. Hope you are taking exercises.

I have given a big book about Malaya to Ranjit. Get it. It is worth reading. It is called The Soul of Malaya. I have ordered L'illustration of Paris. So there is something to live for!

Love from your loving brother,

Jawahar

Give my love to Uma Bhabi and Prabha.
Happy New Year to you. It was raining yesterday.

April 9 Saturday

We have been having distinguished visitors! Day before yesterday Nethersole the Dist. Magte suddenly turned up in the afternoon. Was put out by Kamala's intervention in local politics. Apparently she took 56 The Work, Wealth and Happiness of Mankind.

of your suspicion that I have some chronic trouble in my right side it seems to me all the more necessary for Dr. Roy to be requested to come here.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

April 6 Naoroz

The new Samvat 1989 begins today, at least according to the lunar reckoning. According to the Sun it begins on April 14.

Supt. examined me thoroughly today and managed to spot a patch in the side. Has put me on iodine, Kalzana &c., the usual routine. I feel relieved! At least I know what the matter is and now I can devote myself to getting rid of the 'patch' &c.

At Supt's suggestion wrote to Bidhan. But it is not yet clear if he will be allowed to visit me.

7-4-32[55]

Dear Nan & Bets,

I am glad to learn that you are getting on fairly well in the Dist Jail Lucknow—but Betty has no business to lose weight. What is the good of going to jail if one does not improve in health and weight! Prison is the best of universities if only one knows how to take its courses. Physically of course one has the chance of regular and simple living. Mentally, its effect is still more noteworthy. Our age is the Age of Indifference. People have no real beliefs left—nothing sacred—nothing worthwhile almost. And so we suffer from ennui and life itself becomes a burden. We have lost entirely our sense of perspective—well, jail gives it back to us to some extent and we begin to appreciate the little things, which we hardly noticed before. And so the enjoyment of life itself becomes keener. So three cheers for jail!

I am feeding myself up so much that I am afraid I shall get terribly fat. I take milk, dallia, dahi and cream—Betty, please note and do likewise. This is apart from tonics and the like. My little trouble seems to have been spotted and I hope to rid myself of it before long.

55 Vijayalakshmi Pandit Papers, N M M L.

April 23 Saturday

After the first shock and alarm I have felt greatly elated at the news from Allahabad, specially at the part mother took—Rumour usually exaggerates such happenings—But this time rumour was left far behind—Even the cautious and truncated account in the Bharat showed that much more had happened than I had imagined. And later at the interview Kamala added fuller details. I was thrilled!

Kamala came alone to the interview. Mother was still laid up owing to her injuries which were not so slight as I had thought.

My temperature has continued—I have had fits of pessimism & optimism—The idea that I am on the way to becoming a permanent invalid is most depressing and annoying. But I usually suppress it with vigour.

Today is the day fixed for the 47th Congress at Delhi! Great doings there—Sarojini & Malaviyaji likely to be landed in prison.[58]

Poor Govind Ballabh has been in great pain for the last ten days or more — He can hardly sit or walk.

May 10 Tuesday

A long gap since I wrote last. Why should I write. For others to read later or to read it myself in after years? Ridiculous habit — to keep a journal for the purpose of recording futilities. After all there can be little worthwhile to record in prison. And yet it is a bit of a relief at times—My companions are delightful and most accommodating, but Govind Ballabh apart, they are no company.

We have got a new companion—Lala Thakur Das of Bijnor[59]—He is the father-in-law of Chandrabhal, Sri Prakasa's brother. After four months as a C class prisoner, he has been promoted to A! They gave him a fine of Rs. 700 and realised it from his zamindari. He is 60 but looks much more because of a patriarchal beard. Very healthy—keen on nature cures and exercise. Gets up at 3 in the morning and runs and jumps and hops and does all manner of turns to keep fit. He does keep fit. A likeable man, but no companion!

58 The Congress though declared an unlawful body met for its annual session on 23 April 1932 and in spite of police vigilance about 500 delegates found their way to the meeting place Pandit Malaviya, the President-elect, was arrested en route at Shahdara, outside Delhi, and Sarojini Naidu at Bombay on 22 April 1932 part in procession or some such thing the day she came for the interview. It was the 4th—Gandhi Day. Nethersole was pleased to say that it was hardly sporting of K to do political work during a visit to me! She should separate the two so that he could take action the more easily. Of course it was no threat, he told me, but it was a broad enough hint! Then he talked of wider issues—Difficult to speak to him. He is narrow & mid-Victorian in his politics and no idea which has become more or less prevalent during the last quarter of a century is likely to enter his thick head.

59 A Congressman from Bijnor; imprisoned several times in the freedom movement, died 1942

Whether it was Kamala's doing or not, Bareilly seems to have woken up—Last night, as we were going to bed, loud cries and slogans came from the female ward—Fresh arrivals! It appears that three women were arrested yesterday and brought here. Probably the National Week celebrations, or the after-effects of Gandhi Day.

Our second distinguished visitor—really distinguished!—was the Home Member—Nawab Sir Ahmad Saeed Khan of Chhatari! Expressed concern at my health. Said Bidhan can certainly see me. Also talked about my being sent to some jail in the hills. Mentioned Nan & Betty also in this connection.

I am carrying on vigorously with the various medicines and concoctions— They take quite a bit of time. Now that I am attacking the enemy on all fronts, I feel quite happy.

April 13 Wednesday Jallianwala Day!

We have spent some anxious days. News reached us three days ago that there had been serious lathi charges in Allahabad and firing and deaths, and the city was being patrolled by the military and curfew order was proclaimed & so on and so forth. Also that mother even had got slightly hurt in the scuffle.[57] This must have taken place on the 8th but the Bharat is such an up to date paper that the issue which reached us on the 10th contained nothing about it! So we are anxiously waiting for tomorrow's Bharat.

I have been anxious about mother and Kamala and others but I have been glad that Allahabad has been carrying on the good fight with vigour. Today was Jallianwala Bagh Day and all over India there must have been demonstrations & lathi charges, and may be in some places, firing mile! Has fasted frequently for a week and once or twice for two or three weeks—keeping up exercises during fasts. He is in perfect health now at 60! To begin this strenuous life at 57 or 58 and force your body to improve out of recognition at that age is something remarkable.

57. Swarup Rani Nehru, while leading a procession in Allahabad on 8 April 1932, had been hit on the head repeatedly with a cane by the police and fainted.

It appears that Sir Sita Ram spent quite a lot of time in the circle when he came and many politicals complained to him. He has written a strong note of inspection.

19.5.32[60]

Darling Nan & Betty,

This is just to send you my love. I am glad you are both carrying on tolerably in the Lucknow heat, which must be much worse than the Bareilly variety. Don't read too many stories and novels. This becomes terribly boring in the end. The Times Book Club have just sent a bundle of good books to Anand Bhawan. I have asked Indu to take some for you next time.

I am glad Betty is reading economics but the books she has mentioned are not the ideal ones on the subject. You must remember that economics is a very controversial subject—almost everything and every activity today depends on the interpretation of economics. Socialism, capitalism, syndicalism and all other issues are economic. So, much depends on the viewpoint of the writer. However it is as well to get a grounding from the ordinary orthodox textbooks. I do not know if either of you has read Bernard Shaw's The Intelligent Woman's Guide to Socialism, Capitalism, Sovietism and Fascism. It is worth reading although Shaw is sometimes rather old-womanish.

One of the new books from London is H. G. Wells' The Work, Wealth and Happiness of Mankind—an economic survey. I am asking Kamala to give this to you. It will keep you occupied for a good while!

I have not seen the book on Eugene Debs.[61] If you can send it through Kamala, do so.

L'illustration has started coming. It will be more convenient for you to see it first and then to give it back at the next interview.

Bidhan is coming here on the 27th May. I have been told that government are willing to transfer me to Dehra Dun if I desire it. I have suggested that this question might stand over till after the doctors have done their worst on the 27th! Personally I am not keen on the transfer,

60 Vijayalakshmi Pandit Papers, NMML.
61 (1855-1926). US labour leader and five times socialist party candidate for American presidentship

It is clear now that in March last there was a good bit of beating of our men in this jail. They were given the hardest labour in the 4 oil pumps and beaten for not working hard enough. About a hundred were forced to apologise & were then released. Later there was another such incident and there were some fractures—hunger strikes &c. And yet we knew nothing. It is only now from L. Thakur Das that we have had some information. There was a great deal of point in the hunger strike of the women politicals, and indeed it did good.

I feel settled down here now. It is over three months since I came. Occasionally outside news upsets—like the Allahabad shooting and the holding of the Congress at Delhi. It is hot—But we have tattis & a punkha!

My temperature continues to go up—It is becoming an old friend—I hardly mind it. Bidhan will probably see me soon. Govt. have allowed him and I have written to ask him to come soon.

Mother came at the last interview on May 2. She had almost got over her pains and injuries. Was full of beans and so proud of having received canes and lathis. Brave little mother!

Kamala not well—the heat and the excitement too much for her. I am asking her to go to Bombay & Panchgani. Indu came at the last interview—Looking rather pale on account of the heat, but otherwise well.

Just had a letter from Dhan. Good to hear from him and see his childish handwriting again. Promises to send me a gift of books—Roger B & he. Books, books, more books! I have so many and I cannot keep up with them. Bebee has constituted herself our book supplier and she sends bundles of delightful books.

Today is the anniversary of the beginning of the 1857 mutiny!

May 17 Tuesday

Interview yesterday. Mother looking very frail and worn out—Kamala and Indu not very bright, but still considering the weather they were bearing up tolerably. Bidhan is coming here on the 27th of this month to examine me.

Lala Thakur Das, who is with us, is a wonder. He is sixty. He says that till two or three years ago he was ailing—had never taken exercise and always kept feeble health. He then began nature cures and exercises and now he is amazingly active and spends four or five hours a day in difficult asans and exercises! Runs nearly a couple of miles in the morning and sometimes if he has another few minutes to spare, puts in another

I wish to say nothing , receiving against me. But I should like while to the peculiarity of these prisoners of course that they have given me or any other friend I am of my human , sources and especially of my district of Rae ... They have lighted a fire which will spread and burn brightly till it has consumed and reduced to ashes the British domination and exploitation of this country, which has sucked the life-blood out of them, and till it has put an end finally to the system which has pinned them down and deprived them of the fruit of their toil, and reduced them almost to the level of the beasts of the field. For long years
I have laboured to this end, and so long as any strength is left in me, I will carry on this fight. Inside prison walls I shall think of many things, but most frequently my mind will dwell on the villages and fields where my kinsmen brethren live and labour and suffer, and my good wishes will go out to them and I shall pray that success may come to them in this great struggle, so that their present sufferings and misery may become an evil dream of the past.
Till such success comes there can be no contentment and no peace.

Name Prison
January 4th 1932

Jawaharlal Nehru

le gl
4/1/32

STATEMENT TO BE READ AT TRIAL, 4 JANUARY 1932

but if the doctors give the word I shall go. Meanwhile I am fairly well—about the same as before.

I am very worried about Bebee. She seems to be very ill but I have little news of her.

Mother was looking haggard and ill at the last interview. Travelling about in this weather for interviewing us does her little good. And yet to drop the interview would be worse still for her.

Keep fit—to give an ancient metaphor, used by the Buddha, like the string of the violin—neither too tight, nor too loose—just right to play the music of life.

Love,

Your loving brother
Jawahar

May 23 Monday

We are to be transferred to Dehra Dun, or at any rate, Pantji & I. So far as I was concerned the choice was given to me—I suggested waiting till the medical board examines me on the 27th. Probably I shall go to Dehra soon after. I shall be rather sorry to leave this jail, or rather our companions here. Strange how one hesitates and dislikes breaking up any routine or habit. But I am almost sure the change to Dehra will do me good. The weather has been getting hotter & hotter—112°F in the shade. Even so I have been keeping tolerably fit—everything considering—the rise in temperature continues—so does the pain.

Govind Ballabhji has started a fast for a week. He began on 20th night—Before that for six days he was on fruit diet—The fast is the chief topic of conversation. He is carrying on well so far—Third day.

Suddenly last night, the women politicals were transferred from this jail to Fatehgarh. Just five minutes notice! At about 9.30 p.m. as we were thinking of sleep, they shouted out and told us that they were going. The little boy Dharmapal, aged six, also gone. For some days past he has been coming to me in the morning and sharing my dallia—I shall miss him. He was a bright lad.

This morning G. B. Pant & I examined on commission as defence witnesses in Balkrishna's case.[62] Nethersole, the D.M. came in charge of the commission.

62 Bal Krishna Sharma 'Navin' (1897-1960); a leading Congressman of U.P. and Hindi poet and writer. In 1931, he was prosecuted for an allegedly seditious article that atrocities were being committed by the zamindars in a number of districts in U.P. with the connivance and support of the district authorities Jawaharlal and Pant were among the several defence witnesses.

May 29th Sunday

The great medical board has come and sat on me and has found that, considering everything, I was doing remarkably well! I have even had the indecency to go up in weight again by 2 lbs. Bidhan came—it was day before yesterday, on the 27th—and it was good to see his cheerful face. As he was going away he hinted that we would all be out by the end of June! So say also the astrologers. But I think and say otherwise.

Govind Ballabh Pant's great fast ended yesterday after 7 days and 15 hours nearly—183 hours. But he has taken very little nourishment so far. Just a little fruit juice—He is very weak & has lost about 12 lbs. It is not clear yet if he has profited much by the fast, so far as his pains are concerned.

Badri Datt Pande also started a fast and carried it on for 3½ days. He had a bad time as his inside went wrong just then and he had pains. He was quite frightened, and he has come to the conclusion that fasts are not meant for him.

We miss the evening Jhanda song which we used to hear across the wall from the women's barrack. The women politicals have gone to Fatehgarh.

Soon G.B.P. & I will go off to Dehra Dun, but Pant will take some time to get back his strength.

May 31 Tuesday

Interview yesterday—mother, Kamala, Indu and Amma,[63] who had just been discharged from Lahore jail. Kamala tells me that T.B. Sapru says we shall all be out within a few weeks, that Gandhiji was in correspondence with Hoare,[64] and Hoare was quite prepared to let us out—there were just one or two little hitches which would be removed soon enough! This, coming on top of Bidhan's hint—not to mention the astrologers!—cannot be just moonshine. I am troubled. I see no reason why we should be released so soon. Hoare is not clever or wise enough

63. Rajpati Kaul, mother in law of Jawaharlal, arrested on 8 January 1932 and sentenced to three months' simple imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 50.
64. Samuel Hoare, later Viscount Templewood (1880 1959); British Conservative politician and a Cabinet Minister; Secretary of State for India, 1931-35; Ambassador to Spain 1940-44. Mahatma Gandhi corresponded with Hoare in March May 1932 on the subject of the allotment of separate electorates to Harijans know much about them as I have only read very few of them. Victor Hugo's Quatre Vingt Treize is a very fine story.

THE BARRACK IN DEHRA DUN JAIL

The new English books you seem to have read, or most of them at least. You read much faster than I do, it seems to me! It is not worthwhile reading good books in this way as one forgets them soon enough. Take as many of the English and French books with you to Poona as you like. But during school term you will not have so much time to read other books.

It was hot here last night—There was quite a loo blowing till midnight. I wondered what Allahabad would be like when Bareilly was so bad.

I wonder when I shall see you again. You told me, I think, that your next holidays were in October or thereabouts. That is a long way off—anyway I shall hold myself in patience till you come and pay me another visit. Prison teaches patience at least! and meanwhile I shall write to you and I hope you will not forget to write to me.

Give my love to Chand and Tara and Rita and the Vakils. If you meet Jal Naoroji write to me how he is getting on and when he is likely to be quite well.

All my love and kisses,

Your loving
Papu

Love to Ylang Ylang[66] and the bunnies.

Don't forget to write to Bernard Aluwihare for the photograph of the Buddha statue at Anuradhapura.

June 6 Monday

It is amazing—the passion for learning how to read which our convict colleagues have got—we gave them some Hindi primers and help them occasionally. They help each other and often when I wake up in the middle of the night, I find some one of them mugging up his primer or first book at 2 a.m.!

Waiting, waiting to be sent to Dehra! It is annoying to be kept waiting in this way and not to know what is going to happen—But this morning the Supt. came and said that we—G. B. Pant & I—would be sent "very soon". He would not tell me exactly when. That is a state secret and cannot even be whispered. We shall probably be told to for it. I am worried about Gandhiji agreeing to any conditions. I wish he would not have any dealings with Hoare & Co. They fill me with anger and I want to stick it out to the end.

66 One of the pet animals.

Hints of release disturb the placidity of a prisoner's mind. I find myself continually thinking of outside activities now. Meetings & conferences & speeches & resolutions. I fancy myself holding forth!

June 1st

An interesting incident. A baby monkey managed to come down the wall inside our barrack enclosure. He could not mount up the wall again. The warder and C.Os and other prisoners here pursued the poor thing and captured him and tied a bit of a string round his neck. The parents (presumably) of the little one saw all this from the top of the wall, and their anger grew. Suddenly a big monkey jumped down and almost charged right into the crowd which had the little monkey. It was an extraordinarily brave thing for him to do. He succeeded in terrifying the whole crowd, in spite of their lathis, and there was a sudden sauve qui peut. The little monkey was also released but the poor thing had the six foot string round his neck and he hauled it along behind him. He sat on the roof of the barrack gnawing at the string. Later he disappeared. Probably the big monkey came down and carried him away. That big one who came down and faced the crowd, regardless of consequences, deserved the V.C. if anybody did!

June 1, 1932[65]

Darling Indu boy,

I am writing this only two days after our interview as I should like it to reach you before you go off to Poona. You will be glad to get away from the heat of Allahabad and Poona during the rains is quite pleasant. There are light showers as in Europe and the weather keeps cool. My experience of Poona during the monsoon is of Yeravda Prison! But I suppose the weather outside is much the same as inside the prison walls.

Mlle. Haemmerlin has sent such a lot of French books to you that you have got quite a library of them. I hope you will read them for they are all sure to be good books. Some will be a little difficult. I do not

65 J.N Correspondence, N M M L.

Pande not far from Moradabad. A two hour drive at night—after four months of seclusion it was a delightful change. Then, long after midnight, we entrained with four police officers—Had to get down suddenly at Doiwala at 5.30 a.m. and motored from there to Dehra.

The Supt.—a young man, Captain[68] somebody, came. Examined me thoroughly and gave his opinion with assurance that I had T.B.! Two patches on the right. Was quite sure of it and was quite ready to start a special treatment that very day—injections &c.—and to put me to bed for complete rest. Took my sputum—no positive result—so he has held himself so far. But today he has taken the sputum again and is bent on finding the bacillus koch in its red livery in it. I am hard put to it what to do. Do not fancy injections till I am quite sure of T.B.—even so, am not enamoured of them. Besides so soon after Bidhan's examination it hardly seems right to shift to this treatment without reference to him. The Supt. here is keen and I rather like him for it. He is the kind who cures or kills and does not believe in the conservative methods of dallying with disease! I am all for this outlook. He has himself had T.B.

To Govind Ballabh he said that his trouble was a kind of paralysis and wanted to dose him immediately. After a long fast and fruit diet and abstention from drugs for nearly a month this proposed change took GBP aback. He has suggested putting off this evil day for some time.

What a change from the 24 foot wall of our barrack in Bareilly! Here we have a baby wall—hardly deserving the name of jail wall—barely nine feet. It is easy enough to hop over it. Our enclosure is very narrow and small but the wall is low and one can go out occasionally for a view of the horizon. Over the wall I can see many trees and even a tall palm tree, reminding me of Ceylon and Malabar. Behind this grove lie the mountains and the lights of Mussoorie must twinkle away every night.

And I have privacy here—what a relief!

June 9th Thursday

The Supt—Capt C.V Falvey—came again yesterday. Told me he had spent two hours over my sputum trying hard to find the T.B. bacilli but without success. He was evidently disappointed as he has made up his mind that I have got T B. and must forthwith be treated for it. He examined me again and felt sure of his previous diagnosis. However get ready and depart within the hour or so. It may even be tonight. It was just four months ago today that I left Naini for Bareilly.

68 Captain C V Falvey, I M S

The mainas and the squirrels do not get on very well together. They have frequent little tiffs. But in the afternoons both of them make it up and sit close to each other on the other side of our khas-ki-tatti. It is cooler there and the heat makes them forget their petty animosities. They sit there and pant. It has been hot enough. Panting is about the only thing one can do.

But what is this heat to our brave old man L. Thakur Das? He carries on with his exercises & runs from 3 a.m. in the morning. But most wonderful of all—one day he had pain in the back—he cured it by taking a sun bath for 45 minutes at 2 p.m! Temp. in the shade about 110°—Temp in the sun—God knows!

News has just come—at 6 p.m.—that we are to go tonight to Dehra.

June 8 Wednesday Dehra Dun

We are settling down in our new quarters. There is a rushing to and fro and the whole jail staff seems to be eager to make us comfortable. Kunwar Anand Singh[67] of Kashipur, who has been here for some time, superintends these operations. All manner of rickety furniture from a second hand shop is coming on hire. We are really not in the jail proper but just outside it in the warders' old quarters. They are not up to much as quarters go but they are an improvement on a barrack. Dehra has just a little jail and its resources and accommodation is limited. It hardly feels like being in prison here—partly because of the nature of accommodation & partly because of the human factor.

We had a great send off from Bareilly District Jail. The Supt. of the jail, the Supt. of Police, the jail staff and a crowd of police officers were at the jail gate. The Supt. of Police, whom I had not met before, gave me a bundle of old German magazines. Said he had heard that I was learning German and so he had brought them. Rather decent of him. Strange how a sour looking Englishman is sometimes quite decent behind the veil. The Bareilly S.P. was probably named S.R. Mayors. We shook hands with various people and went off in different cars. It was a long drive—it was not considered safe for us to entrain at Bareilly. So we went about 50 miles out via Rampur to a place in the wilderness called Munde two of us being transferred. They would not take us to Bareilly station lest people might see us, for we have become purdahnashins, and may not be seen! Fifty miles out they drove us by car to a little station in the wilderness. I felt thankful for this drive. It was delightful to feel the cool night air and to see the phantom trees and men and animals rush by in the semi darkness, after many months of seclusion.

67. Congressman who was imprisoned several times during the freedom movement, chief whip of the Congress Party in the U.P. Assembly and Parliamentary Secretary to the Premier, U.P., 1937-39.

We were brought to Dehra Dun. Early in the morning we were again taken out of our train, before we had reached the end of our journey, and taken by car, lest prying eyes should see us.

And so here I sit in the little gaol of Dehra Dun, and it is better here than at Bareilly. It is not quite so hot, and the temperature does not rise to 112 degrees, as it did in Bareilly. And the walls surrounding us are lower and the trees that overlook them are greener. In the distance I can even see, over our wall, the top of a palm tree, and the sight delights me and makes me think of Ceylon and Malabar. Beyond the trees there lie the mountains, not many miles away, and, perched up on top of them, sits Mussoorie. I cannot see the mountains, for the trees hide them, but it is good to be near them and to imagine at night the lights of Mussoorie twinkling in the far distance.

Four years ago—or is it three?—I began writing these series of letters to you when you were at Mussoorie. What a lot has happened during these three or four years, and how you have grown! With fits and starts and after long gaps I have continued these letters, mostly from prison. But the more I write the less I like what I write; and a fear comes upon me that these letters may not interest you much, and may even become a burden for you. Why, then, should I continue to write them?

I should have liked to place vivid images of the past before you, one after another, to make you sense how this world of ours has changed, step by step, and developed and progressed, and sometimes apparently gone back; to make you see something of the old civilizations and how they have risen like the tide and then subsided; to make you realize how the river of history has run on from age to age, continuously, interminably, with its eddies and whirlpools and backwaters, and still rushes on to an unknown sea. I should have liked to take you on man's trail and follow it up from the early beginnings, when he was hardly a man, to today, when he prides himself so much, rather vainly and foolishly, on his great civilization. We did begin that way, you will remember, in the Mussoorie days, when we talked of the discovery of fire and of agriculture, and the settling down in towns, and the division of labour. But the farther we have advanced, the more we have got mixed up with empires and the like, and often we have lost sight of that trail.

after long debate it was decided that he should write to Newland at Bareilly & I should write to Bidhan. So we have some breathing time.

He was apparently anxious that I should undergo the treatment before I get discharged and hence the hurry. He asked me how long I was going to stay in jail—Extraordinary question for a Supt. to put to a prisoner under him. On my telling him that the answer was beyond me and that I was not here of my free will, but that my sentence was two years, he was surprised and perhaps felt that there was no need for hurry.

The resources of this little jail are limited. They have given us a prisoner to serve us. He is with us all day and then we learnt that at night he has to mount guard from 12 to 6. He is a C.O. This is monstrous. He has hardly any time to sleep and the jailer says he can't help it as he is short of C.Os.

I think often of the convicts who served us in Bareilly. How they all tried to do their utmost and how a little kindness was appreciated by them. Our parting was quite affecting and one or two of them had tears in their eyes. Poor underdogs of society. After a long interval a little human element had entered their lives. This was such a pleasant change that they did not mind any amount of work.

Last evening the jailer took us to the jail office above the main gate. From there we could see the whole jail—it is a tiny affair. The barracks had been locked up for the night. But some of the prisoners could see us and we could see them across the bars. Among them was Nardeva Shastri.[69] I felt a trifle ashamed and uncomfortable—I always do when seeing my old colleagues treated in this way when I am being given all manner of privileges.

June 10, 1932

THE QUEST OF MAN[70]

Four days ago I wrote to you from Bareilly gaol. That very evening I was told to gather up my belongings and to march out of the prison—not to be discharged, but to be transferred to another prison. So I bade good-bye to my companions of the barrack, where I had lived for just four months, and I had a last look at the great twenty-four-foot wall under whose sheltering care I had sat for so long, and I marched out to see the outside world again for a while. There were 69 A Congressmen of Meerut.

70 Letter to Indira Nehru, Glimpses of World History (1962), Asia Publishing House, Bombay, pp. 176-178.

decisions in various ways. Science gives a doubting and hesitating reply, for it is of the nature of science not to dogmatize, but to experiment and reason and rely on the mind of man. I need hardly tell you that my preferences are all for science and the methods of science.

We may not be able to answer these questions about man's quest with any assurance, but we can see that the quest itself has taken two lines. Man has looked outside himself as well as inside; he has tried to understand Nature, and he has also tried to understand himself. The quest is really one and the same, for man is part of Nature. "Know thyself", said the old philosophers of India and Greece; and the Upanishads contain the record of the ceaseless and rather wonderful strivings after this knowledge by the old Aryan Indians. The other knowledge of Nature has been the special province of science, and our modern world is witness to the great progress made therein. Science, indeed is spreading out its wings even farther now, and taking charge of both lines of this quest and co-ordinating them. It is looking up with confidence to the most distant stars, and it tells us also of the wonderful little things in continuous motion—the electrons and protons—of which all matter consists.

The mind of man has carried man a long way in his voyage of discovery. As he has learnt to understand Nature more he has utilized it and harnessed it to his own advantage, and thus he has won more power. But unhappily he has not always known how to use this new power, and he has often misused it. Science itself has been used by him chiefly to supply him with terrible weapons to kill his brother and destroy the very civilization that he has built up with so much labour.

June 10

The Supt. is really bent on finding T.B. bugs in my sputum. He thinks he has spotted it already. The man in the lab disagrees. So I must go on producing sputum daily till the Supt. can convince the other chap that there is the T.B. bug in it!

June 13 Monday

Interview today—Kamala, mother and Sitla Sahai who had been recently discharged. Kamala was somewhat fed up with things outside. Wants to force matters and come to jail. I was not as pleasant as I might have been during the interview. News of the weakness of this

We have just skimmed over the surface of history. I have placed the skeleton of old happenings before you and I have wished that I had the power to cover it with flesh and blood, to make it living and vital for you.

But I am afraid I have not got that power, and you must rely upon your imagination to work the miracle. Why, then, should I write, when you can read about past history in many good books? Yet, through my doubts I have continued writing, and I suppose I shall still continue I remember the promise I made to you, and I shall try to fulfil it. But more even than this is the joy that the thought of you gives me when I sit down to write and imagine that you are by me and we are talking to each other.

Of man's trail I have written above, since he emerged stumbling and slouching from the jungle. It has been a long trail of many thousands of years. And yet how short a time it is if you compare it to the earth's story and the ages and aeons of time before man came! But for us man is naturally more interesting than all the great animals that existed before him; he is interesting because he brought a new thing with him which the others do not seem to have had. This was mind—curiosity—the desire to find out and learn. So from the earliest days began man's quest. Observe a little baby, how it looks at the new and wonderful world about it; how it begins to recognize things and people; how it learns. Look at a little girl; if she is a healthy and wide-awake person she will ask so many questions about so many things. Even so, in the morning of history when man was young and the world was new and wonderful, and rather fearsome to him, he must have looked and stared all around him, and asked questions. Who was he to ask except himself? There was no one else to answer. But he had a wonderful little thing—a mind—and with the help of this, slowly and painfully, he went on storing his experiences and learning from them. So from the earliest times until today man's quest has gone on, and he has found out many things, but many still remain, and as he advances on his trail, he discovers vast new tracts stretching out before him, which show to him far he is still from the end of his quest—if there is such an end.

What has been this quest of man, and whither does he journey? For thousands of years men have tried to answer these questions. Religion and philosophy and science have all considered them, and given many answers. I shall not trouble you with these answers, for the sufficient reason that I do not know most of them. But, in the main, religion has attempted to give a complete and dogmatic answer, and has often cared little for the mind, but has sought to enforce obedience to its

Have you taken any of the new English or French books with you to Poona? Let me know their names. If I want any of them I shall write to you.

My love to Chand and Tara and Rita. Also give my love to the Vakils. Puphi wrote to me that Sarah, the ayah, was giving some trouble. I hope you will be able to make her behave. Rita had better continue in Poona and not come to Allahabad.

All my love and kisses,

Your loving
Papu

22/6/32[72]

TO SUPERINTENDENT, DISTRICT JAIL, DEHRA DUN

Dear Sir,

You informed me today that you had received instructions from the higher authorities to the effect that I was not to be permitted to interview my wife and my mother for the period of one month.[73] I understand that under the jail rules and regulations interviews are stopped as a punishment for some offence against those rules. I shall be obliged if you will find out from the local government, or the Inspector-General,[74] or whoever the person may be who has issued the instructions to you, what the nature of the offence, for which I have been punished, is supposed to be. The local government have been discourteous enough to issue these instructions without any intimation to me. It has been our practice to conform, within the limits of decency and reasonableness, with the jail rules and regulations. If government, however, act in a manner which is lacking in courtesy and decency, it may become difficult for us to maintain our present attitude.

It is not clear to me whether all my interviews have been stopped for the period of a month or whether this prohibition applies only to interviews with my wife and mother. In any event this is immaterial. Even if permitted to meet others, I do not propose to avail myself of any such interview.

72 J N Prison Papers, N M M L.

73 In protest against the insulting behaviour of jail officials towards Jawaharlal's mother, wife and Ranjit Pandit in Allahabad jail and the government's condonation of their conduct, Jawaharlal stopped all interviews. He resumed interviews on 12 January 1933 person, the caution of the other, the quarrelsomeness of a third, irritates and I forget that the fortnightly interview is a precious thing which must not be spoilt by irritation. Poor little girl! She is having a hard time outside. And instead of cheering her up I criticise everything.

74 Lt. Colonel Holroyd, retired in 1935.

Nan and Betty not at all well. Betty has lost a lot in weight. Poor Upadhyaya has been sentenced to six months' extra for a jail offence—for trying to send an unauthorised letter complaining of jail conditions. He is suffering greatly in Rae Bareli jail. The heat is terrible for him—a hill man—and having to sleep in a barrack is hell. On top of this the jail authorities are down on him. The sporting magistrate, or was it the commissioner of Allahabad, gave him class C as he had complained of being beaten by the Supt. of Police.

June 15, 1932[71]

Indu darling,

So you did not know what to write to me and the fortnight went by without any letter. Even mummie did not write. I hope you will make up for it now. For a long time now I shall not see you and a letter from you will cheer me up. Your school will keep you busy and of course you must attend to it. Still find a little time once a fortnight and tell me of the books you are reading, and what else you are doing in Poona.

You must have been glad to get out of Allahabad. It has been so hot in Bareilly and even in Dehra Dun that Allahabad must have been awful. As I listen to the loo blowing, I think of the Harrow song: "What a tune, Kind June, you are singing, all the Noon!" But the tune is not a very pleasant one in the Indian plains and one gets rather fed up with it. You are well rid of it and Poona must be a pleasant change.

You know that I am in Dehra Dun now. I was brought from Bareilly rather suddenly and they took us for a fifty mile drive at night to a little station in the wilderness. You see we have become purdah-nashins and none may see us! But I enjoyed that long drive by night. It was a long time since I had had a drive.

It is hot enough here but it is pleasanter than at Bareilly. The trees are greener and a palm tree peeping over the wall reminds me of Ceylon and Malabar, where we were just a year ago. Sometimes I can just see the vague outline of the mountains in the distance, and at night I can imagine the lights of Mussoorie twinkling away.

71. JN Correspondence, NMML.

June 24th Friday

This evening, as we were walking up and down in front of the jail, I had a glimpse of Kamala in the distance. Shammie was with her. They came to ask the jailer something. Their car was stopped outside the jail compound. Still we saw each other & waved. Feel cheered up. Tonight she must return to Allahabad with mother.

July 1st Friday

My weight gone up by 2½ lbs in 10 days! This is little short of scandalous. Still the pain in the side and the temperature continues.

I have received the Golden Book of Tagore[75] from Amal Home.[76] What wonderful tributes it contains!

July 11, 1932[77]

TO SUPERINTENDENT, DISTRICT JAIL

Dear Sir,

You were good enough to show me today the reply of the officiating Inspector General of Prisons to my letter dated the 22nd June. I am informed therein that, in the course of an interview with Mr. R. S. Pandit in the Allahabad District Jail on May 27th, my wife handed a letter to Mr. Pandit, and the jailer not allowing this, my mother "used insulting language to the jailer and was impertinent."

As this account of what occurred is untruthful and is a perversion of the facts, and further, as the action taken by government raises wider issues, I am writing to you again on the subject and shall be obliged if you will forward this letter to the government.

During the interview with Mr. Pandit on May 27, information was given to him about his three little daughters, aged three, five and eight, who are at a school in Poona. This information was contained in a letter or report from the school. My daughter, who attends the same school and who was spending her holidays in Allahabad, had this report or letter, and she read it out to Mr. Pandit, and later gave it to him

75 A commemoration volume published on the seventieth birthday of Tagore.
76 (1893 1961), editor of Calcutta Municipal Gazette for nearly thirty years.
77 J N Prison Papers, N M M L

U.U. CENT. LIB.

As you are aware, my mother and wife have especially come up to Dehra Dun to see me and have been waiting here for the next interview day. Owing to the new instructions received by you their plans will be completely upset and their stay here has been to no purpose. But I suppose governments, dealing with high matters of policy, have little concern with the ordinary canons of courtesy and decency.

Yours truly,
Jawaharlal Nehru

June 23 Thursday

The little gods of Naini Tal have decreed that I am not to have an interview with mother or Kamala for a month! So I was told by the Supt. yesterday—Why? I do not know. I suppose it is because of some incident at Ranjit's interview in the Dist. Jail Allahabad, when a note from Chand's school about the children's health, was read by Ranjit. But this is merely a guess of mine. No explanation was vouchsafed to me. For ten days mother & Kamala have waited here in Dehra Dun for the next interview. And now they are told to go away without it.

I was put out a little—After several days' low temperatures, I had 99° again yesterday. I have written to the Supt. a letter meant for the govt. Have also written to Kamala.

Feel a little better today. It is not a question of an interview. But this impertinence and insult to mother & K hurt. I do not think I shall have any more interviews in future. If interviews are indulgences given and taken away at the sweet will of somebody in Naini Tal, I shall do without such indulgences. If interviews mean insults for mother & K there will be no more of them.

It is nearly six months since I came to jail. I have had interviews every two weeks. A few months without interviews will do me good and it will save people the trouble and the expense of travelling up to see me. Kamala probably will soon land herself in jail. The latest firman of govt. will hasten the process. But poor mother!

The superintendent—Falvey—was himself much put out by the new order. He took the trouble to telephone to the I.G. at Naini Tal today, but, as he said, he merely "burnt his fingers". A G.O. is a G.O., he was told, and it has to be obeyed. Well, well.

I shall be glad if the Offg. Inspector-General will take the trouble to spell my name correctly in future.

Yours faithfully,
Jawaharlal Nehru

July 17 Sunday

I am settling down again to a peaceful existence. No interview is conducive to peace! It is a month and four days since I had my last interview. How many more months are to pass—perhaps a year or more—before the next meeting takes place!

I am more or less at peace now but I have had a few shocks lately. The first was bad news from Kamala. She has again been very ill. Then came a letter from the I G. in answer to my enquiry about the stoppage of interviews. I was informed that interviews had been stopped because mother had been insulting and impertinent to the Allahabad jailer! I was put out at this cheek and impertinence. I have written to him that I shall have no more interviews as I do not wish to place mother in a position where she might be insulted.

I am going tomorrow to Mussoorie! The Supt. is taking me to have an x-ray photograph taken. I am surprised at the govt. agreeing.

July 26, 1932[78]

Indu darling,
Your letter of July 1st reached me three weeks after it was written! But mummie sent me your card to her and this gave me some more and later information. I do not know how you are now, and what is going to happen to your tonsils. Of course cutting off the tonsils is quite a small operation. Nothing to worry about. If it is quite clear that they must be cut, let them go. I have suggested to Mr. Vakil that if it is necessary you can consult doctors in Bombay and also have the operation there. If you like mummie to be with you at the time, you can send for her.

The doctors tell me now that my insides are more or less right, and what is wrong with me is not the lungs. The teeth are supposed to be the

78 J N Correspondence, N M M.L.

to see for himself. The jailer took objection to this and was generally offensive and particularly so to Mr. Pandit. Apart from the insult to Mr. Pandit, the jailer's behaviour was an affront to my mother and wife. My mother hardly spoke to him.

Three days later, on May 30th, I had my usual fortnightly interview with my mother, wife and daughter in the Bareilly District Jail. I was then informed of what had happened. I was surprised to learn that any one should have behaved so discourteously to my mother and I expected some expression of regret from the jail officials for what had occurred. Instead of that, I now find that the government have chosen to punish my mother and wife. I presume this has been done on some statement made to them by the jailer. No reference was made, so far as I am aware, to my mother or wife to find out what had happened. Without any further enquiry or effort to find out the truth, the government have not hesitated to insult my mother and wife, and have done so in such a way as to cause the maximum of inconvenience to all parties concerned.

It may be that it is an offence under the jail regulations even to show a school report about one's children. Even if it is not a major offence, it may easily become so by virtue of some new ordinance. If therefore government wish to treat even this as worthy of punishment, I have no grievance. Nor shall I object if my interviews are stopped for a month or a year. I have not come to prison for the sake of my health or for pleasure.

But there are certain matters which I cannot pass in silence. I cannot tolerate even the suspicion of an affront or insult to my mother. I have noticed with deep regret that government have not shown my mother the courtesy which I would have expected from them under any circumstances. For the Inspector-General to say that my mother "used insulting language to the jailer and was impertinent" shows that he is strangely lacking in a sense of proportion, knows little of Indian society, and is not happy in the use of language.

The action that government have taken, and the manner of taking it, makes it clear that those who seek to interview me in jail are always liable to be insulted by government officials or by government itself. On no account am I prepared to take the slightest risk of further insult to my mother and wife. Under the circumstances, the only course open to me is not to have any interview, so long as I do not feel that such interviews can be had with dignity and with no fear of discourtesy to those who come to see me. I am therefore informing my people not to take the trouble to come for interviews with me in future, even after the month of punishment is over.

I shall be glad if the Offg. Inspector-General will take the trouble to spell my name correctly in future.

Yours faithfully,
Jawaharlal Nehru

July 17 Sunday

I am settling down again to a peaceful existence. No interview is conducive to peace! It is a month and four days since I had my last interview. How many more months are to pass—perhaps a year or more—before the next meeting takes place!

I am more or less at peace now but I have had a few shocks lately. The first was bad news from Kamala. She has again been very ill. Then came a letter from the I.G. in answer to my enquiry about the stoppage of interviews. I was informed that interviews had been stopped because mother had been insulting and impertinent to the Allahabad jailer! I was put out at this cheek and impertinence. I have written to him that I shall have no more interviews as I do not wish to place mother in a position where she might be insulted.

I am going tomorrow to Mussoorie! The Supt. is taking me to have an x-ray photograph taken. I am surprised at the govt. agreeing.

July 26, 1932[78]

Indu darling,
Your letter of July 1st reached me three weeks after it was written! But mummie sent me your card to her and this gave me some more and later information I do not know how you are now, and what is going to happen to your tonsils. Of course cutting off the tonsils is quite a small operation. Nothing to worry about. If it is quite clear that they must be cut, let them go. I have suggested to Mr. Vakil that if it is necessary you can consult doctors in Bombay and also have the operation there. If you like mummie to be with you at the time, you can send for her

The doctors tell me now that my insides are more or less right, and what is wrong with me is not the lungs. The teeth are supposed to be the root cause of trouble. I had one tooth taken out yesterday and perhaps more may come out soon. So I shall not grow in beauty as the days go by!

78 J N Correspondence, N M M L.

I had a nice little trip to Mussoorie to have my x-ray photograph taken. The motor road goes much further now—right up to Sunny View. We started from Dehra Dun after twelve noon and it took us just two hours to reach our destination in Mussoorie—one hour by car to Sunny View and then nearly an hour in a rickshaw, which took us to the Happy Valley, where the doctor lived. We spent three hours there and were back in Dehra Dun jail by seven thirty in the evening. It has been raining here a lot but that day, fortunately, it kept clear.

Keep well, my dear. It is rather silly for anyone to fall ill. I am very annoyed with myself for the trouble I have had myself, and have given others, over my health. But soon I hope to be quite fit.

Lots of love,

Your loving
Papu

Give my love to Chand, Tara and Rita.

July 29 Friday

I feel angry again today. I have seen in the paper that the Govt. have revised their own sentence on Ranjit about stoppage of interviews. Originally it was for a month—Now the stoppage is for three months and correspondence also banned! Heigh-ho! What disgusting meanness Perhaps this enhanced punishment is due to my writing and making a fuss—but I did not write about Ranjit's interviews at all. I wrote only about the insult to mother. Or perhaps Ranjit has himself written a stiff letter to Govt. Feel like swearing. This is the dept. of the noble nawab of Chhatari, Home Member!

I am quite sure now that I shall not have interviews with Kamala, mother & Indu for a long time now—till I am discharged. The Govt. has got too much of a swelled head to confess a mistake; and I have got too much of a swelled head to tolerate any slight. It is already a month and a half since I met Kamala & mother.

But I have had one interview — a medical one. Ansari came to see me as a doctor. It was good to see him but I had a shock. He looked old and haggard. He has been very ill and is going off to Europe for treatment.

Fortunately for my nerves the Supt. and the jail officials are very decent—otherwise the antics of Govt. would annoy me far more. It is comparatively pleasant here, as far as jails go. We walk outside the jail every morning & evening—if it does not rain. Backwards and forwards we go. It is not much of a walk, but it is a delight to see the distant hills and the horizon and the rich vegetation. Between our barrack and the jail proper, there is a space and in this area there stand four magnificent peepuls — one of them surely the highest in Dehru Dun.

It is clear now that there is nothing much wrong with me. No T.B. no lung trouble. The Mussoorie x ray has settled the controversy. Ansari has said likewise. A little touch of pleurisy continues. But the real trouble is in the teeth. So I go to the dentist. He has already pulled out one. Many more may come out!

August 13 Saturday

We are only two now—Anand Singh & I. Pantji has departed. He was discharged this afternoon on completion of his six monthly term. It will be a little lonelier without him. The more I knew him the more I liked him—a brave, highly intelligent and absolutely straight man. Always in pain, yet always with a smile.

Anand Singh is a good and cheerful companion. Bit of a faddist but full of beans. Is on friendly terms with everybody, from the jailer to the warder and the convict! Morning & evening, when we have our little stroll in front of the jail gate, he hails every one in a bright and cheery voice with Bande Mataram. He has taught every one to say Bande Mataram—all the jail staff, Hindus and Muslims. The children of the warders are always shouting it. It is pleasant to hear it.

Kamala has been very ill again, though she is apparently well or better now. Poor girl! She frets because she is ill just when she ought to be up and doing.

August 16 Tuesday

Raksha Bandhan today! Rakhis from warden! Also one by post from a girl in Delhi, Sumitra Dutt.

The Supt.—Falvey—is very decent. He has suggested suo motu that I might communicate with my dentist in Bombay and send him the x ray charts for his opinion. He is an Irishman, and old pupil of De Valera, when De Valera was a school master. Naturally he is sympathetic with India's fight, although he does not say so. He is singularly vague and ignorant about politics—Indian or European. Asks rather curious and naive questions occasionally.

I have taken to teaching Hindi to one of the convict overseers attending on us. How hopeless I am as a teacher—utterly impatient and intolerant. I shout at the poor chap and frighten him out of his wits because he makes silly mistakes!

August 18 Thursday

Heigh-ho! What a life! The same round day after day, and nothing to distinguish one day from another. An occasional meal missed—and we miss it pretty often— stands out as almost a remarkable event. And books, books—what would one do without them to escape from ennui and depression?

Today is Nan's birthday—I thought of her and of the day 32 years ago when she was born. And then I thought of myself then, ten years of age, and vastly excited at the idea of having got a sister! How important I felt—I remember how some stupid person—one of the doctors in attendance, I think—in telling me of the new sister suggested that I should rejoice at not having a brother to share my inheritance! Probably he meant well. He thought that I must be disappointed not to have a brother and he wanted to soften the loss. But I felt annoyed with him. What a remark to make when one is feeling excited and elated!

How well I remember the scene — It was in the old Anand Bhawan and I was in the western verandah of father's old rooms. The church clock in the distance marked a quarter to six in the evening — but I am not sure if it was functioning or not. It often stopped. But of this I am sure that it was 5.45 p.m. by the clock.

Inheritance — Anand Bhawan — The police sit in Anand Bhawan that was, and is Swaraj Bhawan now. And I sit in Dehra Dun jail and Nan in Lucknow Central Prison. And life rolls on!

La vie s'en va, madame, la vie s'en va
Helas! la vie non, mais nous, nous en allons![79]

I have been in reminiscent mood today. This morning the thought of Indu came strongly to me and filled my mind. And I saw her at 79. Life goes on, madam, life goes on!

Alas! not life, but we are getting on!

various stages of her growth, and somehow my mind thought of her more as a baby and a tiny little girl than of the big girl she has grown into now. And a desire to see her came upon me.

I was reading the newspaper — There was an account of a ceremony of unveiling a bust or statue of father's at the Hindu Boarding House in Allahabad. Hirday Nath Kunzru did the unveiling. I glanced casually at what he said, but I did not see anything. To my surprise, quite unawares, my eyes were full of tears.

It is two months and a week since my last interview. I am quite used now to having no interviews. I do not look forward to them. How can one look forward to a thing which is not going to come off? And yet how the मुलाकात का दिन [day of interview] stands out in the jail life! From the very day of interview one begins to think of the next, and count the days, as they lessen—13, 12, 11, 10. But now there is no such expectation and no such counting. How easy it is to accustom oneself to almost anything.

And yet there is a disturbing factor left—the fortnightly letter from home. I look forward to it even more now than I used to, as there are no interviews now, and I count the days. If it does not come on the appointed day I worry. It should come on Wednesdays. It did not come on Wednesday on the last occasion, nor on Thursday. I feared that Kamala was unwell. A few lines in the newspaper hinted at this also and made me the more anxious. The letter came at last on Friday and confirmed my fears. But the letter having come, there was nothing more to be said or done, and the mind, though worried, became more tranquil.

Again it is Thursday today and the letter has not come yet.

If letters, like interviews, were stopped altogether, I am sure I would get used to that also. There would be nothing to expect. It will be a little harder, and I would probably become grimmer and more irritable—and my poor companions would suffer!

Meanwhile there are books & books. Just at present I am in the Netherlands with Motley[80] as my guide, and Alva[81] and Orange[82] and a host of others as companions. So back to the Netherlands.

80 John Lothrop Motley (1814-1877); American historian and diplomat; author of the Rise of the Dutch Republic published in 1856.

81 Duke of Alva (1508-1582); Spanish general and Viceroy of the Dutch province of Spain

82 William I, Prince of Orange (1533-1584); principal leader of the Dutch rebellion against Philip II of Spain.

23.8.32[83]

Dear Mother,

I learnt from Kamala's letter that indigestion was troubling you a great deal and was relieved to hear that you are now better. I hope that you are well now. It is raining heavily in Allahabad these days and this may have made it somewhat cold. Usually this weather is bad for health. Be particularly careful that you do not get your legs wet.

I am quite well. I am not running temperature nor having any other kind of trouble. So please stop worrying about me.

Does anybody go to see the girls or not? When did the last interview take place? Do you receive letters from them? You or Kamala should please keep me informed about their welfare. You are probably not getting any news of Ranjit for his correspondence also has been very quietly stopped for three months now. But I am confident that he would be well.

I have heard that Birju Bhai and Birju Bhabhi are to return after a month. He wanted to see me but you know I have suspended my interviews. So I am helpless in the matter. Please convey to him my regrets when he comes to see you in Allahabad. I am sorry.

I want you to let me have the tithis of the birthdays of all the members of our family. I do not need the English dates. I want Papa's, yours and those of Kamala, Nan, Betty, Indu, Ranjit and myself. You had once written them down for me earlier but that slip is not here with me. I want to note these Samvat tithis in my diary.

It has rained heavily here. I have never seen such a downpour anywhere—not even in Naini Tal or Mussoorie. But I have liked it. This has not restricted my movements much. After the rains there will be nice weather here. And then winter in Dehra Dun is very nice.

Love to Bibi.

Much love,

Your loving son,
Jawahar

83. J N Correspondence, NMML. Original in Hindi.

August 24 Wednesday Janmashtami

....Birju Bhai and Birju Bhabhi are coming back from Europe next month. Want to interview me. The Supt. asked me about it and of course I had to say that there was nothing doing so long as I do not receive satisfaction about the insult to mother etc. Falvey has written a very decent reply to Mohan Bhai who had asked for the interview on behalf of Birju Bhai. I should have liked to meet Birju Bhabhi after her two years in Europe. But there are so many things one wants to do!

It is just a month since I started my exercises again—Result 1½ inch less in the waist!—not enough. Have intensified the exercises and from today have started practising the शीर्षासन.[84]

I am giving up the taking of temperature daily. It usually keeps down but sometimes goes up—Anyhow I have had enough of temperature-taking.

August 27 Saturday

What a long, long month August has been! Ever since Pantji went—it is two weeks today—the days pass more slowly. The last ten days might have been a month.

TO S. SOMASUNDARAM[85]

My dear Somasundaram,

It was good of you to think of me and to write about my health.

But do not worry about me. The newspapers have exaggerated accounts about my health. It is quite clear that nothing much is the matter with me. What little troubles me is being attended to, and I am already better. I am sure I shall be quite well soon. I am not of the sick and ailing variety! Dehra Dun is a good and healthy place. I am just at the foot of the Himalayas.

I should of course love to visit Ceylon. It is a beautiful place and the memory of its beauty and charm haunts me often enough. But my job is here for the present. When the time for holiday-making comes, rest assured, Ceylon will be remembered.

84 Shirshasan, a yogic exercise of standing on one's head.
85 The Hindu, 1 September 1932.

23.8.32[83]

Dear Mother,

I learnt from Kamala's letter that indigestion was troubling you a great deal and was relieved to hear that you are now better. I hope that you are well now. It is raining heavily in Allahabad these days and this may have made it somewhat cold. Usually this weather is bad for health. Be particularly careful that you do not get your legs wet.

I am quite well. I am not running temperature nor having any other kind of trouble. So please stop worrying about me.

Does anybody go to see the girls or not? When did the last interview take place? Do you receive letters from them? You or Kamala should please keep me informed about their welfare. You are probably not getting any news of Ranjit for his correspondence also has been very quietly stopped for three months now. But I am confident that he would be well.

I have heard that Birju Bhai and Birju Bhabhi are to return after a month. He wanted to see me but you know I have suspended my interviews. So I am helpless in the matter. Please convey to him my regrets when he comes to see you in Allahabad. I am sorry.

I want you to let me have the tithis of the birthdays of all the members of our family. I do not need the English dates. I want Papa's, yours and those of Kamala, Nan, Betty, Indu, Ranjit and myself. You had once written them down for me earlier but that slip is not here with me. I want to note these Samvat tithis in my diary.

It has rained heavily here. I have never seen such a downpour anywhere—not even in Naini Tal or Mussoorie. But I have liked it. This has not restricted my movements much. After the rains there will be nice weather here. And then winter in Dehra Dun is very nice.

Love to Bibi.

Much love,

Your loving son,
Jawahar

83. J N Correspondence, N.M.M.L. Original in Hindi.

Kapur is interested in astronomy and yoga. Has written some books on these subjects. Also he is interested in good food! He is collecting the raw materials for feasting. He appears to be a good cook.

Kamala is in Bombay—I am so glad. And Indu has not written to me for two months or more. This is terrible. But it appears that her letters have gone astray in the post. The censor or the C.I.D. must have decided to keep them.

Sept. 22. Thursday

What a capacity Bapu has got for giving shocks to people! A week ago—on the 14th—I read about his decision to "fast unto death" in disapproval of the separate electorates given by Ramsay MacDonald's award to the Depressed Classes.[88] Suddenly all manner of ideas rushed into my head—all kinds of possibilities and contingencies rose up before me—and upset my equilibrium completely. For two days nearly I was in darkness with no light to show the way out, my heart sinking when I thought of some results of Bapu's action. The personal aspect was powerful enough and I thought with anguish that I might not see him again. It was on board ship that I saw him last, over a year ago, when he was sailing for England. Was that going to be my last sight of him?

And then I felt annoyed with him for choosing a side issue for his final sacrifice—just a question of electorate. What would be the result on our freedom movement? Would not the larger issues fade into the background? And if he attains his immediate object and gets a joint electorate for the Depressed Classes would not that result in a reaction and a feeling that a result has been achieved and nothing more need be done for a while? And was not his action a recognition and in part an acceptance of the Communal Award and the general scheme of things as sponsored by the Govt? Was it consistent with noncooperation and civil disobedience?

Was there not danger of our movement tailing off into something insignificant after so much sacrifice and brave endurance?

And I felt angry with Bapu at his religious and sentimental approach to a political question. Was he entitled to coerce people in this way? What would happen to this country if the practice spread? And his 88 The award announced on 10 August 1932 recognized the depressed and scheduled castes as a minority and gave each minority a fixed number of seats with separate electorates.

Remember me to all our friends there. How vivid are the pictures of our visit to Ceylon in my mind! And yet, it seems almost like a dream journey, far removed from the dust and heat of life.

September 4 Sunday

We did get through August at last! But it took some doing.

सुबह होती है शाम होती है,
उम्र यों ही तमाम होती है[86]

September 13 Tuesday

We had an eminent visitor yesterday—the honourable Nawab Sir Ahmad Saeed Khan of Chhatari K.C.S.I. &c., Home Member to the U.P. Govt &c. &c. For nearly a week there was commotion in jail—washing & scrubbing & sweeping & painting.

Chhatari came to me—Expressed his sorrow about my stoppage of interviews. Talked in a futile manner. Either didn't seem to grasp the point or avoided doing so. Hinted at the awful things that go on in jails which he cannot get hold of or cure—but immediately told me not to use this remark against him! It is just three months today since I had my last interview.

Chhatari's talk about the interviews rather upsetting. A desire to see Kamala, mother, Indu—all day yesterday I was full of this subject—anger at Govt at their attitude and behaviour—and the desire to have an interview if it could be arranged with dignity. Even at night I dreamt about it. Feel a little better today.

We have got another companion—Diwan Ram Chandra Kapur[87] from Benares. He has been sent because of his ill-health. His trouble seems to be more mental than physical. Conditions in Benares jail are not of the best and any one's nerves might suffer. Beatings and floggings of C class politicals—and A class people not allowed to go outside the barrack compound.

86 Each day the morning comes
And then follows the evening
And thus the span of life
Is reaching the end.

87. A Congressman of Varanasi.

After much thought as to what we should do we decided to make no great change in our mode of life. But in future, or at least till Bapu's fast lasts, we shall not accept anything from outside. We shall live on the jail rations only. This means that we shall do without fruit, extra sugar &c. Not a mighty sacrifice! We have also dropped afternoon tea, and all that went with it, as a meal.

Sept. 25 Sunday

A telegram from Bapu—how good it was to hear from him again after nearly nine months! and at the same time another telegram—from Mohanlal Saksena and Govind[89]—announcing that an agreement has been reached with the so-called "Depressed Class" leaders.[90] I hate such pacts and agreements. The old guard—the Saprus & the Jayakars & the Moonjes & Kelkars &c—rush about, feel important and produce various schemes. How trivial all this is besides the vital matters in issue. But I am very glad that Bapu's fast is likely to end soon. I sent him a long reply by wire. His telegram had been sent many hours before the settlement had been reached.

Bapu's telegram to me:

> During all these days of agony you have been before mind's eye. I am most anxious to know your opinion. You know how I value your opinion. Saw Indu and Sarup's children. Indu looked happy and in possession of more flesh. Doing very well. Wire reply. Love
>
> Bapu

(Sent at 15.30 on 24th—received by me at 13 on 25th Sunday)

My reply to Bapu:

Gandhiji Yeravda Jail Poona

Your telegram and brief news that some settlement reached filled me relief joy. First news your decision fast caused mental agony confusion but ultimately optimism triumphed. Regained peace mind. No sacrifice too great for suppressed downtrodden classes. Freedom must be judged by freedom of lowest but feel danger other issues obscuring

89. Govind Malaviya.
90 A conference of the leaders of all communities was convened at Poona on 20 September to consider MacDonald's Award and the consequent fast unto death undertaken by Mahatma Gandhi. Under the scheme prepared by the conference the Harijans would not accept separate electorates but be part of the general electorate with reserved seats. As a result of this agreement Mahatma Gandhi broke his fast on 26 September 1932.

frequent references to God—God has made him do this—God even indicated the date of the fast &c. were most irritating. What a terrible example to set!

And I thought of Kamala and mother, feeling sure that they would have a terrible shock if Bapu died—Would they survive?

If Bapu died! What would India be like then? And how will her politics run? There seemed to be a dreary and dismal future and despair seized my heart when I thought of it.

So I thought and thought and confusion reigned in my head and anger and despair and love for him who was the cause of this upheaval. I hardly knew what to do and I was irritable and short-tempered with everybody, and most of all with myself.

For two days I felt bad. And then—a strange enough thing for me! —I had quite an emotional crisis and I cried and wept. Somehow the tears took away a great deal of my confusion and worry. I felt calmer and the future seemed not so dark. Bapu had a curious knack of doing the right thing at the psychological moment and it might be that his action—impossible to justify as it was from my point of view—might lead to great results—not only in the narrow field in which it was confined, but in the wider aspects of our national struggle. And even if Bapu died; the great fight will go on. So whatever happened one must keep ready and fit for it instead of behaving like a foolish lovesick girl.

It was strange how rapidly the storm subsided and I felt calm and collected and ready to face the world and all it might offer. I had made up my mind to face even Bapu's death without flinching.

Since then news has come that some settlement will be arrived at and there is no danger of his death. And all over the country there has been an upheaval, the like of which has seldom been seen. On the 20th, when the fast began, there was fasting and hartal all over India—scores of millions must have fasted. Nearly all the jail people—staff, prisoners, politicals, non politicals—fasted; many for 36 hours. And all over the country temples are being thrown open to "untouchables". There seems to be a magic wave of enthusiasm, running through the Hindu society, and untouchability appears to be on its last legs. What a magician is this little man sitting in Yeravda Jail, and how well he knows how to pull the strings that move people's hearts! What can poor logic and intellect and reason do before him!

But I do wish he would not refer so frequently to the Almighty as if God was personal adviser for every act of his. I find this extraordinarily irritating.

Kamala of course celebrated the receipt of news of Bapu's fast by fainting off immediately!

Well, the excitement is over now and Bapu leaves his mango tree and goes back to his cell, and you go back to your school routine, and I, well, I remain where I was! And I read and write and spin and stand on my head. There is a new diversion. We have got baby squirrels. Two of them were picked up one day in our barrack and my companion here took charge of them and became their nurse. I named them Tit and Tat. They were very small and required a deal of care. My friend spent most of the day on them cleaning them and feeding them every two hours and sunning them and playing about with them—I joined in the last activity. Quite a cunning way was devised to feed them and a very serviceable feeding bottle was made out of a fountain pen filler and cotton wool. Cotton wool beddings were made for them, and altogether they got more care than the average baby boy or girl does. We grew quite fond of them and as they grew they became friendlier and used to run up to us. But the place they liked best was a pocket, where they would curl themselves up and rest quite content. But this was not to last long. Little Tit fell ill and began to behave in a strange way. One day it got stuck in a mouse hole and in trying to pull it out, its tail came off! It did not long survive this tragedy, and that was the end of Tit. Curiously enough on that very day a third little squirrel dropped down from a branch in our barrack and was caught. So again we had two. I named the new one Twee. Tat and Twee soon made friends and are now on the best of terms.

Soon you will have your birthday and you will actually become fifteen—what a big girl you are getting. I have been wondering what you would care to do when you grow up, what your special subject or business in life would be. Of course there is no hurry to decide this for many years, but if one wants to do anything it is as well to do it well, and to do it well one has to be trained for it. When one goes to the university one has to choose one's subjects accordingly. Some time or other you would naturally like to go to a university and study some subjects which you like. In India today we are placed in a great difficulty, for almost all the universities are official and neither you nor I would care to have anything to do with them. Besides they are not much good and I do not care for the way they teach. The few non-official universities in India are better in some ways but they are not much good either. No one can say what will happen in our country during the next few years and it is difficult enough to make plans for the future. It seems to me however that it would be a good thing if you went to a foreign university when the time for this comes. A foreign university might mean an English university or a Swiss or French. I would personally like you to spend a little time at both an only goal. Am unable judge from religious view point. Danger your methods being exploited by others but how can I presume advise magician. Love.

Jawahar

September 27 Tuesday

The fast is broken! The good news came in the paper and three telegrams from Poona—one from Rajagopalachari, another from Mohanlal Saksena, and a third from mother. I am so glad mother went to Poona.

Today is Bapu's birthday Samvat style. Good omen!

Oct 3, 1932[91]

Darling Indu,

Your letter was very welcome. I liked reading your vivid account of Bapu's last day of fast. You were very fortunate in being near him during these trying days, though it must have been a great trial for you and all others with him. You were present at his Delhi fast of 21 days also.[92] Do you remember it? That was a much longer fast but it appears that Bapu suffered more this time during his week's fast. I am not surprised at the impression all this must have made on you. Bapu is an extraordinary man and it is very difficult to understand him. But then great men are always difficult to understand, and there can be no doubt that he is among the greatest of men. It is amazing how he conquers his opponents by his love and sacrifice. By his fast he has changed the face of India and killed untouchability at a blow.

You have met, probably for the first time, another great son of India —Rabindranath Tagore. He is very different from Bapu, but he is a great writer and artist and it is a privilege to meet him.

Poona was the centre of India for some days and all eyes were on it. You were in the middle of the excitement. Some little bit of the excitement came here too, as elsewhere, and we followed developments anxiously. I was so pleased to get a long telegram from Bapu. He took the trouble to tell me in it that he had seen you and Chand & her sisters and that you were looking well!

91 JN Correspondence, NMML.

92 It was undertaken in September 1924 to protest against communal rioting.

then there should be no interviews. I have no intention of meeting anyone at all. I have had no interviews for nearly four months, and do not intend to have any for the next twelve months. Nan and Betty are sure to be released before that. There is no need to go and see them. Nor need you see Ranjit. Bibi need not go either.

Tankhas[95] have again started sending fruit and vegetables. You may be sure that I am getting enough to eat. My health is perfect. I am not running temperature and my teeth are all right. The weather here is getting more pleasant.

Here is a letter for Nan. Send it with your letter to her.

Much love,

Your loving son
Jawahar

4.10.32[96]

Darling Nan,

Your letter, coming all by itself, in solitary splendour, was a delightful surprise. A few days later Betty's letter, or rather your joint effort, came, although it had started on its long and tortuous journey long before.

Letters to and from jail are indeed public property and it is not always possible to write everything one has in mind. But then in the world of prison everything is public. The more secluded and cut off one is from the larger world outside, the more publicity one's activities get inside the prison. That is a strange fact which people find it difficult to appreciate. To be cut off from the world is bad enough and has a depressing effect; but it is far worse not to have any privacy, and to be forced to live for the livelong twentyfour hours with people with whom one has little in common, is a trial for the strongest nerves. But I see that you are getting prison-wise and learning from personal experience. You will admit that my experience is fairly considerable—I have had over ten years of it now—and all this time, and even before, I have tried to prepare myself mentally and physically for this kind of life. On the whole I think I have succeeded rather well, better certainly than most people I know. But I know well enough that I am a favourite of fortune and, wherever I happen to be, my luck holds. So I really have never been tested properly. Perhaps the time may come for that also.

95 The family of Kashi Naram Tankha of Dehra Dun. For rendering this service to Jawaharlal, Kashi Naram's name was removed from the list of approved government contractors.

96 Vijayalakshmi Pandit Papers, NMML. Extracts.
This letter was written by Jawaharlal to his sisters.

English and a continental university. But all these are castles in the air at present. I have merely mentioned them because I have been thinking about them and I wanted you to give some thought to the subject. There is just one question which arises now. If one has to go to a university some kind of entrance examination has to be passed for it. If one keeps this in view one can easily prepare for it. I do not like examinations as a rule but to some extent one has to put up with them. The only examination I can think of which is available in India, is the Cambridge Senior. Perhaps there are others which I do not know of. I should like to discuss this matter with Mr. Vakil as he might be able to make a helpful suggestion. Perhaps you might show him this part of the letter and have a talk with him on the subject. Then you can write to me what you and he think about it.

I do not like the snapshots mummie has sent me. They are no good. Send me a better one of yours.

Love,

Your loving
Papu

Tell Padmaja that I have got her letter and I shall write to her when I have the chance. How long will she stay in Poona?

4 October 1932[93]

My dear Mother,

I have received both your letter from Poona and your telegram. I had heard about Gandhiji's fast and I was so happy that you had gone to see him. That would have given you pleasure and Gandhiji too would have been happy. He has suffered a lot and the whole country was greatly concerned but whatever happened was for the good.

You must have been happy to meet Indu, Chand and the others. I do not know where you are now. Kamala is probably still in Bombay. I shall address the letter to her there.

I have received letters from Nan and Betty. They may be released in five to six weeks' time.[94] You are quite right in saying that interviews can take place only in dignity and ease. If this is not the case, obviously this cannot be done all the time. The effort itself might kill us! Indeed what happens often enough is the reverse of this. Too great a public effort to charm is such a strain that in private there is a reaction and one behaves in an unusually harsh manner. Gradually all naturalness goes from our behaviour and we swing about from strained efforts to please to unmannerliness. Such is life. What would you expect in jail? The nervous strain is great and the worst side of a person comes up. There is a good side right enough if one can pull it out. If one can succeed in prison in learning forbearance and the art of getting on with others, who happen to be different from us, then we have learnt the secret of success in public activity, and indeed life itself. And after all what is truth? Who can say with absolute definiteness which is the correct way? The modern scientific spirit therefore is very far from being dogmatic in anything. It gropes for truth and dare not be too positive.

93 J N Correspondence, N M M L. Original in Hindi.

94 They were released at the end of December 1932 after eleven months imprisonment.

What an essay I have inflicted on you! But soon you will pass through the portals of your prison and your prison life will become almost like a dream—a vivid enough dream against the background of which life will stand out. But even when you go out of prison, we shall not meet for a long time to come yet. For I have no intention of having interviews under present conditions. It is nearly four months now since I had a home interview. I miss them of course. But it is as well. More training, more discipline! So you will not see me and we cannot talk over the matters which you wish to consult me about. Life is sometimes a difficult job and has a way of putting curious posers to us. You will have to decide for yourself. Of course if you feel like writing anything, now or when you are outside jail, do write and I shall give such help as I may. But whatever happens do not worry and smile away and your troubles "will fold their tents like the Arabs and as silently steal away."

About Indu, I have always intended her to go to a university. But the Indian universities of the official variety are most hateful to me. The private universities here are not up to much. So it means her going to a foreign university—English, Swiss or French. The right age to join a foreign university would be, I imagine, 18 or so, not less than 17. I do not know if she can get a sufficient grounding for the university course here. Anyway I have no objection to her preparing for the Cambridge Senior or some such examination. I have written to her about it. I presume you will go to Poona when you come out. You can discuss the question with Indu and Vakil. All plans must necessarily be tentative at present.

But I do firmly believe that prison life for a period is good discipline. Physically it ought to do the body good, that is, if one does not break down under it! It is like the sun. If you do not get sun-stroke you will benefit by it. Mentally it chastens and shows up life in a truer perspective. One's standard of values changes, and little things which had been ignored till then, are prized and valued; and many a bright glittering piece of tinsel shows up for the empty nothing that it is. A new significance attaches to life itself, and satiety and ennui, those terrible modern diseases, give place to a hunger for life's little delights. One's home, children, friends—all become the dearer for the deprivation. And a certain calmness, a peace of the mind comes, and a power to detach oneself a little from the passing show and watch it almost as an outsider And a feeling of satisfaction, of confidence in oneself, the joy of having overcome one fear, one obstacle, and to that extent having brought life in control. And as one goes outside the prison gates the world seems a fair enough place, and one has something of the feeling that one is not wholly a plaything of fate and destiny. Is not prison then worthwhile? Indeed it is if one can take it in the right spirit and profit by it. But if one cannot do that, then comes sun-stroke or prison-stroke and a cracking-up, physically and mentally.

So much for the personal side. Prison also teaches the fundamentals of politics and sociology and morals, and indeed the whole philosophy of life. For it tells us, if we can but learn, what is the basis and foundation of government and society and the existing code of morals. Not the study of all the constitutions in the world will make this as clear as personal experience of this emblem of force and fear and terror on which rest insecurely the present systems of government and society.

You have found it difficult to put up, day and night, with people whose ways and methods and thoughts are totally different from yours. I am not surprised. Is it not often difficult enough to put up with those whose ways are our ways and who are as familiar to us as any one can be? Yet for a while even they become unbearable. How much more so those who are different from us. Yet the test of education and culture is the capacity to get on with all manner of people. If we are to dabble in public affairs one must develop forbearance; public work would otherwise be impossible. Most of our difficulties indeed are due to this lack of forbearance and the absolute incapacity to see the other side. In prison the constant intercourse is a terrible thing. The worst side of one's nature comes up and there is friction and annoyance. Ordinarily in society when we meet people, all of us put on our drawing room behaviour and make an effort to be sweet and charming. But

Insert in letter to Mrs Kamala Nehru

Sehra Dunghail
Oct 3. 1932

FSCO

Darling Indu,

Your letter was very [illegible] I felt reading your vivid account of Bapu's last days of fast. You were very fortunate in being near him during these trying days, though it must have been a great trial for you and all others with him. You were present at his Delhi fast of 21 days also. Do you remember it? That was a much longer fast but it seems that Bapu suffered more this time during his week's fast. I am not surprised at the impression all this must have made on you. Bapu is an extraordinary man and it is very difficult to understand him. But those greatmen are always difficult to understand, and there can be no doubt that he is among the greatest of men. It is amazing how he conquers his opponents by his love and sacrifice. By his fast he has changed the face of India and killed untouchability at a blow.

You have met, probably for the first time, another great son of India – Rabindra Nath Tagore. He is very different from Bapu, but he is great

I think it will be rather silly for you to put Chand in a Swiss school at present. But there seems to be no reason why you should not go to Europe yourself for an airing. India will be no place to rest, and you and Betty both require toning up. I suggested to Betty some time ago that she might go to London and join the London School of Economics for a year. I was quite serious about it, though I am not clear in my mind that she should go. I wanted to know what she and you thought about it. On the whole I am inclined to favour her taking a course in London.

Bapu sent me a telegram on the 4th day of the fast telling me that he had seen Indu and "Sarup's children" and how they looked. How extraordinarily considerate he is and how he thinks of others. In spite of his fast it was he who issued directions as to where mother and Kamala were to stay in Poona. I am so glad mother went. Indu has written to me quite a graphic account of the breaking of the fast. She has been tremendously impressed by these events.

Your German books—which you threatened to send—have not come. Why you should hurl them at me I cannot imagine. If they come I shall send them on to Ranjit. I have sent you four more books which I hope have reached you. There are several books, which I have sent to Ranjit, which I should like you two to read. I wonder if he has sent them on. In particular there is a book on Indian art—the Civilization of India[97] by the director of the Musee Guimet of Paris.

The subscription of L'illustration has expired. I am not renewing it as it is very expensive. I got it especially for you and Betty and now that both of you are likely to be out soon, there is no special need for it. I am quite well. My teeth are going strong and I have no intention of having any more out....

Give up your doubts and misgivings and keep a perpetual smile on your face! It suits you. The right time to go to Europe would be in the New Year. Why not spend a month in Ceylon for a change? You would have no difficulty. I could put you in touch with the right people.

Betty dear,

This letter has become long enough in all conscience and I do not want to tax the patience of the jail people too much. As it is I am a bit of a nuisance. You seem to have attached quite a lot of importance to old Madanji. It was worthwhile if he made you think of Geneva and the long ago. My beauty holds—so you need not worry. Jail always has the effect of toning me up physically and mentally.

97. Written by Rene Grousset and published in 1932.

After a slight attention I have gained control over my body and am now master of all I survey. So I am rejuvenating and whenever necessary I am prepared to become an under grad again. Anyway if I am in trouble about my vanishing youth or beauty I know now where the experts are.

I am glad Prabha got herself bobbed. Give her my love....

I left a 2 volume book on Indian Economics in Bareilly jail. Will you write to Ranjit to get hold of it and send it to me by post—if he can find it and if no one wants it any more. There is no hurry for it.

Love,

Your loving brother
Jawahar

October 16 Monday

.... After a long interval I have had letters from Indu—good letters. How she fills my mind and how I have begun to think of her future. She will be fifteen soon.

Nan and Betty have also been sending delightful letters. Prison has had quite an appreciable sobering effect on both, especially on Betty. But I should like to meet her out of jail. No such luck for a long time. It is over four months now since I had a home interview. I think often of Betty and how I can help her.

Two welcome letters from Bebee. And a host of books! How my mouth watered when I saw them.

Bad news today. Our superintendent, Capt. Falvey, has been transferred to Meerut and will go soon. For over two weeks he has not been to see us. But he has been very decent indeed and we shall miss him. I can't conceive of his successor being as decent.

A parcel came from Kamala today—rugs for the winter, books, soaps, jams &c. I grew quite excited over it. Parcels from the outside world are welcome hnks! The books were from Padmaja.

18.10.32[98]

Priyadarshini bien aimee,

I have your letter. I was very glad to learn of your new fellow pupil — उर्वशी[99] —and of your visit to Bijapur. You went to Bijapur over

98. J.N. Correspondence, NMML
99. Urvashi, one of the two Harijan sisters adopted by the Pupils' Own School, Poona.

'. Monday.

Bapu has begun his twenty-one days fast today.
[illegible] the fi[illegible] of this prolonged fast came a week ag[illegible] ad [illegible] but I recovered soon. Three days ago [illegible] letter - a typical cyclone his heart which [illegible] over, and I had quite an emotional crisis.
[illegible] him a telegram which I did not like at all, [illegible]
[illegible] was in a muddle. This was the telegram:

'Your letter. What can I say about matters do not understand. I feel lost in strange country here you are only familiar landmark and I try to grope my way in dark but I stumble. [illegible]
Whatever happens my love and thoughts will be with you. Jawaharlal'

I wrote to him also that day.

This evening I felt suddenly that I must send him another and a more cheerful message. The good and they are easily learnt when one is young. Later on the body becomes stiff and then it is difficult to bend it.

All my love, darling Indu boy,

Your loving
Papu

Give my love to Chand, Tara and Rita and Ira.[101] Please give the letter following to Bebee. Cut it off.

October 22 Saturday

Falvey the Supt. came to see us—after three weeks. He came to say goodbye—He was rather shy and hurried about it. Curious why he avoided us for three weeks when he used to come every second or third day. There must be some special reason for this sudden transfer. I have seen little of him but I have grown to like him rather—I suspect that the District Magistrate—Acton,[102] who is by no means a delightful person—has helped in getting Falvey transferred.

We have a new companion from today—Abdul Latif[103] from Bijnor transferred from Ghazipur Jail.

October 23 Sunday

The whole Falvey family came to say goodbye—Mr. & Mrs. and three children. In the evening there were sounds of revelry outside—the noise that a local orchestra made was not very agreeable but it was well meant. The staff of the jail were giving a party to Falvey.

October 25th Tuesday

I have had an extraordinary and annoying experience. Night before last, Sunday night, I went to bed about 9.15 p m. I had just dozed off

101 Daughter of Jahangir Vakil

102 T J C Acton, later appointed commissioner, 1944-46.

103 (1894 1970), a Congressman of Bijnor; member, U P. Legislative Council, 1923 26 and 1946 52, and member, U P Legislative Assembly, 1952 57, member, Lok Sabha, 1957 62; imprisoned several times during the freedom movement.

two months ago and I did not even know that you had gone. But I am glad you went and saw the old buildings and the wonderful whispering gallery in the Gol Gumbaz. There is a whispering gallery just like this in the dome of St. Paul's Cathedral in London also. But these buildings you saw at Bijapur were not made by the Mughal kings, as you say. You will have to read the history I am writing for you to get all this straight!

About your second language it is really for you to decide because you will have to learn it! You say in your letter that French will probably be easier. I imagine so. Let it be French then. You need not give up Sanskrit entirely, unless you feel it is a bit of a burden. I have always felt rather sorry for myself for not having learnt enough Sanskrit. I have missed so much because of my ignorance of it. But all this depends on one's likes and if you feel that you cannot carry on with French and Sanskrit both, you can drop Sanskrit. I wish I was with you and we could do both French and Sanskrit together! Both of us would get on famously.

I find from your last month's school report that there is some reference to your doing music. What kind of music do you learn? What a fascinating thing is music but unfortunately I know little of it. You can teach me later.

About your Christmas holidays, it is for you and mummie to decide. You say in your letter that mummie has already suggested to you that you might go with the Vakils to Ajanta and Ellora. As you also want to visit these caves, the matter is settled. I shall envy you your visit to these wonderful caves with the carvings and frescoes. I have been to Ellora but I have never been to Ajanta. You might also accompany the Vakils to Santiniketan and see the school and the poet. To go to Santimketan you will probably have to pass Allahabad or at least Chhoki. On your way back you could break your journey for a couple of days at Allahabad and see mummie and Dolamma[100] and perhaps Puphi who will be out then. The Puphis may be out then but it is quite possible that mummie might be in! So it is difficult to make detailed plans. But for the present you may decide that you will spend your holidays with the Vakils.

What exercise do you take? and what games are played in the school? I hope you do the Sarvangasana and the Shirshasana. These are very 100 Swarup Rani Nehru.

Purushottam,[104] who was arrested about a week or ten days before me, and for a year, was let off a week ago.

Sometimes the idea of going out of jail is pleasant to contemplate. And yet when such a possibility is mentioned in the papers I get quite put out at the thought that I have not done so much that I must do before discharge. I must finish the series of historical letters to Indu. I could have finished them by this time but I have slacked or not been in the mood for writing for weeks and weeks. Sometimes I feel that I have months and months before me and there is not much left to be done. At other times I fear that I might suddenly be marched out before I have done—and outside I shall not touch them—I have finished the eighteenth century—another hundred & thirtytwo years! Yet somehow the desire to write on is not marked now. Some months back I was quite wrapped up in this period I was writing about and thought of little else. Perhaps even now if I write regularly I might feel that way.

Today is Betty's birthday—Samvat style—कार्तिक वदी 12—I sent her a couple of books day before yesterday, timed to reach her today—that is, if the jail authorities are good enough to deliver them. They must have cheered her up. It is pleasant to receive anything from outside in prison—much more so a birthday gift which is not expected.

And soon my birthday will come—how old I am getting! To sit here and watch the days go by and age steal over one—!

This book must end now—For over two and a half years it has been a jail companion. Now it must join the past and become itself a memory—another will take its place.

October 29 Saturday

Diwali—Deepavali—today—an auspicious day to begin a new volume of this journal! It has been an unusual day. There has been feasting and in the evening we had some illuminations, of course on a very modest scale. We invited the jail staff, that is the jailer, doctor and two assistant or deputy jailers, to the midday meal. Kapur and Latif were busy cooking and arranging all the morning, and there was a feast for all of us. It was good that the meal was a Hindu-Moslem affair. Two of our guests were Moslems, three Hindus. I doubt if the jail staff—Hindu & Moslem—had ever fed together previously.

104. Purushottamdas Tandon was arrested on 18 December 1931 under U.P. Ordinance and was released on 18 October 1932.

when I seemed to have had an uncomfortable feeling which is difficult to describe. I got up and tried to light the hurricane lantern. I lit it and just then I seem to have fainted off with remarkable suddenness. Anyway my next recollection was of a taste of grit in the mouth. I was lying on the floor with my mouth on the coir mattress. I got up with some difficulty and managed to lie down on the bed. But for some considerable time I felt queer and light-headed. Gradually I recovered and then I lay awake for hours—till almost 3 a.m. The fainting fit took place at about 9.30 p.m.

It was very curious—the whole thing. I suddenly felt as if I was taking gas or chloroform and I went off. One step back would have brought me to the bed. I had no realisation of the coming fall. I simply must have collapsed rather heavily for I hurt my temple pretty badly and there were also bruises on my arm and shins.

All day yesterday I felt a little light-headed, nothing much but just enough to irritate me! Or perhaps it was just imagination. Today I am normal.

Why in thunder should I misbehave in this way? Immediately my mind went back to a year and five months ago when I performed the same trick in Colombo, only with worse consequences. There I split my skull with my fall and looked a ghastly and bloody sight—bad enough to make Kamala faint! I thought then that I was overworked and overwrought. But here, in Dehra Dun jail, there is no question of overwork—or strain. I am outwardly fit. I am not even worrying overmuch about any thing. Why, why then should I behave like a hysterical girl? This is very annoying and disturbing. If this kind of thing happens a few more times I shall begin to lose confidence in myself.

October 26 Wednesday

Still feeling a little groggy—sometimes just a wee bit light-headed—or perhaps it is just imagination. Imagination or something else, it is most annoying. That I should have sunk so low! Is it jail or is it too much reading? I have read more and worked far harder than I do here.

It is just ten months today since my arrest. I am told that I have got sixty days remission. Forty days ordinary remission and 20 special given by Falvey before his departure! Just a little parting gift. So in a way I have completed a year, according to jail standards. Indeed by Hudson when he was nearly eighty years in far away London. How his childhood lived for him even in his old age! Even the beautiful title of the book—Far Away and Long Ago—is full of wistfulness and longing for the days that were past.

As I read Hudson, I began to think, also rather wistfully of my own boyhood and especially of the horses I had had and the fine rides I used to have. How splendid it is to gallop away, the horse's feet spurning the ground, and the cold wind rushing past you! It is long since I have ridden or possessed a horse to ride, and you, my dear, have had no decent chance at all. But if we cannot ride horses we can ride the wind and the whirlwind and they are even swifter, and the excitement is greater!

So visions of boyhood came to me and I thought of the old Harrow song: "Visions of boyhood shall float there before you, echoes of dreamland shall bear you along, twenty and thirty and forty years on." It is twenty-five years since I left Harrow! And it seems but yesterday.

Yes, I think you had better stick to French and Sanskrit will have to be given up for the present. I am sure you will get on well in French. Try to practise talking if you have the chance. The rest will come much easier then. It is a nuisance that we cannot meet and talk over matters. But that can't be helped and it is not easy for me to advise you at this distance and without knowing all the facts. Tell Mr. Vakil that he can write to me direct to the jail if he wants to ask me anything special. But this should not delay any arrangements about your French. He should make such arrangements as he thinks proper.

The weather is perfectly delightful here now and it gets better and better. In another two weeks it will be cold enough for me to take sun baths. I am looking forward to it.

All my love, darling Priyadarshini,

Your loving
Papu

1.11.32[106]

Darling Bets,
Yesterday was Bhaiya Duj. Did you forget me? I thought of you and remembered last year when we went to Benares and visited Sarnath, the ancient Isipatana. Heigh ho! A year has gone by already.

106 Nehru's Letters to His Sister, (London, 1963), pp 27 28.

The meal was quite a success. Somehow it made us feel in holiday mood today—All our usual programmes were upset. In the evening a number of the little earthen lights made a brave show. The jail staff also, both Hindu & Moslem, took some pains to illuminate their cottages.

Kamala's letter came yesterday—Rather a depressing document—Poor girl! She seems to be unhappy and just a bundle of nerves. I felt that I was partly responsible—My letters to her lately have not been very cheerful or cheering. Suddenly it struck me that I must write to her a really nice letter, and I felt sure that this would cheer her up. Since this idea came I have been eager to write but I cannot send the letter for another four days.

I have also decided to send Kamala a book by post every week or ten days. I have plenty of books. This sending and receiving of books will add to our contacts and will cheer both of us up.

A letter from Dhan Gopal Mukherji today.

Altogether I have felt rather light-hearted today. Partly because of our unusual day and the holiday feeling, partly, and indeed chiefly, because of decisions to drive away Kamala's melancholy by my letters and books. I must behave in the future—what a pig I am sometimes!

Nov. 1st 1932[105]

Darling Indu boy,

Day after tomorrow is कार्तिक सुदी ५ that is your birthday. This letter will reach you several days afterwards. Not knowing how else to send you my love and good wishes on this day I sent you yesterday a book. It was a book which you yourself had sent, and perhaps you read it before sending it to me. But it was good enough as a messenger of my love, and if you have not read it already, I think you will enjoy doing so. It is the story of a boyhood spent in the Pampa, the great plain of the Argentine in South America. The writer of it, Hudson, was a great naturalist, that is a lover of nature, and flowers and animals. I found it delightful to read his beautiful prose and to gallop with him (in imagination alas!) over the boundless plain, and to rejoice with him when the golden flower sang, and to go in search of birds' eggs and rare flowers, and live in the open air with the sky and the earth as companions and friends. All manner of birds and beasts meet one in his pages—ostriches and flamingoes and strange frogs and curious snakes. Strange that this fascinating book of childhood was written

105. Vijayalakshmi Pandit Papers, N.M.M.L.

Nov 13 Sunday

A fortnight of tension—anxiety—worry and latterly of physical pain. The so-called Unity Conference at Allahabad has caused enough annoyance.[107] I have dreaded opening the paper daily, and yet, just to prevent disappointment, I had made up my mind, right at the beginning, not to expect anything from it. Still the disappointment is there and the anger at the amazing pettiness of people. Above everything what annoys me is the attitude of the Sind Hindus[108]—the quintessence of protecting privilege and wealth. The wretched conference is still dragging on—gasping for breath—It will die soon enough.

Kamala has given another fright by having heart attacks & fainting and otherwise misbehaving. I wired to her and her reply was a little comforting, though not much. Bidhan has examined her and it is settled that she goes to Calcutta—perhaps tomorrow—for treatment. Madan Atal is to accompany her. Strange and unhappy coincidence! As soon as I heard of this my mind travelled back to two years when in this very month of November, father went to Calcutta for treatment, accompanied by Madan. It was on November 17th, I think, the day after 'Jawahar Day' (so I find by referring back to this journal).

Kamala's message to the Unity Conference was a most moving one[109] —my last letter to her—I am so glad I wrote as I did for it must have cheered her just when she required cheering. And the book I sent her.

My teeth have been giving trouble—or at least one of them. Had a pretty bad tooth ache for two days with some fever—Couldn't eat or sleep. Yesterday Prakash, the dentist, came and lanced a small abscess. I felt better. Tomorrow the tooth will be pulled out. Prakash indeed wants to pull out two others also but this will take a lot of convincing for me.

Tomorrow is a suitable day for pulling out the tooth—it is my birthday! I have already received presents—books from Mahmud and Bebee. Somehow I felt sure that I would receive something from both of them.

107 The conference, attended by 70 Hindu and Sikh representatives and 40 Muslims, commenced on 3 November 1932. The Muslims were prepared to accept joint electorates on the condition that statutory majority of Muslims in Punjab and Bengal was conceded, secured 32% representation in the Central Legislature, and Sind was separated from Bombay Presidency.

108 They had demanded a considerable subvention for Sind from the Government of India in case of its separation from the Bombay Presidency.

109 In an appeal for unity Kamala Nehru had also expressed surprise that women had not been invited to participate in the conference.

Bets—I sent you a book to reach you on your birthday. As the calculation about the birthday was entirely mine, I am not quite sure that it was correct. Anyway I hope you got it on the right day and I hope you liked the book. What a wonderful woman's head there is right at the beginning of the book—the early Egyptian period. There are so many other delightful pictures. Far the best and most fascinating way of learning history is through art. I hope Ranjit sent you the volume on India in this series. I shall get the two remaining volumes on China and Japan as soon as they come out.

I hear that you are not coming out in November but a fortnight later in December. Well, it does not much matter. Ten months or ten months and a half are much the same. What I am more interested in is what you will do when you go out. I have already made various suggestions—a visit to Europe—Ceylon. The proposal about Europe fell through soon after; the Ceylon one still remains to be considered. It is really for you to decide and you need be in no hurry to do so. Decisions taken in jail are not usually adhered to outside. So you can see how you feel—physically and mentally—after your discharge and then decide. In any event it will be a good thing if you spend some little time in Poona and Bombay, after some days in Allahabad of course.

Dhan Gopal has written to me. He complains that Mrs. Pandit has forsaken him. Poor man, he seems to be in a bad way financially although he puts on a brave face over it.

It is delightful weather here. It is fairly cold at night and cool in the daytime—cloudless blue sky—the sunshine not too hot—rather like the Mediterranean climate. I love to gaze at the sky and watch the eagles in their stately flights high up in the air. Soon I hope to begin my sunbaths. I hope both of you will profit by the November weather and go out fit and strong.

Love,

Your loving brother
Jawahar

Nov. 17, 1932[112]

TO SUPERINTENDENT, DISTRICT JAIL, DEHRA DUN

Dear Sir,

I thank you for showing me the letter from the U.P. Government dated Nov. 12, 1932 regarding my interviews and the treatment to be given to my mother and wife. I am obliged to the government for their assurance that it is far from their intention "that any insult should be offered to" my "relations or for the matter of that, to any Indian lady." As this is the official policy of government I should like them to consider why and how it was that insult was offered to my mother and wife on May 27, 1932 by the jailer of the Allahabad District Jail, who shouted at them angrily and offensively for some time and then hustled them out of his jail. In the course of her sixty and odd years of life my mother has not had to face such treatment on any other occasion and from any other person, and I trust that government will appreciate that it is natural for me to resent such treatment of my mother in her old age. The shock to her was considerable, and, although circumstances and domestic affliction have hardened her, she shrinks even now from the idea of having a jail interview. Almost her sole remaining attachments in life are to her children, and all three of them happen to be in prison. Yet for five months now she has not seen them. I have tried to induce her at least to visit my sisters in the Lucknow Central Prison. But she has not agreed, partly because of the Allahabad jail incident and the action government took on it, and partly because of some new jail regulations according to which she must sit far apart and must not touch even her daughters during interviews.

2. I would also request government to consider what actually happened in the Allahabad District Jail on May 27th. In my letter to you of July 11th I gave some of the pertinent facts as I had obtained them from my mother and wife. I believe that they made statements to the press also on the subject about that time.[113] Either this statement of what occurred, as vouched for by my mother and wife, is correct or

112 J.N. Prison Papers, N.M.M.L.

113 In her statement on 25 July 1932, Swarup Rani denied that she had used "insulting language to the jailer and was impertinent." When the jailer forbade Ranjit Pandit from reading his daughter's school report given to him by Indira Nehru and snatched it, she told the officials to be courteous and polite. On Ranjit's asking that the superintendent be summoned, he was told by the jailer that he was the superintendent. She then retorted "You are not only the superintendent but are lat sahab and general also." The jailer then terminated the interview.

How people spoil me! But I shall celebrate the day formally by putting on a new kurta and dhoti on the seventh day of the dark fortnight of Margshirsh—November 20th. That makes me a week younger; so it is worthwhile observing the Samvat calendar.

I have been much exercised by the news that large number of B class people from Fyzabad Jail have been degraded to C class and sent in fetters to other jails.[110] An answer by Chhatari in the U.P. Council made me very angry and I am afraid I used very bad language about him privately.[111] I have almost decided to write to Govt. about it. But I wanted to cool down before doing so. I gave myself two days for this. Tomorrow I shall decide finally and perhaps draft a letter.

Tomorrow seems to be a suitable day for many things!

November 14th Monday

Forty—three!

A telegram of good wishes from mother, Kamala and Mahmud. A tooth out—real bad one it was—and some prospect of others following. A letter from government informing me that they have no wish to treat my mother & wife with disrespect, and asking the superintendent to arrange interviews so that there may be no discourtesy to them or words to that effect, I do not remember exactly! This must be the outcome of the noble Nawab of Chhatari's endeavours. A poor result which makes no real difference. I have delayed my letter to govt because of this. I shall have to write differently now.

A bunch of books came today from the U.S.A.—from Roger & Dhan—curious how the gift managed to reach me on my birthday—forty-three! how old I am getting.

110 On 15 October 1932 some Class B prisoners in Fyzabad jail in a meeting held in defiance of orders decided not to obey the jail authorities. 28 prisoners were punished for this by reduction of their status from Class B to Class C.

111 See post, pp 427-431.

orders. It is a matter of chance that I am here and not with my lleagues. But if they are guilty and are punished I should also be onsidered guilty, and I invite the same punishment.

10. I should like to make clear that personally I have no complaint make against any treatment meted out to me in this or other jails. have been treated uniformly with courtesy for which I am grateful. d when courtesy is extended to me I could hardly be churlish ugh to answer it with discourtesy. I am also grateful to govern- nt for the facilities they have given me for consulting doctors and ying on my treatment. But the courtesy shown to me personally, to a handful of others, makes me feel all the more painfully the ation and deep injury caused to large numbers of my colleagues. n selected perhaps for special treatment because of a certain mea- of notoriety that I have attained in the political sphere. The feudal ples of selection that the Home Member has stated in the U.P. cil do not apply to me for I do not come within the charmed of those who pay a certain amount of land revenue. When cul- and refined women are treated as ordinary prisoners it ill becomes to claim better treatment. I have, however, for selfish reasons I admit, not raised this question earlier. My ill health became an for me. But that excuse hardly holds now as my health is much I have still some trouble with my teeth but that need not come way. As it happens, the most prized privilege which a prisoner e right of interview—I have not exercised for over five months

I would therefore request government to give me the same treat- hich they are now giving to my colleagues who were till lately bad jail.

ot that this letter has become so long. I have felt deeply on the referred to in this letter and I have come to the conclusion that it to government and to myself to write fully and frankly. I d to do so after careful thought in what I hope is restrained dorned language. May I beg of you to send this letter of mine U.P. Government and to communicate to me any answer that receive in regard to it?

Yours faithfully,
Jawaharlal Nehru

it is wrong. If government consider it wrong, I have nothing further to say in the matter except to request government to supply me with what they consider is a correct account. If, however, the account I gave was the correct account, and the Home Member, during his visit to me in this jail in September, seemed to accept it as such, then I would further request government to consider if the action they took was even remotely or technically justified.

3. I was informed by the Offg. Inspector-General, in his letter dated July 8th 1932, that my mother and wife had been punished because my "wife handed over a letter to Mr. R. S. Pandit" and my "mother used insulting language to the jailer and was impertinent." When writing this the offg. I.G. seems to have forgotten who my mother was and who the jailer was; but apart from this I have endeavoured to point out where the insult and the impertinence lay. As for the letter, it is now clear that there was no such thing. There was a brief school report. Even this was not produced or handed over to any one by my wife. She did not know anything about it till my daughter took it out of her pocket and began reading it out, and later gave it to Mr. Pandit. My daughter did so openly and not surreptitiously and I am not aware that this was in any sense, and even technically, an offence. Even if it was, the person who was guilty of it was my daughter and not my wife or mother, and the outraged majesty of government could have sought reparation from my fourteen year old daughter. But why my mother or wife should be punished, I confess, I entirely fail to understand.

4. My mother and wife were, however, punished. Mr. Pandit also was punished, and later government not considering his punishment of a month sufficient, increased it to three months and even stopped letters during this period. To give the original sentence of one month for no offence seems to me to have been extraordinary enough, but to increase it deliberately to three months and to deprive one of news even of one's children is a matter which warrants serious consideration from any government, unless it has chosen the Gilbertian Mikado for its model.

5. I am writing at length about this incident not merely for a personal reason, although I have suffered enough during the last five months, but on wider grounds also. If government are still of opinion that they have acted correctly in awarding the punishments I have nothing further to say to them. If however they feel, as I think they must, that they were misled and thus made to err, they should at least say so.

6. This little incident has a wider significance. Government rely completely on their jail officials for the conduct of their jails, and each official relies on the one below him. Thus when any untoward occurrence takes place in jail, the government version of it made public or stated by the Home Member with all due solemnity in the Council Chamber, can be traced back to a petty jail official whose account, having passed through various channels, has at last reached the top and been adopted by it. It is not checked or verified in any satisfactory manner, for the only persons who might help in doing so are the prisoners who cannot be encouraged in this way. So it happens that government often make statements which all the world in jail, including both official and prisoner, know perfectly well to be wholly untrue or largely exaggerated. On the basis of these reports and statements government proceed to punish people in the name of discipline. The other side is seldom even heard and even when it reaches the ears, it is not listened to. The petty breach of discipline may have been provoked by deliberate insult and attempt to humiliate, but this is not known outside the high walls of prison, although it might be notorious enough inside that limited world.

7. I have had during the last twelve years a fairly extended experience of prison conditions in the U.P. and I think I may claim to express an opinion in regard to them. That opinion is shared by a very large number of persons. I have come very regretfully to the conclusion that the jails in this province (I can speak only of the U.P. from personal experience) are steeped in corruption and violence and falsehood. There are undoubtedly honourable and truthful men serving in the jails but they are not many and the whole atmosphere is against them. The person who gets on in the department is usually the worst type. All over the prisons it is believed that the official who is the most ruthless will find favour in the eyes of government, especially if he is hard on the political prisoner. The one who is most corrupt therefore tries to cover this corruption with a reputation for strictness and ruthlessness. It is notorious how many prison officials have deliberately sought to humiliate political prisoners and almost forced them to some act of insubordination so that they might then endeavour to crush them with all their strength. It is also notorious that it is such persons as these who are praised by government and to whom titles are awarded as a mark of favour.

8. Government occasionally refer in their communiques to jail riots and the like. I would beg members of government to try to visualise these so-called "riots", especially when political prisoners are concerned. For a prisoner to raise even his little finger against a jail official results in a terrible beating. There is no one to protect him or even to listen to his cry of agony. Jail 'riots' do occur but almost always the rioting is done by the side of law and order on poor defenceless prisoners. And when an investigation is made only one side is heard, a trumped up story presented, and a false report is published. On the basis of this report fresh punishments are now awarded to those who have already had the misfortune to be beaten. And the punishments awarded have even extended to the barbarous practice of flogging. I do not know if the government fully realise what is being done in their name and with their approval, but I should like them to know that many people, and even those who expected little from government, are amazed and shocked at this rattling back to barbarism. The Home Member and the Inspector General of Prisons visit and inspect prisons with all due pomp and ceremony and their approach is long and loudly heralded. They would know more of prisons if they could manage to come quietly and anonymously as prisoners for a few weeks. They need not come as political prisoners if this is a matter of conscience with them, and besides as ordinary convicts they might get slightly better treatment. Even a short stay in this capacity will reveal to them a state of affairs which will shock them, and their new knowledge will no doubt make them fitter to discharge the duties of their offices.

9. In a recent issue of the newspaper supplied to us, the Home Member is reported to have made a statement in the U.P. Council regarding the reduction from B to C class of 28 prisoners, till lately confined in Fyzabad jail. I have also learnt that these prisoners, or some of them, have been transferred with fetters on them to other prisons. I have no information about the incidents which led up to this, nor is it possible for me here to have further information. But even the limited information contained in the Home Member's statement has pained me greatly. I happen to know almost everyone of the prisoners in Fyzabad jail personally. Many of them have been esteemed comrades and colleagues of mine for many years and I feel sure that they would not act under any circumstances in a manner that is dishonourable. If they came to the conclusion, as was stated by the Home Member, that they could not obey the superintendent, they must have come to this decision for adequate reasons and probably because the superintendent had deliberately tried to humiliate and insult them and left them no other honourable course. Unfortunately I have no knowledge of what happened. But I happen to know very well both the prisoners who are, or were in Fyzabad jail and the average U.P. jail official and, unless the contrary is proved to me, I must believe in the right conduct of colleagues of mine who have survived many a hard test and who have sacrificed their careers and comfort and much that they possessed for the sake of a cause they held dear. I feel therefore that if I had been in their position I would, in all probability, have acted likewise and informed the superintendent that I could not obey his orders. It is a matter of chance that I am here and not with my colleagues. But if they are guilty and are punished I should also be considered guilty, and I invite the same punishment.

10. I should like to make clear that personally I have no complaint to make against any treatment meted out to me in this or other jails I have been treated uniformly with courtesy for which I am grateful. And when courtesy is extended to me I could hardly be churlish enough to answer it with discourtesy. I am also grateful to government for the facilities they have given me for consulting doctors and carrying on my treatment But the courtesy shown to me personally, and to a handful of others, makes me feel all the more painfully the humiliation and deep injury caused to large numbers of my colleagues. I am selected perhaps for special treatment because of a certain measure of notoriety that I have attained in the political sphere. The feudal principles of selection that the Home Member has stated in the U.P. Council do not apply to me for I do not come within the charmed circle of those who pay a certain amount of land revenue. When cultured and refined women are treated as ordinary prisoners it ill becomes a man to claim better treatment. I have, however, for selfish reasons I must admit, not raised this question earlier. My ill health became an excuse for me. But that excuse hardly holds now as my health is much better. I have still some trouble with my teeth but that need not come in the way. As it happens, the most prized privilege which a prisoner has—the right of interview—I have not exercised for over five months now.

11. I would therefore request government to give me the same treatment which they are now giving to my colleagues who were till lately in Fyzabad jail.

I regret that this letter has become so long. I have felt deeply on the matters referred to in this letter and I have come to the conclusion that I owed it to government and to myself to write fully and frankly. I have tried to do so after careful thought in what I hope is restrained and unadorned language. May I beg of you to send this letter of mine to the U.P. Government and to communicate to me any answer that you may receive in regard to it?

Yours faithfully,
Jawaharlal Nehru

Nov 17 Thursday

I feel rather lighthearted this evening—News has come that Kamala has reached Calcutta safely and on the whole her condition is not quite so bad as I had thought at first—news of the successful termination of the Unity Conference at Allahabad—and I have written and delivered my letter to government! One bad news however which has made me anxious—Bebee has had a motor accident! What an extraordinary unlucky girl for accidents! I wired to her and her reply has just come. Very cheerful and all that—she is always cheerful whatever happens—but it is clear that she is far from well. It is Bebee's birthday today!

No letter having come from home last week I wired for news. As soon as I learnt that Kamala was going to Calcutta yesterday I wrote to her there. An hour later my home letter came but there was nothing from Kamala. There was a letter from mother and one from Mahmud. Also a separate letter from Nan direct from Lucknow Jail.

So Kamala went to Calcutta on Nov 16, just a day before the anniversary of father's departure. Madan Atal has gone with her and so has her mother.

I have written a long letter to the Supt. today. It is, of course, meant for the government. It is pretty strong but I have tried to use moderate and restrained language. I have asked to be treated as the Fyzabad people have been treated. Wonder what will happen now. I am anxious to finish my letters to Indu before any sudden change takes place. Somehow I have got stuck after the French Revolution and Napoleon. From tomorrow I must concentrate on the letters. I think they will take me another two months.

Govt., probably because of Kamala's illness, have asked if I want to be transferred to Naini. I have no desire to leave Dehra Dun. As I have no present intention of taking interviews it makes little difference where I am. And I prefer the Himalayas.

A parcel came from home today. Odd things that mother has sent for my birthday which I must celebrate on the 20th—Margshirsh Badi 7. New clothes etc. and—more books from Bebee! She is determined to bury me almost in books. I have already got a vast number of them.

If the Unity Conference has really succeeded it is really good news, but I have my doubts. Still even to avoid failure has been an achievement and there can be no doubt that there was a strong desire to make up.

Nov 18 Friday

A telegram from Govind this morning announcing success of the Unity Committee. Also press accounts. Almost too good to be true. Burma election news also good.[114]

Nov 21 Monday

Yesterday being Margshirsh Badi 7th my birthday was celebrated in jail! Beautiful roses and other flowers, and fruits & vegetables and sweets came from the Tankhas in the city. In the evening there was feasting. The jail staff & Kapur joined in preparing the food & we all fed together, as at the Diwali. There was even a little speech of congratulation and also a nazm.

Dehra Dun has been as far removed from a real jail as it is possible for a jail to be. Apart from certain special privileges—like taking exercise in the open outside the jail gate and sitting in the open—the attitude of the jail staff has been very helpful. The jailer is very decent and in his own way is becoming quite devoted to me. Very soon the new superintendent—C.H. Reinhold—will be coming. I wonder what difference this will make. He has not a good reputation.

Nov 25 Friday

I feel weary and tired and stale—Thoughts of Kamala's illness, and Indu, far away, and all the world going awry, and knaves and scoundrels in the seats of authority shouting and haranguing and threatening, and good men silent, and fools, oh! so many of them everywhere!

Nov 26, 1932[115]

TO THE SUPERINTENDENT, DISTRICT JAIL, DEHRA DUN

I am obliged to the U.P. government for the choice of return to Allahabad that has been offered to me. In view, however, of what I

114. In the elections held in Burma, the party led by Dr. Ba Maw had gained a majority. This party favoured entry into the Indian federation on special conditions which provided for secession at some future date on terms to be settled by India and Burma between themselves.

115 J.N. Prison Papers, N.M.M.L.

wrote in my letter dated Nov. 17th 1932, I have little to say in the matter. It is for government to decide. But there is one thing that I might mention. I have been having some trouble with my teeth and this is being attended to here. Two of my teeth have been extracted and the dentist proposes to pull out some more in the near future. There may perhaps be some difficulties in the way of carrying on this treatment elsewhere.

J. Nehru

27.11.32[116]

TO HOME MEMBER, U.P. GOVERNMENT

Dear Sir,

In today's Pioneer there is a report of a debate in the U.P. Council on a resolution regarding "the alleged ill-treatment of political prisoners in various jails in the U.P."[117] In the course of this report it is stated that "the Home Member said that men like Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru were of great help to them. It was very necessary that the convicts should follow the jail rules like their leaders, Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru and Pandit Krishna Kant Malaviya and there would be no trouble whatever."

I am obliged for the statement that I am a well-behaved prisoner. I should like however to point out that it is hardly fair to exploit my name for the purpose of showing that some of my colleagues are not behaving properly. I am not in a position to place my viewpoint before the public, nor can my colleagues in various prisons give expression to their views. Under these circumstances it is doing me a great injustice to say anything which gives the impression that I disapprove of anything that my colleagues who are in prison might have done. I have no positive information to judge, but such partial information as reaches me, and my knowledge of my colleagues and the usual treatment meted out in prisons, leads me to the contrary conclusion. Indeed I have already written at some length to government on this subject. In view of the somewhat remarkable statement made by the judicial

116. J.N. Prison Papers, N.M.M.L.

117. The resolution asked the government to appoint a committee of the U.P. Council to enquire into and report on the ill treatment of political prisoners in U.P. jails. The Home Member replied that these complaints were mostly exaggerated and in some cases the offenders had been punished.

secretary that those who had been confined in jail being interested parties were unreliable, I presume my opinion is ruled out by government. But as my name has been publicly referred to in support of an argument with which I entirely disagree, it is only fair to me that my viewpoint should be placed before the public. I would therefore request that my letter dated 17 November 1932 be given to the press for publication.

In the course of the debate in the U.P. Council it was stated on behalf of the government that steps had been taken to punish jail officials whenever any misbehaviour on their part occurred. May I know what steps government has taken to punish the jailer of the Allahabad District Jail for his gross discourtesy to my mother and wife on May 27th 1932, about which I have previously written?

Yours faithfully,
Jawaharlal Nehru

29.11.32[118]

Indu darling,

I have not heard from you for over a month. I have not even had news of you for mummie has not been well enough to write, and the letters I have had have been from doctors and suchlike persons. I know you are well and happy and so I am content. But you seem so far away, and when letters do not come the distance seems to become greater than ever. It is just six months today since I saw you. What a long time it has been! But I feel happy when I think that you have employed this time well and are growing up, healthy and bright and strong.

Soon your school will be closing for the holidays and you will go on your pilgrimage to Ellora and Ajanta. What a delightful time you will have and how I envy you. Perhaps, as you look at these wonderful sculptures and frescoes, you will catch something of the spirit of the past in India and have a real glimpse into the days of long ago. Boys and girls are taught history in schools by means of dull uninteresting books. But the real way to learn history is to see the nation's art and music and literature. But of course the best way of all for you is to wait for the great history I am writing for you!

Do you know, when I was at Ellora seven or eight years ago, I went for a strange quest. It struck me that all the thousands of statues of men there were beardless. Beards were evidently not in fashion in those days. Then I hunted and hunted and discovered one full-grown beard. I wonder if you will find it—or you may do better than I did, and find several.

118 JN Correspondence, N.M.M.L. Extracts.

From Ellora I hope you will go to Daulatabad and see the wonderful fort there. It is the most extraordinary fort that I have seen.

I roll about in the sun in the mornings and my back is getting as brown as a berry. It is pleasant and cold here. I like this climate. Poona I suppose, is never really cold....

Love and kisses from

Your loving
Papu

Nov. 29, 1932[119]

Darling Nan,

I have received your and Bet's letters. Thank you both for the birthday wishes but you ought to know by this time that birthdays after forty are best forgotten. They become rather painful reminders of the horrors of age. I wish also that you would not 'pray' about anything in connection with my birthday! There always seems to me something morbid about prayers.

I wonder where this letter will reach you—in jail or outside. Anyway you will both be out soon and after ten and a half months' seclusion will again have a look at the wider world outside. Do not be too dazzled and do not gad about too much! I am glad both of you like the idea of Ceylon. I am sure a visit will do you good and you will enjoy yourself. January will be a good month to go. You can go by Lloyd Triestino boat from Bombay—the ones that come from Italy —or you can have a quieter and cheaper journey by a Scindia Steam Navigation Co's boat. These are not passenger steamers, but occasionally they do take passengers. They will be very glad to take you. They have no regular sailings. I have not been in them and so I cannot say what they are like. Betty will remember the launching of one of the Scindia boats in Glasgow by father.

When the time comes for you to go I shall, if I am in a position to do so, give you all manner of information about Ceylon. I shall also give you many letters of introduction. Meanwhile, I shall give you one address: S. Somasundaram, 27 New Chetty Street, Colombo. This man is a lawyer there. He is a very decent man and he will do everything for you. If you want to find out anything, write to him. When going, ask him to fix up accommodation, and arrange your programme there in consultation with him.

119. Vijayalakshmi Pandit Papers, N.M.M.L.

I am not particularly keen about your devoting yourself to untouchability work in Kathiawad. For some time at least you should just rest and get fit. After you come back from Ceylon you can see how the land lies. If you like you can spend some weeks in Kathiawad to pick up the untouchables. But I am not terribly excited over this question. Anyway do not bother about future work now. And do not worry at all about the future. The future is singularly capable of looking after itself, and none of us is a babe and suckling, and we can flourish like the green bay tree whatever happens. So do not be depressed and do not talk of being afraid of je ne sais quoi.

Prakash is attending to my teeth now. He pulled out one which was giving trouble. He suggests pulling out two more, which are not giving any obvious trouble, on the ground that their apices are affected and the system is gradually poisoned by them. I have not quite decided what to do yet.

Yes, Akbar reminds me in some ways of father. Bets, this letter, mutatis mutandis, is for you also. Cheer up and remember the virtues of plum pudding.

Love,

Your loving brother
Jawahar

Nov 30 Wednesday

Unusual happenings to stir the placid waters of jail. Chhatari, the Home Member, has given me a testimonial in the course of a speech in the U.P. Council in connection with the treatment of political prisoners. I am a model prisoner and I am held up as a model for others —in other words my name is exploited to damn other political prisoners, especially the Fyzabad people! I wonder if he said this after receiving my letter about Fyzabad. Anyway he probably meant to soothe and please me....I felt very angry at this unfair use of my name. I have written to him direct and asked him to publish my letter which I sent about Fyzabad. Of course he will do no such thing.

I have also informed govt., in answer to their enquiry, that they can keep me in any jail they like.[120] It is immaterial to me especially in view of my request to be treated as the Fyzabad people have been treated. But I have added a little rider—that I am having my teeth treated and perhaps I may not have the same facilities elsewhere. Fact is I am not keen on going till the tooth trouble is over. Probably two more will be taken out soon. I want to be here also for another month or so to finish the letters to Indu. I may not have quite so many books to consult in another jail. And thanks to Bebee and the birthday presents I have got a big case full of books.

I should like to be sent to Allahabad in January—mid January— provided I decide to take interviews then. Otherwise it does not matter. Kamala is in Calcutta under treatment.

The Supt—Lt. Col. C. H. Reinhold—is however not very keen on keeping me on here. He did not like the rider about tooth trouble that I had added to my reply to govt., and tried to urge me to alter it. Said it was frightfully cold here in winter and Allahabad had a pleasanter climate. When I pointed out that Naini was in the wilderness so far as dentists etc. are concerned he said I might be sent to the Allahabad Dist. Jail. What a prospect! With the scoundrel of a jailer there who insulted mother and Kamala. There will be a devil of a row with him if I am sent there, and certainly there will be no interview. I don't think govt. will send me to Malacca. But I have an idea that I shall be transferred in another three weeks or so.

An S.O.S. from Rafi yesterday!

Tomorrow morning Ram Chandra Kapur is being discharged. He has got quite substantial remission on account of ill-health. I shall be lonely in my barrack from tomorrow. Men may come and men may go but I carry on! Have completed eleven months—twelfth month now running. Including remissions, I have completed nearly thirteen months!

Nov. 1932[121]

TO CARLETON WASHBURNE

An accidental book written by one who is neither a writer nor an educationist, but who comes to realise more and more, during long periods

120 See ante, pp. 433 434.

121 J N Correspondence, N M M L. Inscription on copy of Letters From a Father to His Daughter sent to Carleton Washburne, an American educationist.

of enforced inactivity, how vital is the question of education, and who has read your book[122] with pleasure and profit.

With all good wishes,

Jawaharlal Nehru

14.12.32[123]

My dear Mother,

I received your long letter and read all about your trips and your work. This touring is all very well, but you should not tire yourself much. At home also, because of guests, you will be having much work.

I do not as yet know whether Nan and Betty have been released. I thought they would probably be released by the 10th.

We have not met for over six months. Obviously I am very eager to see you. Anyway, we shall meet when we are destined to do so. All will be well then; and time passes quickly.

I am concerned about Kamala's health. It is a relief that she is getting the best treatment and I am sure she will be completely restored to health. You did well by asking her mother to join her. Kamala will be comforted by her presence. I do not see any particular need for you 122 Washburne's Remakers of Mankind contained the following account: "Jawaharlal Nehru had moved from his tent in Dr. Ansari's yard and was staying in Birla House, the beautiful and spacious home of a wealthy nationalist in New Delhi He was just up after an attack of influenza—young, good looking, full of fire, unsparing of himself.

"I believe in a socialistic state", he said, "and should like to develop education toward that goal. At present we must stress nationalism—a country under foreign domination is bound to be nationalistic. Yet I believe that in really fundamental matters, each individual should stand by his own personal ideals. The test of such conscientious convictions is willingness to suffer for them. Under present conditions, I should avoid internationalism of the pacifist type, for it might result in India's sitting by and doing nothing toward her own independence But I should try to avoid the narrow nationalism common to a country in the midst of a national struggle and to stress a broad, international outlook.

You ask how objective I would have the teaching of biography and history. Let us be as objectively truthful as possible. But when we are teaching a young child the life of a hero, let us stress those parts of his character which will be most helpful.

Students must develop the faculty of deciding questions for themselves. Therefore let them discuss quite freely any subjects which interest them, while we furnish them unbiased facts on which to base their conclusion."

123 J N. Correspondence, N.M.M.L. Original in Hindi.

to go to Calcutta at the moment. It is better to stay in Allahabad. The girls will be coming and there are various conferences being held.[124]

I am perfectly all right and having no trouble of any kind. The weather here is quite cold. I like it. I received the ointment for the teeth which you sent me. I will apply it when necessary but at present I have no tooth-ache. I had never had much pain at any time. I have had four teeth extracted during the last four months. Now there is no need to pull out any more. But I shall keep the medicine you have sent and use it when necessary.

I read and thought over what you had written about Anand's[125] marriage. I do not agree at all with the old customs of dowry that are prevalent; and specially in the present state of the country, we should not abide by these customs. Whatever we may have, little or much, we should think of using it for national purposes. We may of course give a present to a relative or a friend as a token of affection. But the question of dowry and the price of what was given or not given earlier should not arise. We should not bother about what others will say or think. We have to set the right example for others, rather than be misguided by their stupidity. So I think you should not worry about the old customs.

However, it is true that Anand and the girl should be given some presents as a token of our love. What should these be? In my opinion no ornament of any kind should be given. Giving ornaments and wearing them is, these days, quite contrary to our dignity as well as to the ideals of our work. Apart from that, good jewellery is very costly, and cheap jewellery is often quite worthless. We should, therefore, completely drop the idea of giving ornaments.

What should be given then? Obviously they should be swadeshi articles and all the better if they are household goods. Kamala has written to me that she has brought and has with her some very good articles which you and Betty should give to Anand and his wife. This seems to me to be right. Discuss this with Kamala a little more. If you think these articles are inadequate, buy for Rs. 100 or Rs. 200 more. There is no need whatever to consult me. You, Kamala, Betty and Nan can decide. I may send a book from jail as a personal gift.

As to what, apart from this gift, you should give to Anand and his wife separately or together—in my opinion it will be better if you give 124. The last session of the Unity Conference was held at Allahabad on 24 December and the All India Women's Conference was held at Lucknow on 28 December.

125. Anand Kumar Nehru (1903-1947); son of Shamlal and Uma Nehru.

Rs. 100 to each when the two of them come to see you after the wedding—that is Rs. 100 in cash to Anand and Rs. 100 in cash to his wife.

So I have given you my opinion, but in future please consult Kamala and others on such matters and do what you think best. I am not interested in these matters.

You have asked whether you should attend Anand's marriage. It is difficult for anyone to advise you in this matter. Only you can decide. Still, I shall tell you what I think. The marriage takes place towards the end of February. So there is plenty of time, and in the meantime anything can happen. It is likely that Gandhiji may undertake a fast again, and there is no saying what may then happen. It is, therefore, difficult to say now categorically what one should do at that time. But, apart from this, I do not think there is any other reason why you should not attend the marriage. My imprisonment and Ranjit's should not, I think, be considered a misfortune. This is contrary to our dignity and to yours. On a festive occasion there should be celebrations. If something more important comes up, then, of course, it is a different matter. I therefore do not see any particular objection to your attending the marriage.

You know attending marriages embarrasses me. I do not like a huge crowd going, with a lot of noise and confusion. I think marriages should be celebrated very quietly and in extreme simplicity. I am happy that Anand's marriage will probably be performed in a sober way. If you go, you need not attend all the ceremonies and feasts. You may go just for a day or two. But only you can take the final decision on these matters; and you should do whatever you think proper after due consideration. I am concerned only with one thing; nothing should make any of us pull a long face and at any cost we should perform our duties.

After a long interval the girls and children will be at home, and it will be a change for you and there will be some cheerfulness in the house. Some part of me will also be hovering nearby. I will reach there in thought.

Much love,

Your son,
Jawaharlal

Dec 15. 1932[126]

Darling Indu,
Mummie has sent me your letter to her. But she forgot to send the programme of your show.

I am sorry to learn that Ira and Mr. Vakil have been unwell and that your trip to Ajanta might not come off. Something always seems to happen when you plan to go to Ajanta! I have been planning for ever so many years but I have not got there yet. Once I did succeed in going to Ellora, and I also got down at a station to go to Ajanta, but no car was to be had.

I have no idea what your programme is likely to be. Perhaps you may go to Calcutta. If you go there, it would be worthwhile to visit Santiniketan for a few days.

I wonder if you received Hudson's book which I sent six weeks ago? If so did you like it?

I wrote to you some months back the story of Tat and Twee. I am sorry to say that the story had a tragic ending. It is difficult to tame wild animals. I am now on friendly terms with a kitten called Moti. She comes and plays with me and scratches me all over my hands and arms and feet. She happened to get locked out of her house one night by a mistake. So, in the middle of the night, she came to me, cold and shivering, and nestled up to my face on the pillow as I lay asleep. I woke with a start. As I raised myself slightly to find out who the intruder was, she pushed herself inside my blankets and made herself quite comfortable without any further reference to me!

I hope you will have a pleasant holiday and enjoy yourself thoroughly wherever you may go to. When does your school re-open again?

Love and kisses from your loving

Papu

December 20—Tuesday

Three weeks since I wrote last in this journal. Three weeks more or less like the other two score or more weeks that have passed. In a few days I shall complete the full year—one ambition achieved at least!

126. J N. Correspondence, N.M.M.L.

I have not been transferred so far but the idea seems to hang in the air. The new Supdt. is evidently not desirous of having me here. He, or rather the district magistrate, suspects all manner of things. Rumours come to me that the C.I.D. is active and reports that some of us here smuggle out letters. Suspicion has even fallen, it appears, on the poor dentist! The jailer is much put out by attitude of the Supt. At the back of it is the dist. magistrate—Acton. Many months ago he came here to visit me. Our meeting was not cordial. Since then he has avoided coming to me even when visiting the gaol. I feel sure that it must have been due to him that Falvey was suddenly transferred.

The Supt. is courteous enough when he meets me. But the atmosphere is oppressive and I want to be sent away now to some other gaol. The business with the dentist will be over soon. He has pulled out two more teeth and little remains to be done.

I felt very fit early this month. The cold suited me and I sat for hours in the sun. I had a definite sense of well-being, more than I have had for two years or so. I could almost imagine my face, as I looked at it in the mirror, growing younger! Vanity! I felt convinced that this was due to the pulling out of the tooth on Nov. 14th. Another dentist assured me that by removing two more teeth the root of all trouble will go and I shall flourish like the green bay tree. So, greedily I consented, and I wrote to Kamala that I was growing in beauty and youth and hoped to look 33 and not 43 when I went out!

And yet hardly had I written when I began to feel rather poorly. Yesterday as I was walking in the evening my legs became heavy under me and I could hardly lift them. The calves pained as if I had marched for a dozen miles. Pride goeth before a fall! I feel a little better today. Perhaps it was the cold and my aggressive behaviour in regard to it...

Kamala continues ill in Calcutta. At the back of my mind I feel that she is bound to get well. I have a habit—is it merely the fear of facing the truth?—of seeing the bright side of things. Still a shadow seems to hang and I feel a little depressed.

But the greatest shadow is the approaching fast of Bapu. January 2nd[127]—what will happen to him and to the country?

What will happen? What will happen? I think and wonder and though the faith is strong in me, so many things seem to go awry. What is the reason for the faith? But one should not reason with faith!

The future is so dark. It is difficult to pierce the veil. And yet I am certain that we shall win through soon enough.

127 It was scheduled to start on 2 January 1933 but was postponed.

December 24 Saturday

Thunder and rain and a piercing cold wind. It is clear that gaol is no fit place under these circumstances. It was bad enough during the rainy season. But with the cold thrown in—sitting in a tiny hole with the wind and rain rushing in—one begins to long for a decent habitation and a little comfort. The limit was almost reached by having a bath in the open under these conditions. No one can be blamed if I do not catch pneumonia!

But there was some compensation. In the afternoon it cleared up for a short while and I saw fresh snow on the distant mountain tops and round about Mussoorie. This must have been about a dozen miles away but it cheered me up tremendously. I thought of Switzerland and skiing and skating and luging.

It is Christmas eve today. Rather a lonely affair for many of us!

Christmas Day

A lovely day with a beautiful view of snow-covered mountains.

27.12.32[128]

TO GIRDHARI LAL

My dear Girdhari,

For many months past I have been worried about your health. The bits of news about you that came to me were not encouraging. I could not make out what the matter was with you. Your letter, which has just reached me via Kamala, was very welcome as it gave me some definite information about you. You have had a real hard time of it with months and months in bed. I can hardly imagine a more difficult trial for any one. But you have stuck it out and I am very glad to learn that you have turned the corner and are likely to be well soon.

128. J. N. Correspondence, N.M.M.L.

When one is ill everything seems to go wrong and worries and troubles accumulate. With the return of health most of these disappear into thin air and I have no doubt that you will find your troubles disappearing or lessening as soon as you are healthy enough to face them. After all life would be rather dull without some worries! As for financial troubles there is seldom any end to them in this topsy-turvy world. Long ago I decided to ignore them and I have been happier ever since, though of course I have not been put to a real test yet. But in my mind I began to think of myself as possessing nothing of money value and since then money has had little attraction for me and the loss of it is of no consequence. If Anand Bhawan went I would not worry for five minutes. I am indeed rather surprised to think that it is still there. So do not trouble yourself about money matters. Get well and the rest will follow. I am glad you are in Deshmukh's hands. He is a reliable and competent surgeon. Give him my love.

Kamala's ill-health is a source of anxiety. But then anxiety is such a foolish thing. I am happy that she is under Bidhan's treatment.

I am quite well. I have a knack of being well wherever I am.

How time goes! It is over a year since I was arrested—and it is nearly eleven months since we met last at the little flag station beyond Phaphamau. We shall meet again when the time for it comes, I have no doubt.

Love and all good wishes for the new year.

Yours affly.,
Jawaharlal

7

PRISON DIARY WITH LETTERS

1933

5.1.33[1]

My dear Bapu,

Your letter is always a tonic,[2] and when it comes after a long interval, it brings a thrill with it and its effect is all the more exhilarating. I recognised Mahadeva's handwriting on the envelope. Yours did not seem as of old. Perhaps your left hand was functioning and I am not so familiar with it.

I am following of course with great interest your campaign against untouchability, as far as I can from the Statesman and the Pioneer.[3] Anything that you may do is bound to interest and fascinate. The subject itself has tremendous possibilities. Not being a man of religion, my interest is largely confined to the social aspect and to the wider issues involved.

Of course Sarup should do untouchability work if she feels like it. My suggestion about a short holiday in Ceylon was made chiefly in the interest of Krishna. I am a little worried about her. After a year in prison, with our home practically broken up, she feels rather at a loose end and does not know what to do. Ever since her childhood, the poor girl has been deprived of real home life and proper education because of our preoccupations and repeated visits to prison. She grew up a rather lonely girl not having as much friendship and sympathy as she was entitled to.

Father's death shook her up a great deal. I tried to soothe her and win her confidence and I am glad to say that I succeeded to some extent. But 1931 was for all of us a year full of work and worry and anxiety. Then came a long spell of prison for her, and for a young girl this was a far greater ordeal than it could be for most of us. As her release drew near I sensed how she must be feeling and how life

1. J N. Correspondence, N.M M L. In this section the diary kept by Jawaharlal in the Dehra Dun jail, from 5 January to 23 August and in Naini Central Prison, from 24 August to 30 August 1933, has been printed. Letters written by him during this period have been interspersed The omission of personal details is indicated by dots The diary and letters are available in the N M M L.

2 In his letter of 31 December 1932 Mahatma Gandhi had written among other things, "I do not know whether you are interesting yourself in the Harijan work I am having a glorious time with the shastras. My knowledge of the letter of the Shastras is better but of true religion they are able to give me but little."

3 Mahatma Gandhi's correspondence with the Zamorin of Calicut over the opening of the Guruvayoor temple to Harijans had been published on 2 January 1933.

in Anand Bhawan, as it is today, would be no joy to her. She would feel out of joint. She would want to do something and yet not know what to do and this would rob her of peace of mind. I was myself not clear what to suggest to her. Latterly she has begun to look upon me almost as a kind of refuge in a friendless world. If I had been out I might have been of help to her but I could do little from Dehra Dun jail.

I felt that a short holiday in natural surroundings would ease her mind and remove the tension. Hence my proposal about Ceylon. Three weeks in Ceylon would not have solved any problem but she would have freshened up and returned with a brighter outlook on life. These were my reasons. I was thinking more of mental health than of physical health. But the proposal seems to have fallen through as nobody seems to be keen on it. For the present therefore Ceylon is off.

Perhaps Krishna will go to Poona to see you and you might be able to advise her about her work. I might see her also. It is easy enough to suggest odd bits of work but this must appeal to the person concerned.

As for my interview, it is now nearly seven months since I had one.[4] I have missed them greatly but the U.P. Government had been very discourteous to mother and Kamala and I felt that I had no alternative; besides I have not yet got rid of my obstinacy—a hereditary failing in me of which you cannot be unaware. The government made some partial amends and the Home Member, the Nawab of Chhatari, came and expressed his concern. All this was more or less beside the point, and the graceful thing and the right thing was not done, but then the right thing is seldom done. I wrote again to government. Still I decided in my mind that should special necessity arise I would withdraw my prohibition and consent to an interview. So matters have stood for the last few weeks. I did not suggest an early interview as there was some talk of my transfer back to Naini prison.

Now that you have also written about it, what can I do but immediately to capitulate to you?[5] So henceforth, and unless something untoward intervenes, I shall take my usual interviews. Kamala may not be able to see me for several weeks still. She is in Calcutta under Bidhan's treatment. But I shall see mother and Indu and Sarup and Krishna or such of them as can find me.

The stopping of interviews has made me retire a little more into myself, but I have had pleasing and friendly neighbours—the Himalayas.

4. Jawaharlal had his last interview on 13 June 1932.
5. Mahatma Gandhi wrote to Jawaharlal: "You still seem to be refusing to see visitors. I wish you would see them if it is at all possible. It will give them satisfaction."

The sight of their outline against the sky, and now their summits and sides covered with fresh snow, have meant a great deal to me. They seem to rouse in me ancient memories of the long ago when perhaps my ancestors wandered about the mountains of Kashmir and played in their snow and glaciers. I have had companions here but largely I have been left to myself, and I have grown a little contemplative, in defiance of heredity and family tradition and personal habit! But that is a thin veneer which I am afraid will rub off at little provocation. How can the Ethiopian change his skin?

I have read a lot, and if wisdom could be had in books I would be wise. But wisdom eludes me, and big question marks confront me wherever I look. Sometimes I think of Prince Siddhartha's old question and no answer comes:

"How can it be that Brahm
Would make a world and keep it miserable
Since if all powerful, he leaves it so,
He is not good, and if not powerful,
He is not God?"

From all accounts in the papers you are as ever the slave of industry and are over-working yourself even in prison. The new industrial system of the west is often criticised and blamed because it makes man a machine for ceaseless work and robs him of all leisure. You are supposed to be no lover of this system. And yet, you seem to personify to me often this very industrial system!

I am intrigued at your remark that eye witnesses have told you that I am keeping fit. The information is correct but who could these eye witnesses be who have managed to reach you? I have had no interviews for a long while and, except for a colleague who was discharged a month ago, I can think of no other likely recent eye witness. It is true that I am poorer by four teeth. I have sacrificed them at the altar of modern science to appease the goddess of physical health.

This is a long letter for gaol. But this I am writing to you after over a year and I have not seen you for over sixteen months. My last glimpse of you was when you were sailing away to the far west and your figure grew smaller and smaller as the ship bore you away and left us, feeling rather lonely and forlorn, on the pier.

With my love to all the happy family of four in Yeravda,[6]

Yours affly.,
Jawaharlal

6 Vallabhbhai Patel, Mahadeva Desai and Chhaganlal Joshi were with Mahatma Gandhi in Yeravda Jail.

January 8, Sunday

A week of the new year gone—It has been an exciting week for me—little things make a difference in jail. Felt rather depressed on New Year's Day. General political outlook depressing enough. Nothing much doing. A long stalemate in prospect. Also, I had been feeling a little poorly for some days and had lost weight.

Then came a letter from Bapu on the 4th and it cheered me up tremendously. There was nothing special in it. First letter after a year. Suggested I might resume my interviews.

For weeks past the question of interviews has been troubling me. The desire to see some persons and obstinacy! Betty's appeal in a letter saying how much she wanted to see me upset me and set me thinking again. I decided to resume interviews even if nothing further done by Govt. But still I wanted to postpone an interview for another month or so till I was in Allahabad or Naini and special necessity arose. A vague and unsatisfactory decision.

Bapu's letter & suggestion suddenly made me feel that I must end this drifting and resume interviews immediately. This decision it was that seemed to remove a burden off me. I felt light hearted all day. Having come to a decision I was all eagerness to have the interview! Having done without it for nearly seven months and not thought of it much—except for a dull aching want of it—now I am full of it. I await Kamala's letter to find out where Indu is. After a day I decide to wait no longer and wire to Kamala. My haste due to fact that Indu has to go back to school to Poona and I did not want to miss her. Kamala of course cannot come yet. But Nan & Betty may come.

Next day a vague phrase in the paper about Kamala's health put me out and I felt depressed again. But yesterday came her letter with better news.

Abdul Latif has gone. He was discharged on the 5th. My other companion Anand Singh is also going. His little son—4½ month old—died suddenly as a result of an accident. His wife is greatly upset and it is said that Chhatari has ordered his release immediately. Anyway his term expires at the end of this month.

So I shall be alone here. There is no mention of my transfer. I shall miss my companions and yet I have had, during this past year, a strange set of companions in prison. Hardly any one of them in Bareilly or Dehra had much in common with me.

It is so cold. When I shiver what must be the condition of the ordinary convicts with their wretched blankets? Fortunately the Supt feels the cold himself very much and he has insisted on extra blankets being distributed.

Today's paper contained the judgment in the Bhatwaria case. Forty five persons sentenced for life in an agrarian riot when a petty zamindar started firing at his tenants who got angry and clubbed him to death. These monstrous sentences haunted me all day.

10.1.33.[7]

TO SYED MAHMUD

My dear Mahmud,

I have not written to you since I came to gaol, not even to answer your letters or to thank you for your birthday gifts. But of course you cannot expect letters from a prisoner. A prisoner has no concern with the doings of the wide world outside; his world is a narrower one and high walls enclose it. There have been some changes in prison rules since you and I were together in Naini two years ago or more.[8] We get some newspapers now—Pioneer, Statesman and the like. And so some news of the outside world comes to us though often it is one-sided or perverted; and from this news we can sometimes find out what our friends are doing. Almost I wish that even this news would not come to us to disturb our peace and quiet. I am too much interested in action to be a mere looker on.

And perhaps my mind is better occupied with reading and thinking and looking at the whole picture, than it might otherwise be if I was busy looking at a few trees and thinking they were the forest.

My birthday would not be a real birthday if a parcel of gifts from you did not descend upon me and so I was not surprised when the books you sent came. They were a good selection. But I am so full of books and books that I get rather lost.

I hope your health is better, but that is a vain hope as you have not grasped the elements of treating yourself scientifically. You flit about from doctor to doctor, and doctor to hakim and vaid and what not. I envy you your belief in wonderful cures by magic medicines. Unfortunately I have come to the conclusion that there is no magic in this world either for human ailments or society's troubles.

I am flourishing as ever. Abdul Latif of Bijnor was with us here but he was discharged last week. Perhaps I might be transferred soon to Naini or some other jail.

7. J.N. Correspondence, N.M.M.L.
8. Motilal Nehru and Syed Mahmud had joined Jawaharlal in Naini Prison on 30 June 1930.

Keep fit and strong and cheerful.

With love and all good wishes for the New Year and good luck to you in the work you are doing.

Yours affly.,
Jawahar

Jan. 11, Wednesday

Anand Singh has just gone and I am left alone. For seven months and a week we were together. Not much in common—but it is sad to part I might have felt it more if I had not been full of my interview which comes off tomorrow. How excited I have been over it ever since it was fixed up. Nan and Betty & Indu are coming. What will Indu look like after seven and a half months? How she must have grown.

Jan. 14 Saturday

So the interview has come and gone. It was a great event in my jail life and I have not settled down after it yet I was exuberant and full of light hearted laughter. Partly this was natural for I felt so; but I suspect that it was also partly due to my desire to impress. I wanted them to feel light-hearted and not to worry.

Nan & Betty & Indu & little Chand came. Nan & Betty and Chand I saw after a year—Not much difference. But Indu is becoming a little woman and remarkably attractive and smart looking. And yet I was glad to notice that she was childish enough in her ways. I felt so happy and proud to see her healthy and straight, and growing up apparently without any marked inhibitions.

Nan bustling and full of life and talk as ever—Betty rather quiet and still somewhat childish—Chand staid and well behaved.

It was a long interview as jail interviews go—nearly two hours, and I felt excited and light-hearted for long afterwards. Indeed it was not possible to go back to my routine and I have made more or less holiday ever since, which means that I have read light books.

But now the excitement has worked itself out and there is some depression. I feel a little lonely also; there is no company, except the jail staff! Especially at meal times I feel lonely.

My pain in the right side has returned. I have tried to ignore it for many days or weeks, but today it refused to be ignored.

23.1.33[9]

Nan dear,

Thank you for the money you sent me.

I shall be very glad to have Ranjit's translation of the Rajatarangini[10] to read here. There should be no difficulty about it. The manuscript should be well typed and at least four copies should be made. Ranjit can then carry out his revisions on the typed copy. One of the typed copies can be sent to me.

I am suggesting to mother to come and have an interview with me by herself and not to wait for Kamala. Later I can have an interview with Kamala alone. In such single interviews I shall have a little more chance of talking to each separately. It is not my intention to have very frequent interviews. So it is as well to have a relatively satisfactory interview with each. There is no point in mother staying on in Calcutta. She might as well return, visit me, and then go back to Allahabad. After seeing me she will also be free to go anywhere she wants to, like Poona.

If you meet Bapu you can ask him about mother. Tell him about your difficulties which you mentioned to me. I am inclined to think that if he asks her to go she should go, provided she herself is not averse to doing so. I shall speak to her myself about it when she meets me.

I have not received any foreign periodical for about three weeks now. I do not know what has happened to them. I am inclined to think that it will be better if they are forwarded to me direct and unopened. Otherwise they may get waylaid, especially as you and Betty are going away. Please leave directions accordingly.

I met the Washburne family just before Karachi when I was recovering from influenza in Delhi. He mentions me in his book and of course praises my beauty!

My love to the kiddies. Tell Tara mamuji was so sorry not to see her.

Love,

Your loving brother,
Jawahar

Some foreign papers have just come.
25/1 —more foreign papers have come today.

9. Vijayalakshmi Pandit Papers, N.M.M.L.
10 Jawaharlal wrote a foreword to R. S. Pandit's translation of the Rajatarangini published in 1934.

23.1.33.[11]

TO EVELYN WOOD[12]

Dear Wood,
Your card came as a breath of fresh air and was very welcome. It brought a picture in my mind's eye of a pleasant afternoon spent in your flat high up in the clouds—or so it seemed—and far removed from the madding crowd. But interruption came, as it always does, and I had to descend from the heights. Some things end soon enough, too soon; others seem to go on and on.

So you are shaking the dust of India off from your feet. I am not surprised. But the whole world seems to be awry and you cannot escape from it even in the pleasant land of Kent. There is one consolation however; whatever happens you can always fall back on hop-picking in Kent. And, perhaps, if your wife promises to be good to me, and to teach me this ancient and honourable science, I may join you in the distant future and wander about for a while in the delightful fields of Kent. Once upon a time long long ago I actually indulged in hop picking there; it almost seems like a fairy tale now, or a story from another's life.

Anyway wherever you may go to, both of you will carry my best wishes.
My homages to madam,

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

January 26th—Thursday—Independence Day!

I have been feeling rather thin—a little lonely and bored and not in the mood for any hard work, mental or physical. For a fortnight have had no one to talk to, except for greetings with the jail staff. For a long time I have not spun either. But today in honour of Independence Day I did some spinning.

Even my friend Moti, the cat, has gone. The assistant jailer has been transferred and he took her with him.

11. J.N. Correspondence, N.M.M.L.
12. (b. 1903), an Englishman settled in India; became interested in swadeshi work and was associated with Jai Naorojı; in early forties wanted the Congress to support Britain's war effort.

February 5th—Sunday

Over three and a half weeks of loneliness! I am not exactly enjoying it. My mind wanders a lot and I find it a little difficult to concentrate on any reading. After a little while I suddenly catch myself thinking of something quite different and far removed from the subject of the book. Often I think of what we should do outside when we do go out. How to meet the new situation created by the Round Table Conference.[13] I get very angry at the scandalous and shameful way the Liberals and others have agreed to the monstrous abortions which are the outcome of the R.T.C. It is really amazing how any Indian with least little bit of political sense—not to mention more idealistic motives—could agree to this. I am sure Samuel Hoare and the English people in the conference must have been mightily surprised. But then the question that comes again and again to my mind—how to meet the situation and fight it? Bapu is getting more and more involved in his Temple Entry business.[14] Well, well, why worry? It will be time enough to decide when we are out! That is not going to happen very soon and so there is no hurry. But oh, these Liberals and other Round Tablers! What morons they are—or is it merely that they are a lot of old women?

I have not been keeping well. Slight temperature again.

I have been in this jail for nearly eight months and I calculated today that I must have walked 15000 times up and down the little stretch of ground opposite the jail gate where I take my morning and evening constitutional.

No news of another interview. I want it more than I would care to confess.

13 On 24 December 1932, the third Round Table Conference came to an end with Sir Samuel Hoare's announcement that federation would be brought about "by removing every obstacle as early as possible", the Muslims would have a representation of 33-1/3% in the federal centre, Sind and Orissa would become new provinces, and financial control would be granted subject to safeguards and reservations. Defence was to be the sole responsibility of the British and, like the budget, would be non votable.

14 Mahatma Gandhi had decided to fast on the Guruvayoor temple entry question; but when, on 23 January 1933, the Viceroy disallowed the introduction of a temple entry bill in the Madras Council, he stated that the issue "now broadened from Guruvayoor in the extreme south to Hardwar in the north and my fast though it remains further postponed depends not now upon Guruvayoor only but extends automatically to temples in general."

U. U. GENT LIB.

Feb. 13th Monday

Have been in bed for two days—had some fever etc. Nothing very much but it is not pleasant to be ill in jail. However I have shaken off the fever.

I had a sheaf of letters today unexpectedly. One from Kamala not very cheering—one from Nan which rather worries me about Indu. Another letter from the income tax man in Calcutta demanding payment of Rs. 20000 and odd—and a communication from I.G. informing me that female prisoners may be embraced by female relatives under certain conditions! This information was conveyed to me, I suppose, because of a casual remark I made in my letter to Govt., nearly three months ago, pointing out that mother had refused to have interviews with Nan & Betty because, among other reasons, she was asked to sit far away from them. How perfectly ridiculous and pompous Govt. officials succeed in becoming in their efforts to maintain their dignity!

Have just read a collection of Russian short stories—grim, impressive, sometimes rather unpleasant. One story impressed me most—A Tale about AK and Humanity by Efim Zozulya.

Feb. 25, Saturday

Several unusual days, or rather days with unusual happenings. On the 17th Ansari suddenly turned up without any previous warning. The Supt gave him permission for a special interview, and there he was to my vast surprise. Freshly returned from Europe full of stories of common friends and memories of old haunts in Switzerland and elsewhere. He looked much better than when he came in July. But his heart still gives trouble. He has wandered all over Europe while I have sat and fed and slept in this same old little cell! How used I have got to it during the last eight and a half months or more.

Ansari examined me thoroughly. Found me generally well but still with the patch of pleurisy on the right side.

Two days later mother came. She looked older and smaller than ever. Eight months had aged her and her face was full of wrinkles. But there is energy and vitality in her still.

The two interviews and a cheerful letter from Bapu bucked me up a great deal and I have felt more light-hearted than I have done for a long while. Perhaps this was also due to my gradual recovery from a bad and troublesome cold. Physical health has an extraordinary effect on the mind.

The weather has been dismal. Clouds and rain and wind. I have become such a sun-worshipper that I miss the sun greatly. As I write it is raining away and it is so dark at high noon that I have to sit with a lighted candle.

7/3/33[15]

My dear Bapu,

Thank you for your letter[16] and the first two copies of Harijan.[17] I read through the Harijan of course with interest, and delighted to see the old rapier touch of overmuch kindness and inexhaustible patience which extinguishes, or as you say neutralises, the opponent. I pity the poor Sanatanists. With their anger and abuses and frantic cursing, they are no match for this kind of subtle attack. And yet the power of stupidity and conservatism and entrenched privilege in this world is amazing. Even mahatmas and saints cannot easily upset this combination unless circumstances have prepared the ground. Have you read Bernard Shaw's Saint Joan—the play about Joan of Arc? If not I wish you would do so, and especially the preface of the play. It is quite a little thing and will not take much time. A short while ago I sent a copy of the book to Indu and you could easily commandeer it from her.

The tribe of Sanatanists is of course doomed because they are relics of a bygone age. Their very anger shows the extent of the danger that confronts them. Under strain all tolerance disappears, and their intolerance at present is a sign of the great strain you are putting on them. It is all very well for the likes of Sapru and me (a curious combination!) to talk pompously and in a superior way of our tolerance in matters of religion when neither of us has any religion worth talking about, or for us to bless the movement for temple entry when neither has the remotest desire to go within a hundred miles of a temple except, so far as I am concerned, to see the architecture and the statuary! But touch either of us on some particular subject and you will find the raw

15 JN Correspondence, NMML.

16 In his letter of 15 February 1933 Mahatma Gandhi had written, "The fight against Sanatanists [orthodox Hindus] is becoming more and more interesting if also increasingly difficult. The one good thing is that they are men awakening from a long lethargy. The abuses they are hurling at me are wonderfully refreshing. I am all that is bad and corrupt on this earth. But the storm will subside for I apply the sovereign remedy of ahimsa, non-retaliation.... The more I ignore the abuses the fiercer they are becoming. But it is the death dance of the moth around a lamp."

17 The first issue of Harijan was published on 11 February 1933.

side and there will be little of tolerance then. Who is more intolerant than you are in certain matters? The fact is real tolerance hardly exists; what goes under the name of tolerance is indifference. What we do not value we make a virtue of tolerating in others. A person who is not prepared to be aggressively intolerant about some thing or another is a pretty useless individual. So I feel a little sympathy—of an inverted kind—for the Sanatanists. They value something for which they are prepared to fight. The issue is clarified. The dangerous people are always those who are dodging and avoiding difficulties in an effort to ignore them or forget them, or are looking at them with one eye only!

Of course, if you will stir up stagnant matters there will be bad smell, and the Hindu social structure has stagnated long enough in all conscience. My own remedy for a stagnant pool would be to drain it completely and let the sun dry and purify the bottom and the sides. Cool fresh water can then be poured in and arrangements made for it to keep running on, so that there may be no stagnation again. Superficial drainage can never clean the accumulations of filth at the bottom. But you are emptying the tank to some extent and may be we shall see the bottom!

The Harijan, I take it, will not convert a single bigoted Sanatanist. But it will no doubt influence vast numbers of others whose eyes have so far been closed to our own social evils. We get used very soon to the dirt round us. I wish the Harijan would give detailed facts about the suppressed classes—how they are treated in various parts of the country, their disabilities, and especially their economic condition, in so far as this is due to social conditions. This mass of facts will impress the mental person and overwhelm the Sanatanist. There will be no spectacular conversion of the latter in spite of your sweet reasonableness. If I may give you a quotation from an eminently respectable Victorian—John Stuart Mill: "We are the last persons to under-value the power of moral convictions. But the convictions of the mass of mankind run hand in hand with their interests or class feelings. We have a strong faith, stronger than either politicians or philosophers generally have, in the influence of reason and virtue over men's minds; but it is in that of the reason and virtue of our own side of the question. We expect few conversions by the mere force of reason from one end to the other."

You have recently had a criticism of the Harijan, or rather your article in it, from an old school master. As you like criticisms, here is another—a superficial one! My first view of the Harijan was not agreeable. Suddenly it brought to my mind by its general appearance—size, get up, type etc.—that old and highly respected organ of pompous futility, the Indian Social Reformer.[18] I do not know if this worthy but utterly useless and humourless paper still carries on in its ponderous manner for the edification of the dull and sober. I have no grievance against it if it keeps away from me. Only, the outward resemblance to it of the Harijan was not a point in the latter's favour. Of course the resemblance vanished when I started reading the paper.

But I must protest against the apology for an envelope in which your letter came. If Vallabhbhai is responsible for it, much as I love him, I must make it clear that envelope-making is not his strong line. Or perhaps the fault is not entirely his when the raw material he is supplied with comes from the waste paper basket.

Forgive me for my superficiality. I like my diamonds smooth and polished. You have shown us the art and style of living life in the grand manner. That is the real thing, but why should we ignore style and art in the little things of life? Most of us cannot reach the snowy heights. Would you deprive us of the flowers in the valleys?

I have written a long enough letter already and yet many of the things I wished to say remain unsaid. What is the use of my writing about the Harijan movement? You have more than enough of the subject. I would have liked to write to you of some of my interests and occupations, just to divert and refresh your mind. Being prevented from activity in the present I live a little in the future, but largely in the past. I should like to tell you of the delightful civilization of the Gobi desert thirteen hundred years and more ago, where a strange mixture of Indian and Chinese and Russian culture flourished and even Roman culture had a look in, and Sanskrit was the language of learning, and the Buddha legend the golden link that joined these countries of Asia; and of the origins of Gothic architecture in Gandhara or Afghanistan and Persia nearly a thousand years before the Europe of the middle ages, in a passionate fervour of faith, built up those wonderful Gothic cathedrals which go up almost like visible prayers to the sky; and of the vivid life of Central Asia in those early days and the varied caravans, full of rich and beautiful merchandise, and accompanied by many a scholar and a pilgrim, which passed to and fro between western Asia and India and the Far East; and, later, of another world in this very region, the Arab world, also pulsating with life; and, in the Indonesian waters, of the empire of Sri Vijaya,[19] a real bit of India abroad, where Indian culture was supreme and Indian art is said to

18. A weekly started in Bombay in 1890, and edited by K. Natarajan
19. The empire of Sri Vijaya spread from Sumatra to Malaya and parts of Indonesia between the 7th and the 13th centuries. It declined after the 13th century.

have reached its zenith. And I could also accompany you in thought across these vast spaces of Central Asia now and see the changes that time has wrought, and unearth from under the hot sands of the deserts the relics of ancient days which tell us so much of peoples and cultures and civilizations that have been long dead. And so I could go on and on to find an outlet for my suppressed energy till my long letter drives you to distraction and the jail authorities to something worse!

Mother has decided to go to Poona. I saw her a fortnight ago and found her looking older and more shrunk up than before. I hope you will not make her travel about. She wants rest. She was not very happy about her last place of residence in Poona. If it is possible perhaps she might stay elsewhere.

Kamala has at last left Calcutta after three and a half months of treatment there and yet she is more or less on ticket-of-leave. She is at Patna now staying with her brother for a few days. By the end of the month she might manage to reach here. She now intends staying in Dehra Dun for two or three months and Indu can join her during her holidays. We are a homeless and a scattered family!

As I am not a Harijan by birth or adoption I am clearly not entitled to a free copy of the paper. I am therefore asking Sarup to send a year's subscription and arrange to have the paper sent to me here direct. I understand that it is a permitted article.

I have been a sun worshipper during the winter months here and my body has put on the sun's livery. But spring has come now and the sun gets uncomfortably warm, and with the spring have come not only fresh leaves on the trees but hordes of flies, and my faith flags before this onset.

Ansari paid me a visit and thumped me about. It was good to see him again.

I have presumed greatly on the indulgence of the jail authorities by writing such a long letter. But presumption is an old failing of mine.

Love to you and your companions.

Yours affly.,
Jawaharlal

March 10 Friday

Spent nearly two days in writing to Bapu, Kamala etc. Quite long letters. The writing of them kept me in a somewhat tense condition of concentration. When they went off there was a reaction and a general loosening. Felt disinclined to do anything. Recovered the next day.

Kamala suggests that she might spend the summer in Dehra. The idea pleased me greatly for this means that I shall see her every two weeks. Meanwhile I await the next interview with her rather impatiently. It is nine months since I saw her.

References in the papers about the release of political prisoners irritate me. Of course the idea of going out of jail always brings a thrill. But I do not want to go a day sooner than my term. I have just six months more and that is barely enough to finish the work I have in hand. The letters to Indu become longer and longer and the end seems to recede I expected to finish them by the middle of January. I am doubtful now if I shall finish them by May!

I take life easily in jail now and do not overwork myself by any means. The daily regime is followed and by nightfall I am pleasantly tired. Almost I dread what will happen outside. There is sure to be strife and mutual conflict and party rivalry within the Congress, one saying this and the other that Fortunately the last year has driven away from the Congress a number of the parasites and job hunters. But they will begin to fawn again when the time comes.

The future seems so dark all over the world. Conflict and violence everywhere—in the Far East, in Germany.[20] I have almost brought myself to the frame of mind when a ten year sentence of imprisonment will make little difference! Life outside under present circumstances has little attraction, so why should jail frighten?

The fresh new leaves have come out on the trees. The weather is warming up and there is the spell of summer already in the air. Yet strangely the big peepuls here are almost without leaves. I do not remember having seen any peepul so bare at any time of the year.

March 12, Sunday

It is Holi today—All through the morning I heard sounds of revelry outside. Shouting and singing and dancing. I felt what a good festival Holi was and I felt a trifle lonely to be sitting all by myself when the world was dancing outside. I felt so even though I take no part in Holi outside. What then must the average prisoner feel on this day? He must be terribly homesick and lonesome. Holi is a holiday in jail which means that the prisoners are kept locked up nearly the whole day, there being no work for them.

20 Jehol in Inner Mongolia was occupied by Japan in March 1933, and the burning of the Reichstag on 27 February 1933 was the prelude to the establishment of the Nazi dictatorship

20 March 1933[21]

My dear Mother,

Received your letter. You had written that your hand shakes, but writing with that hand has not made much of a difference. I am able to read it quite easily. Please do not bother much about this.

I received the money sent by you. It is too much. I will not need any more for some time now.

I heard of your idea of going to Calcutta. It is all right; if you have any work there, go and stay till you think necessary. Go to Poona when you think it proper. There is no need to decide on the date of your return from now itself. It is upto you to decide. Stay as long as you wish and then come and see me. I would very much like to meet you. By then many days will have gone by.

My health is all right nowadays. The weather here is fine and even in summer it is not particularly hot. Even otherwise the summer does not bother me. You do know that I have roamed the villages in summer. Then what is the difficulty in my being here?

I knew, even earlier, the correct date of Naoroz. I have a Samvat diary which gives all this. Birthdays can also be found with its help. Happy Naoroz to you. You write about your difficulties and helplessness. Do not think in that way. This does not suit your dignity nor mine. We are all your children and you are the elder. If the children are a bit petulant or impolite then the elders must understand. There are yet a number of duties and obligations for all of us. So long as the allotted task is not over how can we retire?

Please let me know your Poona address.

I do not require anything in particular. I need a few articles for the summer, for which I have already written to Kamala.

Love,

Your son
Jawahar

March 20, 1933[22]

TO GIRDHARI LAL

My dear Girdhari,

I was glad to get your letter but your long continued illness worries me. You have been laid up now for a year and that is a terribly long

21. J.N. Correspondence, NMML. Original in Hindi.
22. JN Correspondence, NMML

In the afternoon suddenly, as I was dozing, my dhobi (who is not a prisoner) turned up to pay a Holi visit to me! It was a surprise, an extraordinarily pleasant surprise. We embraced and he sprinkled some gulal on me and presented me with a plateful of really good sweets. I was greatly touched.

Strange how suddenly a physical longing for the soft things of life comes on me—pleasant surroundings, good friends, agreeable women, interesting conversation. Reading a newspaper yesterday I came across some names of old acquaintances—and their pictures were there—and the old days when I was a student in England came before me—and a certain nostalgia—We live in different worlds and I have not seen some of them for a score of years. The dhobi who came to visit me is nearer to me than the princes & princesses of old....

Today we discovered two somewhat unwelcome visitors in my little barrack. There was a tiny snake, a baby one but said to be of a ferocious variety, and an enormous black scorpion, which looked fierce and poisonous. The scorpion was right under my bed. There was a thunderstorm last night. Perhaps this was the reason why they took refuge with us. This afternoon and evening we had hail—bigger than marbles. Falling on the corrugated iron sheets, it sounded like a bombardment going on.

I had never noticed before that fresh mango leaves are reddish-brown —russet coloured—remarkably like the autumn tints on the Kashmir hills. But they change colour soon and become green.

For a week or more one of the Afghan detenus—Amir Ayub Khan's son I think—has been kept in this jail. It appears that he got into a temper with some police official and said that within a few days he would return to Afghanistan. This was reported immediately to the lord of the district, Acton, than whom perhaps even the Indian Civil Service has not produced a more foolish knave. Acton forthwith had him locked up under Regulation III of 1818 or some such thing and so here he has been ever since. He is not allowed to meet his people and—a low down trick—has not even been allowed a change of clothes from his home. I have been seeing him from a distance during my evening walks but I kept my distance lest there might be further complications and the poor chap might get into trouble. This evening I came across him and had a few words with him. He was feeling pretty thin. All by himself—no clothes to change—wretched food etc. I have sent him some odd clothes—a tooth paste and soap, and he is vastly grateful for them!

I would suggest to you that you should try to gather material, as you can, and your note will help you in this. Do it quietly—no advertisement and the like You won't get anything worthwhile by advertisement. This is a big enough job. Having got together the material and classified it, then the time will come to consider how, and what part of it, should be presented in book form.

But for the present your job is to get well. Do this thoroughly and the rest will follow.

Love,

Jawaharlal Nehru
Yours affectionately,

March 20, 1933[23]

Nan darling,

This is to wish you and Betty a happy नौरोज [Naoroz] as well as the 364 और रोज[24]

Some days ago I was surprised and delighted to receive an envelope containing cut flowers from Ranjit. It was a brave thing to do, send cut flowers by post in this way, but many of them survived, and added to the beauty and colour of my little abode for many days. It was obvious that these flowers had been grown by Ranjit himself in his barrack in Bareilly jail. I was glad of this for I have seldom seen a more dismal place than that barrack where I spent four months and Ranjit has spent ten. One of the walls was reminiscent of Golconda or some other ancient fortress. But the flowers must have made a vast difference. And there were so many varieties!

I gather that Ranjit might go to Kashmir for a little holiday. I wish he would. One must freshen and tone up after a long spell of jail. I shall envy him a little; it is seventeen years since we were there, is it not? I am told that Hari Singh[25] has laid down boulevards near Srinagar and Dal lake is almost a thing of the past. But the call of Kashmir to me does not come from the boulevards — why not go to Paris or Berlin or beautiful Vienna, if you want boulevards and the like? No, the call comes from the higher valleys leading up to the glaciers and the snows, and the beautiful spring flowers and the autumn hues, and the lotus in bloom on the Dal lake. I was a little suprised to notice the other day

23 Vijayalakshmi Pandit Papers, N.M.M.L.
24. Other days.
25. (1895 1961); Maharaja of Jammu and Kashmir. His state acceded to India in 1947. He abdicated in favour of his son in June 1949.

time to be continuously ill. You have given Bombay a long enough chance and I think it is about time that you had a change. Ansari's advice was quite sound—you should go to Delhi. I am sure this change will do you good. Perhaps you have already gone there.

I am afraid I have no faith in vaids and hakims and the like, although I know that some of them are quite good and sometimes bring off astonishing cures. But to talk of curing Nasur by local application seems to me silly. Personally I would advise you to consult Ansari before you decide on a change in treatment. He has some knowledge of the unani and vaidic systems also although of course he is an allopath and practices only as such. Any doctor or vaid or hakim who talks of curing anything within a stated time by some patent method irritates me, as this is a most unscientific thing to say.

Kamala will be coming here soon—I have not seen her for nine and a half months now. The rest of the family is likely to be in Bombay or Poona after some days. Mother will be going to Poona. Ranjit is likely to go to Bombay when released.

The idea of writing father's life has occurred to many people—some are friends of ours—and they have asked me for help. I have told them that I shall give them such odd help as I can but it is not likely to be much. It was also suggested by a dear friend to me that I might utilise my time in prison by writing about father. I found myself wholly incapable of doing so. I had certain personal reasons for this But even apart from this it is an extraordinarily difficult task to write biography well. In France and England and Germany this is now done remarkably well. In India I am not aware of any book on such a subject which is even a third rate affair. The books that have appeared on Tilak, C. R. Das, Lajpat Rai and others are painful to contemplate—so poor in workmanship are they. All these made me hesitate to write anything on the subject myself, and naturally I was far from satisfied that others would do it as well as I should like it done. It is not a question of eulogising or praising a person. Anybody can do that. It is most difficult to produce a real picture of an almost living person. And for one who was intimately connected with great movements, the task becomes more difficult still, as it involves a true appraisal of complicated currents and under-currents.

Do not think I am writing this to discourage you in the idea you have got. I am merely pointing out to you some of the difficulties of the job which overwhelmed me. Reading through your analysis of the proposed work I felt quite lost. It read like an encyclopaedia—hardly like a vivid human being. One is apt to lose sight of the wood for the trees.

I would suggest to you that you should try to gather material, as you can, and your note will help you in this. Do it quietly—no advertisement and the like. You won't get anything worthwhile by advertisement. This is a big enough job. Having got together the material and classified it, then the time will come to consider how, and what part of it, should be presented in book form.

But for the present your job is to get well. Do this thoroughly and the rest will follow.

Love,

Jawaharlal Nehru
Yours affectionately,

March 20, 1933[23]

Nan darling,

This is to wish you and Betty a happy नौरोज [Naoroz] as well as the 364 और रोज[24]

Some days ago I was surprised and delighted to receive an envelope containing cut flowers from Ranjit. It was a brave thing to do, send cut flowers by post in this way, but many of them survived, and added to the beauty and colour of my little abode for many days. It was obvious that these flowers had been grown by Ranjit himself in his barrack in Bareilly jail. I was glad of this for I have seldom seen a more dismal place than that barrack where I spent four months and Ranjit has spent ten. One of the walls was reminiscent of Golconda or some other ancient fortress. But the flowers must have made a vast difference. And there were so many varieties!

I gather that Ranjit might go to Kashmir for a little holiday. I wish he would. One must freshen and tone up after a long spell of jail. I shall envy him a little; it is seventeen years since we were there, is it not? I am told that Hari Singh[25] has laid down boulevards near Srinagar and Dal lake is almost a thing of the past. But the call of Kashmir to me does not come from the boulevards—why not go to Paris or Berlin or beautiful Vienna, if you want boulevards and the like? No, the call comes from the higher valleys leading up to the glaciers and the snows, and the beautiful spring flowers and the autumn hues, and the lotus in bloom on the Dal lake. I was a little suprised to notice the other day

23 Vijayalakshmi Pandit Papers, N.M.M.L.
24. Other days.
25 (1895 1961), Maharaja of Jammu and Kashmir. His state acceded to India in 1947 He abdicated in favour of his son in June 1949.

a mango tree here looking reddish brown — a kind of russet. They were fresh new leaves in their youthful colouring and they reminded me of the autumn tints of the Kashmir hills.

So perhaps I shall envy Ranjit a little—not much! I think Ranjit is likely to envy me more. Tell him that I shall await the Rajatarangini translation in a typed copy.

The days are getting long and summer hovers in the air. It is pleasant. As a reminder of summer I had a somewhat unwelcome visitor yesterday—a huge black scorpion! I have bottled him up and am trying to feed him. But I can't find out what scorpions feed on. Can you help?

Give my love to Betty. Tell her not to keep late hours if she wants to get fit.

Love,

Your loving brother,
Jawahar

I hope you have got over your eye trouble.

March 25, Saturday

The Afghan was suddenly discharged on Monday last—the day after I had sent him the clothes etc. He took my clothes with him! Not that I grudge him the clothes but it was rather casual to march off with them without any reference to me. No one has a superfluity of clothing in jail.

Letter writing and receiving in jail are serious incursions on a peaceful and unruffled existence. They produce an emotional state which is disturbing. For a day or two afterwards my mind wanders and I cannot concentrate on the day's work. And sometimes little things in the letters I receive upset me out of all proportion to their importance. If I do not get a letter from home on the appointed day I am worried. And yet when it does come, I almost hesitate to open it. I play about with it as one does with an assured pleasure, and at the back of my mind there is also a trace of fear lest it contain any news or reference which might annoy me.

I am now looking forward to the interview with Kamala. I have no news yet when she will come but the C.I.D. have started visiting the jail already and informing the jailer that she is due!

I have grown very friendly with three puppies whom I have more or less adopted. It was really their mother that I took under my wing.

The poor lady was neglected and forlorn with no one to look after her or feed her. Some one had brought her from Calcutta a year ago and then deserted her. She gave birth to a litter of 8 puppies underneath a culvert in front of the jail gate. And she wandered about with fear and hunger in her eyes. I started feeding her. Most of her puppies were taken away but three remained and they began to share the food. We have all grown friends now. I have named them according to the names of playing cards:— दुरो, तिरो and चौका. The mother is बेगम.[26]

They spend the day mostly in my barrack. At night I used to send them to their culvert—the mother remaining with me—as they were messy and it has not been cold. Last night there was a rain storm and I felt very miserable at having sent them away, and could just imagine the rain driving them out of their shelter. As I was worrying about them, I heard a moaning sound and discovered that they were just outside my barrack gate trying to get in! I induced the warder to open the gate and take them in and they trooped in wet and bedraggled but happy at last. The whole family, mother and children, spent the night in my little room or cell while outside there was thunder and lightning and rain They have established their right to share my abode now.

The scorpion is flourishing in his bottle. All I do is to put some fresh earth in the bottle and a green leaf or two to cheer the brute up!

News has just come that Kamala will be here tomorrow—I am all excitement!

March 26, Sunday

Just as I was picking out a new razor blade to shave my best, news came that Kamala was not coming today but tomorrow. The day suddenly seemed very long. I had a bright idea that I might wash and clean up everything including the newar bed which has been given to me and which badly needs a wash. So the day was spent in rubbing and scrubbing, and taking the bed to pieces and washing the newar (several hundred feet of it), and generally in fairly continuous physical activity. We—two other convicts & I—began at 8 in the morning. At one I was quite exhausted and we broke off. After an hour or so we started again and did not finish finally till about six in the evening. Far the greater part of the time was spent on the bed or rather in cleaning the newar and then drying it & lastly weaving it on the bed.

26 Two, three, four and queen.

Being Sunday, I was fasting from the morning coffee etc. to the afternoon tea. Usually the day passes without my thinking of food, but today I was violently hungry—And the working in the sun gave me a troublesome headache—a most unusual thing for me.

However, the long day is past and with it passes the Samvat year 1889 for tomorrow is Naoroz and the new Samvat year begins. I shall meet it and Kamala with everything washed and scrubbed clean.

I complete fifteen months today!

March 27, Monday

Heigh—ho! She did not come today either. I have waited and waited and waited and no news has come. At last all that I got to know was that she had not even reached Dehra Dun and a crowd of people and a host of policemen returned from the station disappointed. No news —no news. I am full of apprehension and ugly fears about a breakdown in her health during the journey.

What a Naoroz!

December 28. Tuesday
March How muddle headed I have become!

She came today, and with her Ranjit who was released from Bareilly jail yesterday. It was good to see them both. I had a long interview. The jailer, as usual, was very decent. There is a feeling of reaction after the tension. I feel calmer and more at peace with the world than I have done for a long time.

March 30, Thursday

A letter from Indu—a real intimate letter. How it comforted me!

April 1st Saturday

News of mother's arrest at Asansol on the 31st morning at 3 a.m. on her way to Calcutta to attend the Congress session.[27] Also Malaviyaji, Rafi, Kesho and Mahmud. I am so glad mother was arrested. She must be pleased. Probably most of the people arrested will be let off in a few days.

27. Swarup Rani Nehru was arrested on 31 March 1933 at Asansol, en route to the Calcutta session of the Congress which had been banned by the Government of India. She was released on 3 April 1933.

It is just a week less than a year to the lathi charges and shooting in Allahabad when mother was hurt.[28]

4 April 1933[29]

My dear Mother,

I received your letter as well as the almonds and other articles you had sent with Kamala.

I came to know from the newspapers that you had started for Calcutta but were asked to get down at night at Asansol. Today I read that you have all been released and that you have left for Calcutta. You did right by going. That was the only thing to do. You must have been uncomfortable in the jail at Asansol. It was probably quite hot there.

I do not know what you intend doing now. Consult friends in Calcutta and then decide. I will know what you decide from the newspapers. You can send a letter to Kamala and I will get it.

I have received letters from Nan and Betty. Both of them are well. On 22 April Indu's school will close for the holidays. I want her to come to Dehra Dun as soon as the holidays start and stay here with Kamala. Kamala is renting a house. Nan has not yet decided where Chand and the others will spend their holidays. She will decide after meeting Ranjit. If she wants to bring them here or take them to Mussoorie, that can easily be arranged. It is possible that she keeps them at Bombay.

I have met Ranjit. He did well by coming here directly and meeting me, for we may not have another opportunity for long. You too may have met Ranjit for a short while on the day you left for Calcutta.

The weather here is very fine. I am well.

Last year in April, you were injured on the head. This April you have had another kind of experience—congratulations!

Much love,

Your son
Jawahar

28 See ante, p. 380.
29 J N Correspondence, NMML. Original in Hindi.

April 12. Wednesday

Kamala came yesterday and I had a good interview. I was much agitated by the account of a letter which, according to The Bombay Chronicle, Bapu had sent to the Viceroy.[30] It was an amazing letter, some touches which seemed to be his own and yet the statements in it were astounding. I would not have believed in the letter at all but the 'Chronicle' was hardly the paper to publish such a thing without basis. I came to the conclusion that some letter had been sent and the extracts did not do full justice to it. Even so I was angry with Bapu—very angry. I had done him an injustice and today's paper announces that the whole thing was a hoax![31] What a weight off my mind.

Kamala is spoiling me completely. She sends fresh and beautiful roses daily almost and I am surrounded by fragrance and colour and beauty.

My puppies have been causing me a deal of anxiety. They have all been ill. They are thin now and cough away and look miserable, especially one which is my favourite. I have just discovered that they swallowed a small dead snake some time ago. I wonder if this was the origin of all their troubles.

April 21 Friday

One of the puppies— दुरो [two]—continues ill and I have been nursing her almost like a child. Sometimes I get up a dozen times in the course of the night to see if I can do anything when she coughs away. My nights have been very disturbed. I am inclined to think that she has past the crisis and will recover. I feel happy about this.

There have been thunderstorms and rain. Our old friend the brain fever bird has turned up. There are so many other birds also, notably the koel.

It is quite cold still. Surprising in the second half of April.

30. In the letter published in The Bombay Chronicle on 8 April, Mahatma Gandhi was said to have appealed to the Viceroy "for a great gesture from the government"

31 On 11 April, the Home Member in the Legislative Assembly denied any such correspondence between Mahatma Gandhi and the Viceroy.

5.5.33[32]

My dear Bapu,

Your letter came today.[33] I was half expecting it for your large heart never permits you to forget any one. I have sent you a telegram already.[34]

As my telegram will indicate, I feel utterly at a loss and do not know what I can say to you. Religion is not familiar ground for me, and as I have grown older I have definitely drifted away from it. I suppose I have something else in its place, something other than just intellect and reason, which gives me strength and hope. Apart from this indefinable and indefinite urge, which may have just a tinge of religion in it and yet is wholly different from it, I have grown to rely entirely on the workings of the mind. Perhaps they are weak supports to rely upon, but, search as I will, I can see no better ones. Religion seems to me to lead to emotion and sentimentality and they are still more unreliable guides. Intuition—undoubtedly there is such a thing, though where it comes from I cannot say; perhaps from the stored up experiences at the back of the mind, the sub-conscious self.

The Harijan question is bad, very bad, but it seems to me incorrect to say that there is nothing so bad in all the world. I think I could point to much that was equally bad and even worse. All over the world there is the same Harijan question in various forms. Is it not the outcome of special causes? Surely it is due to something more than mere ignorance and ill will. To remove these causes or to neutralise their effect appears to be the only way to deal with the roots of the matter. But why should I write of these matters now! I do not want to argue in this letter as the stage for argument seems to be past.

It is hard to be so far from you, and yet it would be harder to be near you. This crowded world is a very lonely place, and you want to make it still lonelier. Life and death matter little, or should matter little. The only thing that matters is the cause that one works for, and if one could be sure that the best service to it is to die for it, then death would seem simpler. I have loved life—the mountains and the sea, the sun and rain and storm and snow, and animals, and books

32. J N. Correspondence, N M M L.

33 In his letter of 2 May 1933, Mahatma Gandhi wrote. "The Harijan movement is too big for a mere intellectual effort. There is nothing so bad in all the world and yet I cannot leave religion and therefore Hinduism...but then I cannot tolerate it with untouchability. Fortunately Hinduism contains a sovereign remedy for the evil."

34. See post, pp. 474 475.

and art, and even human beings—and life has been good to me. But the idea of death has never frightened me; from a distance it seems fitting enough as the crown of one's endeavour. Yet, at close quarters, it is not pleasant to contemplate.

The last fourteen or fifteen years have been a wonderful time for me, ever since I had the good fortune to be associated with you in various activities. Life became fuller and richer and more worthwhile, and that is a dear and precious memory which nothing can take from me. And whenever the future happens to be dark, this vision of the past will relieve the gloom and give strength.

All my love to you,

Yours affly.,
Jawahar

Kamala is staying in Dehra Dun. I shall communicate your message to her.

May 8. Monday

Bapu has begun his twenty-one day fast today.[35] When the first news of the proposed fast came a week ago I had a shock but I recovered soon. Three days ago came Bapu's letter—a typical cry from the heart which bowled me over and I had quite an emotional crisis. I sent him a telegram which I did not like at all. My mind was in a muddle. This was the telegram:

> Your letter. What can I say about matters I do not understand. I feel lost in strange country where you are only familiar landmark and I try to grope my way in dark but I stumble. Whatever happens my love and thoughts will be with you. Jawahar.

I wrote to him also that day.

This evening I felt suddenly that I must send him another and a more cheerful message. The jailer was good enough to agree and I sent the following telegram:

35 On 1 May Mahatma Gandhi announced his intention of commencing a fast for 21 days from 8 May in connection with Harijan work. In a statement issued to the press, Mahatma Gandhi said that the fast was directed against nobody in particular but was prayer for the purification of himself and his associates.

Now that you are launched on your great enterprise may I send you again love and greetings and assure you that I feel more clearly now that whatever happens it is well and whatever happens you win. Jawahar.

I feel better after having sent this.

Tomorrow morning he is likely to be released.[36] Whether he lives through his fast or succumbs to it, the old order has ended and India will be different.

I began spinning again today, I had not spun for two or three months.

23.5.33[37]

TO MAHADEVA DESAI

My dear Mahadeva,

I was very happy to receive your letter. It is really wonderful how Bapu has stood this fast. Somehow, by sheer will power, he has made an extremely difficult thing look easy. When first I heard of his decision I had, naturally, a shock and it seemed to me almost tantamount to a death sentence. And yet even then, strange to say, it never struck me that he should be dissuaded from it, although you know that I cannot appreciate the religious significance of it. But I felt perfectly sure in my mind that Bapu having decided and proclaimed his decision there was no other way out except through the fiery ordeal. Constituted as he is he could not do otherwise, any other course then would have been a betrayal of one's own nature and one's life record. So I was clear enough that the thing had to be done. And yet I worried of course about the consequences and I also fretted about these strange methods which were beyond my comprehension, and which turned people's attention to, what I would call, the 'magic' way of doing things. This leads people inevitably to give up troubling their minds for solutions of problems and await for miracles. There is so much of this magic in our lives—every person who is ill always tries to get some nostrum, or magic remedy, which will suddenly put him right. He pays little attention to the causes of ill health or to the rules of nature which he is continually breaking. I have developed a horror

36 Mahatma Gandhi was released on 8 May. A government communique said that he had been released in view of the nature and object of the fast he was undertaking and the attitude of mind which it disclosed.

37 Gandhi Smarak Sangrahalaya, Serial No 21334.

of nostrums and the like. Almost I had sooner be ill than get well by some such fluke. And the same argument carries me to a wider sphere.

I was exceedingly irritated at odd people with too great a conceit of themselves, from the Dorchester Mansions[38] downwards, sending Bapu cables and telegrams to give up the fast. It was Rajagopalachari's and Devadas's right and privilege to try to induce Bapu. But this other crowd is past my endurance. Why don't they stick to their last or rather their mess of pottage?

I have read Rolland's Le jeu d l'amour et de la mort. I read it last year during this imprisonment. It is indeed a tremendous little thing. I wish you would send me a copy of the original letter Rolland has sent Bapu. As a matter of fact I have already made a cutting of the English translation appearing in the papers. But Rolland's French is so beautiful that I would like to see it.

I am glad you left Strachey's[39] book with Vallabhbhai. The book was meant for both of you, and even for Bapu if he would spare the time. I knew nothing of the fast then. It contains a remarkably cogent argument pointing almost to an inevitable conclusion. I have read a good many other books bearing on this subject and I must say that it has grown on me. This explanation of the course of events has given a meaning to history—to the past as well as to the future. I have had a lot to do with history during the past eighteen months. Sometimes I share your mood about the future:

Voyez vous pas que la nuit est profonde, et que le monde
N'est que souci?[40]

Sang a girl when her lover left her for the wars, and the song has a larger significance. And yet this new appreciation of history and man's destiny has given me a great deal of strength and clear headedness. And being somewhat of a vagabond—I notice that Kantilal[41] has been sentenced as a vagrant! a Behaya. I worry little about these 'slings and arrows of outrageous fortune!'

38 Among others, Sapru and Jayakar cabled to Mahatma Gandhi from London on 5 May 1933: "Deeply concerned news your fasting. Earnestly press reconsideration. Eradication dependent upon your life. Enthusiasm wise leadership"

39 John Strachey (1901 1963); British left wing author and politician His books included The Coming Struggle for Power, The Nature of Capitalist Crisis, A Programme for Progress.

40 Do you not see that the night is dark and that the world is nothing but anxiety?

41 Grandson of Mahatma Gandhi, arrested on 8 May 1933.

There is an interesting book which I should like you to read, if you have not read it already. It is Niebuhr's Moral Man and Immoral Society.[42] Shall I send it? and if so where?

For over a year the books that I read, or some of them at least, went a round of other prisons, to Samp and Krishna and Ranjit. This process has now stopped and so I began with you but you have got yourself released! I am having a book sent to Vallabhbhai about the Middle East—Egypt, Syria, Iraq, Palestine etc.—recent events there. It is really extraordinary how the same thing occurs over and over again in different countries.

I have been getting a few foreign periodicals here and for the first time after many years I have had the time to read them carefully and so I have gathered all manner of information and can discourse learnedly about almost any country from China to Peru. For six months I paid homage to German—no good—somehow I made very little progress. And now with the bounder Hitler[43] and his Nazis I have begun to hate the language almost!

Love,

Yours affly.,
Jawaharlal Nehru

30.5.1933[44]

TO DEVADAS GANDHI

My dear Devadas,

Thank you for your telegram informing me of the ending of Bapu's great fast.[45] It has been a wonderful thing, the way Bapu has faced and conquered this trial. 'Man doth not yield himself to the angels or even unto death save by the weakness of his feeble will', says an ancient writing, and Bapu has shown how a mighty will can hold together a frail body and bend it to a desired purpose.

I am writing to you after a long time, nearly two years it must be. I have long wanted to tell you how happy I was to learn of your 42 Reinhold Niebuhr, American Protestant theologian and social critic, his book Moral Man & Immoral Society was published in 1932.

43 Adolf Hitler (1889-1945), leader of the Nazi party and dictator of Germany from 1933; outlined his policies in his political testament, Mein Kampf, written during his imprisonment in 1923, after Germany's defeat in the war of 1939-45, committed suicide in a bunker in Berlin.

44 Gandhi Smarak Sangrahalaya, Serial No. 2015.

45 Mahatma Gandhi broke his 21 days fast on 29 May 1933.

engagement to Lakshmi.[46] I have hardly spoken to her but she struck me, whenever I saw her, as a very dignified and charming girl. You are fortunate and deserve congratulations—and so does she.

For a fortnight or so in January 1932 Bernard Aluwihare was with me in Naini Prison. He told me much that was interesting about Bapu's stay in England and especially about the doings of the members of his family. He has gone and got married now, I understand, and has returned to his ancestral haunts in Ceylon.

Love,

Yours affly.,
Jawaharlal

June 4, Sunday

I am writing here after a long gap. The great fast is over and Bapu has survived. On the day of his discharge, which was the first day of the fast, May 8th, he suspended civil disobedience for six weeks. I received this announcement with mixed feelings. A shock—and then a willing acceptance of the fact with some misgivings about the phraseology of his statement.[47]

As I watched the emotional upheaval during the fast I wondered more and more if this was the right method in politics. It is sheer revivalism and clear thinking has not a ghost of a chance against it. All India, or most of it, stares reverently at the Mahatma and expects him to perform miracle after miracle and put an end to untouchability and get Swaraj and so on—and does nothing itself! And Bapu goes on talking of purity and sacrifice. I am afraid I am drifting further and further away from him mentally, in spite of my strong emotional attachment to him. His continual references to God irritate me exceedingly. His political actions are often enough guided by an unerring instinct but he does not encourage others to think. And even he, has he thought out what the objective, the ideal, should be. Very probably not. The next step seems to absorb him.

46 Daughter of C. Rajagopalachari.

47 The decision suspending civil disobedience was taken on Mahatma Gandhi's release on 8 May, after consulting acting Congress President M. S. Aney. Mahatma Gandhi pointed out, "How can I take advantage of this release in order to prosecute the civil disobedience or to guide it, as the purpose of the fast will be frustrated if I allowed my brain to be occupied by any extraneous matter, that is any matter outside the Harijan work."

What a tremendous contrast to the dialectics of Lenin & Co! More and more I feel drawn to their dialectics, more and more I realise the gulf between Bapu & me and I begin to doubt if this way of faith is the right way to train a nation. It may pay for a short while, but in the long run?

And then I cannot understand how he can accept, as he seems to do, the present social order; how he surrounds himself with men who are the pillars and the beneficiaries of this order. They talk lovingly of 'Bapu' but do not take any risks. How can we get anything worthwhile with these people as our hangers-on? No doubt they will profit and take advantage of both our movement and of any constitutional changes that may come. They always prosper till the final reckoning comes.

I want to break from this lot completely—I want to place our ideal crystal clear before the people. But Bapu always talks of compromise and his sweet reasonableness deludes people and befogs their minds.

There is trouble ahead so far as I am personally concerned. I shall have to fight a stiff battle between rival loyalties. Perhaps the happiest place for me is the gaol! I have another three months here before I go out, and one can always return.

Meanwhile C.D. is suspended and the next week or ten days will probably decide what will take place in the immediate future. I hope Bapu goes back to Yeravda.

Purushottamdas Tandon has come out and—horror of horrors!—has joined an organisation for the relief of kisans, with Malaviyaji as president and C. Y. Chintamani as vice president![48] This is the way to carry on the fight and these are our comrades in the struggle.

I think often of M. N. Roy. The poor chap is so lonely in the world with hardly any one to give a thought to him. Even his old colleagues the communists have discarded him and run him down. With incipient T.B. he lies in Bareilly Central Prison in this heat, probably in solitary confinement.

After many, many months I have had a chance of talking to an intellectual person in jail. Ever since Govind Ballabh Pant went my conversation with other people in jail has been of the most simple and non-intellectual variety.

The new comer is a Madrasi, one Pandit Anant Narain. He has not come as a civil resister but in some defamation case. He was the editor of a paper—The Indian States Reformer, or some such name—and he criticised a massacre of tenants by the State forces in Tehri last year. Result—one year and a heavy fine. Another person, named Chandola,[49] has come with him although his case was a different one. He was the editor of a Hindi paper, a very loyal paper, but the Tehri State has roped him in also. Chandola overflows so much with loyalty that, as a Garhwali, he strongly condemned the Garhwali regiment which refused to fire in 1930 in Peshawar. Naturally he keeps away from me, lest his reputation for loyalty suffer, and I am thankful to him for this mercy.

48 Arrested on 9 December 1932 for addressing a meeting on Lajpat Rai day, he was released on 1 June 1933, became the vice president of the Peasants' Relief Committee

But Anant Narain & I walk together morning and evening and I have had quite a number of interesting talks. He is well informed and he has told me much about Travancore, where he comes from. For nearly two months he & Chandola were kept inside the jail here & I did not see them. Then they were brought out and put in the European barrack. The stories he has told me of the doings inside the jail surprised me and the jailer has gone down in my estimation. According to A. N. he is the arch hypocrite! The others are outwardly more violent, and all are up to their necks in bribery and corruption. What a sink of iniquity are the jails in India!

I have had a little argument with the jailer. Chandola has been given A class, being a loyalist, Anant Narain (who has been fined 1200/-) has been put in B class. The jailer will not give writing materials to Anant Narain. Everywhere that I know of B class prisoners have been given writing materials. I told the jailer so but he takes refuge in a circular from Govt. dated April 1932 which says that A class prisoners may be supplied with notebooks, writing materials etc. at their expense The inference is that B class not being mentioned in this circular are expressly excluded. As a matter of fact long before this circular A & B class both were getting writing materials etc. The matter will not end here.

The interesting part of it is that the object of the jail authorities seems to be to harass Anant Narain and Chandola, with the object ultimately perhaps of making money out of Chandola. They want to isolate Chandola first.

49. Editor, printer and publisher of a newspaper called Garhwali.

June 7, Wednesday

Interview yesterday with Kamala, mother, Indu, Nan and, to my surprise, Prabha. Prabha recently discharged before her time from Lucknow Central Jail. The poor girl had already spent sixteen months there.

Indu going off today to Allahabad and Poona, so I shall not see her again for several months. It has been good to have four successive interviews with her.

Today I spoke to Dr. Bhargava, the acting Supt, about the question of B class privileges. I warmed up rather and the poor jailer seemed to feel a bit small.

I complete a year today in this Dehra Dun jail. June 7th 1932 I came here and since then I have lived in my little room continuously. What a thought-infested place this room must be. And how I know every inch of it, every marking, every hollow on the floor, the walls or the ceiling. Three months and a week more—less than a hundred days —and I march out. Perhaps earlier, though I hope not. Yet somehow I have a feeling that I shall go out earlier.

My series of 'Letters to Indu' goes on and on. I had expected to finish them in December and then in January, and yet here I am in June as far off from the end as ever. Or almost as far off. Perhaps by the end of July I might see the end of them. I sometimes feel a little weary of them, but they have helped me wonderfully in getting through the last fifteen months or so in prison. What will I do when I finish them? Not during this term, as I shall not have much time left, but during my next assay which may not be far off. Why worry about it now?

13.6.33[50]

Betty darling,

I was very glad to get your letter. It is not necessary for you to make a point of writing to me at stated intervals. Regular news of your welfare is enough for me though of course it is a delight to have letters and the personal touch which they bring. But letters should never be made a task or they lose their flavour.

I am glad Mussoorie has suited you and you have flourished, physically at any rate. Physical health is a tremendous help in getting a suitable kick-off in life and some degree of mental equilibrium. Of course mental health does not always follow even physical fitness but it is almost never found with bodily illness or unfitness.

50. Nehru's Letters To His Sister, (London, 1963) pp. 29 31.

As I read your letter I was suddenly made acutely conscious of a contrast. I felt as if I had been pulled out of my familiar surroundings of thought and ideas and dreams—for action is denied me in the present—and taken to a strange place where phantom figures moved to and fro trying to live the 'gay life'. The gay life! The strange quest for something in the market place, something which cannot be measured in terms of gold and silver and is not to be found, search as you may, in the gaily-bedecked stalls; the pursuit of a shadow which eludes us for shadows are always elusive; the frantic attempt to possess the beauty of the living rose by grasping it too tightly and crushing it to death. Mussoorie is but a score of miles away from where I sit and write this letter, and the contrast between life at Mussoorie and life in my little high-walled and thought-infested abode is great enough. But greater still is the contrast, I felt, between the thoughts and desires and passions of the phantom figures that flit on the hilltop and the other phantom that sits and reads and writes and imagines all manner of things. So as I read your letter, reality, if such a thing there is, melted away from me and I fell to musing in a ghostly world of phantoms in which I myself was but a shadow figure. And I saw a procession of Rajas and Ranis and their satellites and parasites dancing away in a veritable danse macabre for they danced on a seething mass of hungry and famine stricken humanity, and their dance led to a sudden precipice over which they toppled, and vanished from the scene. They were rather pitiful figures, relics of a bygone age, trying bravely to keep up appearances but doomed to inevitable extinction.

But then, I wondered, what of the other phantoms? Have they a better fate in store for them? And that led me to strange phantasies, full of an incongruous mixture of doubt and assurance. But why should I inflict my phantasies on you?

It seemed to me so strange to read in your letter of people who have no aim in life. Of course, there are many such people but you will find that as a class these people are apt to become or rather to be parasites on society. It is only then that they can afford the luxury of no aim. The vast majority of people have no grand aims but the day to day struggle of life absorbs them. And as for others surely the fault is nobody's but their own if they flit about aimlessly and disconsolately. It is not a question of equipment; equipment helps in making one's activities more effective. It is a question of a twist in the mind. Life is not a very gentle or considerate teacher. If one allows oneself to drift about on the surface of the waters, the waves and the tides are apt to knock one against the rocks, but a good swimmer can even ride the storm.

I am myself so consumed by my own aim and objective that I find it extraordinarily difficult to appreciate the want of aim of anybody. Even apart from my personal obsession, I find the world today an absorbing and fascinating place to live in. We live in an age of mighty changes and terrible conflicts, when hope and despair fight for mastery in each thinking mind. A person who is not affected by these events and who has no desire to take part in them, is hardly a live person intellectually.

None of us can say with assurance what the future will bring. Within the next few years there may even be another mighty war which will reduce modern civilization to dust and ashes. But whatever may happen and whether our dreams come true or remain but dreams, there are some things which help us to guide life's journey. Life is a short enough affair; it is too short for us to make it petty or cheap. Let us not cheapen ourselves but live in the grand manner for the big things in life, and then the vicissitudes of fortune will matter little, and even if we have to go to the guillotine we shall do so like some of the French nobles a hundred and forty years ago (that is the only decent thing they did!) with grace and dignity and a smile on our lips.

Love,

Your loving brother
Jawahar

June 18. Sunday

I had a special interview last Sunday with Birju Bhai, Birju Bhabhi and Ballo I saw Birju Bhai after three and a half years, also Ballo. How he has grown and changed—I would hardly have known him. There was so much to talk about—their extensive travels in Europe and happenings in India...

A letter from Betty from Mussoorie talking of the 'gay life'—of rajas & ranis etc. Oh, what a subject to write to me about at any time and especially in jail!

I suppose it was this accumulation of unhappiness and nerves that led me to speak angrily to the acting supt—Dr. Bhargava. The subject was the old one of 'B' class privileges—Anant Narain & writing facilities etc. I cursed the whole jail department up and down and called it a sink of iniquity, and a hotbed of bribery and corruption and violence, and said that if I had the power I would smash it into little bits! He listened meekly enough, rather taken aback, but a day later Anant Narain was transferred from the European barrack to the hospital inside on the ground of ill health—as if the closed-in hospital was a better place for him. The idea apparently was to keep him from seeing me. Last night he was transferred to Fyzabad.

So again I have nobody to talk to.

Aney—what a general to have for a campaign! The six weeks of the suspension of C.D. are nearly over and nobody knows what will happen. And Bapu lies slowly recovering from his fast, very weak still. When I think of all this indecision and patent weakness and submission to wrong doing, I feel very angry. In the Andamans, hunger-striking politicals have died and are dying,[51] and arrests are being made in India of those who protest against this. And Sastri talks of the wonders of the British connection and the British love of fair play and their tolerance. He refers to the barbarities in Italy, Germany & Russia —Not a word about India.

Am I a lunatic or is India full of lunatics that they can tolerate the Sastris and Saprus, not to mention those who grovel even more abjectly before the imperial power?

June 19. Monday

Civil disobedience again suspended for six weeks—to end of July![52] And among the mighty ones so deciding was G. D. Birla! Heigh ho! This is a funny world and not an easy place to live in. Perhaps jail is best.

June 23. Friday

Malaviyaji managed to get a special interview with me today. He was on his way to Mussoorie for rest. He looked a frail shadow—so weak and thin. I saw him after a long time. Brave and indomitable old man!

51. On 12 May twenty-nine prisoners convicted of terrorist crimes went on a hunger strike in the cellular jails, Andamans, to protest against their grievances not being redressed. Three prisoners died between 17 May and 28 May.
52. On 17 June civil disobedience was again suspended for another six weeks "in view of the present state of health of Mahatma Gandhi."

I had quite a long and frank interview with him. The jailer was present but I told him all I had in my heart. I was glad of the opportunity and felt relieved at having spoken to some outsider of importance.

I was not very surprised to learn of the demoralisation outside. It is fairly evident. The nationalist Muslims seem to be most afflicted by it—Ansari, Sherwani, Khaliq. But I was surprised and a bit disheartened to learn that Rafi was of this number—but I refuse to believe this. Malaviyaji must be mistaken. Another amazing piece of news was that these N.Ms took exception to Devadas's marriage with Lakshmi on the ground, apparently, that he should have married a Harijan! This is the most extraordinary objection that could be raised—and from Ansari, Tasadduq etc. It passes one's comprehension. What a curious lot we are.

For the world which seems
To lie before us, like a land of dreams,
So various, so beautiful, so new,
Hath really neither joy, nor love, nor light,
Nor certitude, nor peace, nor help for pain;
And we are here, as on a darkling plain
Swept with confused alarms of struggle and flight,
Where ignorant armies clash by night.[53]

June 27, 1933[54]

Nan darling,

I gather that you are all descending from the heights tomorrow, so perhaps this letter will catch you on your way. By the time my next interview takes place you will be in Allahabad. I shall therefore not see you again till I am discharged from jail, which in the ordinary course will take place in the second week of September. I hope however that I shall have a glimpse of the children before they go down.

Ranjit's visit to Kashmir has been an extraordinarily short one. He hardly had a week there. I read somewhere that Stein,[55] the archaeologist and translator of the Rajatarangini, was in Kashmir this summer. Ranjit would have liked to meet him.

53 From Dover Beach by Matthew Arnold.
54 Vijayalakshmi Pandit Papers, N.M.M.L.
55 Aurel Stein, translated Kalhana's Rajatarangini which was published in 1900.

Indu is enthusiastic about the new school house in Poona. The address is a bit of a mouthful but so long as the place itself is good, any address can be tolerated.

I have not received my foreign papers for two weeks. I suppose there was no one to forward them after Ranjit left. Will you please push them on? I am a close student of foreign affairs and I do not want to miss any number of these papers.

I saw in the Pioneer Ranjit's notice to the publicity man and the latter's expression of regret.[56] This is all right but he must be made to disclose where he got his peculiar information from. This is not Ranjit's job, but there are many ways of doing so.

I am sending Thomas Mann's The Magic Mountain for Betty. This is one of Padmaja's books. It is a Nobel Prize winner but Mann is now a refugee from Germany under the Nazi regime.

Love,

Your loving brother,
Jawahar

July 4 Tuesday

Interview today with Kamala and mother. To my surprise Jugal Kishore also turned up from Poona. I gave him a bit of my mind about the Congress bosses outside. Quite frank and more than frank. Anyway my viewpoint will be known at the meeting called for July 14 around Poona.[57] I feel glad of this. The outburst relieved me. And then soon after I felt how foolish it all was!

Kamala and mother probably going away soon also—K to Lucknow & Poona and mother to Allahabad. So this was the last interview for a while.

56 For the clerical error made in the publication of the judgement on Meerut Conspiracy Case in the U.P. Government paper, R. S. Pandit, as counsel for the accused in the case, had demanded and secured an apology.

57 The informal conference of Congressmen called by M S Aney, the acting President of the Congress, on 12 July rejected the proposal for the unconditional withdrawal of civil disobedience movement but authorised Mahatma Gandhi to meet the Viceroy for arriving at a settlement. Mahatma Gandhi sent a telegram on 15 July 1933 to the Viceroy asking for an interview. The Viceroy replied that the government would not enter into any negotiations till the Congress withdrew the civil disobedience movement.

There is talk of my release in August. The papers mention Aug 14th. This would be a month before the usual time as, in the ordinary course, my discharge is due on Sept 12th. The idea apparently is that if all goes well from the point of view of Govt., the Supt. should be made to give me an extra month's remission, which he is entitled to. But all is not likely to go well and so I doubt if I shall go out before September. Meanwhile large numbers of Congress prisoners are being released before their time all over the country to show low figures at the end of the month.

After the excitement of the interview felt depressed. Spent the whole day in a cheerless condition. It has been very hot & close also. Perhaps the idea that there was no interview in the near future oppressed me.

A new superintendent took over charge of the jail yesterday from Dr. Bhargava, the acting Supt. The new one also acting for a few weeks or months till Reinhold comes back. He is an I.M.S. Officer attached to some regiment here. He turned out to be an extraordinarily unattractive looking man.

July 6. Thursday

The children came today to see me on their way down from Mussoorie to Allahabad—Chand, Tara & Rita. I had a delightful half an hour's unofficial interview with them. Tara insisted on mounting on my shoulder as she used to do—and Chand was so grown-up and talked so wisely. Rita as usual was distant—She hardly knows me. I was told—the reminder was hardly necessary!—that I was getting old as my hair was mostly grey. As they were leaving I could hardly restrain my tears, and after they had gone there was no restraining them! An unusual occurrence for me. It was the touch of home life that upset me.

Later, I received a letter from Indu from Poona. The little one has got a strange knack of putting in a sentence here and there which pleases me and even tickles my vanity. 'I can never express myself well in letters', she writes. 'But there is a strange pleasure in writing to you. I feel I am in quite another and a very happy world.' How joyous and light-hearted I felt when I read this.

July 9 Sunday

Yesterday Malaviyaji suddenly appeared again, accompanied by the new Supt. He was on his way to Poona from Mussoorie to attend the fateful meeting there. How difficult it is to understand each other. We move in different worlds of thought. I talk to him about the effect of world conditions on India and of the danger of our forgetting this in our preoccupations with petty affairs here. I mentioned that the whole future of England, the British Empire, & Europe was hanging in the balance and so on. Of course, of course, he said, and then went on to make a remark which made it obvious that he had not come within a hundred miles of my meaning. Indian politics still mean for him more or less what they were a generation ago. But he is a brave and persevering person. He looked better after his fortnight's stay in Mussoorie.

I have changed my mind about the new Supt. How first impressions mislead! On this the second occasion that I saw him he did not look at all as unattractive as I had imagined him to be! He sat through our interview trying to follow our conversation in Hindi. Malaviyaji offered, quite unnecessarily, to talk in English but the Supt. told him to carry on in any language he liked. We talked pretty frankly. I wonder if the Supt. got any idea of what I was saying. I doubt it.

July 10. Monday

I was exhibited to some British officers of a Gurkha regiment here today. The Supt. brought them along with him. There was no conversation; we merely looked at each other from a distance. This kind of exhibition makes me feel like an animal at the zoo!

July 18. Tuesday

Today would have been my interview day if Kamala had been here. But it turned out to be a blank day in more senses than one.

I read, a day or two ago, of the result of the Poona Conference, with some relief. It was nothing to shout about but at any rate it was not humiliating. After some days of tension, with my mind full of forebodings, I felt lighter. This morning I read the Viceroy's reply to Bapu and Bapu's second telegram.[58] This second telegram upset me completely and I have had a bad day. 'Peace', 'Honourable Peace!' What about? With whom & on what basis? It is amazing how flabby-minded our people have got. They meet in Poona at a critical moment after nearly 2 years and they do not even trouble to discuss, much less lay down, the objective before us Only talks of peace with a govt. that has insulted us in every way.

I am getting more & more certain that there can be no further political cooperation between Bapu and me. At least not of the kind that has existed. We had better go our different ways. My way will keep me in jail. That is dull work and depressing, but perhaps it is as well.

July 24. Monday

Had an interview with Kamala yesterday—unexpected. She returned from Poona and Bombay sooner than I had thought she would. Her account of happenings in Poona not very cheering.

Had a letter from Bapu today from Ahmedabad. He enquired about Betty.

Saw a new animal this evening when I was walking up and down outside the jail gate. A forest-dweller was marching along with this—a kind of an enormous lizard two feet long with claws and a tough scaly covering. Bo- बो —he called it.[59] Said he was going to make bhujji of it and eat it!

July 25. Tuesday

A shock—to learn of J. M. Sen Gupta's death.[60] My mind went back to the day 25½ years ago in Cambridge when I first met him.

Wrote to Mrs Nellie Sen Gupta[61] and to Bapu.

58. To the Viceroy's reply to his telegram of 15 July 1933, Mahatma Gandhi wrote on 17 July: "I had not expected that the government would take any notice of the unauthorised publications of the confidential proceedings of the informal conference and on the basis of that reject the request for an interview If an interview were granted I could show that the proceedings taken as a whole were calculated to bring about honourable peace."

59 A pangolin

60 He died in detention at Ranchi on 23 July 1933.

61 (1885 1973), wife of J M Sen Gupta, presided over the Congress session of 1933 at Calcutta which had been declared unlawful, awarded the Padma Vibhushan in 1973

25.7.33[62]

TO NELLIE SEN GUPTA

My dear Mrs. Sen Gupta,
I learnt only this morning with a great shock of Sen Gupta's sudden death. For many years now we had worked in close comradeship, but my thoughts went back to a far-off day, towards the end of 1907, when I first met J. M. in Cambridge. I was a new comer there and he was soon to leave. That was nearly 26 years ago, and life brought strange and rich experiences to both of us during these many years, and now that the break of an old bond has come, it is hard to bear. It is harder to think that we shall not have him any more to share the heat and burden of the day and to give wise counsel in times of difficulty.

For you this sudden passing away must come as a terrible shock. Words are but poor consolation, but it is some consolation to think of death coming in the midst of high endeavour, a fitting though still unhappy end to a life devoted to a great cause.

Yours very sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

25.7.33[63]

My dear Bapu,
I received your note yesterday.

Mother's anxiety about Krishna is natural. It is the anxiety of any mother, more specially a Hindu mother, and it concerns itself chiefly with the desire of getting her daughter suitably married. She would have liked to see her married among the Kashmiris and failing that among Brahmans. The idea that Krishna should marry somebody who is not even a Brahman is more than she can comfortably swallow. So far as I am concerned the question of K's marriage does not worry me so much, although I certainly think about it. My views about it are the exact opposite of mother's. I would welcome as wide a break from old custom as possible. The Kashmiri community as a whole

62 JN Correspondence, NMML.
63 JN Correspondence, N.M.M.L.

(there are exceptions of course in it) disgusts me; it is the very epitome of the petty bourgeois vices which I detest. I am not particularly interested in a person being a Brahman, a non-Brahman or anything else. As a matter of fact, I fail to see the relevance of all this; one marries an individual, not a community. And then all this is beside the mark as the decision is going to be Krishna's, not mother's or mine, and it is quite impossible to treat a grown up girl in any other way.

I do not quite know what any of us can do in the matter. From a letter I had from Krishna a few days ago I gathered that she was waiting for me to come out to tell me something on the subject. I can make no definite guess till I know what is in her mind. But she seems to be pleased about it. If she has a clear preference and there is no insuperable objection (and I cannot imagine any such) the matter will, I take it, be settled that way. I shall write to you as soon as I know more.

I do not know if you have heard of a proposed marriage in our family. My cousin Braj Lal's son,[64] who has been studying in the London School of Economics has got himself engaged to a Hungarian girl who is a fellow student of his. His father and mother got rather put out by this news and they hurried to London and later even to Budapest to see the girl's parents. But the girl won them over and they have returned full of praises for her!

There are certain legal difficulties in the way of such mixed marriages. Braj Lal proposes to get the Hungarian girl formally converted to Hinduism and then to get her married by Hindu or Arya rites. The girl herself is quite willing. Personally I dislike this change or adoption of a religion to serve another end.

I am becoming more and more hostile to the religious idea. Exceptions apart, (and some of them are big exceptions), it seems to me the negation of real spirituality and only a begetter of confusion and sentimentality. I should like to keep myself away, as far as possible, from all religious rites and ceremonials, all the hallmarks of religion—indeed to be wholly non-religious. Regard for mother and a desire not to hurt her feelings at this time of her life, occasionally make me agree to participation in some ceremony. But even so it is an unwilling and ungracious participation and I am not sure if it is not better to do without it.

I read only this morning of Sen Gupta's sudden death. It came as a shock. Although never very intimate with him, I had known him for nearly 26 years. He was much older than I am but his last term at Cambridge coincided with my first, and we met for the first time at the end of 1907. How life goes by us and the scene changes as we sit surrounded by our thoughts!

64 B. K. Nehru.

Kamala is staying on in Dehra Dun. Perhaps she will remain till my discharge which is ordinarily due in the second week of September.

I hope you will soon be back to perfect health.

Love,

Yours affly.,
Jawaharlal

August 1, 1933[65]

Nan darling,

You seem to suspect that on my discharge I shall so fix up my programme as to have no time left over to talk to you! Do you, by any chance, imagine that twenty months in jail have softened my brain? My dear, you can reserve the very first evening in Allahabad for yourself. What will happen to me I do not know but, so far as I am concerned, I propose to follow this programme: Go to Allahabad immediately on release—spend about three or four days there and then go to Indu at Poona. This visit will not be merely to see her but I want to fix up about her future education. After two or three days at Poona I return to Allahabad and that is as far as I have got, if I get that far.

Ranjit had some notion, did he not? of marching off to Kashmir with you and the children during September. Don't go off just when I propose to visit my home town.

There has been plenty of rain here—over 6 inches one day. I suppose it was one of the final spurts and we shall have clear sky during August.

Love to the children, Ranjit and yourself.

Your loving brother,
Jawahar

65 Vijayalakshmi Pandit Papers, NMML.

August 2

Bapu arrested again yesterday.[66] Back to Yeravda.

August 6. Sunday

Interview with Kamala—Amma & Purushottam. Because of Purushottam the Supt. insisted on being present. Most unsatisfactory interview so far as Kamala was concerned. Saw Bul[67] yesterday as I was walking in the evening, on her way to Peshawar it seems!

August 9. Wednesday

Today I finished the series of letters to Indira that I have been writing. It turned out to be quite a tremendous task—176 letters running into 1849 foolscap pages! I began this series in Bareilly Jail on March 26th last year and expected to finish in a leisurely way by the end of the year. Instead, I had to work fairly hard, especially during the last six months. I feel relieved now that I have finished—much lighter in mind. I ought to revise them but I don't feel in the mood for it.

THE LAST LETTER TO INDIRA[68]

We have finished, my dear; the long story has ended. I need write no more, but the desire to end off with a kind of flourish induces me to write another letter—the Last Letter!

It was time I finished, for the end of my two-year term draws near. In three and thirty days from today I should be discharged, if indeed I am not released sooner, as the jailer sometimes threatens to do. The full two years are not over yet, but I have received three and a half 66 On 1 August 1933, Mahatma Gandhi was to commence his individual civil disobedience by a march to the village of Rai. He was arrested along with Kasturba, Mahadeva Desai and 32 others early that day.

67 Khurshed Naoroji.

68 Glimpses of World History, (Asia Publishing House, Bombay, 1962), pp. 954-957.

months' remission of my sentence, as all well behaved prisoners do. For I am supposed to be a well-behaved prisoner, a reputation which I have certainly done nothing to deserve. So ends my sixth sentence, and I shall go out again into the wide world, but to what purpose? A Quoi bon? when most of my friends and comrades lie in gaol and the whole country seems a vast prison.

What a mountain of letters I have written! And what a lot of good swadeshi ink I have spread out on swadeshi paper. Was it worth while, I wonder? Will all this paper and ink convey any message to you that will interest you? You will say "Yes", of course, for you will feel that any other answer might hurt me, and you are too partial to me to take such a risk. But whether you care for them or not, you cannot grudge me the joy of having written them, day after day, during these two long years. It was winter when I came. Winter gave place to our brief spring, slain all too soon by the summer heat; and then when the ground was parched and dry and men and beasts panted for breath, came the monsoon with its bountiful supply of fresh and cool rain water. Autumn followed, and the sky was wonderfully clear and blue, and the afternoons were pleasant. The year's cycle was over, and again it began: winter and spring and summer and the rainy season. I have sat here, writing to you and thinking of you, and watched the seasons go by, and listened to the pit a pat of the rain on my barrack roof—

O doux bruit de la pluie,
Par terre et sur les toils!
Pour un coeur qui s'ennuie,
Oh! le chant de la pluie![69]

Benjamin Disraeli, the great English statesman of the nineteenth century, has written that: "other men condemned to exile and captivity, if they survive, despair; the man of letters may reckon those days as the sweetest of his life." He was writing about Hugo Grotius, a famous Dutch jurist and philosopher of the seventeenth century, who was condemned to imprisonment for life, but managed to escape after two years. He spent these two years in prison in philosophic and literary work. There have been many famous literary gaolbirds, the two best known perhaps being the Spaniard, Cervantes, who wrote Don Quixote, and the Englishman, John Bunyan, the author of The Pilgrim's Progress.

69 O soft sound of rain
On earth and on the roofs
For a heart that is piming
Oh! the song of the rain.

I am not a man of letters and I am not prepared to say that the many years I have spent in gaol have been the sweetest in my life, but I must say that reading and writing have helped me wonderfully to get through them. I am not a literary man, and I am not a historian. What indeed am I? I find it difficult to answer that question. I have been a dabbler in many things, I began with science at college and then took to the law, and, after developing various other interests in life, finally adopted the popular and widely practised profession of gaol going in India!

You must not take what I have written in these letters as the final authority on any subject. A politician wants to have a say on every subject, and he always pretends to know much more than he actually does. He has to be watched carefully! These letters of mine are but superficial sketches joined together by a thin thread. I have rambled on, skipping centuries and many important happenings, and then pitching my tent for quite a long time on some event which interested me. As you will notice, my likes and dislikes are pretty obvious, and so also sometimes are my moods in gaol. I do not want you to take all this for granted; there may indeed be many errors in my accounts. A prison, with no libraries or reference books at hand, is not the most suitable place to write on historical subjects. I have had to rely very largely on the many note-books which I have accumulated since I began my visits to gaol twelve years ago. Many books have also come to me here; they have come and gone, for I could not collect a library here. I have shamelessly taken from these books facts and ideas; there is nothing original in what I have written. Perhaps occasionally you may find my letters difficult to follow; skip those parts, do not mind them. The grown-up in me got the better of me sometimes and I wrote as I should not have done.

I have given you the barest outline; this is not history; they are just fleeting glimpses of our long past. If history interests you, if you feel some of the fascination of history, you will find your way to many books which will help you to unravel the threads of past ages. But reading books alone will not help. If you would know the past you must look upon it with sympathy and with understanding. To understand a person who lived long ago, you will have to understand his environment, the conditions under which he lived, the ideas that filled his mind. It is absurd for us to judge of past people as if they lived now and thought as we do. There is no one to defend slavery today, and yet the great Plato held that slavery was essential. Within recent times scores of thousands of lives were given in an effort to retain slavery in the United States. We cannot judge the past from the standards of the present.

Everyone will willingly admit this. But everyone will not admit the equally absurd habit of judging the present by the standards of the past. The various religions have especially helped in petrifying old beliefs and faiths and customs, which may have had some use in the age and country of their birth, but which are singularly unsuitable in our present age.

If, then, you look upon past history with the eye of sympathy, the dry bones will fill up with flesh and blood, and you will see a mighty procession of living men and women and children in every age and every clime, different from us and yet very like us, with much the same human virtues and human failings. History is not a magic show, but there is plenty of magic in it for those who have eyes to see.

Innumerable pictures from the gallery of history crowd our minds. Egypt—Babylon—Nineveh—the old Indian civilization—the coming of the Aryans to India and their spreading out over Europe and Asia—the wonderful record of Chinese culture—Knossos and Greece—Imperial Rome and Byzantium—the triumphant march of the Arabs across two continents—the renascence of Indian culture and its decay—the little known Maya and Aztec civilizations of America—the vast conquests of the Mongols—the Middle Ages in Europe with their wonderful Gothic Cathedrals—the coming of Islam to India and the Mughal Empire—the Renaissance of learning and art in Western Europe—the discovery of America and the sea routes to the East—the beginning of western aggression in the East—the coming of the big machine and the development of capitalism—the spread of industrialism and European domination and imperialism—and the wonders of science in the modern world.

Great empires have risen and fallen and been forgotten by man for thousands of years, till their remains were dug up again by patient explorers from under the sands that covered them. And yet many an idea, many a fancy has survived and proved stronger and more persistent than the empire.

> Egypt's might is tumbled down
> Down a down the deeps of thought;
> Greece is fallen and Troy town,
> Glorious Rome hath lost her crown,
> Venice' pride is nought.
> But the dreams their children dreamed
> Fleeting, unsubstantial, vain,
> Shadowy as the shadows seemed,
> Airy nothing, as they deemed,
> These remain.

So sings Mary Coleridge.

The past brings us many gifts; indeed, all that we have today of culture, civilization, science, or knowledge of some aspects of the truth, is a gift of the distant or recent past to us. It is right that we acknowledge our obligation to the past. But the past does not exhaust our duty or obligation. We owe a duty to the future also and perhaps that obligation is even greater than the one we owe to the past. For the past is past and done with, we cannot change it; the future is yet to come, and perhaps we may be able to shape it a little. If the past has given us some part of the truth, the future also hides many aspects of the truth and invites us to search for it. But often the past is jealous of the future and holds us in a terrible grip, and we have to struggle with it to get free to face and advance towards the future.

History, it is said, has many lessons to teach us; and there is another saying that history never repeats itself. Both are true, for we cannot learn anything from it by slavishly trying to copy it, or by expecting it to repeat itself or remain stagnant, but we can learn something from it by prying behind it and trying to discover the forces that move it. Even so what we get is seldom a straight answer. "History", says Karl Marx, "has no other way of answering old questions than by putting new ones."

The old days were days of faith; blind, unquestioning faith. The wonderful temples and mosques and cathedrals of past centuries could never have been built but for the overpowering faith of the architects and builders and people generally. The very stones they reverently put one on top of the other, or carved in beautiful designs, tell us of this faith. The old temple spire, the mosque with its slender minarets, the Gothic cathedral—all of them pointing upward with an amazing intensity of devotion, as if offering a prayer in stone or marble to the sky above—thrill us even now, though we may be lacking in that faith of old of which they are the embodiments. But the days of that faith are gone, and gone with them is that magic touch in stone. Thousands of temples and mosques and cathedrals continue to be built, but they lack the spirit that made them live during the Middle Ages. There is little difference between them and the commercial offices which are so representative of our age.

Our age is a different one, it is an age of disillusion, of doubt and uncertainty and questioning. We can no longer accept many of the ancient beliefs and customs, we have no more faith in them, in Asia or in Europe or America. So we search for new ways, new aspects of the truth more in harmony with our environment. And we question each other and debate and quarrel and evolve any number of "isms" and philosophies. As in the days of Socrates, we live in an age of questioning, but that questioning is not confined to a city like Athens; it is world wide.

Sometimes the injustice, the unhappiness, the brutality of the world oppress us and darken our minds, and we see no way out. With Matthew Arnold, we feel that there is no hope in this world, and all we can do is to be true to one another.

> For the world which seems
> To he before us, like a land of dreams,
> So various, so beautiful, so new,
> Hath really neither joy, nor love, nor light,
> Nor certitude, nor peace, nor help for pain;
> And we are here, as on a darkling plain
> Swept with confused alarms of struggle and flight,
> Where ignorant armies clash by night.

And yet if we take such a dismal view we have not learnt aright the lesson of life or of history. For history teaches us of growth and progress and of the possibility of an infinite advance for man. And life is rich and varied, and though it has many swamps and marshes and muddy places, it has also the great sea, and the mountains, and snow, and glaciers, and wonderful star-lit nights (especially in gaoll), and the love of family and friends, and the comradeship of workers in a common cause, and music, and books, and the Empire of ideas. So that each one of us may well say:

> Lord, though I lived on earth, the child of earth,
> Yet was I fathered by the starry sky.

It is easy to admire the beauties of the universe and to live in a world of thought and imagination. But to try to escape in this way from the unhappiness of others, caring little what happens to them, is no sign of courage or fellow-feeling. Thought, in order to justify itself, must lead to action. "Action is the end of thought," says our friend Romain Rolland. "All thought which does not look towards action is an abortion and a treachery. If then we are the servants of thought we must be the servants of action."

People avoid action often because they are afraid of the consequences, for action means risk and danger. Danger seems terrible from a distance, it is not so bad if you have a close look at it. And often it is a pleasant companion, adding to the zest and delight of life. The ordinary course of life becomes dull at times, and we take too many things for granted and have no joy in them. And yet how we appreciate these common things of life when we have lived without them for a while! Many people go up high mountains and risk life and limb for the joy of the climb and the exhilaration that comes from a difficulty surmounted, a danger overcome; and because of the danger that hovers all around them, their perceptions get keener, their joy of the life which hangs by a thread, the more intense.

All of us have our choice of living in the valleys below with their unhealthy mists and fogs, but giving a measure of bodily security, or of climbing the high mountains, with risk and danger for companions, to breathe the pure air above, and take joy in the distant views, and welcome the rising sun.

I have given you many quotations and extracts from poets and others in this letter. I shall finish up with one more. It is from the Gitanjali; it is a poem, or prayer, by Rabindranath Tagore:

> Where the mind is without fear and the head is held high;
> Where knowledge is free;
> Where the world has not been broken up into fragments by narrow domestic walls;
> Where words come out from the depth of truth;
> Where tireless striving stretches its arms towards perfection;
> Where the clear stream of reason has not lost its way into the dreary desert sand of dead habit;
> Where the mind is led forward by thee into ever-widening thought and action—
> Into that heaven of freedom, my Father, let my country awake.

We have finished, carissima, and this last letter ends. The last letter! Certainly not! I shall write you many more. But this series ends, and so

Tamam Shud!

Back to Central Prison Naini Barrack No. 6

August 23rd 1933

After a year and a half's stay in other prisons.[70]

August 24. Thursday

So I am back in Naini—back in the old barrack where I spent so many months in 1930-31-32. I had companions then; I am alone now.

Notice to leave Dehra Dun Jail came in the afternoon day before yesterday. The Supt. came and told me to pack up. It was curious that when he came rather suddenly and unannounced I was actually engaged in rearranging and putting away my books, papers & clothes. Everything was spread out and lying in heaps. An hour or two earlier I had written the last word in some notes and charts to letters to Indu. I had finished with the job finally and this led me to put all the papers etc. connected with it away, securely packed, as they were not going to be required again in jail. I was engaged in this process when the Supt. came and told me that I had to leave the same evening. Almost it seemed that my transfer was being delayed so that I might finish the letters! As soon as this was done came the notice to depart.

I had been in Dehra jail just fourteen months and a half—the whole long year and a quarter almost, spent in one small room without the break of a night elsewhere. This has been by far the longest stay for me anywhere in jail or outside.

Two days earlier I had had my interview with Kamala & Amma and that same night K left for Allahabad because of mother's ill health. From Allahabad on the 22nd she sent me a telegram that she was taking mother to Lucknow for an x-ray. As I was travelling down from Dehra under police escort I half expected to pass Kamala & mother going up to Lucknow. I was on the look out for the up mail, and sure enough they were in it. We crossed at Rae Bareli. I saw 70 Jawaharlal had been transferred from Naini jail on 6 February 1932 to the district jail, Bareilly and from Bareilly to Dehra Dun jail on 6 June 1932.

Upadhyaya on the far platform with the other train intervening. He did not see me. And then my train started and as we were picking up speed I had a fleeting glimpse of Kamala's back—she was standing on the other side of her train looking out on the platform. Of course she did not see me. It was tantalising.

Great care was taken that my transfer should remain secret. Even the Superintendent of the Naini Jail did not know who was coming—all he was told was that an 'important A class prisoner' was coming. So I was actually in Naini and Kamala in Lucknow and we had passed on the way and she did not know.

I was taken out at Prayag and the police lorry passed down Church Road opposite Swaraj Bhawan and Anand Bhawan. There was a police man at the Swaraj Bhawan gate.—It was good to see Anand Bhawan with the flag flying bravely at the top.

The Superintendent of Naini—Major Salamatullah—was courteous and took some pains to see that I had what I wanted. He has the reputation of being a hard taskmaster for the jail staff and jail officials are not keen on him.

I will take two or three days to settle down. It hardly seems worthwhile taking much trouble as my discharge is due at the latest on Sept 12th.[71] But it is likely that I shall come back to Naini soon enough.

Meanwhile Bapu is fasting.[72] Today is the ninth day and he grows weaker.

Discharged from Naini Central Prison on August 30th, 1933.

71 Jawaharlal Nehru was released on 30 August, twelve days earlier than the due date, due to his mother's illness.

72 On his request for facilities to carry on social reform work from the jail being turned down by the Viceroy, Mahatma Gandhi decided to fast from 16 August. The government released him on 23 August when his condition grew worse.

8

ON THE SITUATION IN INDIA

1. On His Release[1]

Jawaharlal Nehru: I am deeply touched by the manifestations of love. It is natural that men who are habituated to remaining in jail should, on release, feel joy on meeting people.

Question: How are you now?

JN: I am in excellent health bodily and mentally and I am stretching myself just to take a deep breath.

Q: What are your views on the political developments in the country?

JN: I have a lot to say but have no time just now.

1. Allahabad, 30 August 1933. From The Hindu, 31 August 1933. On release from jail on 30 August 1933 he was taken round the city of Allahabad and then interviewed by press correspondents

2. Interview at Allahabad[1]

I do not find fault with the present situation in India as I think it is the necessary concomitant of a great revolutionary movement at any time and period. I am, of course, dissatisfied with the Liberal ideology and its leaders who need to learn the A.B.C. of political thought and movements in the world today which lay particular stress on the economic issues.

I think all the leading countries are faced with dictatorship. Barring France there is not a single country where the parliamentary government could really be said to be existing at present. In the U.S.A., they have at present, in Mr. Roosevelt, a more intelligent and liberal dictator than the rest. It is noteworthy that there is a struggle between Fascism and Communism for capital or power in every independent country. This is the inevitable result of the failure of capitalism which has created more wealth but left no purchasing power in the hands of the consumers as the result of great unemployment. So, while the people are starving for want of the necessities of life, the capitalist countries which have produced them in abundance are busy destroying them. For instance, Brazil has destroyed so much coffee that every man in the world today could get a pound if that coffee was distributed. Even wheat has been destroyed at several places and they were meeting in a conference to restrict its production.

1. Allahabad, 30 August 1933. From The Tribune, 1 September 1933.

This great economic distress is sought to be relieved by raising high tariff walls but this has created fresh complications because it cuts at the very root of capitalism by uprooting the theory of open markets on which it is based. It has served as a tonic to England but it will provide only temporary relief. This policy of national isolation and international noncooperation in matters of production and consumption will eventually lead to some serious international developments and the establishment of a new order of society. Undoubtedly, statesmen from all parts of the world are meeting over and over again for purposes of international amity and peace but their conferences are meeting the same fate as the conferences for Hindu-Muslim unity in India because they were not prepared to sacrifice their individual interests in favour of others. India is not immune from the effects of these international forces which the Liberal leaders of our country in particular and other thoughtful citizens in general should take into account. England is trying to protect the vested interests of the zamindars, the capitalists and the princes as well as its own vested interests in India, but it is doubtful as to how long this incongruous adjustment vis a vis economic forces governing the rest of the world is likely to endure.

3. Interview to the Pioneer[1]

It is a relief to be able to talk, for, you may imagine, there is not much opportunity for conversation in gaol. My refuge has been in books, of which I was allowed six at a time, and I have done so much solid reading in politics, economics and my own subject, science, that if I cannot say that my education is complete, at least now I realise the gaps that used to exist in it.

1 Lucknow, 31 August 1933. From The Pioneer, 2 September 1933.

Solid reading is a necessity in prison; without it the mind stagnates and rots. Novels for a relaxation occasionally, yes, but one must have something more substantial on which to concentrate. My aim and interest has been to study world problems and the recent developments in Germany, America and elsewhere and to estimate their probable effect upon India. For though India's case is a case apart, yet, she is of the world and her future must be affected by what is happening elsewhere.

Q: What is your reading of the world?

Jawaharlal Nehru: I am convinced that the days of capitalism and the privileged classes are over and that a new structure of society is inevitable.

Q: On the Russian model?

JN: Not necessarily on the Russian model, but on the general lines of the Russian conception. The alternative is fascism, to which even England seems to be inclined more readily than is realised, though her fascist revolution, if it comes, will doubtless be a milder affair than that of Hitler. Fascism is the last weapon which vested interests can employ to keep what they have. Its success, in Germany, for example, depends on how far Hitler can solve or postpone the economic embarrassments of the country.[2]

Here, too, the problem is primarily economic and not political. We agitators are accused of upsetting the State. But the truth is that no agitator has such superhuman powers as to be able to do that. The agitator, though he may temporarily direct events, merely gives expression to existing grievances. In India those grievances are agrarian. The zamindari system has broken down; it is as much an anachronism as autocracy in Indian states.

In view of these conditions, I do not expect any improvement under a constitution reformed on White Paper lines. The whole White Paper scheme is obviously unworkable and unprofitable. Our object, in striving for self-government for India, is to reduce the cost of administration and consequently the burden on the peasant. And now, so far from a reduction, we have Sir Malcolm Hailey estimating the increased cost of provincial autonomy in crores of rupees! For my part I am glad that the scheme is wholly worthless. Had it been partly good and partly bad it would have been more difficult to oppose it.

Q: And had it been wholly good and emanated from the same source?

2. In addition to the world depression, the German economy was being crippled by war reparations.

JN: That from my point of view is an impossible conception. I am satisfied that the future prosperity of the masses in India lies in a complete reconstruction of society on a new basis. That means the diversion of profits and property from the 'haves' to the 'have-nots' and it cannot be supposed that vested interests will ever voluntarily agree to that. I cannot believe in any reformed constitution being satisfactorily worked by the British members of the present services. There may be a few individuals who are genuinely enthusiastic; there are some who will undertake the task silently; but the majority will represent, not unnaturally perhaps, a deadweight of the opposition as they cannot escape their traditions.

To illustrate my point that agrarian agitation was spontaneous and not the product of the agitator, I shall tell you how I myself first came to be connected with the movement. It was in 1920. I was staying with my mother and my wife in the Savoy Cecil at Mussoorie. The Afghan peace delegates (after the Third Afghan War) were also in the hotel, but as I was living quietly and they had their own apartments, in a month, I never caught sight of an Afghan. However, the police came and asked me to sign a declaration that I would not communicate with them. Although I had no intention of doing so, I refused and was promptly expelled from Mussoorie. The order was afterwards cancelled by Sir Harcourt Butler but meanwhile I had gone to Allahabad where I found a deputation of 200 villagers from outlying districts awaiting my father and myself.[3]

In those days the Congress was almost entirely a middle class organisation and I knew nothing of the life and difficulties of the peasants. I realised vaguely that they were poor, but that was all. When I went among them (they made roads for my car across their fields and sometimes carried it bodily), I learnt something of their poverty and found that agitation—and purely spontaneous agitation—had reached such a pitch that crowds of 20,000 would walk anything up to twenty miles to attend a meeting. The life tenancy legislation[4] which government hastily introduced restored tranquillity for a time, but my point is that it was the peasant himself and not the agitator who secured it.

Incidentally the first sight that I saw when I returned to Mussoorie was my small daughter, then a year old, in the arms of one of the Afghan delegates. The fact that I had been forbidden to fraternize with them had been quite sufficient to make them friends of the family —in which there lies a lesson for governments!

3 See Selected Works, Vol. 1, pp. 162-165.

4 The Oudh Rent Act of 1921 and the Agra Tenancy Act of 1926 conferred security of tenure on tenants. See also Selected Works, Vol. 3, pp. 374-376.

Of the prison system, apart from the question of physical ill-treatment of prisoners which I hold to have been established beyond a doubt, I consider that the practice of setting them to obviously unproductive work, of shutting them up for fifteen hours or more in barrack rooms with nothing to do, of denying them writing materials, is calculated, if it is not intended, to degrade them and break their spirit.

A seemingly minor, but really serious injustice, is the matter of interviews. Once every three months a man is allowed to see a visitor. But the interview is restricted to twenty minutes and many such interviews are conducted at a long table with no opportunity for privacy nor time for thought. Moreover, I have known prisoners (illiterate ones and not political prisoners) who have never had an interview with their friends or families for five years. They have the right, but they have neither the knowledge nor the education to exercise it. They cannot write a letter; their families cannot read one, and are in any case frightened to come within the purlieu of a gaol. When they venture, they sometimes sit for days outside, since it is nobody's business to attend to them.

The savage sentences (eight years imprisonment on a youth for writing a threatening letter because his brother had been sent to gaol for life!) and the whole of the prison system call for an impartial examination.

The trouble about the English in India is that they are a prey to their own fears. Brought up on stories of mutiny and on vague and nonsensical ideas of the mysterious East which no European can understand, they imagine that they are sitting on top of a volcano which may blow up at any moment. Every Englishman, whether soldier or civilian, has the military mind and sees himself as one of an army of occupation in a conquered country which is ready to rise at the first opportunity.

That mentality produces the inevitable results and I can understand, even if I cannot excuse, the conduct of General Dyer at Amritsar. It was the product of the fear-complex which is the cause of half the troubles of the world.

Q: What are your plans?

JN: One thing is certain. I have no thought of leaving India.

4. To Aldous Huxley[1]

Allahabad
September 1, 1933

Dear Mr. Huxley,[2]

A short while ago, I read in prison a little book called Science in the Changing World. A passage in your broadcast, included in this book, surprised and distressed me a little.[3] According to this, you said that Tolstoyans and Gandhi-ites advocate a 'return to Nature' and want people to abandon science altogether and live like primitives or, at least, in the medieval style. If this advice was followed, you pointed out, it would result in the sacrifice of eight or nine hundred million human lives, a slaughter compared to which the massacres of Timur[4] and Jinghiz Khan[5] sink into absolute insignificance.

I am not competent to say anything about the Tolstoyans but I have been closely associated with Mr. Gandhi and the 'Gandhi-ites' for the last fourteen years and can thus presume to know something about them. Indeed, in a political sense, I have myself been a 'Gandhi-ite' for all these years. I feel that, quite unintentionally, you have done them a grave wrong in the reference you have made. And as Mr. Gandhi is the unquestioned leader of the Indian national movement, it is more than likely that many people who listened to your remarks or read them subsequently, were led to misjudge the nationalist movement

1 JN Correspondence, NMML

2 (1894-1963), well known writer of novels, essays, biography and short stories, visited India in the winter of 1925 and published his diary under the title Jesting Pilate

3 Huxley wrote: ".. .Tolstoyans and Gandhi-ites tell us that we must "return to Nature"—in other words, abandon science altogether and live like primitives or, at best, in the style of our medieval ancestors. The trouble with this advice is that it cannot be followed—or rather that it can only be followed if we are prepared to sacrifice at least eight or nine hundred million human lives. Science, in the form of modern industrial and agricultural technique, has allowed the world's population to double itself in about three generations. If we abolish science and "return to Nature", the population will revert to what it was—and revert, not in a hundred years, but in as many weeks. Famine and pestilence do their work with exemplary celerity. Tolstoy and Gandhi are professed humanitarians; but they advocate a slaughter, compared with which the massacres of Timur and Jinghiz Khan seem almost imperceptibly trivial."

4 Tartar chieftain who invaded India in 1398 and sacked Delhi.

5 Chengiz Khan (c 1155-1227); a Mongol conqueror who subjugated most of Asia and penetrated into Europe.

by them and to imagine that it stood for a most reactionary and lunatic policy which, if logically carried out, must lead to a frightful catastrophe.

I do not propose to discuss Mr. Gandhi's personality in this letter. He is a complete person and has many aspects which astonish the modern mind. Essentially he is a man of religion and essentially the typical modern is not. Finding, what he considers, too much indulgence about him, he lays stress on the ascetic ideal. In particular, his ideas about sex relations seem extraordinary to most people of our day. All this is, what I might perhaps call, Mr. Gandhi's personal philosophy, and those who look upon him more or less as a religious or moral leader presumably accept it to a greater or lesser extent. Mr. Gandhi no doubt realizes that his strict personal code cannot be followed by more than a handful of people, but he hopes that this handful will set an example which will result in toning up the lives of large numbers of others.

His attitude to science is very far from being hostile. He welcomes it and takes advantage of it in a variety of ways, and often people, wilfully misunderstanding him, accuse him of inconsistency because he does so, as for instance, when he submits to an operation, or rides a motor car, or uses a printing machine, or telegraphs or telephones. None the less it is perfectly true that, being fundamentally religious, his tendency is to seek for the truth inside himself, rather than externally by the methods of science.

Large-scale machine production he does not like but he has never suggested, to my knowledge, that it should be scrapped. He wants, as far as possible, to decentralise industry, to have small units and not large ones, and for this purpose he wants to take the fullest advantage of the scientific method. He thinks that this ought to suit modern conditions but in case it does not, why then, he is perfectly prepared to have something else. In either event there is no question, so far as he is concerned, of ignoring any advantage that science has to offer.

This, in brief, is Mr. Gandhi's personal attitude to science and industry. It may not be a correct attitude; its logic may be faulty. But it does not mean a negation of science or a destruction of machine industry. Possibly it may result in a lessening of production and in this sense it may be a putting back of the clock. Even so it could hardly be madder than the present deliberate restriction of output both in industry and agriculture and the actual destruction of large quantities of foodstuffs and other useful articles which millions lack.

Even this attitude is not necessarily accepted by the political associates and followers of Mr. Gandhi. Personally I do not agree with

4. To Aldous Huxley[1]

Allahabad
September 1, 1933

Dear Mr. Huxley,[2]

A short while ago, I read in prison a little book called Science in the Changing World. A passage in your broadcast, included in this book, surprised and distressed me a little.[3] According to this, you said that Tolstoyans and Gandhi-ites advocate a 'return to Nature' and want people to abandon science altogether and live like primitives or, at least, in the medieval style. If this advice was followed, you pointed out, it would result in the sacrifice of eight or nine hundred million human lives, a slaughter compared to which the massacres of Timur[4] and Jinghiz Khan[5] sink into absolute insignificance.

I am not competent to say anything about the Tolstoyans but I have been closely associated with Mr. Gandhi and the 'Gandhi-ites' for the last fourteen years and can thus presume to know something about them. Indeed, in a political sense, I have myself been a 'Gandhi-ite' for all these years. I feel that, quite unintentionally, you have done them a grave wrong in the reference you have made. And as Mr. Gandhi is the unquestioned leader of the Indian national movement, it is more than likely that many people who listened to your remarks or read them subsequently, were led to misjudge the nationalist movement

1 J N Correspondence, N M M L.

2 (1894 1963), well known writer of novels, essays, biography and short stories; visited India in the winter of 1925 and published his diary under the title Jesting Pilate.

3 Huxley wrote: "....Tolstoyans and Gandhi ites tell us that we must "return to Nature"—in other words, abandon science altogether and live like primitives or, at best, in the style of our medieval ancestors. The trouble with this advice is that it cannot be followed—or rather that it can only be followed if we are prepared to sacrifice at least eight or nine hundred million human lives. Science, in the form of modern industrial and agricultural technique, has allowed the world's population to double itself in about three generations If we abolish science and "return to Nature", the population will revert to what it was—and revert, not in a hundred years, but in as many weeks. Famine and pestilence do their work with exemplary celerity. Tolstoy and Gandhi are professed humanitarians; but they advocate a slaughter, compared with which the massacres of Timur and Jinghiz Khan seem almost imperceptibly trivial"

4 Tartar chieftain who invaded India in 1398 and sacked Delhi.

5 Chenguz Khan (c. 1155 1227); a Mongol conqueror who subjugated most of Asia and penetrated into Europe.

by them and to imagine that it stood for a most reactionary and lunatic policy which, if logically carried out, must lead to a frightful catastrophe.

I do not propose to discuss Mr. Gandhi's personality in this letter. He is a complete person and has many aspects which astonish the modern mind. Essentially he is a man of religion and essentially the typical modern is not. Finding, what he considers, too much indulgence about him, he lays stress on the ascetic ideal. In particular, his ideas about sex relations seem extraordinary to most people of our day. All this is, what I might perhaps call, Mr. Gandhi's personal philosophy, and those who look upon him more or less as a religious or moral leader presumably accept it to a greater or lesser extent. Mr. Gandhi no doubt realizes that his strict personal code cannot be followed by more than a handful of people, but he hopes that this handful will set an example which will result in toning up the lives of large numbers of others.

His attitude to science is very far from being hostile. He welcomes it and takes advantage of it in a variety of ways, and often people, wilfully misunderstanding him, accuse him of inconsistency because he does so, as for instance, when he submits to an operation, or rides a motor car, or uses a printing machine, or telegraphs or telephones. None the less it is perfectly true that, being fundamentally religious, his tendency is to seek for the truth inside himself, rather than externally by the methods of science.

Large-scale machine production he does not like but he has never suggested, to my knowledge, that it should be scrapped. He wants, as far as possible, to decentralise industry, to have small units and not large ones, and for this purpose he wants to take the fullest advantage of the scientific method. He thinks that this ought to suit modern conditions but in case it does not, why then, he is perfectly prepared to have something else. In either event there is no question, so far as he is concerned, of ignoring any advantage that science has to offer.

This, in brief, is Mr. Gandhi's personal attitude to science and industry. It may not be a correct attitude; its logic may be faulty. But it does not mean a negation of science or a destruction of machine industry. Possibly it may result in a lessening of production and in this sense it may be a putting back of the clock. Even so it could hardly be madder than the present deliberate restriction of output both in industry and agriculture and the actual destruction of large quantities of foodstuffs and other useful articles which millions lack.

Even this attitude is not necessarily accepted by the political associates and followers of Mr. Gandhi. Personally I do not agree it, and I should like to make it perfectly clear that the Indian Congress and the national movement have not adopted it. Indeed Mr. Gandhi has never asked the Congress, except in one particular, to endorse this attitude. That one particular is, as the world knows, the cottage spinning wheel. The Congress has recommended hand spinning to the agricultural classes of India not because of any hostility to machinery or science, but because of special reasons applicable to the Indian peasant under present conditions. The spinning wheel is not to be the rival of machinery—it would be absurd to say so; nor is spinning to take the place of any other occupation. Agriculture, as it is carried on here, is not a full time job for the whole year. There is intense activity at harvest time and some other times and then there are several months of unemployment. The peasant and his family were encouraged to spin during this seasonal unemployment as well as during their leisure hours. It was thus to be a kind of secondary occupation, an auxiliary industry, for him so long as he had no other and better way of employing his spare time. Spinning was also to be a partial stand by for the vast numbers of unemployed who have nothing to do and who are such a burden on the land. It is a remarkable fact that, contrary to the universal tendency, in India the rural population has grown at the expense of the urban during the last hundred years and right up to our day.

The obvious way to absorb these scores of millions of unemployed and partially employed is to provide other occupations for them by industrialising the country. Scientific agriculture may lessen the peasant's waste time and increase the yield but the immediate result would be to add to the unemployment. Hand-spinning cannot solve these problems or put an end to unemployment, whole time or seasonal. If we had the state power in our hands we would certainly adopt a host of other methods, including industrialization. As it is we are helpless and can only work in a limited sphere. In the limited sphere there is no doubt that hand-spinning and its associate cottage occupations have brought a small measure of well-being to those who have taken it up. The real objection to widespread cottage spinning is that by bettering slightly the condition of those who adopt it, it helps to prop up a land system and an economic structure which are indefensible and which are in process of breaking down. A radical socialist would rightly object to this attempt at propping up a doomed structure.

In these days of economic nationalism there is one other factor which is worth considering. In the event of a crisis where India has to rely on her own resources, spinning can fill the gap so far as cloth is concerned. A war may stop all imports; the Indian mills may fill the gap but they are not in the position to do so wholly yet. No doubt they will grow. Meanwhile they have a way of exploiting a crisis to their own great advantage by raising prices, as they did during the Great War, when there is no outside competition. A widespread movement of hand-spinning is some check on this raising of prices and it helps the country to clothe itself when there is a cloth famine.

These are some obvious considerations, and there are others of a political nature such as the boycott of foreign cloth, which induced the Congress to recommend hand spinning. There is also a human side to the spinning-wheel and the weaving of homespun cloth. They have brought the intelligentsia nearer to the peasant masses and reduced the vast gap which our one-sided education had produced between them. I have mentioned these considerations to you not to defend the spinning wheel but so that you may realise that Indian nationalism is not opposed to big scale machinery and much less to science. I have no doubt that when it is in a position to do so, it will industrialize the country as rapidly as possible. Meanwhile, helpless as we are, we have to carry on with such makeshifts as are available.

To touch a personal note. My whole outlook on life and its problems is a scientific one and I have never felt attracted towards religion and its methods. (I took the natural sciences tripos at Cambridge). I entirely disagree with Mr. Gandhi's views on sex, birth control, asceticism, etc. I believe in the machine and would have it spread in India but I believe also in the social control of it. I would like India to have socialism and a widespread industrialization. Believing all this, would it be possible for me, or the large numbers who are like me, to cooperate closely for years with a person who stands for a policy which is inimical to science and industry and which might lead to a dreadful holocaust? And is it for this that we spend long years of our life in prison?

Forgive me for writing at such length to you. One gets rather tired of misrepresentations and propaganda when most of us are shut up in prison and a rigid censorship prevails outside. Often it happens that the most amazing propositions are advanced by our critics and opponents as representing our views and this imaginary and unreal structure is then demolished with great gusto. I know you could not have meant to misrepresent us and that is why I wanted to make you appreciate to some extent what our position was. I do not want you to take the trouble to contradict anything that you have said or to correct yourself.

We met once—an all too brief meeting. It was during the Congress session at Cawnpore in December 1925. I tried to find you and your wife later but you had gone. You will hardly remember me but I have had many occasions to renew that acquaintance through your delightful books.

I have only just come out of prison after serving out a two year sentence. I hasten to write to you for soon, within a few days perhaps, I am likely to go back again—to muse on the earthly paradise and the various bars, of iron and of the spirit, which prevent us from reaching it.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

5. To Desmond Young[1]

Lucknow
September 1, 1933

Dear Mr. Young,[2]

Thank you for your letter. I was slightly taken aback by the Pioneer headlines this morning. Somehow I was not expecting a report of an interview though I ought to have known better. The substance of the conversation we had, as given in the report, is certainly accurate but a few minor errors of fact have crept in. They are not important or worth shouting about, but just to indicate their nature, I shall mention two. The Oudh peasants who came to Allahabad in 1920 did not come in deputation to my father and me. Father was not even in Allahabad then. The peasants came to seek relief from well known public workers and I happened to be one of those who came into contact with them. The other error is that I was allowed only 6 books at a time in prison. This is the rule for A class prisoners and I have had to submit to it during some of my previous terms of imprisonment. But on the last occasion it was relaxed in my favour and I was allowed more books.

I promised to send you a limerick which seemed to me to give a remarkable picture of the forces behind the new Pioneer. I understand that the Pioneer now represents the ruling princes, the taluqdars and zamindars, British commercial houses in India, and Indian business—a

1 J N. Correspondence, N M.M L
2. At this time the editor of the Pioneer; later Chief Press Adviser in Bureau of Public Information.

unique combination of autocracy, the feudal order, British capitalism and Indian capitalism. Applying the Mendelian theory, I wondered of what this very mixed assortment could be the offspring. Or perhaps, in these days of topsy-turvydom, the Pioneer had decided to reverse that theory and, starting with the offspring, was trying to incubate the parents, whoever and whatever they might be. Anyhow here is the limerick. Limericks of course are anonymous and I do not know the author's name.

> There was a young fellow called Starky
> Who had an affair with a darky.
> The result of his sins
> Was quadruplets, not twins:
> One black, one white, and two khaki.

As for my retaining my 'freedom' or not for any length of time, I cannot say. My mother's illness is at present a disturbing factor which restricts, to some extent, my activities. But the 'freedom' that one gets outside prison does not deserve that name and personally I find it most distressing and suffocating. There are so many inhibitions, restrictions and prohibitions, so many things we may not do, so many things we must do or suffer the consequences of our disobedience. We are all, like the Chittagong boys and girls,[3] more or less ticket-of-leave men and women, and I am afraid I prefer straightforward prison to this ticket-of-leave condition. My whole nature rebels against this compulsion and terrorism of government, and I feel nauseated at the vulgarity, falsehood and sycophancy that accompany them. Politics is a queer game at times and many a time one doubts and hesitates, but surely loyalty to the principles one holds to be true and to brave comrades who suffer for them can never be wrong. There are very few who do not long for a real opportunity to do the work of building up, but the foundations must be true, and the blue prints on rights lines. It is no pleasure to spend long years in prison cut off from family, friends and most of what life has to offer.

I shall be happy to meet you again, but for the present I am rather vague about my programme. Perhaps we might fix up some time next week.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

3 On 24 May 1933, under the Bengal Suppression of Terrorist Outrages Act all Hindu men between the [illegible] of 12 and 25 residing in 4 specified thanas were to carry identity [illegible] and produce them for inspection [illegible] ever required. The act was [illegible] to Midnapur on the assassinat[illegible] Mr. Burge, the district magis[illegible] September 1933.

6. To B.K. Das Gupta[1]

Lucknow
2.9.33

Dear Friend,[2]
I am in receipt of your letter of the 31st August sending me a draft manifesto on the condition of political prisoners in the Andamans, to be issued by Dr. Rabindranath Tagore, Sir P. C. Ray and others.[3] Like most of my countrymen, I have been deeply shocked at the terrible tragedy that has been enacted in the Andamans and at the amazingly callous attitude of the government in regard to it. It is extraordinarily painful to realise our helplessness even for the purpose of saving the lives of our comrades. I do not know that any useful purpose can be served by making any request to a government that has acted in this manner and has sought to justify that action. Nor have I any faith in government enquiries. But the demands you put forward in the manifesto obviously embody the very minimum of action required and, if my name is of any help to you, you can certainly use it.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 J.N Correspondence, N M M L
2 Secretary, Andaman Prisoners League, Calcutta
3 The manifesto demanded enquiry into the death of the three hunger strikers and immediate repatriation of all political prisoners.

7. To T.C. Goswami[1]

Allahabad
September 3, 1933

My dear Goswami,
Thank you for your letter. I agree with you entirely that we must take full stock of the present situation. I should very much like to meet friends to do so and subject to my mother's health I shall take advantage of any opportunity that offers itself. Of course there is no question of defeat in a national struggle. I have not the faintest feeling of defeat. I think we have done remarkably well. My one regret is that we have not laid sufficient stress on a proper ideology. The masses always learn from big events rather than from debates and the like. But the way has to be pointed by a proper ideology before the lesson can be learnt. Big events have taken place in this country and in the world and I do not doubt that part of the lesson has been learnt; much more can be done by a proper direction of the mind. Although I have been inevitably cut off from current happenings in India I have given considerable thought to fundamental issues both in our country and abroad and have been fascinated by the ponderous moving of the world forces. I feel that taking everything together events move in the right direction although there may actually be many an apparent setback nationally and internationally. It is of course folly to prophesy but I feel glad that I am alive and kicking in the world at this cataclysmic stage.

1. J N Correspondence, N M M L.

With all good wishes,

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

8. On the Congress Organisation and Programme[1]

It seems to me that there is a great deal of misapprehension about the statements issued by Gandhiji and Mr. Aney regarding the future Congress programme.[2] I should like to meet Gandhiji and other colleagues before saying anything in the matter but some points are quite

1. Statement at Allahabad, 4 September 1933. The Leader, 6 September 1933.
2. Mahatma Gandhi had on 20 July 1933 advised a temporary suspension of mass civil disobedience, a cessation of all Congress organisations and secret methods, all India 'dictators' and provincial 'dictators' were however to continue Aney, as acting President of the Congress, endorsed Mahatma Gandhi's directives on 22 July 1933 but added, "All Congress organisations including the office of the A.I.C.C. should cease to exist for the time being"

6. To B.K. Das Gupta[1]

Lucknow
2.9.33

Dear Friend,[2]
I am in receipt of your letter of the 31st August sending me a draft manifesto on the condition of political prisoners in the Andamans, to be issued by Dr. Rabindranath Tagore, Sir P. C. Ray and others.[3] Like most of my countrymen, I have been deeply shocked at the terrible tragedy that has been enacted in the Andamans and at the amazingly callous attitude of the government in regard to it. It is extraordinarily painful to realise our helplessness even for the purpose of saving the lives of our comrades. I do not know that any useful purpose can be served by making any request to a government that has acted in this manner and has sought to justify that action. Nor have I any faith in government enquiries. But the demands you put forward in the manifesto obviously embody the very minimum of action required and, if my name is of any help to you, you can certainly use it.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 J N Correspondence, N M M L.
2 Secretary, Andaman Prisoners League, Calcutta
3. The manifesto demanded enquiry into the death of the three hunger strikers and immediate repatriation of all political prisoners.

7. To T.C. Goswami[1]

Allahabad
September 3, 1933

My dear Goswami,
Thank you for your letter. I agree with you entirely that we must take full stock of the present situation. I should very much like to meet

1 J N Correspondence, N M M L.

In regard to the other matter, I should, of course, like to consult Mahatmaji and other colleagues before saying anything. I know nothing about the proposed meeting of Mahatmaji with some members of the Round Table Conference.[4] It is obvious there is a world of difference between the objective, methods and ideology of the Congress and the Round Tablers. The Congress definitely adopted the creed of independence at Lahore in 1930 and that remains. The Round Tablers, so far as I understand them, are striving for something entirely different. As for the Congress and the British Government, they are poles apart.

4. There was a press report that Mahatma Gandhi was anxious to meet as many delegates who had returned from the Joint Parliamentary Committee meeting as possible before he took the next step

9. On the World Situation[1]

The old sign posts and familiar pathways in the world situation are being obliterated. I look at the Indian situation only as part of the present day world order or disorder, and am optimistic that out of all this travail and titanic unrest, a new order will be born when nations will breathe a purer air and live under more spacious skies.

I have no regard for men afraid of the present inevitable clash of forces, here, there and everywhere. As Trotsky said: "if one is afraid of strife, disorder and revolution, one has chosen the wrong moment to be born."

There is a need for intellectual and interpretative journalism and of newspapers having the services of good writers and correspondents, who are given time to read and understand world forces and events, and opportunities to interpret their significance. There are only a few such papers in India and I wish them greater success and glory.

1 Allahabad, 4 September 1933 From The Hindu, 5 September 1933.

clear and indeed they were cleared up by Mr. Aney himself.[3] The constitution of the Congress cannot be changed by any office-bearer of it and so, obviously the Congress organisation continues as it has always done. That is exactly what Mr. Aney made clear in his second statement. All that has happened is that Gandhiji and Mr. Aney have advised Congress organisations not to carry on organisational office work, because this obviously could not be normally carried on under existing circumstances. That advice has been accepted by Congress committees. As soon as any change occurs or any opportunity offers itself, the officers and the organisations will function as before but it is quite clear that neither the Congress committees nor their office-bearers have ceased to exist or can cease to exist under any circumstances. I was elected the General Secretary of the Congress at Karachi and so long as another election is not made by the Congress, I certainly consider myself as such General Secretary; but under existing circumstances I am not functioning as such or running the All India Congress office. Whenever the time comes I shall act and function as such.

It is manifest under certain conditions of struggle between the Congress and the British Government it becomes exceedingly difficult for the Congress to carry on its normal activities in the normal way. To recognise this is to recognise a fact. It in no way affects the existence or the power of Congress committees under the constitution. It is adaptation to the circumstances prevailing.

A somewhat similar position was recognised by the Working Committee in 1931 during the negotiations with the government. No resolution was actually passed because ultimately provisional settlement was reached. At one stage, however, a break was imminent and the Committee considered and approved of a certain resolution. This resolution contemplated a situation when the government action might make the organisational work exceedingly difficult. It stated that after all members of the existing Working Committee had been removed by government action, no new Committee need be appointed as had been the practice in 1930. It called upon the country to carry on the struggle afresh and in case a situation arose when directions could not be received and even mutual consultation became difficult, every Congressman should consider himself the Working Commitee of the Congress. I quote from memory but, so far as I remember, that was the resolution.

3. In a later statement Aney explained that the phrase "all Congress organisations does not include the A.I.C.C. and other regular organisations but only those which came into existence during the civil disobedience campaign."

11. To Sri Prakasa[1]

Poona
September 10, 1933

My dear Sri Prakasa,

I received your letter in Lucknow. I am very sorry to learn about your ill-health and other difficulties. Of course it is for each of us to decide about his own activities and responsibilities and no one else can presume to interfere. So far as I am concerned I am afraid that I have completely burnt my boats behind me and I cannot conceive of any responsibility, domestic or otherwise, which can keep me away from the political field. Programmes and policies change and come and go but fundamentally the struggle continues. If I disagree with a programme fundamentally the only other alternative for me is to chalk out another programme of activity and to follow it. The fact that large numbers of people follow any programme, or not, is important no doubt but essentially it has little effect on me if I have been in that activity. Ups and downs and lulls and activities are inevitable and every person who has had anything to do with public affairs expects them and goes through them. Indeed such lulls serve a very necessary purpose in a nation's development by teaching the masses many a lesson and by making them distinguish between various groups which have in a moment of enthusiasm put themselves under one banner. They help in making us think clearly about the ideology that should govern our action. Therefore, I for one welcome the present lull and feel sure that out of it will be born a mightier movement with clearer directions.

I wish I had met and had a talk with you. Perhaps we might meet in the near future.

Yours affectionately,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. J N. Correspondence, N.M.M.L.

10. To S.P. Khambatta[1]

Lucknow
September 7, 1933

My dear Khambatta,[2]
I have your letter and the questions.[3] It was my intention to send you some kind of statement from Lucknow but as I am going to Poona to see Mr. Gandhi I have decided not to send you anything of that kind for the present. I may send a statement to you later on to your Bombay address.

But I should like to make one point clear. Obviously in such a statement it is not possible under the existing circumstances for any responsible Congressman to go into details of the terms on which the Congress might agree to meet the British Government. Only the broad principles can be stated. Such a statement cannot be written just to please Lansbury, Henderson & Co. I have no doubt that British Labour as a body wishes us well. I have equally no doubt that the British Labour Party, as at present constituted, has neither the desire nor the ability to do much for India and, in spite of their tall talk and pious platitudes, they are fundamentally opposed to Indian freedom. That however would not prevent my giving a statement for the Herald. But my statement cannot be toned down just to please the Herald. I have no objection to the Herald not supporting it, or even criticising it, if it chooses.

Your questions are a mixed lot and they betray some ignorance of the existing political situation. In case I send you a statement later on it would perhaps be better if I deal with the matter as a whole and from a fundamental point of view rather than deal with your questions separately.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. J. N Correspondence, N.M.M.L.
2. Correspondent in India of the Daily Herald, a newspaper of the British Labour Party
3. Khambatta had requested Jawaharlal for a statement indicating "some definite policy of action manifesting the goodwill of the Congress to the Commonwealth while bearing foremost the full interest of our people." He also sent a questionnaire.

13. To Bhagavan Das[1]

Poona
September 11, 1933

My dear Babu Bhagavan Das,

Your telegram has reached me and I have shown it to Gandhiji. I am very keen myself on a definition of economic policy for the national movement But I fail to see how an 'all parties conference'[2] can evolve such a policy. The essential basis of difference between various groups and parties is economic interest. To expect them to agree on a common policy ignores this fundamental difference. I am afraid that conflict between different interests is inevitable. We have seen the failure of numerous efforts in post-war Europe to find a common economic policy for the different nations. During the last 15 years there have been over a hundred international conferences to deal with economic problems in Europe. Not one of them has succeeded.

Apart from this economic difference there is such a vast difference in political outlook between the Congress and various petty groups that I do not think any common ground of action can be found. I have no desire to meet or have any dealing with people whom I consider cowards and traitors to the cause. In the national struggle some such groups and individuals have deliberately taken the side of the enemy. They did not even remain neutral. They cast their lot with that of our alien rulers. I think they had better remain in the place of their choice and share fortunes with them. Personally I am well content to be rid of them.

Under these circumstances you will observe that so far as I am concerned no purpose whatever will be served by what is usually called an 'all parties conference'.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. J. N. Correspondence, N.M.M.L
2. In the latter half of 1933 it was suggested that an all parties conference be held to secure substantial modifications of the White Paper proposals and devise ways of ending the political stalemate

12. To Kapildeva Malaviya[1]

Poona
September 10, 1933

My dear Kapildeva,
I received your letter in Lucknow and I am dictating this answer on my way to Poona.

I was very glad to receive your letter and would have been gladder still to meet you. I cannot write at length about the present situation but I feel that you have misunderstood to some extent the press interview I gave I realise that my words were perhaps liable to that misconstruction. I shall only say here that it would not have been proper for me under the existing circumstances to express my disagreement with some of the decisions recently arrived at. I confined myself to interpreting them in as favourable a manner as possible. You will appreciate my position at present. In my own mind I am pretty clear about the various issues before the country and am very far from being depressed in regard to them. Obviously we have to face a difficult position but that is inevitable in a great struggle. More I must keep till we meet.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 JN Correspondence, N.M.M.L.
See ante, item 8 Malaviya had inquired whether this meant that the Congress organisation had ceased to function and would resume work later in more propitious circumstances.

And because of that I shall not sign myself, yours in hostility, as you have done, but live in hopes of converting you to the straight and narrow path which leads to Indian freedom.

In that hope I am,

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

15. The Andaman Prisoners[1]

Sir Harry Haig[2] has done me the honour of referring to me in that august and ponderous assembly, the Council of State. He has mentioned the fact that one of my first public acts after my release from prison was to add my name to the manifesto about the condition of prisoners in the Andaman Islands.[3] Evidently, he expected that a long stay in prisons in India must have dulled my feelings of humanity and my sensibility to human suffering.

I am glad to assure him that I have managed to retain these feelings and sentiments in spite of the course of treatment that the Government in India has prescribed for me from time to time. Indeed, the manifesto expressed very feebly what I felt in the matter.

Personally, I was not very desirous of making any demands on the government however obvious and humanitarian they might be, through this manifesto, for long experience has taught me that humanity or reason has little place in the mental equipment of some of the high officials of the government.

1. Statement to the press, Poona, 12 September 1933 The Hindu, 13 September 1933
2. Harry Graham Haig (1881-1956), entered I C S, 1905; Home Secretary, 1926 30, Home Member, 1932 34, Governor of U.P, 1934 39.
3. On 11 September 1933 Haig charged the Congress leaders of encouraging terrorist activities and added, "one of the first public acts of Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, after his release from prison, was to include his name among the list of miscellaneous signatures to a manifesto which....must have the effect of keeping alive the feeling of sympathy for terrorist prisoners in the Andamans."

14. To Patrick Lacey[1]

Poona
September 13, 1933

Dear Mr. Lacey,[2]

Your letter came as a pleasant surprise.[3] For nearly two years the Statesman's Simla correspondent was my daily companion. The companionship was real and yet it was strangely unreal, for he represented to me not a person or persons in solid flesh and blood but something shadowy and ghostly which materialised itself in cold print. Your letter has brought a touch of reality to this ghostly figure and filled it with flesh and blood and the virtues and frailties of human beings.

Yes, I was at Trinity, Cambridge. But surely you do less than justice to Balliol and Oxford when you say that they might have produced a lifeless dummy figure, a robot, who could but speak and move and act at the bidding of entrenched authority. I have a high regard for Balliol and I would have thought otherwise. Even Balliol could not have made me a greater friend of the English than Harrow and Trinity made me, but that friendship, I am afraid, does not extend to the British Government in England and India.

Perhaps you are right in saying that my English is better than my Hindi. I am glad to find that you take interest in Hindi writing.

Mahadeva Desai is almost beyond the reach of your love. He is somewhere in prison.

I remember the incident at Simla station to which you refer.[4] I am afraid I am a very imperfect follower of Mr. Gandhi's doctrine of satyagraha, but long association with him has at least taught me to try to go through life's journey with as peaceful a motive as possible.

1 J.N. Correspondence, NMML.
2 Correspondent of The Statesman at Simla.
3 Lacey had written. "You have the Harrovian manner to perfection....I could take you for a fellow Balliolian, not a mere Cantab from Trinity....but of course, if you had gone to Oxford instead of Cambridge you might now be an ornament of the Government of India and a devoted friend of the English."
4 Lacey, referring to the incident, had written, "I last saw you in the act of giving a most unnonviolent biff in the chest of a Congress volunteer at Simla station when Gandhi left for the R.T.C."

In regard to economic matters, the Karachi Congress, by passing the important resolution on Fundamental Rights and Economic Changes,[2] gave a lead and pointed out the direction in which we should move. I attach great importance to that resolution but I would personally like to go much further and to clarify the position still more.

It seems to me that if we are to improve the condition of the masses, to raise them economically and give them freedom, it is inevitable that vested interests in India will have to give up their special position and many of their privileges. It is inconceivable to me how else the masses can rise. Therefore the problem of achieving freedom becomes one of revising vested interests in favour of the masses. To the extent this is done, to that extent only will freedom come. The biggest vested interest in India is that of the British Government, next come the Indian princes, and others follow. We do not wish to injure any class or group and the divesting should be done as gently as possible and with every effort to avoid injury. But it is obvious that the divesting is bound to cause loss to the classes or groups which enjoy special privileges at the expense of masses. It is also obvious that the process of divesting must be as speedy as possible to bring relief to the masses whose condition, as you know, is as bad as it can well be. Indeed economic forces themselves are acting with amazing rapidity today and breaking up the old order. The big zamindari and taluqdari system in the United Provinces has largely collapsed, though it may be kept up for some time longer by outside agencies. Even the condition of the zamindars is very bad and the peasantry of course are in a far worse position.

We are all agreed that the Round Table Conference and its various productions are utterly useless to solve even one of India's many problems. As I conceive it, the Round Table Conference was an effort to consolidate the vested interests in India behind the British Government so as to face the rising and powerful national and economic movements in the country which threaten their interests. Essentially, in the international parlance, it was a fascist grouping of vested and possessing interests, and fascist methods were adopted in India to suppress the national movement. And because the mere preservation of all these vested interests in India cannot possibly solve our economic ills, whether those of the masses or even of the middle classes, the effort is foredoomed to inevitable failure. Even from the point of view of a democratic nationalism, as you yourself stated at the Round Table Conference, democracy and autocracy can ill go together.

2. See Selected Works, Vol. 4, pp. 511-513.

Indeed, I had pointed this out in my letter which apparently was not published, to the originators of the manifesto. Apart from other consideration, I am perfectly happy to have my name included in the "list of miscellaneous signatures", which contains the honoured names of Dr. Rabindranath Tagore and Acharya P. C. Ray.

I am an admirer of the Gilbert and Sullivan operas,[4] but I have not taken my ideas of crime and punishment from them. Sir Harry Haig, no doubt, has taken his ideas from the Mikado, that monarch whose "object all sublime" was to "make the punishment fit the crime", and is practising these Gilbertian theories on the unhappy prisoners in Indian prisons and especially in prisons in the Andamans. He will excuse us, I trust, if we are unable to appreciate this royal example and still cling to humanitarian notions and to the belief that all human beings should be treated as human beings and that all imprisonment should be reformatory and not punitive, vindictive and barbarous.

4 Sir William Gilbert, in collaboration with Arthur Sullivan, wrote from 1871 a number of popular light operas

16. To Mahatma Gandhi[1]

Poona
13 September, 1933

My dear Bapu,

In our recent conversations you will remember that I laid stress on the reiteration and clearer definition of our national objective. The objective of political independence has been finally laid down by the Congress and there is nothing to add to it or take away from it. We stand for complete independence. Sometimes a little confusion arises because of vague phraseology and misleading propaganda and it is therefore as well to remove this confusion by a reiteration of our political demand. Even the word 'independence' is used with a variety of meanings. Obviously it must include, as the Congress has clearly and definitely laid down, full control of the army and of foreign relations as well as financial control.

1 The Hindu, 20 September 1933.
The original is not available in the Gandhi Smarak Sangrahalaya and there is no copy in the J.N. Papers. Parts of this letter received wide publicity even at the time.

not prevent Congress workers in any area from cooperating together in an organised way for the furtherance of our programme.

Confusion has also arisen in the country about the implications of individual and mass civil disobedience I appreciate, to some extent, the difference, but this difference does not appear to me to be a fundamental one, as, in any event, civil disobedience is essentially an individual affair. Individual civil disobedience can develop into mass civil disobedience. Besides, you told me that if an organisation felt strong enough to undertake the responsibility and the risk, it could, of its own initiative, take up mass civil disobedience Indeed you were of opinion that a local organisation could in this manner go ahead in any direction which was not contrary to Congress methods or policy.

Stress was laid in your previous statement on the undesirability of secrecy; although you pointed out that there was nothing inherently illegitimate in secret methods. I think that most of us agree, and certainly I am of that opinion, that our movement is essentially an open one and secret methods do not fit in with it. Such methods, if indulged in to any large extent, are likely to change the whole character of the movement, as it has been conceived, and produce a certain amount of demoralization. Agreeing with this, some of us feel that, to some extent as for instance, in communicating with each other or sending directions or keeping contacts, a measure of secrecy may be necessary. Perhaps secrecy is hardly the word for these activities and privacy would suit them better. Privacy of course is always open to all groups and individuals. Secrecy or the avoidance of it, as you said, cannot be made into a fetish.

But secrecy is certainly involved in the production of printed or duplicated news-sheets and bulletins. These bulletins have often served a useful purpose in the past in keeping contact between headquarters and districts and in sending information or directions. You pointed out to me the difficulties and undesirable consequences of running these secret presses and duplicating machines. Many good workers are tied up and have to avoid aggressive action, money has to be invested in such machines and frequently they are taken away by the police. Even from the practical point of view this continuous drain and tying up of workers results in demoralization. You suggested that the best way was to have handwritten copies of bulletins etc. containing the name of the publisher. Generally, I agree with all this and appreciate the force of your argument. But I do feel that under certain circumstances it may be desirable for a local or provincial committee or group to issue bulletins of directions etc. secretly. This must not be encouraged, indeed

Another aspect has to be borne in mind. The problem of Indian freedom cannot be separated from the vital international problems of the world. The present crisis in the world's affairs is having its repercussions in India. At any moment it may result in a complete breakdown or in a violent international conflagration. Everywhere there is a conflict and a contest between the forces of progress and betterment of the masses and the forces of reaction and vested interests. We cannot remain silent witnesses to this titanic struggle for it affects us intimately. Both on the narrower ground of our own interests and the wider ground of international welfare and human progress, we must, I feel, range ourselves with the progressive forces of the world. This ranging ourselves at present can of course be ideological only.

These are some of the larger issues that fill my mind and I am convinced, not only that we ignore them at our peril, but that a true appreciation of them will vitalize and give new meaning to our struggle for freedom which we must continue till the full objective is achieved. These wider issues are of great importance but at present, as you know, the minds of large numbers of our countrymen are greatly exercised over immediate national problems and specially the question of carrying on the struggle. The statements that you and Syt. M.S. Aney issued some time ago to guide the country have, I am afraid, produced some confusion and there has even been some resentment in regard to particular directions contained in them. There is a vague talk, in quarters which ought to know better, that the Congress has been dissolved. It is obvious that nothing of the kind has been done or could be done under the constitution. Your directions and those of Mr. Aney were, I take it, in the nature of advice or suggestions to meet a certain position that had arisen. The Congress continues as before but it is clear that it cannot function normally. When the government declares its committees to be illegal, there can be no regular offices or open activity. To recognise this fact and to adapt ourselves to it is not to wind up any Congress committee, much less the Congress organisation as a whole.

A necessary consequence from this was to avoid the possibility of a few newcomers who formed committees when the old members and other reliable workers went to prison, or even individuals, committing the Congress to an undesirable course of action. As is known, we have had to face this risk in the past and unreliable persons have come to the helm of affairs in some local areas with the intention of obstructing and even stopping the very activities they were supposed to further. It thus becomes desirable to prevent such unreliable persons from exploiting the name of the Congress committee. This of course does among political groups. That need not frighten us. Personally I have no fear at all of any disaster or catastrophe in India. There are always ups and downs in a national movement.

Yours very sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

18. Statement to the Press[1]

Immediately after my discharge from prison, my first thought was the serious illness of my mother, and I hastened to her bedside in hospital. But, though anxiety filled me and my mind was troubled because of her illness, it was inevitable for me to think hard about the present political condition of the country and the course of our struggle for freedom. For over twenty months, I have been cut off from activity. For over two years I had not met Gandhiji, and much had happened during this period. I sought to find out how matters stood from some of my colleagues in the United Provinces; but, above all, I desired to meet Gandhiji after my long separation from him. It was hard for me to leave my mother's bedside; but as soon as I could possibly do so for a few days, I came to Poona. I have now had the privilege of long and intimate conversations with him, and placed my viewpoint before him and listened to his advice. Two questions faced us: the larger national question involved in the freedom struggle, and the personal issue raised by Gandhiji's recent discharge from prison. The latter was a question which Gandhiji alone could decide. It was primarily a matter affecting him, though, of course, any decision of his was bound to have national reaction.

I had come to Poona to see Gandhiji and clear up my own mind about many matters. But I find that considerable public interest has been taken in our conversations and there seems to be the expectation that some public statement should be made with regard to them. It has been thought that a convenient way of placing some of the important points before the public would be by exchange of letters between Gandhiji and myself. It is proposed to exchange and issue these letters to the press in due course.

1. Poona, 14 September 1933. The Tribune, 16 September 1933.

it should be discouraged, but a certain latitude in exceptional circumstances might be permitted.

There is one other small matter which seems to me rather ridiculous. It was right and proper, if I may say so, for you to court imprisonment by giving previous intimation of your intention to do so to the authorities. But it seems to me to be perfectly absurd for others, and even Congress volunteers, to send such notices or communications to the authorities. Any person desiring to offer civil resistance should openly carry on activities which further our cause and thus court arrest. He must not forget or ignore these activities and merely ask to be arrested.

This letter has become long enough. I do not mention here the many other matters which I had the privilege of discussing with you.[3]

Yours affectionately,
Jawahar

3 Mahatma Gandhi in his reply of 14 September 1933 emphasised the importance of means as well as ends, and stressed the distinction between individual disobedience and mass movement in that the former, if a failure, did not "affect others adversely". He reiterated his dislike of secret methods, and was ready to forego any advantage in order to educate the masses in fearlessness.

17. To J. Makhmoor[1]

Poona
September 14, 1933

Dear Mr. Makhmoor,[2]

I have your letter for which I thank you. There are no riddles in my mind except such as every person dabbling in public affairs has to face. I am fairly clear and definite. None the less a politician has to work with the human material he finds. Unity of course is good and desirable but such unity must be real unity of ideas and objectives. Anything else is bound to fall. Therefore I think it is important to lay stress on a definite objective and ideology. This will clear up the position and make the public realise where various groups and individuals stand. To begin with it may result in an apparent disunity

1 JN Correspondence, NMML.
2. Editor of Muflis, an anti communal weekly, published in Bombay.

19. Interview to the Press[1]

Question: How is your health now?

Jawaharlal Nehru: I am all right.

Q: You look pulled down.

JN: I was better immediately after coming out of jail. I think that the sudden change from two years' regular routine life in jail has affected me a little.

Q: Would you answer a few questions?

JN: It would be better if I am interviewed after the publication of the letters exchanged between Gandhiji and myself.

Q: Would you explain the last paragraph of your yesterday's statement, in which you say there are certain difficulties in the way of convening a meeting of the A.I.C.C.

JN: It is obvious. Several of the A.I.C.C. members are still in jail, and besides, it is not known whether the government would allow a meeting of the A.I.C.C.

Q: But has not the A.I.C.C. been declared an unlawful association?

JN: No, the Congress was also not declared unlawful, but there was a ban against holding the Congress at Calcutta.

Q: But at a time like this the government might not ban a meeting of the A.I.C.C. The conference at Poona was not banned.

JN: It might be possible to hold a meeting of the A.I.C.C. some time in the near future. But on all matters I would like to wait till the letters are published before saying anything further. The summary that has been published is inadequate.

Q: Will you deal with a few questions regarding convening of the A.I.C.C. meeting?

JN: So far as I know only Pandit Malaviya had asked for a meeting of the A.I.C.C. I am bound by the constitution to call a meeting of the A.I.C.C. if the required number of members ask for it. Or if I think a meeting ought to be called soon, I will certainly convene a meeting.

1 Bombay, 15 September 1933. From The Bombay Chronicle, 16 September 1933.

It has been my privilege, in common with a vast number of my countrymen and countrywomen, to take part in the struggle for India's freedom during the last memorable thirteen years under the leadership and inspiration of Gandhiji. My own viewpoint has always been political and economic; and I have seldom been influenced by religious or other like considerations, though the moral and practical aspect of satyagraha has always appealed to me. Gandhiji, as is well known, is essentially a man of religion and his outlook is governed by this. Despite this difference in outlook, many of us have found numerous points of agreement with him, and have most willingly and joyously followed his lead in action. India knows, and the world knows, how great a leader in action he is and how he has infused the breath of life and hope in our suffering and toiling masses.

Politically, and to some extent economically, the objective he had had in view appealed to us and we worked to the best of our ability to achieve it. I feel that the methods he taught us to follow are fundamentally right for us and we must continue to pursue them till we gain that objective and that for these methods his leadership is essential. Freedom can have no real meaning for us unless it is the freedom of the lowest and the most exploited in the land. Gandhiji has always laid stress on this and it is from these down-trodden classes that he has drawn his strength.

I feel, however, that it would be desirable to define our objective more clearly so that there may be no misapprehension in India and abroad. In particular, I feel that in these days of the economic breakdown of the capitalist order, it is essential for us to lay down a clear economic policy for the national movement.

I have had a request from a respected colleague to convene a meeting of the All India Congress Committee. I would gladly take this step, as indeed I am bound to do, if there is a requisition demanding such a meeting. But I feel that under the present circumstances there are considerable difficulties in the way of convening a meeting of the All India Congress Committee.

and they result in removing the weaker elements and thereby really strengthen it in the end. It is true that certain groups and classes have now definitely ranged themselves against the Congress. That also is a desirable result, because it separates those classes which are fundamentally against a really democratic India in which the Indian masses have their full say. Such groups only weaken the movement.

Q: Will you please tell me why you are not calling a meeting of the A.I.C.C.?

JN: As I have stated in my statement I would gladly call a meeting of the A.I.C.C. if I receive a requisition. Personally I do not consider that a meeting at the present moment would serve any useful purpose. I take it that some of the people who desire a meeting of the A.I.C.C. to be convened might wish for a revision of the programme, but so far as I am aware there is no such widespread desire and most Congressmen are quite happy and willing to carry on the present programme.

Q: The whole Indian press, whether nationalist or moderate, has demanded it and why should the wishes of the public in the matter be ignored?

JN: I have noticed some newspaper criticisms about the vagueness of the programme and about the nonconvening of a meeting of the A.I.C.C. at present. The attitude of these newspapers has for long been one of disagreement with some of the aspects of the Congress policy.

So far as I know both Congress workers and the masses are perfectly certain that these newspapers live in an atmosphere of their own and know little about the mentality of the masses and specially of Congressmen in general. Great publicity is given to some individuals who propose some change in the programme but the vast majority of others who are silently carrying on the work receive no publicity at all. Even during the fortnight or so that I have been out of prison I have come in sufficient contact with my colleagues of the Congress to know that fundamentally they desire no change in the present programme. In these circumstances I fail to see what purpose will be served by calling a meeting of the A.I.C.C. and discussing a possible revision of the programme which has been approved and which is being carried on by most of the Congressmen.

Q. How long do you think the present state of affairs will continue?

JN: It is impossible for me to peep into the future, but so far as I can see, it will go on till the objective is achieved. It is possible, of course, that events may sometimes need truces and provisional settlements, as in 1931; but that is a possibility, it seems to me, highly unlikely in the near future.

20. Interview to the Press[1]

Question: The country expected a definite lead from you, but instead you seem agreeable to let things remain just as they are?

Jawaharlal Nehru: So far as I am concerned I am perfectly happy to know that the Congress and the country are carrying on the struggle both for political independence and economic change in favour of the masses. I am also perfectly happy about the general methods adopted by us for the struggle. I would like, as I have stated, a more detailed economic programme for the masses. To some extent, a clear indication has been given in the recent correspondence with Gandhiji. It seems to me that those people who talk about a more definite lead have not given sufficient thought to the lead that has already been given. That can be amplified and the details can be filled in otherwise. I fail to see what more the most militant of individuals can want. For those whose conception of a lead is a lead backwards, I have nothing to say except that they will always be disappointed in me.

Q: Do you not think that civil disobedience as a movement has exhausted itself?

JN: The question exhibits an extraordinary ignorance of the civil disobedience movement, the Indian people and myself, as well as what has been happening in the country, and is happening now. It is patent that if we had thought that civil disobedience had exhausted itself we could not recommend its further carrying on. There would be no question of making any recommendation either way. Civil Disobedience is not only continuing, but it can never exhaust itself till its object is achieved.

Q: Do you not think that a continuance of the present conditions will destroy the influence of the Congress and drive many people's activities into other and less desirable channels?

JN: The influence of the Congress among the masses has never been so great as it is today, though it is a fact that there is a certain demoralisation among many people which prevents them from showing their true feeling. Such ups and downs always occur in any great movement,

1 Bombay 17 September 1933 The Bombay Chronicle, 18 September 1933.

I am not concerned with hypothetical questions or empty theories in the air; but I am concerned with a scientific consideration of the question of how these hungry stomachs can be filled. It is not a matter of giving alms, but of organising society on a scientific basis so that poverty should be wiped out and the wealth and good things of the world should be evenly distributed.

This cannot be done by piously wishing it or by haphazard methods but by a close and scientific study of the present conditions. Inevitably this leads to the formulation of theories, ideology and methods of bringing about a change. My own experience is that a common illiterate peasant understands the realities of politics and economics, so far as they affect him, more than many of the wise and learned gentlemen who go to the Round Table Conferences and the like, because the latter live entirely in the upper regions, and know little or nothing of the soil, and those who live on it.

The urgent and definite action that is called for today to give bread to the masses is the achievement of independence and divesting of the vested interests. In no other way will the masses have relief.

Q: What is your immediate programme? Are you content that the Congress should drift as at present?

JN: My correspondence with Mahatma Gandhi has made it clear that generally he agrees with the objective of bringing about an equalisation in the social order by the divesting of vested interests. It is true, as pointed out by him, that our outlook is temperamentally not alike but fundamentally we aim at the same thing. Gandhiji is far more interested in methods and believes that if right methods are pursued inevitably the right result will follow. Personally I feel it is also necessary to have the full objective always in view. As far as the methods are concerned, I have agreed in the past and I agree now wholly with the fundamental basis of Gandhiji's methods of carrying on the struggle. Personally I would like to develop the economic programme in greater detail so that people may have a clear vision. Our struggle is fundamentally a national struggle because all countries under foreign domination are bound to be nationalistic before anything else.

But nationalism often covers a multitude of conflicts and even, I am sorry to say, self-seeking groups and individuals. An economic programme helps in clearing issues and allowing everyone to realise exactly where he and his class and groups stand. Gandhiji has repeatedly made it clear that the struggle should be continued till the full objective of the Congress is achieved. He has also said that he is always willing to explore the avenue of peace. Some people think that there is a

Q: Is Gandhiji negotiating with Simla through the moderates? Or are certain moderates using their influence to bring about peace between Gandhiji and the government?[2]

JN: Newspapers have been giving prominence to the possibility of peace talks. Personally I am aware of no such talks now nor do I think there is likely to be any such talk in the near future. So far as I know Gandhiji is also not aware of that but whatever the position may be, as I have already said, Gandhiji is always open to discuss the matter with anyone desiring to do so. That is his basic moral position. That does not, I will repeat, make any difference in regard to the objective which remains as defined. Personally I am convinced that the two forces that are in conflict today, that is to say imperialism and nationalism, are fundamentally opposed to each other and between them there can never be peace except on the basis of an ending of imperialism. Any compromise which leaves even a trace of imperialism can only be a makeshift. It is not, and I should like to make it clear, a question of a quarrel between the Indian people and the English people.

With the English people as a whole we have not the least quarrel but in India, as in many other countries of the East, these two world forces, nationalism and imperialism, are in conflict and a solution of that conflict can only be a complete victory of nationalism over imperialism. That is what is involved in the political ideal of the Congress, that is national independence. Even apart from this political ideal, as we have stated in our correspondence, economic questions inevitably force themselves to the front and must be settled in favour of the masses. But all the great movements we have had in recent years are fundamentally the product of economic discontent of both the middle classes and the masses. No constitution, no compromise, no so-called peace that does not remove that economic discontent can be stable or can be a solution of the Indian problem.

Q: Do you think the masses are concerned with the theories propounded by you or by Gandhiji, unless it gives them a little bread and some freedom to earn it? Is it not a waste of time to discuss these hypothetical questions, when some urgent and definite action is called for, since the country is drifting into despondency and stagnation?

JN: This question seems to me to be misconceived. The whole question of freedom is ultimately a question of filling hungry stomachs. It is not a question of paper constitutions or pacts and compromises.

2. It had been reported that some non Congress leaders were urging the government to negotiate with Mahatma Gandhi.

22. On Gandhi Jayanti Celebrations[1]

During this Gandhi Jayanti fortnight[2] that the country is celebrating I should like to remind my comrades of the Congress and all others interested in the international movement that khadi continues to be the only dress and uniform for us. During the last three years the Congress came to an understanding with a large number of cotton mills in this country and those of the mills that pledged themselves to further the national programme and agreed to a number of conditions, were given certificates. Even this did not displace khadi from its premier place. All it was meant to do was to consolidate the national activities in order to keep out foreign cloth. As a matter of fact many of these mills that had pledged themselves in this way forgot or deliberately ignored these pledges and broke the condition under which they had promised to function. Some of them even opposed openly the national movement and also tried to compete with khadi. It is quite possible that these mills may come to some agreement with foreign cotton interests and thus try to exploit jointly with the foreign capitalist, the Indian market and the Indian consumer.[3]

Under these circumstances, these mills can hardly be considered national concerns and all those who desire national advancement, political and economic, should concentrate on the purchase and use of khadi. I hope that during this fortnight especially khadi sales and purchases will be encouraged in every way as a small tribute to our great leader whose birthday we celebrate.

1 Lucknow, 20 September 1933 The Leader, 22 September 1933.
2 From 16 September 1933 to 2 October 1933.
3 Talks were going on at this time between the millowners of India and Lancashire which ultimately culminated in an agreement on 30 October 1933.

contradiction in these two statements but this has always been Mahatma Gandhi's attitude. Even at the height of the struggle he has always said that he is prepared for peace because he is a man of peace as well as a born civil resister. This can only mean that any final peace can only be achieved when the full objective is gained. There may of course be what may be called provisional settlements or truces such as the Delhi truce.

Some people are accused of fomenting class struggles. Usually this accusation is made by those fortunate individuals who happen to belong to the classes on top and are prosperous. As a matter of fact, class struggles have always existed and exist today, all over the world. People interested in maintaining the status quo try to hide this fact. In order to understand the present position in the world, or in any country, this cloak has to be removed, and the real facts seen. These facts disclose that some classes dominate the social order, and exploit other classes. Class struggle is not thus created but recognised, and the remedy for it is then sought in the ending of that exploitation.

21. Interview at Kanpur[1]

There is not the slightest difference between Gandhiji and myself. As a matter of fact, our recent conversations made it perfectly clear that there is a fundamental unity in regard to our line of action.

I am also surprised to learn that I am contemplating forming a new party along with my friends.[2] So far as I am concerned, this is totally untrue. In all important matters, as before, Gandhiji is the only possible leader of the Indian struggle, and I am happy to be one of his numerous soldiers.

Some newspapers are giving prominence to so-called peace efforts. I know nothing about them. Before leaving Bombay, I asked Gandhiji about them, and he also knew nothing. Evidently, the so-called peace move largely resides in the minds of editors and newspapermen and has no foundation in fact.

1 19 September 1933. From The Leader, 22 September 1933.

2 On 13 September 1933 a newspaper had reported that if, after Jawaharlal's return from Poona, it was found impossible to follow Mahatma Gandhi, a new party with complete independence as its goal and a programme based on socialism would be considered.

especially to a definition of the qualifications of legislators. In my own way, which is perhaps somewhat different from yours, I have also desired an economic orientation of our policy and objective.

I find it quite amazing how extraordinarily vague are the ideas of many of our closest colleagues in regard to our objective. Perhaps that is inevitable for nationalism hides a host of differences under a cover of anti-feeling against the imperialist oppressor. That has been the case in every country under alien domination and I do not suppose that we shall escape this confused thinking till we are free politically. In spite of this, however, I have endeavoured to lay stress on the economic side and world events are gradually forcing people to think on those lines.

I am sure that the more clear thinking we have, the more it will result in cleavages and apparent disunity among various classes. People talk of not encouraging class warfare but the whole world today is based on domination of one class by another. To recognise this is to recognise an obvious fact. Not to do so seems to me not only folly but a perilous course. Facts will not fit in with our theories. It is for our theories to fit in with the facts as they are.

It is a little difficult in the course of a letter to deal fully with my views on social and economic problems. If I have the opportunity I shall try to develop them in the press. Briefly they are socialistic and my interpretation of history is what is commonly called the Marxist view. That view limits private property but of course some private property still remains.

It seems to me that you lay more stress on the individual than on the social group in your conception of swaraj. The so-called modern view is to lay greater stress on the social group and its organisation, hoping that a better environment will produce the better individual. Of course both views are to some extent right and the individual and the social group act and react on each other. It is a question of stress. Always the method of securing wise and unselfish legislators has been a vital problem. Plato, as you know, wanted philosophers to be rulers. The difficulty always has been to find a method of picking out these supermen and placing them in seats of power. Much will depend on the objective that one aims at. Even apart from this it is an extraordinarily difficult thing to get the right men at the top and I do not see how the laying down of qualifications for legislators will help it, for such list of qualifications, it seems to me, will permit undesirables to come in. Ultimately one can only rely on a sufficiently enlightened wide-awake public opinion.

If what is desired is to preserve an existing order, obviously the older and more conservative should be the legislators. If on the other hand

23. On the Treatment of Political Prisoners in Rae Bareli Jail[1]

Complaints and charges against the treatment of political prisoners in Rae Bareli jail have piled up. Cases have gone to courts and Miss Ellen Wilkinson paid a special visit to the jail and after a close inspection presented a very damaging report.

It is reported that the Home Member has also paid a visit to enquire into the conditions. In spite of all this, there appears to have been little change and the latest news is that Chandrika Prasad,[2] a political prisoner, has been on hunger strike for the last eight or nine days as a protest against ill-treatment. Those who have any knowledge of jail conditions know what this terribly painful ordeal signifies.

High officials may come and go but Rae Bareli jail administration carries on in its old way regardless of public protest and even official frown. Such is the steel frame under which we live in this country. Our sympathy goes out to our brave comrades and we realise how even Home Members are powerless under the present system to get rid of obvious and patent abuses under the laws that function today.

1 Lucknow, 21 September 1933. The Bombay Chronicle, 22 September 1933.
2 A Congressman from Bachcharawan in Rae Bareli district; sentenced to six months rigorous imprisonment in 1932, went on a hunger strike on 14 September 1933 in protest against the beating of two political prisoners.

24. To Bhagavan Das[1]

Lucknow
September 23, 1933

My dear Babu Bhagavan Dasji,

I am sorry I could only send you a brief letter from Poona. I have now received your letter. I have read it with care. I note well that you have attached the greatest importance to a definition of swaraj and

1 J. N. Correspondence, N.M.M.L.

25. Appeal for Khadi[1]

I find that Gandhi Ashram, Meerut, which is in charge of khadi bhandars, and production centres in the United Provinces, Delhi and Hindustani Central Provinces, has made great progress in khadi work. They not only produce beautiful designs and improved quality but have reduced the prices. In some lines they are competing on equal terms in the open market with mill products. 'Buy khadi' is thus not the work of charity but of enlightened national and individual self-interest. To compromise with the so-called swadeshi mill cloth after all that has happened and is happening today is merely to delude oneself into believing that this also may be serving the national cause. To all our sympathisers in the United Provinces especially, therefore, I make this appeal that they will not make this weak and ineffective compromise and instead stand for khadi and khadi alone.

1. Lucknow, 23 September 1933. The Tribune, 25 September 1933.

26. On the Congress Programme[1]

I do not wish to enter into a profitless controversy or to repeat myself again and again. There is obviously a radical difference in outlook between me and those who criticise me in some newspapers and when the outlook and objective are different it is natural that there should be disagreement about the methods to be adopted.

The first question before the country and before each individual is whether they are struggling for a change in the regime or for what is called reforms. So far as I am concerned I want and am working for a complete change in the regime. States all over the world, as well

1. Interview to the press, Lucknow, 24 September 1933. From The Tribune, 27 September 1933.

27. Speech at Lucknow[1]

Nations, like individuals, have only two alternatives in which to live: they can live either in a complacent satisfaction with their present lot believing despairingly that this is the best life they can have under the circumstances or they can live in ceaseless strife against all injustice, oppression (physical, mental or even spiritual) and handicaps of life. The first alternative is comparable to living in a khud, down below in the valleys of mountains, where the diseases and dirt of mountains perpetually fall, whereas the second is an ever optimistic ascent towards the loftiest pinnacles. Dr. Besant's is a life of the second category. She hated with all her might those existing conventions which disagreed with her ideals and gave them an endless battle, irrespective of the fact whether she scored or lost. She might have lost in some but that constant endeavour, like the repeated ascents of a mountain, had its own pleasure; and she persisted in it with a courage and patience rarely to be met with. That is perhaps the greatest lesson of the life of that lofty character.

But there are people who really believe in the khud life as the most satisfactory from several points of view. Most Indians today share that belief. They might be right but they must not forget that their homes in the khud cannot remain immune from the effects caused by the upheavals going on in the mountains. The whole world today is quaking and the future is full of anxiety. How then can you in India hope to live in peace when there are unmistakable signs of an earthquake above? You should decide whether you should attempt an ascent, notwithstanding its attendant hardships, or be crushed in your khud homes without moving a hand to shield yourselves from the falling stones. And you should decide soon lest the world events decide the issue for you. You must also note that when the world events decide an issue the decisions leave no alternative.

Religion, I feel, is the bane of India. Religious customs, conventions and traditions have all to be given battle if they impede our advancement. And there are many of them which make us lethargic. Should we be made a prey to them?

1 Lucknow, 24 September 1933 From The Leader, 27 September 1933.

as India, today are involved in fundamental changes in the regime. If this fact is once grasped, then it would be easier to lay down an effective policy for achieving such a basic change in the regime. In these days of the collapse of the social structure of Europe and America, it is surprising that people should imagine that economic theories put forward by some others would take decades to be put into practice.

So far as I am concerned the Congress programme can be put in a nutshell thus:

(1) Objective—Complete independence and revision of the social structure in favour of the masses. The Congress is committed to the Karachi resolution and rather vaguely to further economic changes. I feel, however, that the Congress mentality has now advanced further in favour of greater economic changes to put an end to the exploitation of the masses.

(2) Methods—Peaceful civil disobedience in its various forms as the primary and most effective way of carrying on the struggle. For those Congressmen who, for some reason or other, are unable for the moment to carry on civil disobedience, there are certain subsidiary activities such as the removal of untouchability, khadi, swadeshi etc. As India consists very largely of villages, our activities must also largely be rural to reach the villages so that we may work with and for the masses. Of course, the towns including those of the middle classes and working classes are also an important field. If we are proposing a policy of radical economic change, we are also to propose radical means to achieve it, and I am quite sure that we shall achieve it before our critics and we are very much older.

Question: What about convening the meeting of the A.I.C.C.? Jawaharlal Nehru: I have consulted many colleagues during the last fortnight, and as I have already stated, I am perfectly willing to convene a formal meeting of the All India Congress Committee, if so desired by the members. There is no wish on our part to prevent such a meeting or any other form of consultation between Congressmen, but there is a definite and determined will on our part to carry on the struggle till we have achieved our full objective.

seems to be marching to a tremendous breakdown of the existing conditions. This breakdown can only profit us if the workers are organised and have the correct ideology. I hope therefore that our worker comrades will try to develop this ideology and will organise themselves to achieve the socialist order. The day for petty reforms is past and only a fundamental change can solve our difficulties. The ideal must therefore be full socialism. At the same time in India the worker cannot keep apart from the national struggle. He cannot keep apart from politics. Trade union activities are essential for him as also his political activity because the ultimate objective must be political power for the masses. The working class should therefore try to build up their strength and also try to influence in their favour the national policy by associating themselves wherever possible with the national movement. They must try to build up a strong platform of unity among various groups of workers on the basis of a full socialistic programme with political action in alliance and cooperation with the national movement. I wish the workers of South India all success in their efforts to achieve this.

29. To S.K. Mukerji[1]

Lucknow
September 26, 1933

Dear Dr. Mukerji,[2]

I have your two letters. As regards my mother's condition she is a little better and we hope that the improvement will continue. The doctors attending on her are definitely of the opinion that an operation is not desirable. Ordinarily, of course, such an operation would be indicated but her age and general weakness seem to be against it.

I quite realise that we have to contend against the views of society, customs and prejudices in our social organisation which have made us a decadent race. It was indeed with a view to break down this defeatist and stagnant condition that the whole noncooperation movement was conceived and it has worked wonders in stiffening the backbone of the people and inspired them with hope Social evils are ultimately the result of economic exploitation and poverty as also of a wrong ideology.

1. J. N. Correspondence, NMML.
2 A physician at Allahabad

28. To A.G. Venkatachari[1]

Lucknow
September 25, 1933

Dear Comrade,[2]
I have your letter. I am afraid I have little time to send you articles but I give below a message for our worker comrades in South India.

I fully realise that the working class movement is in a bad state at present in India. Having been in jail for so long I am not in touch with the latest developments. But I know that the trade union movement is in a bad way. To some extent that is so all over the world. That of course is only an additional reason for us to organise the workers, infuse a correct ideology in them, and make them not only class conscious but also politically conscious. I should like the working class to act politically but I am by no means sure that they can do so effectively at this stage. Very probably a separate political organisation for them would only result in their exploitation by a few non-worker leaders. Under the present conditions in India the national political struggle must dominate the situation. That is so in every country under alien rule. It is no good ignoring this or opposing this. The right way is to accept it and to try to orient it in favour of the workers. At the same time the workers should certainly keep their separate platform which is obviously international.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

MESSAGE TO THE WORKERS OF SOUTH INDIA

Indian workers today are disorganised and many rival groups are trying to capture their sympathies. Most of these groups spend their energies in fighting among themselves and forget the real fight against the capitalist order which exploits the workers. At the same time conditions all over the world point to a collapse of the capitalist system. The world

1. J. N. Correspondence, N.M.M.L.
2. A journalist and writer of Madras; associated with labour and socialist movements.

30. To V.V. Giri[1]

Lucknow
September 30, 1933

Dear Comrade Giri,

I was very glad to receive your long letter and to read detailed suggestions about village organisation.[2] In the main I agree with you and indeed in the past we have tried to work to some extent at least on these lines in our villages. As you know it is always an extraordinarily difficult task to organise the peasantry. Geographically they are spread out and ideologically they are individualistic. At the present moment I fear it is not possible to proceed with any constructive programme of the kind you mention. Every step that we take brings us into conflict with the government. All we can do is to connect this conflict as far as possible with propaganda work in the rural areas. The last three years have helped greatly in changing the outlook and the ideology of the peasantry. We can push on this process. We are living in India today, as well as in the rest of the world, in a period of intense social change and there is no stability about anything. Under these circumstances it is not possible to do real constructive organisational work. It is not a question of spending a few years in such activity but of being unable to function at all in that way. Even if we withdrew the aggressive direct actionist activity of the Congress—and I am entirely opposed to this for various reasons—we would not have an opportunity for quiet and effective work. We have to face the struggle here and now and to shape ourselves accordingly.

As regards the elections for the Councils and the Assembly I do not think that the question arises for decision at this stage. Certainly under certain circumstances it may be desirable to use the Councils as another front to fight government. But always this will depend on the existing objective facts and conditions, both national and international. The situation changes so rapidly nowadays that it is impossible to lay down a detailed programme of such a kind too far ahead. We have to take advantage of this changing situation and fashion ourselves accordingly.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. J. N. Correspondence, NMML.
2. He had suggested a strong network of peasant organisations, on the lines of trade unions, in the villages throughout India.

So far as I am concerned I am perfectly aware that we must fight this ideology and the social evils but to fight them with the state power obstructing us and strengthening those very evils is a waste of energy and a hopeless task. The fight must therefore be fought on all the fronts and especially on the economic and political fronts. There is no question of getting any power without developing the sanction for it. It is that sanction we are developing and I can assure you that I am quite certain about success. I am not fighting a losing battle anywhere. I fight to win and that too before very long. Only a complete change of regime will enable us to rid ourselves of our many evils and disabilities.

Your suggestions about certain basic demands strike me as wholly insufficient.[3] If you will turn your attention to other countries in the world you will find that they were in as bad a condition as we are and sometimes much worse and yet as soon as they had the political and the economic power in hand they made tremendous progress. Look at Central Asia today across the border of Afghanistan. A dozen years ago this part of the world was perhaps the most backward and superstitious. Women there were kept in a hopeless state of subjection. Today the country has progressed amazingly. Women are not only free but are taking a great part in education, in medical and sanitary work as well as in other occupations. There are innumerable schools and colleges, hospitals and dental clinics, all of them manned largely by the people of the country itself.

The British Government in India, in spite of its professions to the contrary, helps and stands behind every backward and conservative interest in the country including the most orthodox and bigoted religious people. To fight the government has now become synonymous with fight of these interests. Political freedom will thus inevitably mean economic and social freedom.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

[3] Mukerji had suggested Congress entry into Councils, rights for women and stress on truth and cooperation.

9

GENERAL
1931-33

1. Foreword to a Biography of Ganesh Shankar Vidyarthi[1]

It was at Lucknow station in the month of March. The satyagrahi prisoners had been released following the Delhi Agreement and Gandhiji was also among them. We went to the station to give welcome to the leader of our province and were happy to see his smiling face after one year. We had to discuss many things and prepare several plans but there was very little time. We discussed a few things but decided to continue our talks later. But this 'later' never came!

The Working Committee was in session at the Karachi Congress. A telegram came and it broke our hearts—there was sudden darkness before our eyes. One could not believe that Ganeshji had expired. Even in the Congress crowd a strange void and hush was felt. It was very sad and nothing could console us. But why feel sorry?

Ganeshji had died as bravely as he had lived. And if anyone among us were to pray to see his best wish fulfilled then what more can he demand than the courage to face death while serving one's brethren and one's country; and be fortunate enough to die like Ganeshji. He lived and died in glory. The lesson that he has taught us by his death, we shall not be able to teach even if we lived much longer.

It is proper that we should all read the story of his life and learn from it as to how one should live. We should also read the account of his death and learn as to how one should die. A bright star of our nation has gone. But the lustre it shed is still aglow. It illumines the country and its warmth is rejuvenating the hearts which are drooping So why be sad?

Thinking about Ganeshji's life, I feel that he enjoyed real life as George Bernard Shaw wrote:

> This is the true joy in life, the being used for a purpose recognised by yourself as a mighty one; the being thoroughly worn out before you are thrown on the scrap heap; the being a force of nature, instead of a feverish, selfish little clod of ailments and grievances, complaining that the world will not devote itself to making you happy.

Jawaharlal Nehru

1 Allahabad, Vijayadashmi, Samvat era 1988 JN Papers, NMML. Original in Hindi. Written for Devavrat Shastri's book on Ganesh Shankar Vidyarthi published in 1931.

features. Even this is welcome for it leads people to think of the subject and out of this consideration and discussion something good may emerge. Many of the reforms he has urged I agree with. They will lighten the heavy burden of many a man who was my fellow prisoner and whom I grew to like and appreciate, and a touch of much needed humanity will enter the portals of the jail. Some of his suggestions I do not appreciate greatly. One of these is that the condemned prisoners' cells may be converted into a picture gallery of the apostles and avatars, and that other prisoners should be ceaselessly reminded of the error of their ways, and the straight and narrow path of virtue should ever be pointed out to them. I have no objection to the picture gallery as such but, if I happened to be a prisoner again, I doubt if I would fancy too much moralising or preaching. The straight and narrow path is not so difficult if one is well fed and has a motor car to help one to glide along it. But with an empty stomach and the world against you, it becomes hard and slippery.

It is immaterial, however, how much one approves or disapproves of the suggestions made. The real thing is that people should realise that immediate and vital reforms are necessary in our prisons. I hope this little book will help them to realise this.

Jawaharlal Nehru

3. The Defence of India[1]

The decision of the Lahore Congress accepting independence as our immediate objective necessarily involved the control by free India of the defence forces of the country. This point was brought out clearly last year in the Yeravda prison negotiations between the government and Mahatma Gandhi and some other Congress leaders. The Karachi

1 Ahmedabad, 9 September 1931. Published in Young India in two instalments on 24 September and 1 October 1931.

2. Foreword to a Book on Prison Reforms[1]

The last ten years have produced many an expert in prison matters in India. Of the scores of thousands who went to prison for political offences a few had some special privileges, but the vast majority had to suffer all the hardships which are the lot of the ordinary prisoner. It is well that the light of day has entered the dark recesses of the prison cell and revealed some of its miseries and horrors. It is well that people in the outer world should think of those who live in that other world behind high walls and iron bars, whom society has seen fit to ostracise and confine and punish, sometimes with a ruthlessness that is amazing. We of the outer world are apt to feel very virtuous and superior when we see these people beyond the pale, and we preach to them and point out to them the error of their ways, and seldom think that our virtue is largely due to circumstances and chances, and their fall from grace is due to pressure of economic forces or lack of education and training or a bad environment.

The fundamental fact about crime is that it is largely the outcome of a bad social order and the fault lies chiefly with society and little if at all with the individual who sins. Jail conditions may be improved and should be improved, but the real improvement that is needed is an improvement of the social order which exploits and starves and thus drives a man to crime.

Most of us who have spent some time in Indian prisons have met many a fine man there condemned for life or for ten years or more to prison. It is amazing how many 'lifers' one comes across. Most of these, with a little help and training, would develop into fine citizens. The impression I have gathered from my contacts with the prison population has been that a large portion of it is very far from being of the criminal type. But society, as it is today, recks little of the good or bad and makes both of them suffer for its own failings.

Mr. Raghubir Sahai[2] has not touched upon this fundamental aspect of crime and prison life, but has laid stress on some of the more obvious

1. J.N. Correspondence, N.M.M.L.
Written on 6 July 1931 to a book, Life in an Indian Jail, by Raghubir Sahai, published in 1937.
2. A Congressman and an advocate of U.P; at one time member, U.P. Legislative Council.

every other country is weak as compared to them. Many countries like Czechoslovakia, Poland, Austria and the Balkan States, can be crushed easily by any one great power. But they retain their independence because of the rivalry of others. India's position is far stronger. Geographically she is as safe as almost any country, and politically the world situation favours her and makes an invasion of her extremely unlikely.

It is a well known fact, and an axiom in international politics, that the possession of India has given England her pre-eminence and commanding position in world affairs. From the time of Peter the Great[2] of Russia this fact has been stressed by statesmen and politicians and world policy has been largely governed by it. Every great country has been jealous of England because of her lordship over India. But the thing had been done, gradually and almost imperceptibly, and it was very difficult to undo it. So the other powers resigned themselves to what they considered an unkind fate and accepted the accomplished fact.

If the domination of England over India ceases and India becomes free, what will be the reaction of other powers? It may be that some will covet her, but the master desire will be to prevent any other nation from possessing India. No country will tolerate the idea of another gaining dominion over India and thus acquiring the commanding position which England occupied for so long. If any power was covetous enough to make the attempt, all others would combine to prevent this and to trounce the intruder. This mutual rivalry would in itself be the surest guarantee against an attack on India.

But let us examine this question further. What country would threaten us? The countries of western Europe are too much involved in their mutual hates and jealousies to trouble us much. The United States of America are too far away for effective action. Japan has her hands full with the new developments in China and the latent, and sometimes apparent, hostility of the United States. In any event, western European powers will not permit her to embark on any such adventure. China will have to face her own great difficulties for a long time to come, and besides, it is difficult to imagine that our relations with her will be anything but friendly. Thus no danger threatens us from any of these countries. There remain for consideration two countries—the little state of Afghanistan and Russia.

Afghanistan in the past has had the closest bonds with India and it should be our endeavour to revive them. Even if we do not succeed

2 Tsar Peter (1672 1725), made Russia one of the great powers of Europe and opened the "window to the West"

Congress also resolved that Purna Swaraj must "give the national control over the defence forces." Thus the Congress position in regard to defence is clear and unambiguous. Under the Swaraj we are working for, there can be no foreign army, in any shape or form, in the country, and the military, naval and air forces will have to be fully under the nation's control.

This would seem obvious enough, but it is necessary to stress the point in order to remove all doubts and misapprehensions. With an alien army in India there can be no national freedom or even internal freedom in the country. Such an army can only be an army of occupation, and must be a standing menace to our freedom. Even if our own armies are controlled by foreign authority, we shall have to face the same danger, and the ultimate authority will always rest with this alien authority The nominal liberty we may possess will be hedged and circumscribed and not worth many days' purchase. Indeed it may be that our own armies, controlled by foreign authority, are used, as they have been so often used in the past, to thwart and oppress us. They will become tools in other's hands meant to protect other's interest against ours.

Suggestions have been made by some people that while a part of the Indian army will be under the nation's control, another part, perhaps a smaller part, might continue for a while under foreign control. This is an equally untenable position. It would of course be a negation of independence. But even apart from this fundamental objection, the imposition of a dual authority on the army is certain to lead to friction and may result in disaster. Dyarchy has wholly failed on the civil side; in matters of defence it is unthinkable. If political power cannot be divided, much less can power over the defence forces be parcelled out. Any attempt to lessen the central national responsibility for the country's defence is bound to lead to intrigue and weakness, and it will become impossible to build up a really national and effective army and navy and air force.

Thus it is clear that the only position that can be accepted is that the nation should have complete control over all the defence forces, and that this control must be vested in the central authority. Some people, however, seem to doubt the capacity of India to defend herself against foreign attack, especially during the first few years of freedom. It is necessary, therefore, to see if there is any foundation for these doubts and fears.

The strength of a country in defence is always relative to the strength of other countries and to the world situation. No country in the world, with the possible exception of the United States of America, can withstand a combination of powers. Apart from half a dozen great powers,

We are inevitably led to the conclusion that the position of free India in the world would be a favourable one and the chances of external attack on her are remote. But none the less we will have to prepare for all contingencies and devote ourselves to the speedy reconstruction of our defence forces. The present Indian army, which is recognised by every one to be highly efficient, will form the nucleus. There will, however, be a lack of officers. Many of the non-commissioned officers can be promoted to commissioned ranks, and, pending the training of other officers, we can have the aid of foreign officers as experts. English officers may be engaged for this purpose and we may also have French, German, Russian or Japanese. There is no lack of them since the Great War. India with her manpower and tremendous resources can solve the problem of defence in a year or two. A free nation faced with the immediate responsibility for protecting the country will do more within twelve months than the British Government would do within half a century. Not long ago, when Europe was convulsed by the Great War, we saw huge armies grow up and officers by tens of thousands were trained almost within a few months in many countries. There were no academical committees appointed then to take a leisurely view of affairs and make recommendations for the generations to come.

Our present army is efficient, but we must bear in mind that we shall have to reorganise it completely and create out of it and out of fresh material a truly national army, with a national purpose and a national outlook. We shall also have, as the resolution on Fundamental Rights has laid down, a national militia as a second line of defence. We have to remember, however, that modern defence and attack are not questions of numbers, but of efficiency and the latest scientific devices. The aeroplane, the tank and other forms of mechanised warfare are replacing the old methods, and soon the modern infantry and cavalry may be as out of date as the men with bows and arrows. We shall have to concentrate, with the help of foreign experts, on building up a highly efficient mechanised defence force.

All these precautions we shall have to take, but above all, we shall have to develop the spirit of our people. If the common people, the workers and the peasants, are real sharers in the freedom that will come they will fight in defence of their country and their newly won freedom with a doggedness and valour that come from a new hope. History gives us many examples of this. But history does not give us a single instance of an alien power teaching its subject people how to defend themselves and thus get rid of foreign domination.

India has thus nothing to fear if the foreign army of occupation is removed and she is left to her own resources for defence. Even if in doing so, we have little to fear from her. The strength of her people lies in defence in their mountain fastnesses and not in a serious attack. Her people are brave fighters but their resources are very limited. She is having her own troubles and wants peace to develop her resources and consolidate her position. But at the worst, if war came, it is quite possible that she may carry out a number of successful raids before we can defeat and hold her in check. It is not conceivable that Afghanistan can succeed ultimately against us.

Russia then remains the sole country that may threaten our freedom. She is large and is in a favourable position to attack us. But it is a well known fact that although she is strong and almost invulnerable in defence, she is weak in attack. The Soviet Government has made good against a host of external enemies, and an abundance of difficulty and misfortune at home. These difficulties and enmities continue and it is exceedingly unlikely that it will embark on an aggressive campaign with so many dangers to face at home and abroad. Such a venture would inevitably expose Russia's flanks to a host of enemies who have long been waiting for a chance to swoop down on her. In spite of her growing strength and self-confidence, Russia is haunted by fear of the combination against her in western Europe and she dare not imperil her existence by attacking India and leaving her long frontiers exposed.

It is notorious that Russia is full today of her Five Year Plan. She can think of nothing else except the building up of her industries and utilising her resources to the full. Probably the Five Year Plan may be followed by another requiring a similar expenditure of energy.

There is also no economic urge for Russia to covet India. Both countries are still mainly agricultural and are being industrialised. Both have enough raw material and need capital and machinery and experts. They are too similar to be of much help to each other. India has been and is useful to England because the latter is highly industrialised and has a great deal of surplus capital. Russia has no such capital and will not have it for a long time.

There has been traditional rivalry between England and Russia for generations past and, under English influence, we have been made to fear the bogey of a Russian invasion. Why should we inherit this hate and fear of Russia from England? It does not concern us. Russia will have nothing to fear from a free India and we need have no fear of her. The danger from Russia, such as there is, is caused solely by this rivalry between her and England. It ceases for us as soon as British domination is removed and we are free. Our position thus, in a military sense, is better and stronger as an independent country than it would be if we continued to be involved in British imperial policy.

It was a pleasant thought that when all the rest of the world was awry and many of its thinkers were on the verge of despair and did not know where to find a remedy, there was in India this green oasis of self-confidence and self-praise amongst our rulers, and thought and new ideas were considered undesirable and unnecessary commodities. Such was the general view we had in prison through our little window.

Sometimes, not infrequently, humour came to us to lighten the burden of our days, in the shape of speeches and addresses by governors; for our governors, though stronger than ever, are no longer silent. Having hushed other voices, they feel it their duty to shout loud and frequently and give us their views on life and its many problems. These solo performances became particularly amusing when economics and modern social problems were touched upon, and a measure of sympathy went out to the performers at this addition to their many burdens, for which they had received no training. Perhaps the sympathy was wasted, for in their own opinion the performances may have been adequate.

Still I shall venture to make a suggestion. Sir Malcolm Hailey is considered, with justification, to be a successful performer on the platform, and perhaps there is no other among the tribe of governors. Sir Malcolm is already considered almost too big and too wise a person for a governorship. Why not make him a kind of super governor for the training of selected candidates for governorship? These aspirants might go through a brief course and learn how to deliver a vice-chancellor's address with occasional classical references and many pious platitudes, and a special dissertation on the danger of students or teachers dabbling in politics (all pro-government activities of course not being considered politics); how to answer an address from a municipal board and criticise its finances, with a special dissertation on the undesirability of municipalities mixing civics with politics (this has of course nothing to do with municipal teachers and other employees joining Aman Sabhas and similar organisations, as the Congress. Such public work should be commended); how to praise the police for their loyalty, efficiency, self-sacrifice, patriotism, gentleness, nonviolence, amiability, sweet reasonableness, and purity of conduct, and tell them how they are above politics and their sole duty is to preserve law and order so that the nation may live peacefully and contentedly under the shadow of their protection; how to address legislative councils and praise the members for the high statesmanship they have shown in supporting government and the real moral courage they have exhibited in holding on to their seats in spite of popular disapproval, and further to tell them that the British Government stands for and has always stood for democracy as against dangers come and risks have to be faced we cannot submit to the humiliation of depending on foreigners for defence. We shall face these dangers and risks and the strength which enabled us to gain our freedom will also enable us to retain it.

4. A Window in Prison[1]

The high walls of a prison shut one off effectively from the outside world of change and movement. A prisoner's horizon is the top of these walls and the only expanse he sees is the blue expanse of the heavens above him. But sometimes a benevolent and considerate government provides him with little windows from which he can survey the wide world beyond. They are narrow and coloured, these tiny windows in prison, and they are apt to give a restricted and distorted vision. But none the less they afford some amusement and are welcome in the dull monotony of prison life.

One such window is The Statesman, the "most widely read newspaper in all India". Daily, Mondays excepted, it used to bring an air of romance to us, a breath of optimism to cheer us up. And through this many coloured window we saw a distressed world struggling in the octopus-grip of depression and conflict and doubt and uncertainty; but in this sorry world there was one bright spot, the land of India, sheltered from all ills by the British Government. Here was the fabled and far-famed land of Cockaigne,[2] where every crow was a peacock and every goose a swan; here strong silent men, floating serenely and majestically in the upper regions, like imperial eagles, protected the land and only swooped down occasionally to rid it of human rats and other noxious animals; here every man in authority was a Solon,[3] and every knighted fool a statesman; here, one could almost feel, but for the irritating antics of certain miserable, blind and ungrateful human beings, that all was for the best under this best of all possible governments.

1. The Bombay Chronicle, 10 September 1933.
2. Legendary country of prosperity.
3. Solon (c.639-559); Athenian statesman, best known as a giver of laws and a reformer.

few wild men of the Congress were dragging Mr. Gandhi along, although all he wanted was peace and quiet and an opportunity to do solid constructive work. And then, almost as if to spite the correspondent, Mr. Gandhi changed places with the wild men and became as wild and aggressive as ever, dragging the peaceful Congress along with him. This was obviously not a sporting thing to do; it was not cricket.

But the true charm of the Simla correspondent lies in his inimitable style, which tells us something and yet does not tell it, which hints and suggests and indicates and insinuates and alludes and yet gracefully avoids definite statement, which says something (and yet does not say it) in a score of sentences which an unlearned and unsophisticated person would say rather bluntly in one short sentence. Perhaps the credit for this coy and coquettish style does not wholly belong to the correspondent, and it should rightly go to Gorton Castle[5] where sit the mighty men weaving the web of India's destiny.

Sometimes the Simla correspondent excels even his own high standard. What could be more delightful than the brave comparison of the air-bombing of the frontier villages with the far worse tale of death and disaster by motor accidents in England's green and pleasant land! Or the silencing of ignorant and vulgar critics by the demonstration that no real damage is done by these air raids;[6] the inhabitants simply walk out of their huts or houses with their wives, goods and chattels, as soon as they receive warning, the empty huts are destroyed, and back come the residents to build their huts anew and perhaps after a better fashion, and life goes on again with scarce a ripple on its placid surface. There is little ill-feeling in the matter and no doubt, with the resumption of normal relations, the Khan of Kotkai will lead a deputation to the British authorities or the R.A.F. to convey their thanks for the opportunity given them to rebuild their little towns on more modern principles of town-planning. Or perhaps the Khan will request that new organisation with a fine resounding name, dear to the heart of The Statesman, the "Central Muslim Federation of Delhi" to undertake this pleasant task, provided the Khan can locate the federation. But, no doubt, the Delhi office of The Statesman will help in the search; and later we shall read all about the deputation in the principal page of the newspaper, and the editor will write a learned and philosophical article on the hidden virtues of air-bombing.

5. Headquarters of the secretariat in Simla.
6. In the first week of August 1933, Kotkai village in Bannu district in N.W.F.P. was bombed for alleged harbouring of two agitators. The Khan of Kotkai was believed to be assisting a claimant to the Afghan throne.

dictatorship (it being made clear that the Viceroy's and governor's vast powers and ordinances and the like, are not in the nature of dictatorship but are meant only to safeguard special responsibilities); how to attend princes' banquets and reply to toasts praising the progressive regime of the prince, who, in the course of a brief decade, has succeeded in establishing one secondary school, two primary schools, two dispensaries, a zoo with a monkey house, three game preserves, ten large motor garages, five stables for polo ponies, kennels for a large number of dogs, and a jazz band, and has built six new palaces to give employment to labour; and that, in further consideration for his peoples' welfare, keeps away in Europe for most of the time;—in the reply to the prince it should be pointed out that autocracy is obviously suited to the genius of India; how to address an association of business men and merchants and point out to them that politics must not be mixed up with business and trade and true success and prosperity lie in the business-man sticking to his own job and cooperating with the government and the city of London so that India's credit may stand high; how to address zamindars and taluqdars and, agreeing with them that they are the salt of the Indian earth, encourage them in every way to organise themselves and take part in politics, so that the semi feudal zamindari system, which is ideal for India, might continue and vested interests may be protected, and the constitution have stability; and so on. This list has become long enough and must be ended. But it will show that the subjects are endless and each one has to be dealt with separately from its own angle.

I have referred to governors' speeches bringing a touch of humour to our prison lives. But sometimes they were not humourous or amusing, as when Sir Malcolm Hailey referred at Muttra to the Congress "hiring young girls and old women to go to gaol as political martyrs."[4]

To go back to our little window—The Statesman. A source of delightful romance that seldom failed was its Simla correspondent. In measured language, which gave us a glimpse of the powerful mind working behind it, the Indian political scene was surveyed and the inner workings of Gandhiji's and the Congress mind were laid bare before us. We were told what they were thinking and what they were going to do to extricate themselves from the morass in which they had got stuck. Subsequently, when Mr. Gandhi or the Congress were foolish enough not to act in the manner forecasted, it was pointed out with evident truth how inconsistent they were. They had evidently changed their minds at the last moment and thus played a rather low trick on the Simla correspondent. It had been obvious enough before that a 4 On 25 January 1933.

5. Prison Land[1]

A writer in a recent issue of an English periodical stated that the stress and strain of politics and prison life had broken me up. I do not know what his sources of information were, but I can say from a fairly intimate knowledge of my body and mind, that both of them are tough and sound and are not in any danger of a break-up or collapse in the near future. Fortunately for myself, I have always attached importance to bodily health and physical fitness, and though I have often enough ill-treated my body, I have seldom permitted it to fall ill. Mental health is a more invisible commodity but I have taken sufficient care of that also and I am vain enough to imagine that I possess more of it than many a person who has not had to suffer the strain of active Congress politics and passive gaol life.

But my health or ill health is a small matter which need not worry any one, although friends and newspapers have given it undue prominence. What is far more important, from the national and social point of view, is the state of the prisons and the bodily and mental conditions of the vast population that they house in India. It is a notorious fact that strong and brave men have suffered greatly and even collapsed bodily under the terrible strain of prolonged gaol life and detention. I have seen my nearest and dearest suffer in prison and the list of my personal friends who have done so is a long and painful one. Only recently a dear and valued colleague, a friend whom I met in Cambridge more than a quarter of a century ago, and who was among the bravest of the brave in this unhappy country of ours, J. M. Sen Gupta, met his death while under detention.

It is natural that we should feel the sufferings of our colleagues, and those whom we have known, more than the misery of the thousands who are unknown to us. And yet it is not about them that I am writing these few lines. We, who have willingly sought to pass the forbidding iron gates of prison, have no wish to squeal or to complain of the treatment given. If any of our countrymen are interested and wish to raise the question, it is for them to do so. Such questions are frequently raised, but as a rule they relate to well known individuals and

1 First published 18 September 1933, later reprinted in Recent Essays and Writings, (Allahabad, 1934), pp. 88-107.

The Simla correspondent occupies a class by himself; he defies comparison. But perhaps one may venture to place, not far below him, some of the Indian contributors to The Statesman. Long research and patient study have made them grasp the full significance of the Battle of Plassey. They possess a deep and profound knowledge of all its implications and consequences, and this learning helps them greatly to understand the course of current events. It would perhaps not be correct to say that they have paid no attention to happenings subsequent to Plassey. Occasional flashes, lighting up the interior of their minds, have disclosed that they are also fully aware of the fact that early in the nineteenth century, India took to English education and her chosen sons plunged into the wells of English political thought. Indeed they could hardly ignore this alliance as they themselves are the choice fruits of this early marriage. It is also obvious that they have heard of the fact that some time in the eighteen-seventies Queen Victoria became Empress of India.

It is by no means clear whether these learned Indian contributors of The Statesman have paid any heed to recent events such as those that have occurred during the last half century or so. Perhaps they feel, lost in the full contemplation of Plassey, that a mere fifty years of recent history can have little fundamental importance. It may be that they are right and we of a later day, without such deep roots in the past, and ignorant of the far-reaching significance of the Battle of Plassey are apt to attach too much importance to recent events.

Truth, it is said, lives at the bottom of a well. But what is a well to eagle eyes of The Statesman correspondent! One such correspondent told us once the "Truth about the Andamans", those far off islands with an unsavoury reputation. Reading his account our fears vanished and we began almost to envy those fortunate persons who were made to live in these delectable islands. We were told that the Andamans were an ideal health resort for the convicts. The Punjabis thrive there, and, as for the Bengalis, "the settlement is climatically a 'home from home'". "One may wonder," continued the correspondent "why anarchist activities should be considered to qualify a man for all these advantages offered him by detention in the Andamans." Indeed, one may well wonder that even in this paradise some people are mad and foolish enough to starve themselves to death!

And perhaps it is fitting that with this exclamation of wonder and amazement we should close this window that gave us so many glimpses in prison of the wonderful world outside.

Peshawar or Charsadda. Four arrests were made at the same time: Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan, his brother Dr. Khan Sahib, Dr. Khan Sahib's young son, and a colleague of theirs. They were all brought down by special train and distributed in four separate prisons in four different cities. It was easy enough to keep all of them, or father and son or brothers together. But this was deliberately avoided and each one was, I believe, kept alone and by himself without any companion. At any rate I know that Dr. Khan Sahib was so kept in Naini prison. For over a month I was also in Naini then but we were kept apart and not allowed to meet. It was tantalising for me, for Dr. Khan Sahib was a dear friend of my student days in England and I had not met him for many years.

It is not a question of favoured treatment for political prisoners. I know perfectly well that the treatment of politicals will grow progressively worse, as it has done in the course of the last dozen years. The only possible check is that of public opinion, but even that does not count in the last resort unless it is so strong as to ensure victory.

Thus it is obvious that political prisoners must expect progressively bad treatment. In 1930-31 the treatment was worse than in 1921-22, in 1932 it was worse than in 1930-31. Today an ordinary political prisoner is certainly worse off in gaol than a non-political convict. Every effort is often made to harass him into apologising or at least to make him thoroughly frightened of prison.

It has been stated on behalf of Sir Samuel Hoare in the House of Commons that "over 500 persons in India were whipped during 1932 for offences in connection with the civil disobedience movement."[2] The existence or otherwise of whipping is often considered a test of the degree of civilization in a State. Many advanced States have done away with it altogether and even where it has been retained, it has been kept for what are considered the most degrading and brutal crimes, such as violent rape on immature girls. Some months ago, I believe, there was a discussion in the Assembly on the question of retaining the punishment of whipping for certain (non political) crimes. It was pointed out by the government spokesmen that this was necessary for some brutal crimes. Probably every psychologist and psychiatrist is of a contrary opinion and holds that a brutal punishment is the most foolish of methods for dealing with brutal crimes. But, however that may be, in India we see that it is quite a common occurrence now

2. On 26 April 1933, he stated that whipping was awarded mainly for joining 'unlawful' assemblies. There was a discussion on the same subject in the Legislative Assembly on 22 August 1933.

special treatment for them is sought on the ground of their social position. To meet the clamour, a small handful are given what is called 'A' and 'B' class treatment; the great majority, probably over 95 per cent, face the full rigours of gaol life.

This differentiation into various classes has often been criticised and rightly criticised. To a slight extent it might be justified on medical grounds for it is highly probable that some people, used to a different diet, may develop the most violent disorders, as indeed many do, if they have to subsist on gaol diet. It is also obvious that some persons are physically incapable of the extreme forms of manual labour. But, apart from this, it is a little difficult to imagine the justification for depriving 'C' class prisoners of the so-called privileges given to others. A higher class is supposed to be given because of higher 'social status' or a higher standard of life. One of the tests laid down, I believe, is the amount of land revenue a person pays. Does it follow from a higher revenue that the person is more attached to his family and is therefore entitled to more interviews or letters? Or that greater facilities should be given for reading and writing? Those who pay large sums as land revenue are not usually noted for their intellectual attainments.

I do not, of course, mean to imply that those who get special facilities for interviews or letters or reading and writing should be deprived of them. Those so called privileges are poor enough as they stand, and it is well to realise that in most other countries the worst and lowest type of prisoner gets far more 'privileges' of this kind than even an 'A' class prisoner in India. And yet these 'A' and 'B' class privileges are given to such an insignificant number that they might well be ignored in considering the Indian prison system. Fundamentally, 'A' and 'B' classes are meant as something to show off and soothe public opinion. Most people who do not know the real facts are misled by them.

Some of the 'A' class prisoners, as also especially some of the detenus or state prisoners, have often to undergo one experience which is peculiarly distressing. They are kept alone without a companion for many months at a time, and, as every doctor knows, this loneliness is very bad for the average person. Only those who have strictly trained and disciplined their minds and can turn inwards, can escape ill effects. It is true that the prisoner or detenu is given the advantage of a few minutes' conversation daily with a member of the prison staff, but this is an advantage which is not seized with cheering and acclamation. This policy of more or less solitary confinement is apparently quite deliberate on the part of the government. I remember that about the time I was arrested in December 1931, Khan Abdul Ghaffar was also arrested in nature. The arguments lead us to certain conclusions which perhaps did not occur to the Home Member. If a dacoit is prepared to leave his profession and go to gaol, if goal is not too harsh, it follows that he will be much more prepared to quit dacoity and crime if a minimum of security and life's necessaries come to him outside gaol. That is, the urge to dacoity is the economic urge of hunger and distress; remove this urge and dacoity goes. The cure for dacoity and crime is thus not heavy punishment but removal of the basic cause. But I have no desire to make last year's Home Member responsible for such far-reaching and revolutionary notions, although they may logically follow from what he said. From another and a higher office[3] he has been letting us have occasional glimpses of his deep knowledge of the laws of economics and no doubt he would repudiate such heresy.

Reference is often made to political prisoners and the government has refused to classify them separately. I think, under the circumstances, government has been right. For who are the politicals? It is easy enough to separate the civil disobedience prisoners, but there are many other ways of catching an inconvenient political agitator than under the so-called political sections of various laws and ordinances. It is a common occurrence in rural areas for peasant leaders and workers to be run in under the preventive sections of the Criminal Procedure Code or even for more serious offences. Such persons are as much political prisoners as any others and there are large numbers of them. This procedure is not usual in the larger towns because of the publicity involved.

High walls and iron gates cut off the little world of prison from the wide world outside. Here in this prison world everything is different; there are no colours, no changes, no movement, no hope, no joy for the long term prisoner, the 'lifer'. Life runs its dull round with a terrible monotony; it is all flat desert land with no high points and no oases to quench one's thirst or shelter one from the burning heat. Days run into weeks, and weeks into months and years till the sands of life run out.

All the might of the State is against him and none of the ordinary checks are available. Even the voice of pain is hushed, the cry of agony cannot be heard beyond the high walls. In theory there are some checks and visitors and officials from outside go to inspect. But it is rare for a prisoner to dare to complain to them, and those who dare have to suffer for their daring. The visitor goes, the petty gaol officials for flogging to be administered for purely political and technical offences, admittedly involving no moral turpitude, or for petty offences against prison discipline.

[3] The Nawab of Chhatari acted as governor of the United Provinces from April 1933.

Yet another advance has been recorded in the treatment of women political prisoners. Many hundreds of women were sentenced and an extraordinarily small number of them were put in 'A' or 'B' classes. As it happens, the lot of women in prison—political or non-political—is far worse than that of men. Men do move about within the gaol in going to and fro in connection with their work; they have change and movement and this is helpful in refreshing their minds to some extent. Women, though given lighter work, are closely confined in a small place and lead a terribly monotonous existence. Women convicts are also as a rule far worse as companions than the average male convicts. Among men there is a large proportion of thoroughly non-criminal types, decent village folk who had a brawl over a land dispute and managed to get long sentences as a result. The criminal element is proportionately much higher among the women. The great majority of women political prisoners, most of them bright young girls, had to endure this suffocating atmosphere. It seems to me that hardly anything that has taken place in our prisons or outside is quite so bad as the treatment of our womenfolk.

I would not have any woman, whether she belongs to the middle classes or the peasantry or the working classes, subjected to the treatment that has been accorded to them in our prisons. As it happens, the great majority of women political prisoners have been from the bourgeois or middle classes. The peasant may go to prison for a political purpose but his wife goes very seldom. Considered from the standpoint of the government, the social standards of the women politicals were relatively high. Wives of vakils, bank managers and the like were placed in 'C' class. Ladies who had been my honoured hostesses and in whose houses I had stopped, were sent to the 'C' class.

In the course of a speech in the U.P. Legislative Council last year, the then Home Member made the flesh of members creep by suggesting that if conditions in gaols were improved for politicals, all the dacoits would forthwith come to gaols as political prisoners. I believed he advanced some similar argument against improving the condition of women prisoners. No doubt these arguments were up to the intellectual standards of the majority of his audience and they served their purpose. For those of us who live in the outer darkness, it is interesting to plumb the depths of knowledge and understanding which the Home Member's statement revealed—understanding of the nature of dacoits and the like, knowledge of criminology, psychology and human

We must have the trial;
For really this morning
I've nothing to do!"
Said the mouse to the cur,
"Such a trial, dear sir,
With no jury or judge,
Would be wasting your breath."
"I'll be judge, I'll be jury,"
Said cunning old Fury;
"I'll try the whole cause
And condemn you to death."

I had a personal experience last year which has a certain wider significance. The jailer of the Allahabad District Jail insulted and hustled out my mother and wife when they were having an interview with my brother-in-law. I was angry when I heard this. And yet I did not attach much importance to the incident for all it signified was that an ill trained and ill-mannered official had misbehaved. I expected some expression of regret from some higher official. Instead, punishments were awarded by government to my mother, wife and brother-in-law, of course without the slightest reference to them. Indirectly I was punished by not being allowed to see my mother or wife for a period. An enquiry from me to the Inspector-General brought a brief reply containing an unmannerly reference to my mother. It was only at this stage that government found out the true facts from me and from statements made by my mother and wife.

It was obvious that they had erred egregiously. In spite of my asking them repeatedly they have not pointed out any error in our statements and I must therefore take it that they accept those versions as indeed they must. If so, they had acted very foolishly in the first instance and the least they could do was to express regret. I am still waiting for that straightforward expression of regret.

If such treatment can be accorded to my mother and wife and can be followed by the strange behaviour and obstinacy of government, it can well be imagined what the average less known prisoner and his people have to put up with. Our whole system of government, superimposed as it is from above and without any roots in the people, can only hang together so long as one peg supports the other. That is its strength, and that, fortunately, is its weakness, for when the collapse of such a system comes, it is complete.

Last year I ventured to write to the Home Member from prison and I told him that after twelve years of a fairly extended experience of prison conditions in the U.P., I had come very regretfully to the remain, and it is with them that he has to pass his days. It is not surprising that he prefers to put up with his troubles rather than risk an addition to them.

The coming of political prisoners in large numbers threw some light into the dark corners of prison-land. A breath of fresh air came in bringing with it some hope to the long-term prisoner. Public opinion was stirred a little and some improvements followed. But they were few and essentially the system remains as it was. Sometimes one hears of 'riots' in gaols. What exactly does this signify? Perhaps the prisoners were to blame. And yet it is a mad thing to do for unarmed, helpless prisoners, surrounded by high walls, to challenge the armed might of the gaol staff. There can only be one outcome of it, and inevitably one is led to think that only extreme provocation could induce the prisoners to this act of folly and despair.

There are enquiries, either departmental or perhaps by the district magistrate. What chance has the prisoner? On the one side a fully prepared case supported by the staff and the numerous prisoners who must do their bidding; on the other, a frightened shivering outcaste of humanity, manacled and fettered, who has no one's sympathy and whom no one believes. The Judicial Secretary of the U.P. Government stated in the local Council last November that those who had been confined in gaol, being interested parties, must be considered as unreliable. So the poor prisoner being very much an interested party when he is himself beaten or ill-treated cannot obviously be believed. It would be interesting to find out from the U.P. Government what evidence, short of the testimony of the invisible and supernatural powers, a prisoner could produce under the circumstances.

But for the tragedy behind them one might appreciate the humour of private governmental enquiries. Sir Samuel Hoare grows righteously indignant whenever any charge is made against the police or the gaol staff and is consistent in refusing all public or impartial enquiries. I seem to recollect that there was a departmental enquiry in the Hijli affair about two years ago, and shortly afterwards an official enquiry held that the official version of the occurrences had been entirely wrong. But then that was an unusual affair. Most departmental enquiries are not checked in this way. One feels like having recourse to the delightful plays of Sir William Gilbert for an analogy, or perhaps that classic of English childhood, the immortal Alice, is even more suitable:

> Fury said to a mouse,
> That he found in the house,
> "Let us both go to law:
> I will prosecute you.

of them. Anywhere else, except in Nazi Germany, such sentences would create a tremendous outcry.

And justice is not entirely blind in India; it keeps one eye open. In every agrarian brawl or not large numbers of peasants get life sentences. Usually these petty riots take place when an exasperated tenantry are goaded beyond endurance by the agents of the landlords. A simple process of identifying all those who are supposed to have been present on the scene is enough to condemn them for life or to long terms of imprisonment. Hardly any attention is paid to the provocation and even the identification is usually of the feeblest kind. It is easy to drag in any individual who is in the bad books of the police. If the affair can be given a political tinge or connected with a no-rent campaign a conviction is all the easier and the sentences the heavier.

In a recent case a peasant who slapped a tax-collector was awarded a year's imprisonment. Another instance is somewhat different. It took place last July in Meerut. A Naib-Tahsildar went to realise irrigation dues from the residents of a village. One peasant was carried by the peons to where the Naib was seated and the peons complained that this man's wife and son had beaten them. A somewhat remarkable story. However the Naib ordered that the peasant should be vicariously punished for his wife's offence and the three of them, the Naib and the two peons, beat the unhappy man with sticks. As a result of the beating the man died later. The Naib and the peons were subsequently tried and convicted for simple hurt but they were forthwith released on probation of good conduct for six months The good conduct I suppose signified that they must not beat another man to death within the next six months. The comparison of these cases is instructive.

So the question of prison reform leads us inevitably to a reform of our criminal procedure, and, even more so, a reform in the mentalities of our judges who still think in terms of a hundred years ago and are blissfully ignorant of modern ideas of punishment and reform. That of course leads, as everything else does, to a change of the whole system of government.

But to confine ourselves to the prisons. Any reform must be based on the idea that a prisoner is not punished but reformed and made into a good citizen. (I am of course not considering politicals. Most of them are so much steeped in error that they may be considered past reform). If this objective is once accepted, it would result in a complete overhauling of the prison system. At present few prison officials have even heard of such a notion. I have a recollection that the old U.P. Jail Manual had a paragraph pointing out that the prisoner's work was not meant to be productive or useful; its object was punitive. This was conclusion that the gaols in the province were steeped in corruption and violence and falsehood. Many years ago I pointed out some of the abuses to a superintendent of my prison (he became Inspector-General afterwards). He admitted them and said that when he first joined the Prison Department he was full of enthusiasm for reform. Later he found that little could be done, so he allowed things to take their course.

Indeed little can be done by the best of individuals—and many of those in charge can hardly be considered shining examples. An Indian prison is after all a replica of the larger India. What counts is the objective—is it human welfare or just the working of a machine or the preservation of vested interests? Why are punishments given—as society's or government's revenge or with the object of reforming?

Do judges or prison officers ever think that the unhappy wretch before them should be made into a person capable of filling his place in society when he comes out of prison? It almost seems an impertinence to raise these questions, for how many people really care?

Our judges are, let us hope, large-hearted; they are certainly long-sentencing. Here is an Associated Press message from Peshawar dated December 15, 1932: "For writing threatening letters to the Inspector General of Police and other high officials of the Frontier soon after the Coldstream murder,[4] accused named Jamnadas[5] has been sentenced by the City Magistrate of Peshawar to eight years' imprisonment under Section 500-507 I P.C." Jamnadas was apparently a young boy.

Here is another remarkable instance—also an A.P. message, dated April 22, 1933 from Lahore: "For being in possession of a knife with a blade seven inches long, a young Muslim named Saadat was sentenced by the City Magistrate under Section 19 of the Arms Act to 18 months' rigorous imprisonment."

And a third instance from Madras, dated July 6, 1933. A boy named Ramaswami threw a harmless cracker in the court of the Chief Presidency Magistrate as he was engaged in a conspiracy case hearing. Ramaswami was sentenced to four years, apparently in a juvenile prison.

These are three not unusual instances. They could easily be multiplied and there are worse cases. I suppose people are long suffering in India and past all astonishment at such amazing sentences. Personally I find that no amount of practice can prevent my gasping when I read

4. Capt Coldstream, the civil surgeon of Peshawar, was murdered on 22 July 1932.

5. A brother of Hari Krishan who shot at the Governor of Punjab on 23 December 1930.

After a hard eight hour day's work the prisoners should be encouraged to cooperate together in various activities—games, sports, reading, recitals, lectures. They should above all be encouraged to laugh and develop human contacts with the prison staff and other prisoners. Every prisoner's education must be attended to, not only in just the three R's, but something more, wherever possible. The mind of the prisoner should be cultivated and the prison library, to which there must be free access, should have plenty of good books. Reading and writing should be encouraged in every way and that means that every prisoner should be allowed to have writing materials and books. Nothing is more harmful to the prisoner than to spend 12 to 14 hours at a stretch every evening locked up in the cell or barrack with absolutely nothing to do. A Sunday or holiday means for him a much longer period of locking up.

Selected newspapers are essential to keep the prisoner in touch with the world and interviews and letters should be made as frequent and informal as possible. Personally, I think that weekly interviews and letters should be permitted. The prisoner should be made to feel as far as possible that he or she is a human being and brutal and degrading punishments must be avoided.

All this sounds fantastic when compared with present day prison conditions in India. And yet I have only suggested what the prisons of most of the advanced countries already have. Indeed they have much more. Our present administration, and indeed our government itself, cannot understand or appreciate this as they have successfully imprisoned their own minds in prisons of dull routine. But public opinion must begin to demand these changes so that, when the time comes, they might be introduced without difficulty.

It must not be thought that these changes will involve much extra expenditure. If properly run on modern industrial lines the prisons can not only be self-supporting but can actually make a profit after providing for all the additional amenities suggested. There is absolutely no difficulty in introducing the changes except one—the absolute necessity of having a competent, human staff fully understanding and appreciating the new angle of vision and eager to work it.

I wish some of our people would study and, where possible, personally inspect, prison conditions in foreign countries. They will find how our prisons lag far behind them. The new human element is imposing itself everywhere, as also a recognition of the fact that a criminal is largely created by social conditions and, instead of being punished, has to be treated as for a disease. Real criminals are infantile in mind and it almost an ideal statement of what a prison should not be. That paragraph has since gone but the spirit still remains—a spirit that is harsh and punitive and utterly lacking in humanity. The list of prison offences in the U.P. Jail Manual is an amazing one. It contains all that the wit of man can devise to make life as intolerable as possible. Talking, singing, loud laughing, visiting latrines at other than stated hours, not eating the food given, etc., etc., are among the offences. It is not surprising that all the energy of the gaol staff goes in suppressing the prisoner and preventing him from doing the hundred and one things forbidden him.

Ignorant people imagine that if the punishment is not severe enough crimes will increase. As a matter of fact, the exact reverse is the truth. A century ago in England, petty thieves were hung. When it was proposed to abolish the death penalty for thieves, there was a tremendous outcry and noble lords stated in the House of Lords that this would result in thieves and robbers seizing everything and creating a reign of terror. As a matter of fact the reform had the opposite effect and crime went down. Crime has steadily gone down in England and other countries as the criminal law and prisons have been bettered. Many old prisons in England are not required as prisons now and are used for other purposes. In India, it is well known that the prison population goes on increasing (quite apart from political prisoners) and the executive and judiciary help in this process by encouraging long and barbarous sentences. The imprisonment of the young is universally considered to be a most demoralizing system and is avoided. Here in India gaols are full of young men and boys and frequently they are sentenced to whipping.

Another error which people indulge in is the fear that if gaol conditions are improved people will flock in! This shows a singular ignorance of human nature. No one wants to go to prison however good the prison might be. To be deprived of liberty and family life and friends and home surroundings is a terrible thing. It is well known that the Indian peasant will prefer to stick to his ancestral soil and starve rather than go elsewhere to better his condition. To improve prison conditions does not mean that prison life should be made soft; it means that it should be made human and sensible. There should be hard work, but not the barbarous and wasteful labour of the oil pumps or water pumps or mills. The prison should produce goods either in large scale modern factories where prisoners work, or in cottage industries. All work should be useful from the point of view of the prison as well as the future of the prisoner, and the work should be paid for at market rates, minus the cost of maintenance of the prisoners.

at home. In the latter event the mother is allowed to go home several times a day to feed it!

There were flowers, pictures and photographs in the cells. Prisoners were regularly examined by psychiatrists to find out if their mental condition was satisfactory. Whenever necessary, prisoners were removed to mental hospitals for treatment. Solitary confinement was very rare.

Hardly credible. And yet there it is and the results of this humane treatment have been surprisingly good. The Russians hope to reduce crime substantially and to shut up most of their prisons. So the good treatment does not eventually fill up the gaols but empties them provided the economic background is suitable and work is to be had.

A short while ago there was a meeting in the House of Commons to consider the protection of animals in India. A very laudable object. But it is worth remembering that the two legged animal, homo sapiens, in India is also worthy of care and protection—especially those who undergo the long physical and mental torture of prison life and come out impaired of the capacity for normal life.

Every prison cell in Norway has an inscription on its walls. It is a quotation from a speech of a famous Norwegian prisoner, Lars Olsen Skrefsrud,[7] who served a long sentence for theft when drunk, came out to India afterwards and founded the Scandinavian Santal Mission. He became a great linguist knowing seventeen languages, ancient and modern, and among them of course was the Santal language. The passage in his speech which is exhibited in the prison cells runs as follows:

"Nobody can imagine what a prisoner feels but one who has at some time felt what it is to be a prisoner. Some idea of it may be formed, but this cannot express the feelings of the man who sits, sad and forsaken in his cell."

It is well that those whom fate or fortune keep out of the prison cell give thought sometimes to that sad and forsaken figure.

7 (1840-1910); a missionary and linguist, author of Grammar of Santal Language.

is folly to treat them as grown ups. A delightful book which stressed this point humorously long ago is Samuel Butler's Erewhon.

In the prisons of the little country of Latvia even, we are told that "everything is done to create a homely atmosphere in the rooms and cells with plants, flowers, books and such personal belongings of the prisoners as photographs, handicrafts, and wireless sets." Prisoners are paid for their work, half the earnings accumulating and the other half being spent by prisoners on extra food, tobacco, newspapers, etc.

Russia, that terrible land of the Soviets, has perhaps gone farthest ahead in the improvement of prison conditions. Recently a competent observer inspected the Soviet prisons and his report is interesting. This observer was an eminent English lawyer, D. N. Pritt,[6] K. C. who is also the Chairman of the Howard League for Penal Reform—an organisation which has been the pioneer of prison reform in England for more than sixty years. Pritt tells us that the punitive character of punishment has been entirely removed and it is considered purely reformatory now. The treatment of prisoners is humane and remarkably good.

There are two types of prisons: (1) Semi open camps or fully open communes or colonies. These are really not prisons at all; prisoners live a village life subject to certain restrictions. (2) Closed prisons. These are the hardest type of prisons and yet even here there is a surprising amount of freedom for the prisoners. There is a feeling of equality between warders and prisoners and unrestricted intercourse, except in working hours, with other prisoners or with guards. There is normal factory work for eight hours a day at normal wages. For the rest there are games, education, gymnastics, lectures, wireless, books, and amateur dramatic performances by the prisoners. The prisoners also produce a wall newspaper and do not hesitate to criticize warders and other prison officials in it "for having forgotten that a prison is not for punishment, but for reformation."

The principle of self-government, which is encouraged in all institutions in Russia, is even practised to some extent in the prisons, the prisoners imposing penalties on themselves. Smoking is allowed except when at work Frequent interviews are permitted, and a virtually unrestricted and uncensored writing and reception of letters. And, most remarkable rule of all, almost always the prisoner is allowed a fortnightly summer holiday to go home to look after the harvest, etc. In the case of a woman prisoner who has a baby, she can either keep the baby in the prison creche, where the baby will be properly looked after or leave the baby

6 (b 1887); leading British lawyer and politician, Labour member of Parliament, 1935 40, member, Labour (Independent), 1940 50

APPENDIX

To K.M. Munshi[1]

Bombay
April 29, 1940

My dear Munshi,
Thank you for your new book I Follow the Mahatma which I have just received. I have dipped into it here and there already and I am sure that I shall find it very interesting reading.

I have come across accidentally a passage to which I should like to draw your attention. This is at page 115 at the beginning of chapter 26. It runs as follows:

"Before Gandhiji returned to India, Lord Willingdon (the then Viceroy) had made up his mind to force a fight on the Congress. So had Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru. An appeal to Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru to stay his hand, till Gandhiji returned, was met by a prompt and indignant rejection; and just a few days before Gandhiji returned, the policy of non-payment of revenue was adopted by the U.P. Congress Committee."

This passage seems to me to be full of mis-statements. The assertion that I had made up my mind to force a fight on the Congress, either before or after Gandhiji returned, is completely untrue. Then again I do not remember any appeal from any one made to me, nor my meeting any such appeal or suggestion by a prompt and indignant rejection. The U.P. Congress Committee did not in fact start any policy of non-payment of revenue. Revenue was not in question. It was rent that was in issue. Even so, there was no no-rent campaign started by us but a fair rent campaign, as was admitted by the high officials of the U.P. Government. I need not go into this question in detail here. I have dealt with it, in some measure, in my Autobiography. As a matter of

1 J.N. Correspondence, N.M.M.L.

GLOSSARY

Amavas	the night of the new moon
Amin	an officer of the court
Asana	a yogic exercise
Barsi	anniversary
Basanti	yellowish red colour
Behaya	shameless
Bhaiya Duj	the second day of the fortnight when the moon waxes in the month of Kartik, the eighth month of the Hindu lunar calendar. On this day sisters are expected to demonstrate attachment to their brothers.
Bhandar	store
Bhujji	a roasted or fried article of food
Bigha	approximately five-eighths of an acre
Fasli	agricultural year starting from the months of June-July
Goondas	hooligans
Gulal	red powder used by Hindus during the Holi festival
Jawar	a kind of barley
Jhanda	flag
Jhanda prarthana	salutation of the flag
Jhanda Uncha rahe hamara	let our flag fly high
Kanungo	a revenue official
Karinda	an agent
Kartik Purnima	full moon day in the month of Kartik
Khalyan	a granary, a barn
Khas-ki tatti	screen made of cuscus
Khud	pit
Kurk amins	bailiffs
Lat Sahib	the Lord Saheb (Viceroy)

fact, every conceivable step that was open to us was taken by the U.P.P.C.C. to avoid a struggle till Gandhiji returned and we could have his advice. So far as I am personally concerned, I played a very secondary part in the matter. I functioned as a member of the Executive, our chief being Sherwani, who was not only what might be called a moderately inclined Congressman, but a zamindar himself. It was he who took the lead in the matter, but essentially the decisions were of the committee, as in the U.P. individual members play a subordinate part only in all decisions.

The U.P.P.C.C. had made certain demands about the reduction of rents for that year owing to very severe economic crisis. While we were pressing these on government, the government took action to hasten the full collection. We protested to them and asked them to delay matters. Finally we asked the tenantry to withhold payment of the full rent demanded till an equitable settlement was arrived at. We were in fact corresponding on the subject with the government and even meeting government officials. It was manifestly impossible for the tenantry to pay fully, and in fact, soon after Sherwani's and my arrest, the U.P. Government actually allowed the remissions which we had claimed from them, and, in fact, went a little further in a few districts. If they had done this a week or two earlier, there would have been no question of this struggle then. But they were bent on this struggle and in spite of our attempts to avoid it, forced it upon us. I might mention that the demands for remission that we made were largely based on the advice given by Gandhiji before he left for the R.T.C. Further that Gandhiji was kept informed of the developments in the U.P. by air mail and cable and his advice was always sought.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

INDEX

(Biographical footnotes are italicized)

Abdullah, M, 201 & fn
Abdulwali, Kutubuddin, 281 fn
Abhyudaya, 352 fn
Academy of Physical Culture, 233
Across the Gobi Desert (Sven Hedin), 350
Acton, T J C., 419 & fn, 443, 464
Aden, 42
Advance, 134 & fn, 256, 274 fn
Afghanistan, 258 fn, 461, 464, 548, 557, 558
Afghan Jirga, 134 & fn, 135, 257 fn
Afghan Peace Delegation, 508
Aga Khan, 299
Agarwal, Jagannath Prasad, 161
———, Man Mohanlal, 351 fn
Agra, 62, 71, 76, 174, 205
Agra Tenancy Act, 146, 508 fn
Agras (Bareilly), 132
Ahmedabad, 22, 31 33, 42, 44, 219, 226 & fn, 241, 276, 277, 318, 322, 337, 489
Ahmed Shah, 135 & fn
Ajanta, 418, 435, 442
Ajmer-Merwara, 179 fn
Ajodhya—see Ayodhya
Akbar, 437
Akbarpur (Fyzabad), 108, 116 fn
Alam, Mohammad, 48
Ali, Barkat, 109 & fn, 116
———, Manzar, 245
———, Mohamed, 322
———, Mustafa, 243 & fn
———, Sadiq, 353
———, Shaukat, 29, 32, 48, 299
———, Yusuf, 120
Aligarh, 243 & fn
Alipur, 290 fn, 291 fn
Allahabad, 8, 19 fn, 21, 27-30, 32, 37, 42, 49, 57 59, 64-69, 71 & fn, 73, 75-79, 81 & fn, 91, 96, 98 100, 103 fn, 104 107, 109, 111, 114, 115, 117-119, 126 & fn, 127 & fn, 133-137, 139, 143, 144 & fn, 146, 149 151 fn, 154 160, 164-169 fn, 173-176, 179 fn, 180, 182 186, 190, 192, 193, 197-199, 204 & fn, 205, 207, 219 221, 223, 227-230, 235, 240, 243, 249, 250, 256, 267, 272, 277, 298 fn, 316, 319, 322, 324, 325, 330, 336, 338, 339, 343-345, 347-351 & fn, 353, 355, 360-362, 365, 366, 370, 380 & fn, 381, 386, 387, 394, 395 & fn, 397, 399, 403, 404, 418, 424, 425, 427, 433, 435, 438, 440 & fn, 452, 455, 471, 481, 485-487, 492, 500, 505 & fn, 508, 514, 516, 547 fn, 571
Allahabad District Kisans Conference, 162
Allahabad Gazetteer, 143, 145
Allahabad University, 43 fn
Allah Bux, 349
All India Congress Committee, 9, 15 fn, 21, 22, 28, 30, 37, 44, 105, 151, 159, 168, 169, 182, 185, 192, 193, 197, 199, 200, 223, 250 & fn, 251, 256 fn, 273, 275 & fn, 291 fn, 292 & fn, 317 fn, 324, 336, 349 fn, 517 & fn, 518 & fn, 532, 533, 535, 544
All India Muslim Conference, 243 & fn
All India Spinners Association, 212 fn, 217 fn, 240
All India Trade Union Congress, 287 fn
All India Volunteer Conference, 232
All India Women's Conference, 440 fn
All Parties Committee, report of, 284, 285

Loo	hot winds
Makka	maize
Margshirsh	ninth month of the Hindu lunar calendar
Mar pit	assault
Mazdur	labourer
Mukhtar	attorney
Munsiff	subordinate judge
Murga	cock
Nasur	sinus
Naujawans	young soldiers
Nazm	poem
Panchas	elected representatives of the village
Pan supari	betels and betel nuts
Pargana	an area comprising several villages
Praja	people, subjects
Punkha	fan
Puphi	father's sister
Puries	fried unleavened flat bread
Qassab	butcher
Rajadhiraja	emperor
Sainiks	volunteers
Sainikas	women volunteers
Sarvangasana	a yogic exercise
Shastris	those who have learned shastras
Shivaratri	a Hindu religious festival in Magh (February-March)
Shraddha	commemoration ceremony
Tamam Shud	it is finished
Tatti	screen
Thekedar	lessor
Tithi	date
Unani	Greco-Arab system of medicine
Upanishad	Hindu scriptures
Vaid	doctor
Vasanta Panchami	fifth day of the eleventh month of the Hindu lunar calendar, when the moon is waxing

Bengal Provincial Congress Committee, dispute in and Aney's award, 134 & fn
Bengal Suppression of Terrorist Outrages Act, 515 fn
Besant, Annie, 545
Bhagavan Das, 245 & fn, 523, 540
Bhaila (Allahabad), 110, 117
Bharat, 364, 380, 381
Bhargava, Dr., 481, 483, 487
Bhatwaria Case, 453
Bijapur, 417, 418
Bijhari (Mathura), 112 & fn, 120, 129, 149
Bijnor, 381 & fn, 419 & fn, 453
Birla, G D, 135 & fn, 484
Birla House, 439 fn
Bodh Prasad, 130
Bombay, 1, 8, 9, 12, 14, 15, 18, 20, 23, 29, 32 fn, 41 fn, 46, 59, 68, 98, 102, 105, 108, 111, 113, 114, 181, 186, 190 192, 198, 199, 212, 216, 218, 221, 236 fn, 237 fn, 245, 267 & fn, 277, 278, 283 fn, 287, 291 fn, 298, 316 318, 322, 331, 332 fn, 334, 337, 339, 343, 346 fn, 352, 353, 358, 359, 365, 366, 370, 374, 375, 377, 381 fn, 382, 390 fn, 399, 401, 407, 410, 424, 436, 461 fn, 466, 471, 489, 530 fn, 538, 579
Bombay Chronicle, 323 fn, 472 & fn
Bombay Provincial Congress Committee, 9, 198, 212, 216 & fn, 218, 324 fn
Bombay Swadeshi League, 217, 218 & fn
Bomford, Hugh, 350 & fn
Bose, Subhas Chandra, 31 fn, 256, 273, 327, 328 fn
Brazil, 506
Brelvi, S.A., 323 & fn
British India Corporation, 201 fn
Brockway, Fenner, 17 & fn
Budapest, 491
Buddha, Gautama, 384, 387, 451
Bulandshahr, 165
Bundelkhand, 145
Bunyan, John, 494
Burge, 515 fn
Burma, 433 & fn
Butler, Harcourt, 508
———, Samuel, 576
Byron (Andre Maurois), 370 & fn
Byzantium, 496

Calcutta, 134 fn, 201 fn, 256, 261, 272 274 & fn, 298, 303 fn, 305, 330, 332 fn-334, 367, 375, 425, 432, 438, 440, 442, 443, 450, 455, 458, 462, 465, 469-471, 489, 516 fn
———, Congress session at, 470 & fn, 489 fn, 533
Calcutta Municipal Gazette, 397 fn
Calicut, Zamorin of, 449 fn
Cambridge, 370, 489, 490, 492, 513, 524 & fn, 565
Cape Town, 372
Captain, Nargis, 198 & fn, 328
———, Perin, 135 & fn
Caveeshar, Sardul Singh, 281 fn
Cawnpore—see Kanpur
Central Hindu College (Varanasi), 245 fn
Central Muslim Federation, 563
Cervantes, 494
Central Swadeshi Board, 200
Ceylon (Sri Lanka), 2, 68, 91, 201, 315, 316, 376, 389, 391, 394, 405, 406, 416, 424, 436, 437, 449, 478
Chail (Allahabad), 100, 110, 145
Chandola, 480 & fn
Chandrabhal, 381
Chandra, Krishna, 183 & fn
Charing Cross (London), 344
Charsadda, 567
Chata (Allahabad), 118
Chhatari, Nawab of, 55 & fn, 380, 400, 406, 426, 437, 450, 452, 569 fn
Chatterji, Ramanand, 31
Chattopadhyaya, Kamaladevi, 292 & fn, 335
Chaumuha (Mathura), 112, 129, 149
Chheoki (Allahabad), 192, 343, 418
China, 557
Chintamani, C.Y., 325, 479
Chittagong, 43 & fn, 134, 272 & fn, 298 & fn, 310, 515
Christian Nationalist Party, 283 fn
City and Cantonment League (Meerut), 130
Civil and Military Gazette, 29 fn
Civilization of India (Rene Grousset), 416

All Parties Conference, 523 & fn, 542
All Party Sikh Conference, 47
Almora, 357
Alsace Lorraine, 284
Altai Himalaya (Nicholas Roerich), 350
Aluwihare, Bernard, 352, 387, 478
Alva, Duke of, 403 & fn
Ambedkar, B.R., 299 & fn, 332 & fn
Amritsar, 509
Anant Narain, 479, 480, 483, 484
Andamans, 484 & fn, 516, 525 & fn
Andaman Prisoners' League, 516 fn
Andrews, C F., 23
Aney, M S, 134 & fn, 256, 478 fn, 484, 486 fn, 517 & fn, 518 & fn, 528
Anjani Kumar, 248 & fn
Annales de l'Inde, 323
Ansari, M A., 3, 31, 48 & fn, 135, 137, 206 & fn, 261 & fn, 281 fn, 375, 377, 401, 439, 458, 462, 466, 485
Anuradhapura (Sri Lanka), 387
A Programme for Progress (John Strachey), 476 fn
Argentine, 422
Ariel (Andre Maurois), 370 fn
Arkha (Rae Bareli), 119
Arnold, Matthew, 485 fn, 498
Arya Kanya Mahavidyalaya (Jullundur), 335 fn
Asansol, 470 & fn, 471
Asghar, Janak Kumari, 364 & fn
Associated Press, 572
A Tale about AK and Humanity (Efim Zozulya), 458
Atal, Madan, 364, 425, 432
Athens, 498
Austria, 557
Autobiography (Trebitsch Lincoln), 350
Avadh, 71, 75, 91, 140, 174, 514
Awami League, 287 fn
Ayodhya, 109
Azad, Abul Kalam, 281 fn
Aztec Civilisation, 496

Babylon, 496
Bachchrawan (Rae Bareli), 113 & fn, 118, 248 fn, 540 fn
Badalpur (Allahabad), 127 & fn
Bagalkot, 181, 186, 233, 334
Bahadurji, D N, 35 & fn, 267 & fn
Bahadurji Committee, 35 & fn
Baheri (Bareilly), 132
Bahraich (U.P.), 97, 99, 133, 138, 139, 141, 149, 261
Baiju, 465
Baiti (Rae Bareli), 130
Bajaj, Jamnalal, 135, 243 fn, 326
Bajaur (N.W.F.P.), 563 fn
Bakarganj (Allahabad), 110
Bakhale, R R., 287 fn
Bakuha (Rae Bareli); 345
Baldwin, Roger, 41, 43, 327, 382, 426
Balkan States, 557
Balha (U P.), 111, 132
Balliol College (Oxford), 524 fn
Balrampur (Gonda), 97, 140, 141, 154
Bal Sena, 316 fn
Baluchistan, 47 fn
Balwant (a peasant), 122
Ba Maw, 433 fn
Banaras Hindu University, 245 fn
Bangalore, 246, 249 & fn, 254 & fn
Banerji (Income tax officer) 338
Banker, Shankarlal, 198, 212, 213
Bank of England, 35
Bannu, 263
Bans Gopal, 189, 181
Bara (Allahabad), 145
———, Raja of, 58, 63
Bara Banki (U.P.), 19 fn, 97, 99, 125, 133, 141, 165
Baraipur (Gonda), 140 & fn, 141, 149, 154
Bardoli, 2, 11, 14, 15, 20, 21, 23, 25, 108, 158, 315
Bareilly, 129 & fn, 132, 149, 175, 257 fn, 353, 354, 356, 360 & fn, 365, 373, 374, 377, 380, 383, 387-391, 394, 398, 417, 452, 467, 479, 493, 500 fn
Basti (U P.), 149
Bawazir, Abdul Kadir, 277 & fn
Benares—see Varanasi
Bengal Nationalist Muslim Conference, 206 fn
Bengal Ordinance, 187 fn, 239, 298 & fn
Bengal Provincial Conference, 181
Bengal Provincial Congress Committee, 134 fn, 230, 236, 256, 271 & fn, 272, 274, 328 & fn

Disraeli (André Maurois), 370 fn
Disraeli, Benjamin, 434
Diwakar, R.R., 311 & fn
Dorsali (Dehra Dun), 359
Dongri (Bombay), 3
Don Quixote (Cervantes), 434
Dorchester Hotel (Mansion), 476
Doulatram, Jaisamdas, 22, 123, 197, 198, 241, 287 fn
Dover Beach (Matthew Arnold), 485 fn
Drake—Brockman, 144 & fn, 145
Duncan, Isadora, 316 & fn
Durant, W.J., 315 & fn, 319
Dutt, Sumitra, 401
Dyer, General, 509

Economics of Khaddar (Richard Gregg), 359 fn
Egypt, 29 & fn, 136 & fn, 477, 496
———, minority problems solved in, 29
Elkra, 415, 435, 436, 442
Emerson, H.W., 10 & fn, 19 fn, 24 & fn, 42, 44, 45, 47, 62, 70, 71, 118, 123, 134, 136, 192 & fn, 150, 153-155, 334
England, 3, 20, 26, 27, 33-35, 38, 39, 43, 46, 106, 128, 136 fn, 162, 293-295, 363 fn, 456 fn, 464, 475, 506, 507, 524, 557, 558, 567, 574
———, crisis in, 35
———, national government formed in, 35 & fn
Eroica (Samuel Butler), 576
Erwadi, 50, 146, 151, 156, 190, 191 fn, 277, 337
European Association (Calcutta), 272 & fn, 273
Evening Standard, 322

Fabry, C.V., 169 & fn, 394, 421, 425, 427, 428, 433, 448
Far Away and Long Ago (W.H. Hudson), 423
Faridpur (Bengal), 112
Farmer's Island, 144 fn, 148, 223 fn
Fatehgarh, 554
Fatehpur, 55, 144, 146, 150
Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce & Industry, 215 & fn
Fig, 254 fn
Foreign Cloth Boycott Committee, 216
Forman Christian College (Lahore), 49 fn
Free Press Journal, 322
French Revolution, 432
Frontier Provincial Congress Committee, 134 & fn, 255, 256 fn, 257 fn 259, 262 fn, 263 fn
Furuqganj (Rae Bareli), 164 fn
Fyzabad, 59, 60, 99 fn, 105, 107 & fn, 116 fn, 144 fn, 332, 426 & fn, 430 432, 437, 438, 451

Gadag, 211, 212, 366, 367
Gamalata (Allahabad), 117
Gandhara, 451
Gandhi, Devadas, 26 fn, 45 fn, 476, 477, 485
———, Kasturba, 493 fn
———, Mahatma, 1, 3 15 fn, 12, 14, 20-22 fn, 31, 32 & fn, 41, 42, 45, 46, 48 & fn, 49 & fn, 61 & fn, 62, 65, 67 & fn, 69-71, 81-86, 88-91, 93, 95, 100, 104 & fn, 106, 113, 115, 116 fn, 120, 125, 131, 137, 142, 147, 151, 155 & fn, 156, 158, 159, 162 & fn, 171, 176, 181, 184, 187, 189-192, 202, 215 & fn, 234, 243 & fn, 244 & fn, 248 & fn, 252, 260, 261 & fn, 268, 277 & fn, 281 fn, 290, 291 fn, 294-297, 299 & fn, 300, 302, 304, 306 & fn, 308, 309, 316, 320-321 fn, 324, 327, 330, 332 & fn, 337, 341-345, 349 & fn, 353, 355 & fn, 363, 366 & fn, 368, 407, 411, 442, 442, 443, 445 & fn, 450 fn, 451 fn, 452, 456, 457 & fn 459, 462, 472 & fn 477 fn, 486 & fn, 489 & fn, 490, 493 & fn, 501 & fn 502 & fn 512, 517 522, 524 & fn, 526, 533 fn 534, 536 538 & fn, 558, 565, 566, 568, 575, 580
Gandhi Ashram, 141
Gandhi Day, 313 336

Cocanada—see Kakinada
Coimbatore, 335
Coldstream, Capt., 572 & fn
Coleridge, Mary, 496
Colombo, 420, 436
Communist Party (India), 41
Congress, Indian National, 1, 3 13, 15-21, 23 28, 29 fn, 33, 36 fn, 40, 41, 45, 50 & fn, 51, 60 65, 67 & fn, 69-71, 73, 77, 79 fn 81, 83 93, 95 fn, 97-100, 105 110, 113 fn, 116-118, 120-127, 130-132, 135 fn, 138, 139, 141, 147, 149 151 fn, 154-157 fn, 160 164 fn, 166 fn, 168 176, 178 181, 184 fn, 188 & fn, 189, 192, 197 fn, 199-202, 204, 205 & fn, 208 fn, 209, 213 fn, 214 fn, 218 fn, 219 226, 231-234, 236 238, 240, 241, 245 fn 250 fn, 252, 263, 266-269, 271, 284-290 fn, 292-299, 303-305, 309, 310, 316 fn, 321, 326, 327, 331, 332 fn, 335 & fn, 339, 349 fn, 350 fn, 354, 364, 381 fn, 388 fn, 456 fn, 463, 486 & fn, 487, 489 fn, 508, 512, 513, 517 520, 522 fn, 523, 525 fn, 530, 533 535, 537, 539, 544, 548 fn, 553, 555, 556, 561-563, 579
———, session at Calcutta, 470 & fn, 489 fn, 533
———, session at Delhi, 381, 382
———, session at Karachi, 527
———, session at Lahore, 555
———, session at Puri, 181
Congress Working Committee, 8, 12 16, 18, 20, 26 fn, 28, 29, 31-33, 37, 42-44, 47, 48, 60, 62, 80, 81, 90, 98, 99, 104, 105, 113, 134 fn, 135, 137, 157-159, 162-164, 166, 168, 170, 184, 187, 191 & fn, 192, 198 200, 208, 209, 215, 217, 218 & fn, 221 224, 225 fn, 226, 232 236, 238, 239, 242 fn, 245, 250 & fn, 253, 256, 261 & fn, 264 & fn, 266, 270, 273, 275 277, 300, 303, 322, 334, 336, 337, 339, 343, 344, 346 fn, 349 fn, 518, 553
———, on defence of India, 33, 34; on economic policy and finance, 34, 35; on fundamental rights, 36
Congress Bulletin, 8, 28
Congress Textile Mills Exemption Committee, 212 fn
Crerar, James, 10
Crishna, Dorothy, 351 & fn
Czechoslovakia, 557

Dacca, 272 & fn, 273
———, terrorism in, 167 & fn
Dadauli (Allahabad), 78 & fn
Daily Herald, 30 fn
Dal Lake (Jammu & Kashmir), 467
Dammilal, 59
Dandekar, V.S., 353
Dandi (Gujarat), 367
Dandi March Day, 367
Dar, Kishan Prasad, 368
———, S S L., 96
Das, C R., 466
Das Gupta, B K, 516 & fn
Datta, S K, 49 & fn, 277 & fn
Daudi, Shafi, 48 fn
Daulatabad (Maharashtra), 436
Dayal, Hareshwar, 351 fn
Debs, Eugene, 383 & fn
Dehra Dun, 211 fn, 343 fn, 383-385, 387-389, 391, 394-396, 400-402, 404, 405, 410 fn, 420, 426 fn, 427, 432, 433, 449 fn, 450, 452, 462, 463, 470, 471, 474, 481, 492, 500 & fn
Delhi, 32, 42, 58, 59, 67, 68, 105, 128, 137, 157-159, 211, 218, 256, 288 fn, 323, 363, 371, 375, 381 & fn, 382, 401, 411, 455, 466, 543, 563
———, Congress session at, 381, 382
Delhi Conspiracy Case, 288 & fn
Delhi Settlement, 5, 8, 10, 12, 14 fn, 15, 24 fn, 28, 44, 45, 50, 106, 112, 130, 133, 146, 153, 169, 173, 175, 188 & fn, 233, 237, 252, 325 fn, 538, 553
Desai, Bhulabhai, 35 fn
———, Mahadeva, 42, 48, 137, 449, 451 fn, 475, 493 fn, 524
Deshmukh, Dr., 445
De Valera, Eamon, 402
Dharasana (Gujarat), 277 fn
Dhariwal Woollen Mills, 200
Dharmapal, 384
Dharwar, 211, 311 fn

Imam Saheb—see Bawazir, Abdul Kadir
Indian Journalists Association, 248
Indian Political Congress, 252
Indian Merchants Chamber, 217, 218 & fn
Indian Social Reformer, 461
Indian States Reformer, 480
Indian Trade Union Federation, 287 fn
Indonesia, 461 fn
Intelligent Woman's Guide to Socialism, Capitalism, Sovietism and Fascism (Bernard Shaw), 383
Iradatnagar (Allahabad), 343, 345
Iraq, 477
Ireland, 49 fn
Irwin, Lord, 188 fn
Isipatana (Sarnath), 423
Ismail, Mirza, 249
Italy, 265, 284, 484
Iyengar, B S Ramaswami, 249 & fn
Iyer, P.S. Sivaswamy, 372

Jagannath, 110
Jagdishpur (Allahabad), 110
Jalalabad (Farrukhabad), 161
Jallianwala Bagh, 303
Jallianwala Bagh Day, 380
Jammu and Kashmir, 467 fn
———, Maharaja Harisingh of, 467 & fn
Jammu and Kashmir National Conference, 316 fn
Jamnadas, 572
Jan, Agha Mohammad, 321
Janka (Allahabad), 110
Japan, 83, 114 fn, 463 fn, 557
Jawahar Day, 425
Jayakar, M R., 409, 476 fn
Jehol, 463 fn
Jesting Pilate (Aldous Huxley), 510 fn
Jhang (Pakistan), 44-46, 294 fn, 327
Jhansi, 71, 229
Jharwahi (Mathura), 122, 129
Jingiz Khan—see Chengiz Khan
Jinnah, M.A., 32 & fn, 47 & fn, 137
John, M., 244 & fn
Joint Parliamentary Committee, 519 fn
Joshi, Chhaganlal, 451 fn
———, N.M., 287 fn
Jugal Kishore, 486
Jullundur, 335 fn

Kaaba, 29
Kabul, 253
Kadampur (Bareilly), 132
Kaira (Gujarat), 18 fn
Kakinada (A.P.), 232
Kalhana, 485 fn
Kalka Prasad, 246 & fn
Kalyanpur (Allahabad), 58, 112
Kanauj, 59
Kangra, 350 fn
Kanpur, 48, 136, 186, 205, 238, 245 fn, 264 266, 273 fn, 281, 297 fn, 324 & fn, 327, 329, 330 & fn, 333, 352, 513, 538
Kanpur Conspiracy Case, 41 fn
Kanpur riots, 167
——— Enquiry Committee, report of, 264 & fn
Kantilal, 476 & fn
Kapur, Diwan Ram Chandra, 406 & fn, 407, 421, 433, 438
Karachi, 45, 59, 67-69, 198, 252, 455, 518, 527
———, Congress session at, 284, 287, 553, 555
——— resolution, 33, 243, 284, 289, 544
Karari (Allahabad), 110
Karchchana (Allahabad), 57, 127 & fn
Karhon Lal, 59
Karnatak, 184, 223, 224, 233, 311, 312
——— Provincial Congress Committee, 311 & fn
——— Seva Dal, 311
Kashipur (Allahabad), 358
Kashi Vidyapith (Varanasi), 245 fn
Kashmir, 451, 467, 468, 455, 492
Kathiawad, 437
Katju, Kailas Nath, 198
Kaul, Kailas, 29, 134, 262 & fn, 263
———, Rampati, 355 & fn
Kehla (Fatehgarh), 58 & fn
Kelkar, N C, 409
Kent, 456

JU, G, CENT.

Gandhi Jayanti, 539
Gandhian Economic Thought (J.C. Kumarappa), 32 fn
Gandhi Irwin Settlement—see Delhi Settlement
Gandhi National Memorial Fund, 311 fn
Gandhi Sagar (Bangalore), 247
Garhwali, 480 fn
Gaur, Madan Mohan, 182, 183
Gauhr i Hayat, 330
Gaura (Allahabad), 110
Gautam, Mohanlal, 42 fn
Geneva, 42, 416
George VI (England), 115 fn
———, Henry, 359 & fn
Germany, 83, 284, 463, 484, 486
Ghazipur, 419
Ghose, Sailendranath, 253 fn
Ghure Lal, 120, 121
Gilani, Beltie Shah, 352 & fn
Gilbert, William, 526 fn, 570
Gilbert and Sullivan, 526
Girdharilal (Girdhari Lal), 353, 354, 444, 465
Gitanjali, (Rabindranath Tagore), 499
Glimpses of World History (Jawaharlal Nehru), 346 fn
Glasgow, 436
Gobi (desert), 461
Gokhale, G.K., 297
Golden Book of Tagore, 397
Golconda, 467
Gol Gumbaz, 418
Golmuri Tinplate Workers Union, 244 fn
Gonda, 79, 97, 99, 133, 140, 141, 149, 154, 261, 351
Gorakhpur, 79, 99, 130, 136
Gorton Castle, 563
Goswami, T.C, 516
Greece, 265
Grammar of Santal Language (Lars Olsen Skrefsrud), 577 fn
Great War, 513, 559
Gregg, Richard, 359 & fn
Grotius, Hugo, 494
Grousset, Rene, 416 fn
Gupta, Bishambhar Nath, 203 & fn
———, Shyamlal 'Parshad', 278 fn
Gwalior, 317 & fn
Guruvayoor (Kerala), 449 fn, 457 fn

Habeeb Ullah, Sheikh, 161 & fn
Haemmerlin, Mlle, 387
Haig, Harry Graham, 525 & fn
Hailey, Malcolm, 98, 105, 310, 507, 561, 562
Handia (Allahabad), 57, 110, 145
Hanoi, 114 fn
Hardikar, N.S, 221 fn, 223, 224, 226-228, 230, 311
Hardwar, 457 fn
Harijan, 459-461
Hari Krishan, 572 fn
Harrow, 370, 394, 423, 524
Har Swarup, 73
Hedin, Sven, 350
Henderson, Arthur, 520
Hijli, 134 & fn, 256 & fn, 294, 298 & fn, 310
Hindu Boarding House (Allahabad), 403
Hindustani Seva Dal, 91, 181, 186, 220-227 fn, 229 fn 231, 233-239, 311, 334
History of Hindu Chemistry (P.C. Ray), 334 fn
Hitler, Adolf, 477 & fn, 507
Hoare, Samuel (Viscount Templewood), 385 & fn, 386, 457 & fn, 567, 570
Holmes, A.C., 371 & fn
Holroyd, 395 & fn
Home, Amal, 397 & fn
Hooghly, 271 fn
Howard League for Penal Reforms, 576
Hubli, 181, 186, 223, 224, 308, 334
Hudson, W.H, 422, 423, 442
Hugo, Victor, 387
Husain, Fazl i-, 371
Hussain, Muhammad, 204 fn, 205, 208 & fn
Huxley, Aldous, 510 & fn
———, Julian, 372 fn

I Follow the Mahatma (K.M. Munshi), 579

381 fn, 470, 479, 484, 485, 488, 533
Malaya, 379, 461 fn
Mango (a peasant woman), 122
Manjhanpur (Allahabad), 110, 117, 145
Mann, Thomas, 486
Marx, Karl, 497
Mashobra (Simla), 9
Mathura, 31-33, 62, 71 fn, 76, 97, 99, 112, 123, 129, 133, 149, 152 fn, 183 fn, 325, 562
Maurois, Andre, 370 & fn
Mauritius, 114 fn
Mauza Gulupur (Rae Bareli), 79
Maya civilisation, 496
Mayors, S.R., 388
Measures (Supdt. of Police), 343, 345
Meerut, 62, 130, 133, 212 fn, 213 fn, 351, 390 fn, 543, 573
Meerut Conspiracy Case, 41 fn, 486 fn
Meerut Defence Fund, 275
Mehta, Jivraj, 363 & fn, 364, 375, 377
———, Hansa, 364
———, V.N., 126 & fn, 128, 158, 165
Meja (Allahabad), 145
Mein Kampf (Adolf Hitler), 477 fn
Mieville, E.C., 115 & fn, 152, 182
Mikado, 428
Mill, John Stuart, 460
Miraben, 23
Mirzapur, 205
Misra, Mata Prasad, 246 & fn
M.N. Roy Defence Committee, 297
Modern Review, 31 fn
Mohamedi, S.S., 252
Mongolia, 463 fn
Moonje, B.S., 409
Moradabad, 389
Moral Man and Immoral Society (Reinhold Niebuhr), 477 & fn
Motley, J.L., 403 & fn
Mountbatten, Lord, 115 fn
Mudie, R.F., 143 & fn 146, 159
Muflis, 530 fn
Mukerji, S.K., 547 & fn, 548 fn
Mukherji, Dhan Gopal, 362, 382, 422, 424, 426
Munde Pande (Moradabad), 389
Munje—see Moonje
Munshi, K.M., 5 fn, 292 & fn, 579
Murshidabad, 273, 333 & fn, 334
Muslim League, 206 fn, 287 fn
Muslim Nationalist Party, 137, 261 & fn
Muslim Volunteers' Congress, 287
Mussalman, 201 fn
Mussoorie, 389, 391, 394, 399-401, 404, 444, 471, 481-484, 487, 488, 508
Muttra—see Mathura
Muzaffarnagar, 71, 214 fn
My Life (Isadora Duncan), 316 fn
Mysore, 254 fn, 255

Naapara (Bahraich), 149
Nabha, 355
Naidu, Padmaja, 343, 350, 356, 372, 379, 382, 384, 413, 417, 419, 425, 432, 486
———, Sarojini, 281 fn, 371, 372, 381 & fn
Naini, 343 & fn, 345, 346, 351-357, 360, 361, 375, 376, 378, 438, 450, 452, 453 & fn, 478, 500 & fn, 501, 567
Naini Tal, 92, 245, 374, 396, 404
Nambudripad, Kurur, 216 & fn
Naoroji, Dadabhai, 134 fn, 135 fn, 198 fn
———, Jal, 198, 218, 346 fn, 387, 456 fn
———, Khurshed, 134 & fn, 259, 262, 268, 270, 328, 329, 493 & fn
Napoleon (Bonaparte), 432
Narayan, Jaya Prakash, 135 & fn
Nariman, K.F., 23, 333, 335
Narkanda (Simla), 316
Natarajan, K., 461 fn
Nationalist Muslim Conference, 48
National Planning Committee, 317 fn
Naujawan Bharat Sabha, 296
Nehru, Anand Kumar, 440 & fn
———, Balwant Kumar (Ballo), 483
———, B.K., 491 & fn
———, Brajlal, 404, 405, 483, 491
———, Indira, 343, 346, 352-354, 356, 359, 360, 365, 370-372, 374, 382, 385, 386, 390 fn, 394, 399, 400, 403, 404, 406, 409, 411, 415, 417, 419, 422, 423, 427 fn, 433, 438, 442, 452, 454, 462, 470, 471, 481, 486, 487, 492, 493

Khaksars, 135 fn
Khaliquzzaman, Chaudhri, 485
Khambatta, S P., 520 & fn
Khan, Ali Gul, 257 & fn, 263 & fn
———, Amir Ayub, 464
———, Faiz Mohamad, 130
———, Kadir, 91
———, Khan Abdul Ghaffar, 3, 29, 49, 134 & fn, 135 & fn, 177, 188 fn, 225 fn, 253, 257 fn-260 fn, 263 & fn, 269 fn, 276 fn, 328, 343, 344, 566, 567
———, Obaidullah, 269 & fn
———, Saadullah, 267 & fn
———, Shafaat Ahmad, 43 & fn
Khan Sahib, 29, 134, 177 & fn, 260, 262 & fn, 263, 267 & fn, 268, 270, 276, 328, 329, 343, 344, 567
Khanna, G R, 214 & fn
Khudai Khidmatgars, 134 & fn, 135 fn, 225 & fn, 263, 276 fn
Kidwai, Rafi Ahmad, 42 fn, 49, 135, 167 fn, 258 260, 263, 344, 438, 470, 485
Kingsley Hall (London), 260
Knox, K N, 169 & fn
Kohkharaj (Allahabad), 81 fn
Kosari (Bareilly), 132
Kosi Kalan (Mathura), 121, 129
Kotkai, 563 fn
———, Khan of, 563 & fn
Kumaon, 355 fn, 357 fn
Kumarappa, J C, 32 & fn, 35 fn, 325
Kunwar, 344
Kunzru, Hirday Nath, 403

Labour Party (British), 520 & fn
Lacey, Patrick, 524 & fn
Lahore, 47, 49 fn, 134, 164, 258, 385, 519, 572
——— resolution, 33, 35, 285, 300
Lajjavati, Kumari, 335 & fn
Lajpat Rai, Lala, 303 & fn, 466
Lajpat Rai Day, 479 fn
Lakshmi, 478 & fn, 485
Lakhimpur Explosives Case, 346 & fn
Lal, Brijnandan, 73
Lalganj (Rae Bareli), 88 fn, 91, 246
Lancashire, 539 fn
Lansbury, George, 520
Latif, Abdul, 419 & fn, 421, 452, 453
Latvia, 576
Leader, 29, 58, 73, 128, 139 & fn
Lele, P.R., 332 & fn
Lenin, 302, 479
Letters from a Father to His Daughter (Jawaharlal Nehru), 438 fn
Life in an Indian Jail (Raghubir Sahai), 554 fn
L'illustration, 379, 383, 416
Lloyd Triestino, 436
Lokhare, B.G., 227
London, 9-14, 17, 18, 20 23, 32, 41, 48 & fn, 93, 108, 137, 155, 157, 173, 250 fn 252, 260, 261 fn, 277 fn, 297, 304, 306 fn, 325, 328, 344, 383, 416, 418, 423, 476, 491
London School of Economics, 416, 491
Lothian, Lord, 370 & fn
Lothian Committee, 370 & fn
Lucknow, 55, 63, 91 fn, 102, 103, 108, 112, 124, 137, 164, 167, 181, 186, 187 fn, 189, 244, 354, 357, 361, 366, 372, 378, 383, 402, 427, 432, 440 fn, 481, 486, 500, 501, 514, 516, 521, 540, 545-547, 553

MacDonald, Ramsay, 162 fn, 293, 353 fn, 407, 409 fn
Madan, 416
Madho Prasad, 349 fn
Madras, 546 fn, 572
Mahajan, Jagannath, 349 fn
Maharajganj (Rae Bareli), 79, 130
Mahesh Narain, 124 & fn
Mahmud, Syed, 181, 248, 287 fn, 337, 338, 425, 426, 432, 453 & fn, 470
Mahmudabad (Sitapur), 161 fn
Mahoria (Sultanpur), 160 fn
Mainpuri, 60
——— Conspiracy Case, 59 & fn
Makhmoor, J, 530 & fn
Malacca (Allahabad), 349, 438
Malaviya, Govind, 409 & fn, 433
———, Kapil Deva, 522 & fn
———, Keshava Deva, 470
———, Krishna Kant, 344, 352, 434
———, Madan Mohan, 281 fn, 344,

564, on justice in India, 573, on Kanpur riots enquiry report, 264 267, 281; on life in jail, 369, on Mahatma Gandhi's fast, 407-411; and his attitude to science, 511; on marriage, 490, 491; on minorities and nationalism, 283; on Mathura atrocities, 120 123, 129, On M N. Roy, 297, 329; on Muslims' role in national movement, 4, 285, on national flag, 242, 250, 255, 294, on nationalism, 2, 6, on need for preparedness, 8, courage, 86, forbearance, 414; strengthening the Congress 1, 28; training, 220-223, 231, 232, 237, 238; and unity, 87, 90, 269, on nonviolence, 69, 84, 104, 302, 304, on Pathans, 329, on planning and efficiency, 230, on politicians, 495; on prayers, 436, on prison reforms, 509, 554, 555, 574-576; on public morality, 125, 126, on recruitment of volunteers, 226, on religion and morality, 318, on religious practices 202, on resumption of no rent campaign, 148, 154, 155 & fn, 163 & fn, 176 & fn, 178, 181, 190, 191, 580, on Round Table Conferences, 9 12, 27, 106, 147, 157, 162, on scientific attitude, 393, 513; on separate electorates, 285, on settlement with England, 33 36, on solitary confinement, 566; on support to progressive forces, 528; on swadeshi, 213; on terrorism, 290, 291, 515; on U.P. ordinances, 187 & fn; on women, 95, 292 & fn; on women prisoners, 568, on world situation, 519; views on crime, 554, on zamindars, 74, 75, 86, 102, 105, 171, 172, 257; and their attitude to kisans, 57, 76, 78, 79

———, Kamala, 29, 134, 135, 182, 186, 262 fn, 277, 337, 338, 343, 344, 346, 350, 353, 356, 358-360, 362, 364, 365, 370, 374, 377, 379-383, 385, 393, 396, 397, 399 401, 403, 404, 406-408, 410, 416, 417, 420, 422, 425 & fn, 426, 432, 433, 438 441, 443 445, 450, 452, 455, 458, 462, 463, 465, 468-472, 474, 481, 486, 488, 489, 492, 493, 500, 501

———, Kishanlal, 371

———, Krishna Kumari, 30, 343, 350 352, 354, 359, 361, 365, 366, 370, 394, 404, 410, 413, 416, 417, 421, 423, 424, 436, 437, 439, 440, 449, 450, 452, 454, 455, 458, 467, 468, 471, 477, 481, 489-491

———, Mohanlal, 351, 352 & fn, 368, 405

———, (Mohan Bhabhi), 352

———, Motilal, 318 fn, 338 fn, 453 fn

———, Rameshwari, 404, 405, 483

———, Rup, 352 & fn

———, Shyam Kumari, 397

———, Shyamlal, 343, 368, 440 fn

———, Swarup Rani, 380 fn, 418 & fn, 427 fn, 470 fn

———, Uma, 343, 350 & fn, 379, 440 fn

Nehru Report, 43

Nellore, 208

Nepal, 351 fn

Netherlands, 404

Nethersole (district magistrate), 372, 379, 380, 385

New Delhi, 439 fn

Newham, Charles E., 29 & fn

Newlands, B E M, 355 & fn, 373, 374, 376, 377, 390

New York, 42, 253, 327

Niebuhr, Reinhold, 477 & fn

Nineveh, 496

Nobel Prize, 486

Nohjhil (Mathura), 129

North West Frontier Province, 26 & fn, 47 fn

Norway, 577

Orange, William of, 403 & fn, 404

Orissa, 51

Oudh—see Avadh

Oudh Rent Act, 150, 508 fn

Outline of History (H G. Wells), 379

Oxford, 524 fn

Pakargaon (Rae Bareli), 130

Palestine, 477

———, Jawaharlal, 5 fn, 9 & fn, 10 & fn, 11, 13, 15-17 fn, 19 fn, 22, 26, 28, 30, 32 & fn, 33, 41-48 fn, 49, 50, 59 61 fn, 65 & fn 68, 70, 80, 81, 96, 98 100, 102, 103, 105, 106 fn, 108, 111, 113-115, 118 fn, 119, 123-127, 130, 133, 136, 137, 139 & fn, 146, 151 & fn, 155, 157-161, 163, 164 fn, 166, 167 & fn, 170, 172, 177 & fn, 179 fn, 181-184, 186, 188 fn, 190, 191, 193, 197 & fn, 198, 200, 201, 203 & fn, 208 & fn, 210 214, 216 & fn, 217, 219, 221 fn, 224, 225 fn, 227 231, 235, 236, 239, 241 249, 253-264, 267, 270-278, 281 fn, 287 fn, 288 fn, 289 fn, 291 fn, 297 fn, 307, 315, 316, 318 & fn, 319, 321-339, 343 fn, 346-348 fn, 357 fn, 365 fn, 368, 373, 375, 377-379, 384 & fn, 385 fn, 395 fn, 396, 399, 404, 410 & fn, 411, 413 fn, 417, 424, 431, 434, 435, 437, 439 & fn, 441, 445, 449 fn-451, 453 fn 456, 462, 467, 468, 471, 474, 475, 478, 483, 486, 490, 492, 501 fn, 505, 507, 508, 514 517, 520 523, 525 & fn, 530, 531, 533 535, 538 fn, 542, 544, 546, 548, 553, 555, 579

———, disagrees with Mahatma Gandhi, 513, 529, 530, dislikes presiding over conferences, 335; dissatisfied with Liberal ideology, 505; favours machinery, 513, is a man of peace, 317, is proud of kisans, 347; is unattached to property, 445, likes adventures and risks, 317; seeks action, 319, 320, 321; wants complete change in regime, 543

———, in jail, 343-501; arrested (sixth time), 343; completes Letters to Indira, 493, dislikes shifting from Dehra Dun jail, 434, fasts for 36 hours, 361; impatient at teaching, 402, locked in jail, 355; misses father, 363, 369, moves away from Mahatma Gandhi, 478, 489; released from jail, 501 & fn, stops interviews in jail, 395, 396, 398, 400, and capitulates to Mahatma Gandhi's suggestion for interviews, 450, 452

———, on advantages of jail life, 413-415; on Ambedkar's conduct, 332; on atrocities in jails, 569; on Bareilly happenings, 129; and government's denial, 129 & fn; on Bengal Congress disputes, 302; on Bengal's reaction to his advice, 274; on Bengal's sacrifices, 305; on boycott of foreign cloth, 94, 199 & fn, 212, 214; and its effect on weavers, 204 207; on breaches of Delhi Settlement, 51; on British national government, 293; on civil disobedience, resumption of, 87, 114, 128, 137, 309; and its success, 83, 301; on classification of prisoners, 566; on communalism, 205 207, 281 284, 296; on Congress, 286, 528; branches abroad, 17 & fn, 250 253; on Congress and harijans, 289, 299, 309; and kisans, 64, 171, 310; and mill workers, 286; on Congressmen accepting offices, 246; on Congress organisation, 517; on constituent assembly, 542; on cooperation among kisans, 77; on dangers of an alien army, 556; on defence of India, 555 560, on Delhi Settlement, 1, 16, 20, 65, 88, 89, 90, 94, 103; on discipline, 87, 295; on distress of peasants, 19, 56, 57, 62, 63, 67, 73, 79, 81, 92, 109, 115, 119, 141, 142, 152 & fn, 155, 156; on divesting of vested interests, 527, 532, 536, on economic changes, 505, 527; on education, 439 fn; on fear as the cause of world troubles, 509; on fighting forces of evil, 319; on first experiences with kisans, 508; on futility of grief, 337; on government's attitude to Congress, 79, 109, 117, 131, 132; to peasants, 18, 97, 127; and to truce, 71 & fn, on hand spinning and weaving, 512; on Hijli firings, 134 & fn, 294, on Hindu society, 460; on Hindustani Seva Dal, 238, 239, on hooliganism, 3, on income tax, 353, 367; on imperialism, 536; on incidents in Semri and Baraipur, 140 & fn, 154; on India and socialism, 320, 321; on Indian states and federation, 36, 39, 40, on jail 'riots', 429, and treatment of prisoners, 430,

Puri, Congress session at, 50, 51
Pushkar, 179 fn

Qadri, Rahman Baksh, 109
Quatre Vingt Treze (Victor Hugo), 387

Rae Bareli, 19 fn, 61 & fn, 75, 79, 80, 88 fn, 93, 95 & fn 97, 99 101, 113 & fn, 118, 119, 123 125, 128, 130, 133, 141, 163 & fn, 201, 246 & fn, 248 fn, 275, 299, 309, 325, 332 fn, 345, 354, 394, 501, 540 & fn
Rahim, Abdur, 256
Raj, 344, 374
Rajagopalachari, C, 410, 476, 478 fn
Rajatarangini (Kalhana), 455 & fn, 468, 485 & fn
Raj Bahadur, 130
Rajbhoj, P N, 289 fn
Rajey Sultanpur (Fyzabad), 109 fn
Rajwade, Laxmibai G, 317 & fn
———, Ganpatrao Raghunath, 317 fn
Ramaswami, 572
Ramchand, 122
Rampur, 113 fn, 389
Ranchi, 489 fn
Rangaswami, 240
Ray, P.C., 334 & fn, 516, 526
Rayah (Mathura), 120 & fn
Red Shirts, 258 fn
Reichstag, 463 fn
Reinhold, C H, 433, 438, 487
Remakers of Mankind (Carleton Washburne), 439 fn
Rise of the Dutch Republic (J L Motley), 403 fn
Roerich, Nicholas, 350 & fn
Rohilkhand, 131
Rohtagi, Jawaharlal, 324, 327
Rolland, Romain, 476, 498
Rome, 496
Roosevelt, Franklin D., 505
Round Table Conference, 3 7, 11,13, 15 fn 17, 20, 25 fn 27, 33, 37 & fn, 49 fn, 93, 147, 151, 155, 157, 162, 206 fn, 239, 251, 261 & fn, 277 fn, 346 fn, 349 fn, 353 fn, 457 & fn, 519, 524 fn, 527, 537, 580
———, Federal Structure Committee of, 43 & fn
———, Minority Committee of, 35, 162 fn
Row, Leila, 351 & fn
Roy, B C, 135, 375-378, 380, 382, 383, 385, 386, 389, 390, 425, 450
———, M N, 41 & fn, 42, 186, 297 & fn, 324 & fn, 327, 329, 333 fn, 356, 479
Royalist Movement, 272 fn
Russia, 484, 557 & fn, 558, 576

Saadat, 572
Sabarmati, 229, 318
Sachin state, 245
Sadashivarao, Karnad, 311 & fn
Sahai, Raghubir, 554 & fn
———, Sitla, 68, 123, 125 & fn, 128, 139 & fn, 163, 165, 170, 246, 248, 393
Sahay, A, 114 & fn
Saint Joan (Bernard Shaw), 459
Sakarwal (Allahabad), 127
Saklatwala, S., 252
Salamatullah (Major), 501
Salon (Rae Bareli), 119
Salt Act, 60, 66
Sampurnanand, 229, 271 & fn
Santniketan, 330, 333 fn, 418
Sapru, T B., 325, 385, 409, 459, 476 fn, 484
Sarabhai, Ambalal, 315 fn, 316 fn
———, Bharati, 315 & fn, 317
———, Mridula, 316 & fn
Sarah (ayah), 395
Sarai Gopal (Allahabad), 334
Sarnath, 423
Sastri, V.S., 484
Saxena, Mohanlal, 409, 410
Scandinavian Santal Mission, 577
Schuster, George, 10 & fn
Science in the Changing World (Aldous Huxley), 510
Science of Life (H G Wells), 372 & fn, 379
Scindia Steam Navigation Co., 436
Seman (Gonda), 140 & fn, 149, 154

Paliwal, S. K. Datt, 210
Palmer, G E, 356 & fn
Panchgani (Poona), 362, 382
Pande, Badri Dutt, 355 fn, 357 & fn, 371, 385
Pandit, Chandralekha, 387, 395, 396, 400, 411, 416, 419, 454, 471, 487
———, Nayantara, 353, 387, 395, 400, 419, 455, 487
———, Ranjit, S., 343, 349-352, 359-361, 365, 370, 374, 379, 395 fn-398, 400, 404, 410, 416, 424, 427 fn, 428, 441, 455 & fn, 466-468, 470, 471, 477, 485, 486, 492
———, Rita, 353, 387, 395, 400, 419, 487
———, Sita Ram, 356 & fn, 383
———, Vijayalakshmi, 343, 350-352, 354, 359, 361, 365, 378, 380, 383, 394, 402, 404, 409-411, 413, 416, 417, 424, 432, 436, 439, 440, 450, 452, 454, 458, 462, 467, 471, 477, 481, 485, 492
Pandri Ganeshpur (Rae Bareli), 130
Pant, Govind Ballabh, 42 fn, 55, 59, 63, 64, 106 & fn, 108, 112, 114 & fn, 167 fn, 359, 364, 369, 381, 384 & fn, 385, 387, 389, 401, 405, 479
———, Har Govind, 355 & fn, 356, 369
Paris, 416
Parkham (Mathura), 122, 129
Partabgarh (U P), 58 & fn
Pasha, Mustapha Nahas, 136 & fn
———, Madame Zaghlol, 136
Patel, S B, 324 & fn
———, Vallabhbhai, 3, 29, 31, 42, 45, 48, 50, 115, 123, 133, 134, 136, 152 & fn, 154, 155, 157 159, 166, 167, 176, 180, 183, 184 fn, 185, 189 & fn, 191, 197, 217, 226, 236 fn, 243 fn, 245 & fn, 249, 256, 260 & fn, 261, 263, 272 & fn, 274, 276, 277, 281 fn, 330, 331, 333 & fn, 349 & fn, 451 fn, 461, 476
———, Vithalbhai, 292
Patiala, Maharaja (Bhupindra Singh) of, 37 & fn, 43
Patna, 462
Payagpur (Bahraich), 149
Peasants and Workers Republic, 189
Peasants Relief Committee, 479 fn
Persia, 461
Peru, 477
Peshawar, 49, 134, 258 & fn, 269 fn, 328, 480, 567, 572 & fn
Peter, the Great, 557 & fn
Phaphamau (Allahabad), 354, 445
Philip II (Spain), 403 fn
Phulpur (Allahabad), 110, 117, 118, 145
Pioneer, 29 & fn, 290 & fn, 334, 449, 453, 486, 506, 514 & fn, 515
Pipri (Unao), 97 fn
Plassey, battle of, 564
Plato, 495
Poland, 557
Poona, 4, 181, 186, 289 fn, 352, 360, 362, 386, 394, 395, 397, 409, 410, 415, 416, 417 fn, 424, 436, 450, 452, 462, 465, 466, 481, 486-489, 492, 520, 521, 526, 530, 531, 538 fn, 540
Poona Conference, 486 fn, 488
Poona Pact, 299 fn
Port Said, 29
Power of Nonviolence (Richard Gregg), 359 fn
Prabha, 353, 379, 417, 481
Prag Dat, 346 & fn, 348
Prakash, 425, 437
Prasad, Chandrika, 540 & fn
———, Dwaraka, 360 & fn, 362
———, Jagdish, 30 & fn, 55 & fn, 56, 79, 96, 105, 106, 108, 109, 111, 115, 128, 133, 136, 143, 148, 156, 159, 160, 164, 169, 176, 329
———, Rajendra, 181, 273, 343
Prayag, 65, 501
Pritt, D N, 576 & fn
Progress and Poverty (Henry George), 359 & fn
Public Debt of India, 35 & fn
Punch, 43, 361
Punjab Political Conference, 294 fn, 295
Punjab Provincial Conference, 327
Punjab Provincial Congress Committee, 46
Pupils Own School (Poona), 417 fn
Puri, 50 & fn, 51, 181

Tehri, 480
Tewary—see Twary
Textile Mills Exemption Committee, 215 fn, 217 fn
Thailand, 114 fn
Thakur Das, Lala, 381 & fn, 382, 388
The Case for India (Will Durant), 318 fn
The Coming Struggle for Power (John Strachey), 476 fn
The Magic Mountain (Thomas Mann), 486
The Nature of Capitalist Crisis (John Strachey), 476 fn
Thengdi, D R, 275 & fn
The Pilgrim's Progress (John Bunyan), 494
The Work, Wealth and Happiness of Mankind (H G Wells), 379 fn, 383
Third Afghan War, 508
Tilak, Bal Gangadhar, 466
Times Book Club, 383
Times of India, 18 fn, 23
Timur, 510 & fn
Tivary, Venkatesh Narain, 42 fn, 55, 73, 127, 164, 167 fn, 349, 352
Today, 182
Tolstoy, Leo, 510 fn
Trade Union Congress, 41, 286, 287 & fn, 324
Travancore, 480
Trebitsch—Lincoln, 350
Trichur, 216 fn
Trinidad, 114 fn
Trinity College (Cambridge), 370, 524 & fn
Trotsky, Leon, 519
Tyagi, Mahavir, 211 & fn

Udra (Bareilly), 132
Unao (U.P.), 19 fn, 97 & fn, 99, 181
United States of America, 41, 83, 253, 296, 359, 496, 497, 505, 507, 544 556, 557
Unity Conference, 243, 425 & fn, 432, 440 fn
Upadhyaya, S D, 343, 354, 368, 370, 394, 501
U.P. Government Rent and Revenue Committee, 30, 114, 125 & fn, 139 fn, 169
U P. Instigation and Emergency Powers Ordinance, 187 & fn, 190, 192, 239, 339,
U P. Provincial Conference, 181, 184, 190, 191 & fn
U.P Provincial Congress Committee, 19, 123, 131, 140, 142, 149, 158 159 & fn, 163, 164, 166-169, 173 175 fn, 176, 178, 180, 181, 183 185, 187, 188, 190, 191 fn, 193, 266, 334, 579, 580
———, Agrarian Committee, 42 & fn, 123, 173
Urvashi, 417 & fn
Utmanzai (N W F P), 262

Vaikom (Kerala), 216 fn
Vakil, Ira, 419 & fn
———, Jahangir, 399, 413, 415, 419 fn, 423
Varanasi, 186, 205, 228 231 & fn, 245 & fn, 321, 406 & fn, 423
Venice, 496
Venkatachari, A G., 546 & fn
Victoria, Queen, 564
Vidyarthi, Ganesh Shankar, 238, 241, 266, 281, 282
Vienna, 467
Visvabharati, 330

Wafd Party, 136 fn
Wall Street, 43
Washburne, Carleton, 438 & fn, 439 fn, 455
Wanchu, Ravi, 352 & fn
Wells, George Philip, 372 fn
———, H.G, 372 & fn, 379, 383
Willingdon, Lord, 9, 579
Wood, Evelyn, 456 & fn

Yeravda (Poona), 4, 361, 386, 408, 409, 451, 493, 555

Sen Gupta, J M, 31 & fn, 43, 134 fn, 274, 328 & fn, 489 & fn-491, 565
———, Nellie, 489 & fn, 490
Sen, Prafulla Chandra, 271 & fn
Seth, Damodar Swarup, 129 & fn, 175, 355, 365
Shah, K.T., 35 fn
Shahdara (Delhi), 381 fn
Shahjahanpur, 60
Shahpur (Pakistan), 44-45
Sharma, Balkrishna 'Navin', 384 & fn
Shastri, Devavrat, 553 fn
———, Lal Bahadur, 164 & fn
———, Nardeva, 390 & fn
Shaw, G B, 38, 350, 383, 459, 553
Sheodarshanganj (Rae Bareli), 79
Sheogarh (Rae Bareli), 248 fn
Sheopuri (Bareilly), 132
Sherwani, T.A K, 18, 101, 114 & fn, 158, 159 & fn, 164, 165, 167 fn, 170, 174, 176 & fn, 180, 184 & fn, 185, 191, 310, 343 346, 349-351, 353, 356, 485, 580
Shibbu, 365, 366
Shukla, Pandit Badri, 160 & fn
Sidh Gopal, 59
Sikh League, 47
Simla, 8, 9 fn, 10 fn, 11, 21-23, 29 fn, 47, 105, 106, 118 fn, 210, 248, 316, 524 & fn, 536, 562-564
Simla Agreement, 27, 166 fn, 168, 176
Sind, 45, 47 fn, 425 & fn
Singh, Anand, 388 & fn, 401, 452, 454
———, Bhagwan Baksh, 113 fn
———, Thakur Bhaktawar, 132
———, C. Chattur, 254 & fn, 315
———, Dharm Pal, 132
———, Gajadhar, 163
———, Gopinath, 273 & fn
———, Kanhaiya Baksh, 117
———, Maharaj, 66
———, Matabhik, 110, 117
———, Narmada Prasad, 349 352
———, Prithvi Raj, 257 & fn
———, Rampal, 124 126, 128, 139, 170 & fn
———, Uday Bhan, 118
Sirathu (Allahabad), 145
Sircar, Nilratan, 377
Sitapur, 161 fn
Sitaramayya, Pattabhi, 242 & fn
Skrefsrud, Lars Olsen, 577 & fn
Slocombe, George, 30 & fn, 322, 323 fn
Social Reconstruction of Modern Societies (Bhagavan Das), 245 fn
Socrates, 497
Solon, 560 & fn
Somasundaram, S, 405, 436
Soraon (Allahabad), 57, 58, 75, 78, 103 & fn, 107, 110, 145
Soul of Malaya (H. Fauconmer), 379
South Africa, 43 fn, 277 fn, 297
South Sea Islands, 47
Spain, 403 fn
Srinagar, 467
Sri Narain, 130
Sri Prakasa, 321, 381, 521, 542
Srivastava, Sohanlal, 345, 349
Sri Vijaya, 461 & fn
Statesman, 321, 449, 453, 524 & fn, 560, 562 564
Stein, Aurel, 485 & fn
Story of Civilisation (Will Durant), 318 fn
Story of Philosophy (Will Durant), 319
St. Paul's Cathedral, 418
Strachey, John, 476 & fn
Suhrawardy, H S, 287 & fn, 288
Sulahpore (Allahabad), 81
Sullivan, Arthur, 526 fn
Sultanpur, 160 & fn, 165, 337, 338
Sumatra, 461 fn
Sunderlal, Pandit, 167, 245
Surajkunda (Rae Bareli), 119
Surat, 15 fn, 18 fn, 25 fn
Swadeshi Committee, 216
Swaraj Bhawan Trust, 135
Swaraj Party, 63
Switzerland, 444, 458
Syria, 477

Tagore, Rabindranath, 134 & fn, 397 fn, 499, 516, 526
Tanda (Fyzabad), 109
Tandon, Purushottamdas, 19 fn, 59, 65 fn, 66, 127, 158 & fn, 164, 167 fn, 344, 421 & fn, 479
Tankha, Kashi Naram, 410 & fn, 433

Young, Desmond, 514 & fn
Young India, 32 & fn, 97, 325
Zorulya, Efim, 458
Zutshi, Ladli Prasad, 364 fn, 368

Young, Desmond, 514 & fn
Young India, 32 & fn, 97, 325
Zorubja, Efim, 458
Zutshi, Ladli Prasad, 364 fn, 368

Selected works of Jawaharlal
Nehru

[illegible]

Selected works of Jawaharlal Nehru

Volume Six

MLSU - CENTRAL LIBRARY
81719CL

A Project of the
Jawaharlal Nehru
Memorial Fund

Orient Longman

© Indira Gandhi 1974

Published by
Sujit Mukherjee
Orient Longman Ltd

Regd. Office
3/5 Asaf Ali Road New Delhi 110001

Regional Offices
Nicol Road Ballard Estate Bombay 400001
17 Chittaranjan Avenue Calcutta 700013
36A Mount Road Madras 600002
1/24 Asaf Ali Road New Delhi 110001
80/1 Mahatma Gandhi Road Bangalore 560001
3 5 820 Hyderguda Hyderabad 500001

Printed at
Indraprastha Press (CBT)
Nehru House New Delhi 110001

Advisory Board

M. Chalapathi Rau
H. Y. Sharada Prasad
B. R. Nanda

General Editor

S. Gopal

FOREWORD

Jawaharlal Nehru is one of the key figures of the twentieth century. He symbolised some of the major forces which have transformed our age.

When Jawaharlal Nehru was young, history was still the privilege of the West; the rest of the world lay in deliberate darkness. The impression given was that the vast continents of Asia and Africa existed merely to sustain their masters in Europe and North America. Jawaharlal Nehru's own education in Britain could be interpreted, in a sense, as an attempt to secure for him a place within the pale. His letters of the time are evidence of his sensitivity, his interest in science and international affairs as well as of his pride in India and Asia. But his personality was veiled by his shyness and a facade of nonchalance, and perhaps, outwardly there was not much to distinguish him from the ordinary run of men. Gradually there emerged the warm and universal being who became intensely involved with the problems of the poor and the oppressed in all lands. In doing so, Jawaharlal Nehru gave articulation and leadership to millions of people in his own country and in Asia and Africa.

That imperialism was a curse which should be lifted from the brows of men, that poverty was incompatible with civilisation, that nationalism should be poised on a sense of international community and that it was not sufficient to brood on these things when action was urgent and compelling — these were the principles which inspired and gave vitality to Jawaharlal Nehru's activities in the years of India's struggle for freedom and made him not only an intense nationalist but one of the leaders of humanism.

No particular ideological doctrine could claim Jawaharlal Nehru for its own. Long days in jail were spent in reading widely. He drew much from the thought of the East and West and from the philosophies of the past and the present. Never religious in the formal sense, yet he had a deep love for the culture and tradition of his own land. Never a rigid Marxist, yet he was deeply influenced by that theory and was particularly impressed by what he saw in the Soviet Union on his first visit in 1927. However, he realised that the world was too complex, and man had too many facets, to be encompassed by any single or total explanation. He himself was a socialist with an abhorrence of regimentation and a democrat who was anxious to reconcile his faith in civil liberty with the necessity of mitigating economic and social wretchedness. His struggles, both within himself and with the outside world, to adjust such seeming contradictions are what make his life and work significant and fascinating.

As a leader of free India, Jawaharlal Nehru recognised that his country could neither stay out of the world nor divest itself of its own interests in world affairs. But to the extent that it was possible, Jawaharlal Nehru sought to speak objectively and to be a voice of sanity in the shrill phases of the 'cold war'. Whether his influence helped on certain occasions to maintain peace is for the future historian to assess. What we do know is that for a long stretch of time he commanded an international audience reaching far beyond governments, that he spoke for ordinary, sensitive, thinking men and women around the globe and that his was a constituency which extended far beyond India.

So the story of Jawaharlal Nehru is that of a man who evolved, who grew in storm and stress till he became the representative of much that was noble in his time. It is the story of a generous and gracious human being who summed up in himself the resurgence of the 'third world' as well as the humanism which transcends dogmas and is adapted to the contemporary context. His achievement, by its very nature and setting, was much greater than that of a Prime Minister. And it is with the conviction that the life of this man is of importance not only to scholars but to all, in India and elsewhere, who are interested in the valour and compassion of the human spirit that the Jawaharlal Nehru Memorial Fund has decided to publish a series of volumes consisting of all that is significant in what Jawaharlal Nehru spoke and wrote. There is, as is to be expected in the speeches and writings of a man so engrossed in affairs and gifted with expression, much that is ephemeral; this will be omitted. The official letters and memoranda will also not find place here. But it is planned to include everything else and the whole corpus should help to remind us of the quality and endeavour of one who was not only a leader of men and a lover of mankind, but a completely integrated human being.

Indira Gandhi.

New Delhi
18 January 1972

Chairman
Jawaharlal Nehru Memorial Fund

EDITORIAL NOTE

In October 1933, in his articles Whither India?, Jawaharlal Nehru analysed clearly the Indian situation and stressed the appropriateness of socialism as the goal. But in the following months the growing disintegration of the Congress organisation and the counterpart of increasing official repression made obvious that Jawaharlal Nehru's hopes lay very far in the future. He himself was arrested on 12 February 1934 immediately after his visit to various places in Bihar which had been devastated by an earthquake.

Jawaharlal Nehru remained in prison for over 18 months, till his release, because of his wife's illness, on 3 September 1935. The diaries maintained by him in these years and the letters he wrote at this time, reveal his distress with the trends of Congress policy and the seeming failure of Mahatma Gandhi's leadership as well as his concern with his wife's health.

A few letters which belong chronologically to earlier volumes but which were located after those volumes had been published have been included in an appendix.

Much of the material included in this volume has been selected from the papers of Jawaharlal Nehru. The cooperation extended by the Director and staff of the Nehru Memorial Museum and Library is acknowledged.

The Maharashtra Government, the U.P. Government and the National Archives of India have kindly allowed us to utilise material in their possession. Letters and texts of speeches and statements published in The Hindu, The Leader, The Hindustan Times, The Times of India, The Bombay Chronicle, The Tribune, Amrita Bazar Patrika, The Pioneer, The Searchlight, Advance, Visva Bharati Quarterly and Aaj are reprinted with their consent. The Asia Publishing House has permitted the reprinting of two letters from A Bunch of Old Letters.

CONTENTS

1. Whither India?

1	Whither India?	9–11 October	1933	1
2	To Charles Mascarenhas	10 November	1933	17
3	Some Criticisms Considered	21 November	1933	18
4	Further Criticisms Considered	27 November	1933	27
5	To the Editor, The Pioneer	23 November	1933	31

2. Out of Prison

THE CONGRESS PROGRAMME

1	Exploitation of India	2 October	1933	35
2	To A.L. Simha	7 October	1933	40
3	To Asaf Ali	12 October	1933	42
4	To Nabakrushna Chaudhuri	15 October	1933	44
5	To H.K. Hales	17 October	1933	46
6	To Swami Govindananda	26 October	1933	47
7	To N.S. Hardikar	28 October	1933	49
8	To H.K. Hales	28 October	1933	49
9	To Secretary, Bikaner Political Case Committee	29 October	1933	51
10	To J.T. Gwynn	2 November	1933	52
11	To Kakalbhai Kothari	2 November	1933	58
12	On the Formation of the Democratic Swaraj Party	2 November	1933	58

13	To Mahatma Gandhi	8 November	1933	59
14	To K.F. Nariman	8 November	1933	61
15	To H.K. Hales	9 November	1933	62
16	On the Agreement with Lancashire Mills	9 November	1933	65
17	To K.R. Lucknidas	10 November	1933	66
18	On the Congress Programme	11 November	1933	67
19	To P. Nageswara Rao	14 November	1933	68
20	To Mahatma Gandhi	20 November	1933	68
21	To Roger Baldwin	23 November	1933	70
22	Interview to the Press	23 November	1933	72
23	To The Editor, Amrita Bazar Patrika	24 November	1933	73
24	To Members of the A.I.C.C.	24 November	1933	75
25	To Rev. Dan Singh Chowdhury	24 November	1933	77
26	To Rangildas M. Kapadia	24 November	1933	77
27	Speech to the Kanpur Swadeshi League	30 November	1933	78
28	Address to the Students of Kanpur	30 November	1933	79
29	To Lala Dunichand	2 December	1933	79
30	On the Repressive Policy of Government	5 December	1933	80
31	Interview at Allahabad	7 December	1933	80
32	Statement to the Press	16 December	1933	81
33	On Arrests of Congressmen in the U.P.	25 December	1933	81
34	Message to the Rajputana States' People's Convention	1 January	1934	83
35	To Sri Prakasa	11 January	1934	84
36	A Shadow Conference	11 January	1934	87
37	On Social and Village Uplift Work	12 January	1934	89
38	Interview to the Press	16 January	1934	89
39	The Character of the National Struggle	17 January	1934	91
40	The Futility of Terrorism and the Nature of the Mass Movement	18 January	1934	95
41	On Independence	26 January	1934	109

SOCIALISM AND THE LABOUR MOVEMENT

42	To T. Viswanatham	2 October	1933	110
43	To Bhagavan Das	2 October	1933	111
44	To Bagh Singh	2 October	1933	112
45	To Bhagavan Das	17 October	1933	113
46	To S. Ramanathan	21 October	1933	114
47	On Fascism and Democracy	28 October	1933	115
48	To R.W. Fulay	28 October	1933	116
49	Thirteen Years	28 October	1933	117
50	To Abdur Rahim	30 October	1933	118
51	Labour and the Congress	November	1933	119
52	To Arjun Arora	9 November	1933	121
53	To Bulaki Rama	24 November	1933	121
54	Civics and Politics	25 November	1933	122
55	The Civic Ideal	1 December	1933	123
56	To Onkar Nath Verma	2 December	1933	125
57	To Beltie Shah Gilani	3 December	1933	126
58	To Amar Kishor Sinha	8 December	1933	127
59	To Dinkar Mehta	9 December	1933	128
60	Speech at Delhi	12 December	1933	129
61	Speech at Aligarh Muslim University	15 December	1933	131
62	Fascism and Communism	18 December	1933	133
63	To M.R. Masani	19 December	1933	135
64	To Trade Union Congress	23 December	1933	137
65	To J.T. Gwynn	27 December	1933	138
66	On the Municipalisation of Services	29 December	1933	139
67	To E. Raghava Reddi	12 January	1934	140
68	Message to All India Textile Workers Conference	28 January	1934	141
69	To A.H. Khan	2 February	1934	142

OFFICIAL REPRESSION

70	M.N. Roy	17 October	1933	143
71	Statement on Fyzabad Prisoners	26 October	1933	145
72	On the Ill treatment of Fyzabad Prisoners	8 November	1933	145

73	To the Superintendent, District Jail, Allahabad	31 December	1933	147
74	To Purnima Banerji	11 January	1934	149
75	Earthquakes—Natural and Political	31 January	1934	151

THE COMMUNAL PROBLEM

76	To Mohammad Alam	29 October	1933	156
77	The Hindu Mahasabha and Communalism	12 November	1933	157
78	On His Criticism of the Hindu Mahasabha	21 November	1933	158
79	To Bhai Parmanand	26 November	1933	160
80	Hindu and Muslim Communalism	27 November	1933	161
81	To Mridula Sarabhai	1 December	1933	171
82	To S.A. Brelvi	3 December	1933	172
83	A Reply to Sir Mohammad Iqbal	11 December	1933	173
84	Statement to the Press	16 December	1933	179
85	Reality and Myth	5 January	1934	180

THE BIHAR EARTHQUAKE

86	Appeal for Relief	19 January	1934	186
87	A Report on Muzaffarpur	24 January	1934	186
88	Appeal for Contributions	24 January	1934	190
89	Advice on Contributions	29 January	1934	191
90	The Organization of the Allahabad Relief Fund	31 January	1934	192
91	On Conditions in Sitamarhi	6 February	1934	193
92	Conditions in North Bihar and Monghyr	10 February	1934	195
93	The Inefficiency of Official Relief	12 February	1934	196

MISCELLANEOUS

94	On the Understanding of History	8 October	1933	199

95	On the Death of Vithalbhai Patel	24 October	1933	201
96	To Mahatma Gandhi	27 October	1933	201
97	To Bharati Sarabhai	28 October	1933	203
98	To E.G. Nair	9 November	1933	204
99	To Gangadharrao Deshpande	9 November	1933	205
100	On Hindi Literature	12 November	1933	205
101	To Indira Nehru	14 November	1933	206
102	To Horace Alexander	20 November	1933	208
103	Rammohan Roy	23 November	1933	210
104	To Syed Mahmud	24 November	1933	211
105	To C.K. Narayanaswami	2 December	1933	212
106	To Indira Nehru	16 December	1933	213
107	To Vijayalakshmi Pandit	25 December	1933	213
108	To Indira Nehru	1 January	1934	214
109	To Syed Mahmud	4 January	1934	214
110	To Indira Nehru	12 January	1934	215
111	To Indira Nehru	19 January	1934	216
112	Address to the Prayag Mahila Vidyapitha	20 January	1934	217
113	To Krishna Hutheesing	21 January	1934	221
114	To Indira Nehru	25 January	1934	222
115	To Indira Nehru	29 January	1934	223
116	Five Months and Thirteen Days—166 days		1934	223

3. Prison Diary with Letters
12 February 1934—12 August 1934

Prison Diary with Letters 227

4. On Parole
12 August 1934—23 August 1934

1	To Mahatma Gandhi	13 August	1934	277
2	Statement to the Press	18 August	1934	283

3	To Jairamdas Doulatram	19 August	1934	284
4	To Sampurnanand	22 August	1934	285

5. Prison Diary with Letters
23 August 1934—3 September 1935

Prison Diary with Letters 289

6. Articles Written in Prison

1	Foreword to Rajatarangini	28 June	1934	431
2	The Past and the Present	August	1934	434
3	Our Literature	28 July	1935	439
4	Literature in Hindi and in Other Languages	29 July	1935	442
5	The Meaning of Words	1 August	1935	445
6	Bhai Parmanand and Swaraj	6 August	1935	450
7	Two Mosques	7 August	1935	456
8	Quetta	19 August	1935	462
9	The Solidarity of Islam	20 August	1935	468
10	His Highness the Aga Khan	21 August	1935	470
11	Orthodox of All Religions, United	23 August	1935	474
12	The Mind of a Judge	1 September	1935	479

Appendix

1	To S. Srinivasa Iyengar	20 November	1926	491
2	To Indira Nehru	23 January	1933	496
3	To Indira Nehru	7 February	1933	498
4	To Indira Nehru	21 February	1933	500
5	To Indira Nehru	2 May	1933	502
6	To Indira Nehru	16 May	1933	503
7	To Indira Nehru	1 August	1933	506

ILLUSTRATIONS

Probably the last photograph taken with Kamala frontispiece

Addressing a meeting at Banaras, November, 1933

Earthquake relief operation in Muzaffarpur, Bihar, 22 January 1934 between pp. 160—161

The Bihar earthquake: photograph taken by Jawaharlal

The Bihar earthquake; photograph taken by Jawaharlal 208—209

Talking to students at Santiniketan, January, 1934

A page from the jail diary 352—353

1

WHITHER INDIA?

1. Whither India?[1]

The newcomer from prison has long been cut off from the rough and tumble of life and politics, and yet he has a certain advantage on his side. He can take a more detached view; he is not so much wrapped up in the controversies of the moment; he may be able to stress principles when others argue about petty tactics; he may actually see the realities under the surface of ever-changing phenomena.

Many people ask: What are we to do? The mouths of most of those who could answer, or help in framing the answer, are shut either in prison or outside. But free advice, often accompanied by threats, comes to us in an unending stream from those who rule us and their faithful followers in this land. They warn us and threaten us and cajole us and offer us good advice by turns, anxious to influence us and yet uncertain of the right approach to us. Let us leave them and their advice for the moment; such gifts, even when free, are apt to be suspect.

Right action cannot come out of nothing; it must be preceded by thought. Thought which is not meant to lead to action has been called an abortion; action which is not based on thought is chaos and confusion. It is worthwhile therefore to clear our minds of all the tangled webs that may have grown there, to forget for the moment the immediate problems before us, the difficult knots we have to unravel, the day to day worries, and go back a little to basic facts and principles. What exactly do we want? And why do we want it?

I write with diffidence because I have for long been cut off from the nationalist press, but I have a feeling that little attention is paid to these basic facts and principles. The censorship may be partly to blame for this, or the fear of it, but even that, I think, is not a sufficient explanation. Attention seems to be concentrated on the most trivial of issues and vital matters are ignored. Should Gandhiji see the Viceroy or not?[2] Will Stanley Baldwin triumph over Winston Churchill?[3]

1. Published as a series of articles in the Indian press on 9, 10 and 11 October 1933 and later reprinted as a pamphlet along with post items, 3 and 4.
2. After his release, Mahatma Gandhi said that he desired to meet the Viceroy 'to explore avenues of peace'.
3. Churchill was a strong critic of Baldwin's India policy and this became an issue in the contest for leadership in the Conservative Party.

What has Sir Samuel Hoare said or not said?[4] Are we going to get that wonderful thing called "Central Responsibility" or not? Hardly a reference to what we are driving at, hardly a thought of real issues.

Never in the long range of history has the world been in such a state of flux as it is today. Never has there been so much anxious questioning, so much doubt and bewilderment, so much examining of old institutions, existing ills and suggested remedies. There is a continuous process of change and revolution going on all over the world, and everywhere anxious statesmen are almost at their wits' end and grope about in the dark. It is obvious that we are a part of this great world problem and must be affected by world events. And yet, judging from the attention paid to these events in India, one would not think so. Major events are recorded in the news columns of papers but little attempt is made to see behind and beneath them, to understand the forces that are shaking and reforming the world before our eyes, to comprehend the essential nature of social, economic and political reality. History, whether past or present, becomes just a magic show with little rhyme or reason, and with no lesson for us which might guide our future path. On the gaily-decked official stage of India or England phantom figures come and go, posing for a while as great statesmen; Round Tablers flit about like pale shadows of those who created them, engaged in pitiful and interminable talk which interests few and affects an even smaller number. Their main concern is how to save the vested interests of various classes or groups; their main diversion, apart from feasting, is self-praise. Others, blissfully ignorant of all that has happened in the last half a century, still talk the jargon of the Victorian Age and are surprised and resentful that nobody listens to them. Even the nasmyth hammer of war and revolution and world change has failed to produce the slightest dent on their remarkably hard heads. Yet others hide vested interests under cover of communalism or even nationalism. And then there is the vague but passionate nationalism of many who find present conditions intolerable and hunger for national freedom without clearly realising what form that freedom will take. And there are also here, as in many other countries, the usual accompaniments of a growing nationalism—an idealism, a mysticism, a feeling of exaltation, a belief in the mission of one's country, and something of the nature of religious revivalism. Essentially all these are middle class phenomena.

4 The Secretary of State for India, Sir Samuel Hoare, said in the House of Commons that the government had no intention of negotiating with the Congress. He added, "...I repeat that there can be no question of making a bargain with the Congress as a condition for their accepting the ordinary obligations of law abiding citizens."

Our politics must either be those of magic or of science. The former of course requires no argument or logic; the latter is in theory at least entirely based on clarity of thought and reasoning and has no room for vague idealistic or religious or sentimental processes which confuse and befog the mind. Personally, I have no faith in or use for the ways of magic and religion and I can only consider the question on scientific grounds.

What then are we driving at? Freedom? Swaraj? Independence?. Dominion Status? Words which may mean much or little or nothing at all. Egypt is 'independent' and yet, as everybody knows, it is at present little better than an Indian state, an autocracy imposed upon an unwilling people and propped up by the British. Economically, Egypt is a colony of some of the European imperialist Powers, notably the British Ever since the World War there has been continuous conflict between Egyptian nationalism and the ruling authorities and this continues today. So in spite of a so-called 'independence' Egypt is very far from even national freedom.

Again, whose freedom are we particularly striving for, for nationalism covers many sins and includes many a conflicting element? There is the feudal India of the princes, the India of the big zamindars, or small zamindars, of the professional classes, of the agriculturists, of the industrialists, of the bankers, of the lower middle class, of the workers. There are the interests of foreign capital and those of home capital, of foreign services and home services. The nationalist answer is to prefer home interests to foreign interests but beyond that it does not go. It tries to avoid disturbing the class divisions or the social status quo. It imagines that the various interests will somehow be accommodated when the country is free. Being essentially a middle class movement, nationalism works chiefly in the interests of that class. It is obvious that there are serious conflicts between various interests, in a country, and every law, every policy which is good for one interest may be harmful for another. What is good for the Indian prince may be thoroughly bad for the people of his state, what is profitable for the zamindar may ruin many of his tenants, what is demanded by foreign capital may crush the rising industries of the country.

Nothing is more absurd than to imagine that all the interests in the nation can be fitted in without injury to any. At every step some have to be sacrificed for others. A currency policy may be good for creditors or debtors, not for both at the same time. Inflation, resulting in a reduction or even wiping off of debts, will be welcomed by all debtors and by industry as a rule, but cursed by bankers and those who have fixed incomes. Early in the nineteenth century, England deliberately sacrificed her agriculture for her rising industry. A few years ago, in 1923, by insisting on keeping the value of the pound sterling at par she sacrificed, to some extent, her industry to her banking and financial system, and faced industrial troubles and a huge general strike.[5]

Any number of such instances can be given, they deal with the rival claims of different groups of the possessing classes. A more vital conflict of interest arises between these possessing classes as a whole and the others; between the 'haves' and 'have-nots'. All this is obvious enough, but every effort is made to confuse the real issue by the holders of power, whether political or economic. The British Government is continually declaring before high heaven that they are trustees for our masses and India and England have common interests and can march hand in hand to a common destiny. Few people are taken in by this because nationalism makes us realise the inherent conflict between the two national interests. But nationalism does not make us realise the equally inherent and fundamental conflict between economic interests within the nation. There is an attempt to cover this up and avoid it on the ground that the national issue must be settled first. Appeals are issued for unity between different classes and groups to face the common national foe, and those who point out the inherent conflict between landlord and tenant, or capitalist and wage labourer are criticised

We may take it that the average person does not like conflict and continuous tension; he prefers peace and quiet, and is even prepared to sacrifice much for it. But the ostrich-like policy of refusing to see a conflict and a disorder which not only exist but are eating into society's vitals, to blind oneself to reality, will not end the conflict and the disorder or suddenly change reality into unreality; for a politician or a man of action such a policy can only end in disaster. It is therefore essential that we keep this in mind and fashion our idea of freedom accordingly. We cannot escape having to answer the question, now or later: for the freedom of which class or classes in India are we especially striving for? Do we place the masses, the peasantry and the workers first, or some other small class at the head of our list? Let us give the benefits of freedom to as many groups and classes as possible, but essentially whom do we stand for, and when a conflict arises whose side must we take? To say that we shall not answer that question now is itself an answer and taking of sides, for it means that we stand by the existing order, the status quo.

5 After the war the British Government adopted a deflationary policy to protect the value of the pound sterling In 1923, the attempts of Baldwin's government to introduce a protective tariff to help British industries were foiled by the bankers and the financiers and this led to labour unrest and unemployment.

The form of government is after all a means to an end; even freedom itself is a means, the end being human well being, human growth, the end of poverty and disease and suffering and the opportunity for everyone to live the "good life", physically and mentally. What the "good life" is, is a matter we cannot go into here, but most people will agree that freedom is essential to it—national freedom so far as the nation is concerned, personal freedom so far as the individual is concerned. For every restriction and inhibition stops growth and development and produces, apart from economic disorders, complexes and perversions in the nation and individual. So freedom is necessary. Equally necessary is the will and the capacity for cooperation. Modern life grows so complex, there is so much interdependence, that cooperation is the very breath that keeps it functioning.

The long course of history shows us a succession of different forms of government and changing economic forms of production and organisation. The two fit in and shape and influence each other. When economic change goes ahead too fast and the forms of government remain more or less static, a hiatus occurs, which is usually bridged over by a sudden change called revolution. The tremendous importance of economic events in shaping history and forms of government is almost universally admitted now.

We are often told that there is a world of difference between the East and the West. The West is said to be materialistic, the East spiritual, religious etc. What exactly the East signifies is seldom indicated, for the East includes the Bedouins of the Arabian deserts, the Hindus of India, the nomads of the Siberian steppes, the pastoral tribes of Mongolia, the typically irreligious Confucians of China, and the Samurai of Japan. There are tremendous national and cultural differences between the different countries of Asia as well as of Europe; but there is no such thing as East and West except in the minds of those who wish to make this an excuse for imperialist domination, or those who have inherited such myths and fictions from a confused metaphysical past. Differences there are but they are chiefly due to different stages of economic growth.

We see, in north-western Europe, autocracy and feudalism giving place to the present capitalist order involving competition and large scale production. The old small holdings disappear; the feudal checks on the serfs and cultivators go, and these agriculturists are also deprived of the little land they had. Large numbers of landless people are thrown out of employment and they have no land to fall back upon. A landless, propertyless proletariat is thus created. At the same time the checks and the controlled prices of the limited market of feudal times disappear, and the open market appears. Ultimately this leads to the world market, the characteristic feature of capitalism.

Capitalism builds up on the basis of the landless proletariat, which could be employed as wage labourers in the factories and the open market, where the machine-made goods could be sold. It grows rapidly and spreads all over the world. In the producing countries it was an active and living capitalism; in the colonial and consuming countries it was just a passive consumption of the goods made by machine industry in the West. North western Europe, and a little later, North America, exploit the resources of the world, they exploit Asia, Africa, East Europe and South America. They add vastly to the wealth of the world but this wealth is largely concentrated in a few nations and a few hands.

In this growth of capitalism, dominion over India was of vital importance to England. India's gold, in the early stages, helped in the further industrialisation of England. And then India became a great producer of raw material to feed the factories of England and a huge market to consume the goods made in these factories. England, in her passionate desire to accumulate wealth, sacrificed her agriculture to her industry. England became almost a kind of vast city and India the rural area attached to her.

The concentration of wealth in fewer hands went on. But the exploitation of India and other countries brought so much wealth to England that some of it trickled down to the working class and their standards of living rose Working class agitations were controlled and soothed by concessions from the capitalist owners, which they could well afford from the profits of imperialist exploitation. Wages rose; hours of work went down; there were insurance and other welfare schemes for the workers. A general prosperity in England took the edge off working class discontent.

In India, passive industrialisation meant an ever growing burden on land. She became just a consumer of foreign machine made goods. Her own cottage industries were partly destroyed forcibly, and partly by economic forces, and nothing took their place. All the ingredients and conditions for industrialisation were present, but England did not encourage this, and indeed tried to prevent it by taxing machinery.

And so the burden on the land grew and with it unemployment and poverty, and there was a progressive ruralisation of India.

But the process of history and economics cannot be stopped for long. Although general poverty was increasing, small groups accumulated some capital and wanted fields for investment. And so machine industry grew in India, partly with Indian capital, very much more so with foreign capital. Indian capital was largely dependent on foreign capital and, in particular, could be controlled by the foreign banking system. It is well known that the World War gave a great push to Indian industry and afterwards, for reasons of imperial policy, England changed her policy towards Indian industry and began to encourage it, but mostly with foreign capital. The growth of so-called swadeshi industries in India thus represented, to a very great extent, the increasing hold of British capital on India.

The growth of industries and nationalist movements in all the countries of the East checked Western exploitation and the profits of Western capitalism began to go down. War debts and other consequences of the war were a tremendous burden for all the countries concerned. There was not so much money or profits of industry to be distributed to the working class in the West, and the discontent and pressure of the workers grew. There was also the living incentive and inspiration of the Russian Revolution for the workers.

Meanwhile two other processes were working silently but with great rapidity. One was the concentration of wealth and industrial power in fewer hands by the formation of huge trusts, cartels, and combines. The other was a continuous improvement in technique in the methods of production, leading to greater mechanisation, far greater production, and more unemployment as workers were replaced by machinery. And this led to a curious result. Just when industry was producing goods on the biggest mass scale in history, there were few people to buy them as the great majority were too poor to be able to afford them. The armies of the unemployed were not earning anything, so how could they spend? And even the majority of those earning had little to spare. A new truth suddenly dawned on the perplexed minds of the great captains of industry (this dawning process has not yet taken place among the leaders of industry in India), and the truth was this: that mass production necessitates mass consumption. But if the masses have no money how are they to buy or consume? And what of production then? So production is stopped or restricted and the wheels of industry slow down till they barely move. Unemployment grows all the more and this again makes consumption diminish.

This is the crisis of capitalism which has had the world by the throat for over four years. Essentially it is due to the ill-distribution of the world's wealth, to its concentration in a few hands. And the disease seems to be of the essence of capitalism and grows with it till it eats and destroys the very system which created it. There is no lack of money in the world, no lack of food stuffs, or the many other things that man requires. The world is richer today than it has ever been and holds promise of untold advance in the near future. And yet the system breaks down and while millions starve and endure privation, huge quantities of food stuffs and other articles are destroyed, insect pests are let loose on the fields to destroy crops, harvests are not gathered, and nations meet together to confer how to restrict future crops of wheat and cotton and tea and coffee and so many other articles From the beginning of history man has fought with nature to get the barest necessities of life, and now that nature's wealth is poured out before him, enough to remove poverty forever from the world, his only way of dealing with it is to burn and destroy it, and become poorer and more destitute in the process.

History has never offered a more amazing paradox. It seems clear enough that the capitalist system of industry, whatever its services in the past may have been, is no longer suited to the present methods of production. Technical advance has gone far ahead of the existing social structure and, as in the past, this hiatus causes most of our present-day disorders. Till that lag is made up and a new system in keeping with the new technique is adopted, the disorders are likely to continue. The change-over to the new system is of course opposed by those who have vested interests in the old system and though this old system is dying before their eyes, they prefer to hold on to their little rather than share a lot with others.

It is not, fundamentally, a moral issue, as some people imagine, although there is a moral side to it. It is not a question of blaming capitalism or cursing capitalists and the like. Capitalism has been of the greatest service to the world and individual capitalists are but tiny wheels in the big machine. The question now is whether the capitalist system has not outlived its day and must now give place to a better and a saner ordering of human affairs, which is more in keeping with the progress of science and human knowledge.

In India, during this period, the tremendous burden on land continued and even increased, despite the growth of industry in certain areas. Economic discontent increased. The middle classes grew up, and finding no sufficient scope for self-development, demanded political changes and took to agitation. More or less similar causes worked all over the colonial and dependent East. Especially after the war, national movements grew rapidly in Egypt and most of the countries of Asia. These movements were essentially due to the distress of the masses and the lower middle classes. There was a strange similarity even in the methods employed by these movements—noncooperation, boycotts of legislatures, boycotts of goods, hartals, strikes, etc. Occasionally there were violent outbreaks, as in Egypt and Syria, but stress was laid far more on peaceful methods. In India, of course, nonviolence was made a basic principle by the Congress at the suggestion of Gandhiji. All these national struggles for freedom have continued till now and they are bound to continue till a solution of the basic problem is found. Fundamentally, this solution is not merely a question of satisfying the natural desire for self-rule but one of filling hungry stomachs.

The great revolutionary nationalist urge in Asia of the after-war years gradually exhausted itself for the time being and conditions stabilised themselves. In India this took the form of the Swarajist entry into the Assembly and the Councils. In Europe also the middle nineteen-twenties was a period of settling down and adaptation to the new conditions created by the World War. The revolution that had hovered all over Europe in 1919 and 1920 failed to come off and receded into the background. American gold poured into Europe and revived to some extent the war-weary and disillusioned peoples of that continent and created a false appearance of prosperity. But this prosperity had no real basis and the crash came in 1929 when the United States of America stopped lending money to Europe and South America. Many factors, and especially the inherent conflicts of a declining capitalism, contributed to this crash, and the house of cards of after war capitalist prosperity began to tumble down. That process of tumbling down has been going on at a tremendous pace for four years and there is no end to it yet. It is called the slump, trade depression, the crisis, etc., but it is really the evening of the capitalist system and the world is being compelled by circumstances to recognise this. International cooperation has failed, the world market which was the essential basis of capitalism is disappearing, and each nation is trying frantically to shift for itself at the cost of others. Whatever the future may bring, one thing is certain: that the old order has gone and all the king's horses and all the king's men will not set it up again.

As the old capitalist order has tottered, the challenge to it by the growing forces of labour has grown more intense. This challenge, when it has become dangerous, has induced the possessing classes to sink their petty differences and band themselves together to fight the common foe. This has led to fascism and, in its milder forms, to the formation of so-called national governments. Essentially, these are the last ditch efforts of the possessing classes, or the "kept classes" as they have been called by an American economist, to hold on to what they have. The struggle becomes more intense and the forms of nineteenth century democracy are discarded. But fascism or national governments offer no solution to the fundamental economic inconsistencies of the present-day capitalist system and so long as they do not remove the inequalities of wealth and solve the problem of distribution, they are doomed to fail. Of the major capitalist countries the United States of America is the only place where some attempt is being made today towards lessening, to a slight extent, inequalities of wealth by state action. Carried to a logical conclusion, President Roosevelt's programme[6] will lead to a form of state socialism; it is far more likely that the effort will fail and result in fascism. England, as is her habit, is grimly muddling through and waiting for something to happen. Meanwhile she has derived considerable help from India's gold resources. But all this is temporary relief only and the nations slide downhill and approach the brink.

Thus, if we survey the world today, we find that capitalism, having solved the problem of production, helplessly faces the allied problem of distribution and is unable to solve it. It was not in the nature of the capitalist system to deal satisfactorily with distribution, and production alone makes the world top-heavy and unbalanced. To find a solution for distributing wealth and purchasing power evenly is to put an end to the basic inequalities of the capitalist system and to replace capitalism itself by a more scientific system.

Capitalism has led to imperialism and to the conflicts of imperialist Powers in search for colonial areas for exploitation, for areas of raw produce and for markets for manufactured goods. It has led to ever increasing conflicts with the rising nationalism of colonial countries, and to social conflicts with powerful movements of the exploited working class. It has resulted in recurrent crises, political and economic, leading to economic and tariff wars as well as political wars on an enormous scale. Every subsequent crisis is on a bigger scale than the previous one, and now we live in a perpetual state of crisis and slump and the shadow of war darkens the horizon.

And yet it is well to remember that the world today has a surfeit of food and the other good things of life. Terrible want exists because the present system does not know how to distribute them. Repeated international conferences have failed to find a way out because they represented the interests of vested interests and dared not touch the system itself. They grope blindly in the dark in their stuffy rooms while the foundations of the house they built are being sapped by the advance of science and economic events. Everywhere thinkers have recognised the utter inadequacy of the existing system, though they have differed as to the remedies. Communists and socialists point with confidence to the way of socialism and they are an ever growing power for they have science and logic on their side. In America a great stir was caused recently by the technocrats, a group of engineers who want to do away with money itself and to substitute for it a unit of energy, an erg. In England the social credit theories of Major Douglas,[7] according to which the whole production of the nation will be evenly distributed to the whole population—a kind of "dividends for all"—find increasing acceptance. Barter takes the place of trade both in the domestic and the international market. The growth of these revolutionary theories even among the well-to-do classes, and especially the intellectuals, is in itself an indication of the tremendous change in the mentality that is taking place in the world. How many of us can conceive a world without money and with the invisible erg as its measure of value? And yet this is soberly and earnestly advocated not by wild agitators but by well known economists and engineers.

6 Franklin Delano Roosevelt (1882-1945), Democrat President of the U.S.A., 1933-45. The New Deal programme tried to increase production, create employment and stabilise prices.

This is the world background.

The Asiatic background is intimately related to this and yet it has its peculiar features. Asia is the main field of conflict between nationalism and imperialism. Asia is still undeveloped as compared to Europe and North America. It has a vast population which can consume goods if they had the necessary purchasing power to do so. To the hard pressed imperialist Powers seeking frantically for areas of economic expansion, Asia still offers a field, though nationalism offers many obstructions. Hence the talk of a "push to Asia" to find an outlet for the surplus goods of the West and thus stabilise Western capitalism for another period. Capitalism is a young and growing force in the East; it has not, as in India, wholly overthrown feudalism yet. But even before capitalism had established itself, other forces, inimical to it, have risen

7. Clifford Hugh Douglas (1879-1952), British engineer and social economist who formulated the theory of social credit. This held that economic depressions were caused by maldistribution due to insufficient purchasing power. It proposed the redistribution of purchasing power by issuing dividends to every citizen to challenge it. And it is obvious that if capitalism collapses in Europe and America it cannot survive in Asia.

Nationalism is still the strongest force in Asia (we can ignore for our present purpose the Soviet territories of Asia). This is natural as a country under alien domination must inevitably think first in terms of nationalism. But the powerful economic forces working for change in the world today have influenced this nationalism to an ever increasing extent and everywhere it is appearing in socialist garb. Gradually the nationalist struggle for political freedom is becoming a social struggle also for economic freedom. Independence and the socialist state become the objectives, with varying degrees of stress being laid on the two aspects of the problem. As political freedom is delayed, the other aspect assumes greater importance, and it now seems probable, especially because of world conditions, that political and social emancipation will come together to some at least of the countries of Asia.

This is the Asiatic background.

In India, as in other Asiatic colonial countries, we find a struggle today between the old nationalist ideology and the new economic ideology. Most of us have grown up under the nationalist tradition and it is hard to give up the mental habits of a lifetime. And yet we realise that this outlook is inadequate, it does not fit in with existing conditions in our country or in the world; there is a hiatus, a lag. We try to bridge this hiatus but the process of crossing over to a new ideology is always a painful one. Many of us are confused and perplexed today because of this. But the crossing has to be made, unless we are to remain in a stagnant backwater, overwhelmed from time to time by the wash of the boats that move down the river of progress. We must realise that the nineteenth century cannot solve the problems of the twentieth, much less can the seventh century or earlier ages do so.

Having glanced at the general background of Asia and the world we can have a clearer view of our own national problem. India's freedom affects each one of us intimately and we are apt to look upon it as a thing apart and unconnected with world events. But the Indian problem is a part of the Asiatic problem and is tied up with the problems of the world. We cannot, even if we will it, separate it from the rest. What happens in India will affect the world and world events will change India's future. Indeed it may be said that the three great world problems today are: the fate of capitalism, which means the fate of Europe and America, the future of India, and the future of China, and all these are interrelated.

India's struggle today is part of the great struggle which is going on all over the world for the emancipation of the oppressed. Essentially, this is an economic struggle, with hunger and want as its driving forces, although it puts on nationalist and other dresses.

Indian freedom is necessary because the burden on the Indian masses as well as the middle classes is too heavy to be borne and must be lightened or done away with. The measure of freedom is the extent to which this burden is removed. This burden is due to the vested interests of a foreign government as well as those of certain groups and classes in India and abroad. The achievement of freedom thus becomes a question, as Gandhiji said recently, of divesting vested interests.[8] If an indigenous government took the place of the foreign government and kept all the vested interests intact, this would not even be the shadow of freedom.

We have got into an extraordinary habit of thinking of freedom in terms of paper constitutions. Nothing could be more absurd than this lawyer's mentality which ignores life and the vital economic issues and can only proceed on the basis of the status quo and precedents. Too much reliance on past practice has somehow succeeded in twisting the lawyer's head backwards and he seems to be incapable of looking ahead. Even the halt and the lame go slowly forward, not so the lawyer who is convinced, like the fanatic in religion, that truth can only lie in the past.

The Round Table scheme is almost as dead as Queen Anne and hardly deserves notice. It was not meant to give an iota of freedom to the Indian people; it sought to win over certain Indian vested interests to the British side and in this it succeeded. It answered, to the satisfaction of its votaries, the question I had formulated at the beginning of this essay: whose freedom are we striving for? It gave greater protection and assurance and freedom to the British vested interests in India. It was Home Rule for the Viceroy as Mr. Vithalbhai Patel said. It confirmed the interests of British capital and British services and, in some cases, gave them even more than they have now. It tried to perpetuate the alien military occupation of India. Further, it gave greater freedom and importance to the vested interests of the princes and the semi-feudal magnates. In brief, the whole scheme was meant for the protection and perpetuation of the numerous vested interests that exploit the Indian masses. Having done this useful and, to themselves, profitable piece of work, the originators of the scheme told us that autonomy was a costly affair and would mean the expenditure of many millions for each province! Thus not only were all the old burdens on the masses to be continued but many new ones were to be added. This was the ingenious solution discovered by the wise and learned men who foregathered at the Round Table Conference. Intent on protecting their class privileges they happened to forget an odd three hundred and fifty million people in India.

8 In his letter of 14 September 1933, Mahatma Gandhi wrote to Jawaharlal, "I am also in whole-hearted agreement with you, when you say that without a material revision of the vested interests the condition of the masses can never be improved."

Even a child in politics can point out the folly of this procedure. The whole basis and urge of the national movement came from a desire for economic betterment, to throw off the burdens that crushed the masses and to end the exploitation of the Indian people. If these burdens continue and are actually added to, it does not require a powerful mind to realise that the fight must not only continue but grow more intense. Leaders and individuals may come and go; and they may get tired and slacken off; they may compromise or betray; but the exploited and suffering masses must carry on the struggle for their drill-sergeant is hunger. Swaraj or freedom from exploitation for them is not a fine paper constitution or a problem of the hereafter. It is a question of the here and now, of immediate relief. Roast lamb and mint sauce may be a tasty dish for those who eat it but the poor lamb is not likely to appreciate the force of the best of arguments which point out the beauty of sacrifice for the good of the elect and the joys of close communion, even though dead, with mint sauce.

India's immediate goal can therefore only be considered in terms of the ending of exploitation of her people. Politically, it must mean independence and the severance of the British connection, which means imperialist dominion; economically and socially it must mean the ending of all special class privileges and vested interests. The whole world is struggling to this end, India can do no less, and in this way the Indian struggle for freedom lines up with the world struggle. Is our aim human welfare or the preservation of class privileges and the vested interests of pampered groups? The question must be answered clearly and unequivocally by each one of us. There is no room for quibbling when the fate of nations and millions of human beings is at stake The day for palace intrigues and parlour politics and pacts and compromises passes when the masses enter politics. Their manners are not those of the drawing room, we never took the trouble to teach them any manners. Their school is the school of events and suffering is their teacher. They learn their politics from great movements which bring out the true nature of individuals and classes, and the civil disobedience movement has taught the Indian masses many a lesson which they will never forget.

Independence is a much abused word and it hardly connotes what we are driving at. And yet there is no other suitable word and, for want of a better, we must use it. National isolation is neither a desirable nor a possible idea in a world which is daily becoming more of a unit. International and intra national activities dominate the world and nations are growing more and more interdependent. Our ideal and objective cannot go against this historical tendency and we must be prepared to discard a narrow nationalism in favour of world cooperation and real internationalism. Independence therefore cannot mean for us isolation but freedom from all imperialist control, and because Britain today represents imperialism, our freedom can only come after the British connection is severed. We have no quarrel with the British people, but between British imperialism and Indian freedom there is no meeting ground and there can be no peace. If imperialism goes from Britain we shall gladly cooperate with her in the wider international field, not otherwise.

British statesmen of the Liberal and Labour variety often point out to us the ills of a narrow nationalism and dwell on the virtues of what used to be known as the British Empire and is now euphemistically called the British Commonwealth of Nations. Under cover of fine and radical words and phrases they seek to hide the ugly and brutal face of imperialism and try to keep us in its embrace of death. Some Indian public men, who ought to know better, also praise the virtues of internationalism, meaning thereby the British Empire, and tell us in sorrow how narrow minded we are in demanding independence, in place of that wonderful thing (which nobody offers us) Dominion Status. The British, it is well known, have a remarkable capacity for combining their moral instincts with their self interest. That is perhaps not un natural, but it is remarkable how some of our own countrymen are taken in by this unctuous and hypocritical attitude. Even the light of day is wasted on those who keep their eyes shut. It is worth noting however that the foreign policy of England has been the greatest stumbling block to international cooperation through the League of Nations or otherwise. All the European and American world knows this but most of us, who look at foreign politics through English spectacles, have not grasped this fact yet. Disarmament, air bombing, the attitude to the Manchurian question,* are some of the recent 9 Japanese troops, guarding the South Manchurian Railway in accordance with treaty rights, used an explosion on the railway as an excuse for seizing the city of Mukden (18 September 1931) Within five months, despite the condemnation of the Great Powers and in defiance of the League of Nations, the Japanese had established control over the whole of Manchuria.

witnesses to England's attitude. Even the Kellogg Briand Pact of Paris, which was to have outlawed war, was only accepted by England subject to certain qualifications and reservations regarding her empire, which effectively nullified the pact. The British Empire and real internationalism are as the poles apart and it is not through that empire that we can march to internationalism.

The real question before us, and before the whole world, is one of fundamental change of regime, politically, economically, socially. Only thus can we put India on the road to progress and stop the progressive deterioration of our country. In a revolutionary period, such as exists in the world today, it is foolish waste of energy to think and act in terms of carrying on the existing regime and trying to reform it and improve it. To do so is to waste the opportunity which history offers once in a long while. "The whole world is in revolution" says Mussolini. "Events themselves are a tremendous force pushing us on like some implacable will." Individuals, however eminent, play but a minor role when the world is on the move. They may divert the main current here and there to some slight extent; they may not and cannot stop the rushing torrent. And therefore the only peace that can endure is with circumstances, not merely with men.

Whither India? Surely to the great human goal of social and economic equality, to the ending of all exploitation of nation by nation and class by class, to national freedom within the framework of an international cooperative socialist world federation. This is not such an empty idealist dream as some people imagine. It is within the range of the practical politics of today and the near future. We may not have it within our grasp but those with vision can see it emerging on the horizon. And even if there be delay in the realisation of our goal, what does it matter if our steps march in the right direction and our eyes look steadily in front. For in the pursuit itself of a mighty purpose there is joy and happiness and a measure of achievement. As Bernard Shaw has said: "This is the true joy in life, the being used for a purpose recognised by yourself as a mighty one; the being thoroughly worn out before you are thrown on the scrap heap; the being a force of nature, instead of a feverish, selfish little clod of ailments and grievances, complaining that the world will not devote itself to making you happy."

2. To Charles Mascarenhas[1]

Allahabad
November 10, 1933

Dear Comrade,[2]

I have just received your letter. I would gladly have agreed to your publication of my articles entitled Whither India? But I have already given the publication rights to a firm here and they have issued them in pamphlet form. These articles are also coming out very soon in Hindi and Urdu and, a little later, probably in Bengali and Marathi. If you would care to bring them out in Gujarati you can do so.

I am sending you two copies of the pamphlet. Should you desire more, please communicate with Kitabistan, City Road, Allahabad. If you wish to have any considerable number of copies some special terms could be arranged with Kitabistan.

It was my desire to write some more articles partly to answer criticism and partly to continue the argument but I have had no time so far. Perhaps I may do so yet. But criticism on the whole has been singularly pointless. On the one side there is the purely nationalist criticism which does not even try to understand the argument; on the other side it is pointed out that I do not go far enough and that I avoid the implications of what I say. Further I am personally denounced for my contradictions. The critics forget that I write for an audience which is not used to these ideas and to technical terms. Further that I have to carry the audience and not merely to make a brave show. No doubt it is easy to find contradictions and most of us grow and develop their ideas. But many of my so-called contradictions are due to my dual capacity—the personal one in which I say exactly as I feel and the second one as General Secretary of the Congress. In the latter capacity I can at most express opinions which are not in conflict with Congress resolutions. I have felt and I still feel that it is worthwhile to carry the Congress as far as it will go. A time may come, sooner rather than later, when the new ideas may cause a split in the Congress. When that comes it will be faced. But till then I see no reason why I should isolate myself from the

1. J.N. Correspondence, NMML.
2. A follower of M N Roy; founder member of the Congress Socialist Party; expelled from the party in 1937 along with other supporters of Roy.

Congress and leave the organisation which has so much influence over people's minds in India to other people with a reactionary outlook.

With all good wishes for your work,

Yours fraternally,
Jawaharlal Nehru

3. Some Criticisms Considered[1]

My articles entitled Whither India? have had a mixed welcome. But they have amply justified the labour spent on them for they have directed the public mind to certain basic problems which are seldom considered in India, and have perhaps made some people think on novel lines. There have been two types of criticisms: the left criticism which accepted the main line of thought but said that it did not go far enough, and the right criticism which attacked the very premises of my argument and rejected with anger my conclusions. On both sides the personal element was brought in and my seeming contradictions and weaknesses were pointed out.

I had attempted to deal with the problem as impersonally and objectively as it was possible for me and I had hoped that it would be so considered Personalities count in politics but they should not intrude themselves when world problems and world forces are analysed and a meaning is sought to be drawn from them. It is therefore desirable that my many failings and deficiencies might be forgotten for a while for they do not affect these problems Personally I am not conscious of any glaring inconsistencies in my ideas or activities during the last thirteen years or so but no doubt I am a partial observer. It is perfectly true that I have grown mentally during this period and many a vague idea has taken shape and many a doubt has been removed. It is also true that as an active politician, having to face day to day problems, I have sometimes had to make compromises with life and the conditions that I found existing at a particular moment. But even so I am not aware of any betrayal of the ideal that drew me on or the principles I held.

1 Published in the Indian press, 21 November 1933.

I have not seen all the criticisms of my articles and even those that I have seen are too many to be dealt with here. I shall therefore confine my reply to two lengthy and anonymous criticisms—one by "G" which appeared in a number of newspapers in northern India[2] and the other entitled "Into the Pit..." which was published by The Pioneer. Both these deal with the problem from the extreme "right" point of view. I have already replied separately to the "left" criticism. Reading these two anonymous articles, I marvelled at the extreme ignorance of the writers of the accepted commonplaces of history and economics and modern thought, and the amazing confusion that existed in their heads. I am not vain enough to imagine that I shall succeed in illumining the dark corners of their brains or make them understand the most obvious and elementary facts. But I should like to inform them that there was nothing novel in my survey of history and present-day conditions, although to them it might have appeared strange enough; it was a repetition of what practically every thinker and intelligent writer of today says The conclusions drawn from this survey might differ, but the facts themselves are beyond dispute for all except those who have a horror of facts or an incapacity or unwillingness to see straight. The Statesman is no friend of communism or socialism. It has given me fair warning that if I carry on in the way I am doing I shall have to be suppressed.[3] And yet The Statesman said, after reading the first two of my articles: "With the Pandit's analysis of the problem we are largely in agreement, indeed substantially the same picture has often been presented in these columns." When, however, The Statesman saw my third article, in which an attempt was made to apply the conclusions it had largely accepted to India, it drew away in fear and anger.

I have been told that the "programme" I had laid down in my articles was wanting in clarity and details. As a matter of fact I had

2. 'G' in his criticism of 19 October 1933 questioned the very idea of classifying the people into two classes viz, 'haves' and 'have nots' and the methods adopted to remove the disparities between the two He contended that there were no conflicts among the classes, upper and lower middle class, zamindars and peasants, and the very thought of the existence of such conflicts was an illusion

3. On 13 October 1933 The Statesman commented: "He preaches the class war and the necessity of divesting them. .We may be quite sure that the propertied classes will be no more reconciled . .Once it is realised that a communist revolution is afoot, the answer to attempted revolution is always suppression by force."

laid down no programme at all, much less a detailed programme, although a certain programme would follow inevitably if my premises and argument were correct. I had merely endeavoured to trace the course of the historical development of capitalism and to point out how economic forces were dominating and changing the world. Both the criticisms I am dealing with have ignored this and have branched off into wholly irrelevant questions. What has the Gandhi-Irwin Pact to do with the subject I was considering? Soviet Russia, like King Charles' head, also seems to have become an obsession with the two anonymous critics and this nightmare has, I am afraid, seriously diminished their capacity for clear thought.

I have not defined "capitalist" or "capitalism", I am told, and, mortal sin, I have assumed the existence of British imperialism without proving it! I plead guilty to the charge and await sentence. Science is a revolutionary product (I agree) and must be avoided, and is not today's magic tomorrow's science? In any event my science is nescience leading straight "to a Soviet hell". "Into the Pit..." of this close reasoning let us for the moment leave the author of this rigmarole.

But "G" runs him close. In a "scientific" world we are told "the wife may be regarded as sheer luxury." History has been ransacked by him to show that "no example could be produced to prove that the lot of the masses has ever been improved by violent means." It would be interesting to find out where "G" derived his knowledge of history. Then we are given an insight into European politics by being told that Germany and Italy have adopted Bolshevik methods. We await enlightenment as to what these methods are. But to judge of the efficacy of these methods we must wait for another hundred years! It is some comfort to know that we are in a position to judge the effects of the French Revolution now.

It is a little difficult to say much about this ignorant jumble of crude ideas and prejudices. But we can draw this conclusion from it that when interests are at stake the mind and the intellect are forced into the background and passions hold the field. "There is nothing so passionate," says Yeats,[4] the Irish poet, "as a vested interest disguised as an intellectual conviction."

When the word "capitalism" is used intelligently it can mean only one thing: the economic system that has developed since the Industrial Revolution which began in England a century and half ago. It means industrial capitalism. To give a recent definition (by G.D.H. Cole[5]): Capitalism means the developed system of production for profit based on private ownership of the means of production. It makes fundamentally for scarcity and not abundance, though the capitalist is often led to seek ways of cheapening individual products. For it the making of profit is the end of production, and it necessarily treats wages as a cost to be kept down as low as possible, and therefore tends to restrict mass purchasing power.

4 William Butler Yeats (1865-1939); poet of Irish nationalism who was greatly influenced by Indian thought, friend of Rabindranath Tagore.

It is this system that we have to consider and not the merits of individual capitalists, some of whom according to "G", are even prepared to make a big sacrifice, but with a proviso attached. I endeavoured very briefly to trace in my previous articles the growth and decline of this system and to point out that it was breaking up today. This process of disruption, owing to economic causes, has nothing to do with the goodness or otherwise of capitalists or our own wishes in the matter. If the diagnosis is correct then the disease must have a speedy and a fatal end, however much some of us might desire a continuation of the present system.

The anonymous gentleman (or is it a lady?) from the 'Pit' appears to think that the French Revolution and the Russian Bolshevik Revolution were the same kind of phenomena and represent an identical or similar conflict between social forces. There could be no greater error. The French Revolution was a continuation on a more thorough and far-reaching scale of the English Revolution which cost Charles I his head and James II his crown, and which brought the middle classes to the seats of power. These middle class revolutions largely ended the feudal period when political power was an inherited privilege.

In England the process was not as thorough as in France and hence relics of feudalism still linger in England and there are more class distinctions, in England today than in almost any country of Europe or America. Napoleon carried on the work of the French Revolution and was instrumental in establishing the capitalist middle class regime all over western Europe. The whole of 19th century civilisation in Europe was based on the ideology of the French Revolution. This ideology in its turn derived from the ideas of Montesquieu, Voltaire,[6] Rousseau[7]

5. (1889 1959); British economist and social theorist; member of the Labour Party; wrote a large number of books including History of Socialist Thought in six volumes.
6. (1694 1778); the great French philosopher and author of Candide.
7. Jean Jacques Rousseau (1712 1778); author of Social Contract.

and the Encyclopaedists[8], that is to say from the period before the Industrial Revolution. This ideology, with its slogan of political liberty, equality and fraternity, became completely out of date with the growth of industrial capitalism.

Political liberty brought the vote but it was gradually discovered that this was of little use when there was so much economic inequality. A starving man could do little with his vote and could be easily coerced and exploited. This gave rise to new theories and ideas based on the economic relations of various groups, and socialism saw the light of day. A vague and idealistic socialism developed later into the scientific socialism of Karl Marx. The Russian Revolution was the direct product and justification of the Marxist theory—the first revolution of March 1917 being a middle class turn-over, the second one, in November 1917, a proletarian victory.

The French Revolution was based on the idea of the sacredness of private property. The writer in The Pioneer does not seem to approve of the sans-culottes.[9] Perhaps it will surprise him to learn that they fought for the Declaration of the Rights of Man which in Article 17 declared: "La propriete etant un droit inviolable et sacre, nul ne peut etre prive de ses proprietes...."[10]

It became evident, however, during the 19th century, that a theoretical equality before the law or the possession of a vote did not bring real equality. Economic inequality, the maldistribution of wealth, which capitalism progressively increased, made equality impossible of attainment; and exploitation of man by man and group by group increased. Thinkers therefore came to the conclusion that economic equality should be aimed at and at the root of this was the control of the means of production by society as a whole and the severe restriction of private property.

No one has said, as The Pioneer article seems to imagine, that all men are physically or mentally equal, or that all nations are similarly situated. What has been said, and what is admitted by the great majority of intelligent men, is that all human beings should have an

8 The authors of the French Encyclopaedia edited by Diderot and published during 1751 1772 They included Montesquieu, Voltaire, Rousseau, Quesnay, D'Alembert and others

9 Term applied to the lower classes in France during the French Revolution. (The name derived from the fact that these people wore long trousers instead of knee breeches—culottes).

10 Property being an inviolable and sacred right, no one can be deprived of his property.

equality of opportunity. The present capitalist system does not and cannot in the nature of things provide this equality of opportunity.

The famous 19th century saying about "government of the people, by the people and for the people" failed to materialise in practice because under the capitalist system the government was neither by the people nor for the people. It was a government by the possessing classes for their own benefit. The people, according to them, were themselves; all others were in the outer darkness. A real government by the people and for the people can only be established when the masses hold power, that is under socialism when all the people really share in the government and the wealth of the country.

The Pioneer writer informs us that if the State becomes the sole capitalist then the lot of the workers will be worst of all because the State will exploit them mercilessly. This is a remarkable argument. What is the State under socialism and who benefits by the exploitation? If the people as a whole choose to exploit themselves they are perfectly welcome to do so, but even so the benefits go to them as a whole and not to selected groups or individuals.

Where will the surplus go, he further asks in an agony of apprehension? He cannot get out of the old rut of thinking along the lines of the capitalist economics of scarcity. There will be no surplus in a properly ordered and planned society and whatever is produced will go towards raising the standard of living of the people. Certainly, a man should be allowed the fruits of his labour. It is because these fruits are forcibly taken away from him under the capitalist system that we object to that system. Only under socialism will he have the full enjoyment of these fruits of his toil.

It is perfectly true that there can be no perfect freedom for an individual or nation when there is cooperation or interdependence with others. Every form of social life involves a restriction of individual freedom. But it is the merest quibbling to say that there can be no such thing as national freedom within the framework of an international socialist federation. When a measure of national freedom is given up willingly for the purposes of international cooperation this is not usually considered as a loss of freedom for the individual or the group. Is Wales less free because it forms part of Great Britain?

"G" tells us that the "very idea that the interests of the upper and middle classes conflict with those of the peasantry and the workers seems to be untenable." And yet, strange to say, this untenable idea is held by almost every thinker or intelligent person in the West where a great deal of thought has been given to this subject. If he will study a little history or any modern book on the subject it may help him to clear up his ideas. Or it might even be helpful to visit a factory to find out what the owners and the workers think about each other's interests.

Both the critics seem to be greatly interested in my views on non-violence. Am I for coercion or conversion? "G" seems to thunder out, and he tells me, quoting Gandhiji as his authority, that the method alone is the deciding factor. I was not aware that Gandhiji had made any such one sided statement although he has always laid stress on the methods to be employed.

None of these questions arise from my articles for I had dealt only with a historical process and the ideal to be aimed at. I had not referred to any methods. But it is desirable none the less to answer the questions.

However important the method may be I entirely fail to understand how it can take the place of the objective. It is essential to have the objective and know the direction before a single step can be taken. As for the method, I might clear the ground by saying that, so far as I am concerned, it does not consist of preaching religion or philanthropy. I have no use for either and I have often found that they cover the rankest hypocrisy and selfishness. I certainly believe in ethics and morality and truthfulness and many other virtues but my belief in them does not turn them into methods; they can only be attributes of a method.

Coercion or conversion? What is the whole principle of the State based on? And the present social system? Is not coercion and enforced conformity the very basis of both? Army, police, laws, prisons, taxes are all methods of coercion. The zamindar who realises rent and often many illegal cesses relies on coercion, not on conversion of the tenant. The factory owner who gives starvation wages does not rely on conversion. Hunger and the organised forces of the State are the coercive processes employed by both. Is a lock-out or an attempt to reduce wages a method of conversion? It is well to realise that those who belong to the favoured and possessing classes retain these positions by methods of coercion alone and it does not lie in their mouths to talk of conversion. The principal moral argument against the present system and in favour of socialism is that the latter reduces the element of coercion and will, it is hoped, ultimately do away with it altogether.

How are we to change over to a new system based on cooperation? And how are we to divest vested interests? We are told by The Pioneer writer, and I think rightly, that the capitalist will not "tamely submit to be robbed of his wealth, or vested interests tamely submit to be divested" History also shows us that there is no instance of a privileged class or group or nation giving up its special privileges or interests willingly. Individuals have done so often enough but not a group. Always a measure of coercion has been applied, pressure has been brought to bear, or conditions have been created which make it impossible or unprofitable for vested interests to carry on. And then the enforced conversion takes place. The methods of this enforcement may be brutal or civilized.

I have no doubt that coercion or pressure is necessary to bring about political and social change in India. Indeed our nonviolent mass movements of the past thirteen years have been powerful weapons to exercise this pressure. Undoubtedly they convert stray individuals from the opposing group and partly weaken the resistance of that group by removing the moral justification for domination and repression. But essentially they are processes to coerce the opposing nation or group.

It is perfectly true that this method of coercion is the most civilized and moral method and it avoids as far as possible the unpleasant reactions and consequences of violence. I think that it does offer a moral equivalent for violent warfare and, if civilization does not collapse, it will gradually adopt this peaceful method of settling its disputes. But it seems to me a fact that cannot be disputed or challenged that a nonviolent mass struggle coerces and is meant to coerce the other party. The boycott of goods is an obvious instance.

Personally I have accepted the nonviolent method because not only did it appeal to me in theory but it seemed to be peculiarly suited to present conditions in India. That belief has grown in me. But I have made it clear on many occasions that nonviolence is no infallible creed with me and although I greatly prefer it to violence, I prefer freedom with violence to subjection with nonviolence. That choice does not arise for me today because I believe that for a long time to come our most effective methods must be nonviolent. I might add that I do not look upon nonviolent noncooperation or civil disobedience as a negative and passive method, a kind of pious and static pacifism, but as an active, dynamic and forceful method of enforcing the mass will.

The question of violence or nonviolence may arise, and indeed is bound to arise, in another form after the conquest of the State power. There may be attempts to upset the new form of government by reactionary groups. Will "G" advise the new government to use the resources of the State to coerce these elements into submission or does he think that the religions and philanthropic argument should be used to convert them? Then again the new government may pass laws, which, carrying out the will of the great majority of the people, seek to divest privileged groups. Will "G" then advise these groups to submit to the majority opinion or to resist, and if the latter, how should their resistance be met?

There is one other subject on which I should like to touch and that is khaddar. I believe in industrialisation and the big machine and I should like to see factories spring up all over India. I want to increase the wealth of India and the standards of living of the Indian people and it seems to me that this can only be done by the application of science to industry resulting in large scale industrialisation. Quite apart from my own desires, I think that present-day conditions are bound to result in the progressive industrialisation of the country. And yet I support hand-spinning and khaddar under existing conditions in India

For me this has today an economic, a political and a social value. It fits in with the present peasant structure, brings them some relief and makes them self-reliant. It helps to bring us into touch with the peasant masses and to organise them to some extent. It is an effective political weapon in that it helps in the boycott of foreign cloth, and at the same time it acts as some check on the Indian mills, preventing them raising their prices too much. During the Great War foreign imports of cloth fell greatly and there was a cloth famine. Indian mill owners made vast profits by raising their prices and exploiting this more or less protected market. They will no doubt exploit every such opportunity.

But khaddar can now fill the gap during times of crisis and prevent this exploitation to a large extent There can be no doubt that khaddar has justified itself in some ways. At the same time it is equally true that it is an out-of-date form of production and it will not be possible, through it, to increase the wealth of the country greatly or raise the standard of living of the masses. Therefore, I think that the big machine must come and I am sure that khaddar will not prevent its coming. It may be that the big machine itself gets decentralised to a large extent in the course of the next few years. The enormous growth in the use of electric power has revolutionised world industry during the last thirty years and it will no doubt revolutionise it still further.

In conclusion may I assure the writer in The Pioneer that I have not the least desire to get England strafed. I have too much regard for many of the fine things that England has stood for to nurse any such wish and I believe that the great majority of the English people are themselves exploited by small groups. But I do believe that natural laws will speedily put an end to the British Empire and imperialism and capitalism and I wish to help in the process.

4. Further Criticisms Considered[1]

Some time back the Advocate of Bombay did me the honour of criticising my articles entitled Whither India? as well as some other statements of mine. I was unfortunately fully engaged at the time and could not explain my position further. But the criticisms have a certain wider importance and it is perhaps worthwhile to deal with some of them even at this late stage.

To begin with, it is well to bear in mind that news agencies and newspapers are functioning today in a peculiar way and live in continual fear of government displeasure. They seldom publish all the news sent to them and it is very unsafe to pass judgment on the incomplete data provided by them. To give an instance: the Advocate criticised me for not giving a clear opinion on what is called 'individual civil disobedience' and inferred, from an incomplete press account, that last month's conference of U.P. Congress workers held at Allahabad avoided this delicate subject. As a matter of fact I have expressed my opinion in favour of such civil disobedience clearly and rather aggressively in a number of public statements, and the Allahabad conference passed a detailed resolution on the subject also favouring individual civil disobedience and advising workers how to do it. This resolution (which was subsequently published in the Advocate) was quietly ignored by the news agencies and most newspapers.

Under the present circumstances I am wholly opposed to a withdrawal of civil disobedience because this inevitably means liquidating our present struggle and turning mass attention to some form of compromise with British imperialism. I think that under present conditions in India and the world this would be a betrayal of the cause. Small groups here and there who talk in terms of an advanced ideology will have little, if any, effect on the mass demoralization which will be produced by our abandoning the civil disobedience movement. We would then drift away from the current of world change, which grows more powerful day by day, and settle down in a stagnant backwater. The opportunities that may come our way will find us lacking and unprepared.

1. Published in the Indian press, 27 November 1933.

Even from the point of view of consolidating and preparing our organizations and position for a mass struggle, it seems to me to be folly to expect that a withdrawal of the civil disobedience movement will give us this opportunity, unless this consolidation means parlour talk and no action. Surely, the government will not willingly give us a chance of building up our strength and will pick out all our active and effective workers and try to disable them. This process of individual disablement, added to the loss of morale involved in a giving up of the present struggle, must result in utter mass demoralization and an inability to do anything effective for a considerable time. It is far easier to build up and consolidate our position and develop an ideology in course of a struggle than in the demoralized condition that follows an ending of it. Events teach the masses more than individual effort, and a struggle, whether national or social, produces these mighty teachers. But, of course, there must be right direction.

I am quite sure that the only alternative to a continuation of our present struggle is some measure of cooperation with imperialism. Individuals and groups here and there may talk bravely, but their talk will end in empty nothing so far as mass action is concerned. Personally I am not prepared, and there are many who think like me, for any such compromise, whatever happens. It is better for the cause, I am convinced, that we should carry on the fight and even be crushed to atoms—rather than that we should compromise with imperialism. But we have no intention of being crushed.

An ideology is presumed to lead to action and action on a mass scale. If such action is meant for the whole of India, the ideology cannot (except as the ultimate aim) ignore present-day objective facts and conditions all over the country. The question each one of us has to answer is this: Are we to prepare for some distant future struggle for a problematic freedom in the hereafter, or do we consider that objective conditions in the country and the world are such that the struggle is here and now, or in the near future, and we have to face it. If we adopt the latter answer, as I think we must, then we must carry on the struggle and try to shape it and try to develop a new ideology through it and in the course of it.

World events of the past decade or more have many lessons to teach us. There is the pitiful and miserable failure of social democracy in England, Germany and other countries. There is also failure to make good or to rouse the masses, in spite of suitable economic conditions, of the communist parties of various countries (excluding the Soviet Union). In most countries communism is represented by three or four different groups or parties, each cursing and slandering the other, wholly incapable of united action, and often forgetting the common foe in their mutual hatreds. It is perfectly clear that, however correct the ideology of the Communist International may have been, their tactics have failed.

In India we see, during the past thirteen years, a subservient and demoralized people, incapable of any action and much less united action, suddenly develop backbone and power of resistance and an amazing capacity for united action, and challenge the might of a great and entrenched empire. Is this a little thing that we have achieved? Or is it not one of the most remarkable examples of mass regeneration? And are we not entitled to claim that the methods that brought about this great change were worthy and desirable methods? Those who criticise these methods might well compare the achievement of India during these years with that of any other colonial and semi-colonial country. They might also compare the achievements of others in India trying to work differently or with a braver ideology.

It would be a good thing if some of our critics made a grand tour of India from the Khyber Pass in the north to the south and the east and the west and studied the situation for themselves. They would find that the Congress is not only not defunct, but is very much alive and functioning in many areas, and is going to function despite anything that might happen. They would discover the strange ferment in the peasantry and the new temper of the army. One is a little apt to misjudge India by conditions prevailing in a city, especially when our newspapers do not even publish the news. How many people know of the recent extraordinary happenings in the Frontier Province? Or of the fact that many hundreds of people have gone to prison in Behar alone during the last two months or so? Or of the stream of individuals that are offering civil disobedience in other provinces? Or of the Sarkar Salaam[2] and other barbarities that are taking place in Bengal? I could add to the list. The mere fact that these amazing methods of repression are being resorted to still is proof enough of the strength of our movement and the nervous and fearful state of the government. Why should it resort to these extraordinary methods if it felt that there was no life left in our movement?

I have been told that I stand for a federation with the princes and feudal lords without in any way questioning their despotism. This is a somewhat remarkable interpretation of what I have said. Certainly I think that a federation is likely to be established in India that is

2. In Hijli jail political prisoners had to carry heavy bar fetters for refusing to salute the superintendent of police to be, but I cannot conceive of any stable federation, certainly not one to which I can agree, to which the feudal chiefs are parties. I believe that the whole Indian state system must go root and branch.

Probably reference was made to the Delhi Provisional Settlement of 1931. A federation was certainly agreed to there, but the nature of it was not defined. In any event the Delhi Settlement is no more. The government has put an end to it and we are no longer bound by its terms.

It might be as well to remember that I am not the Congress and the Congress is not Jawaharlal Nehru. It has been my great privilege to work in the Congress for the best years of my life and perhaps sometimes I have had a little influence over its decisions. But I am not presumptuous enough to imagine that I can carry the Congress with me wherever I will; I have long felt that the Congress is far the most effective radical organization in the country and it is easier to work great changes in the mass mentality through it rather than through any other means. So long as I feel that, I shall gladly and most willingly work with this great organization, which has done so much for the country, even though it may not go far enough from my point of view. And so long as that is the case no question can arise of my thinking of another organization.

I have been told that the breaking of laws fundamentally implies a defence of the breaker. I am afraid I am unable to grasp the significance of this statement. But I am certainly of opinion that a general strike involving a paralysis of the transport and other machinery of the forces of oppression is a powerful weapon which should be prepared for and used when the time for it is ripe.

The Advocate has criticised me for not convening a meeting of the A.I.C.C. May I point out that I have repeatedly stated that I am perfectly willing to convene it if some members requisition it? It is only necessary for about eight per cent of the members to send a requisition and I am fully prepared to waive any technicalities in their favour. If not even eight per cent demand it, does the fault lie with me? As a matter of fact, in spite of newspaper statements and criticism, hardly a single member has written to me formally about it. Personally I am well content with the programme of action before us and I feel that it enables those of us who wish to do so to carry on work. It is the business of those who are dissatisfied or those who want a change in programme to ask for an A.I.C.C. meeting, instead of hurling vague criticisms in the air. If this demand is not made even by these people, is it not a legitimate inference that the great majority of Congressmen do not desire a change of programme?

People forget sometimes that we are functioning abnormally. They discuss the constitutional issue in terms of normality or they criticise the Congress for its seeming inactivity, forgetting that the Congress has arrived at a certain stage of historical growth. It is not at present a constitutional or legal body and many of the safe and brave deeds that are performed on public platforms are no longer in its line. Constitutionalists naturally dislike this; they cannot function in an illegal atmosphere. But why should those who think in terms of revolutionary change object to this inevitable and desirable development?

This article has grown long, but I have not yet dealt with many other points that have been raised. I hope to come back to them, and especially to the questions of nonviolence and khaddar, in a subsequent article.

5. To the Editor, The Pioneer[1]

Sir,

To controversy on current public issues there is no end, but perhaps you will permit me to say something to elucidate certain points raised by you in today's leading article.[2]

To do away with the class division of society necessarily implies the ending of the caste system which is only a petrified form of class division. It is obvious therefore that I am for the ending of the caste system. So far as religion is concerned I am for complete freedom of conscience and religious belief. Each individual should be perfectly free to believe in and follow any religion, and those who are not religiously inclined should also be free to spread their ideas. But religion should be a personal affair and must not interfere in political or economic questions.

I regret to say that I have not so far read either G.D.H. Cole's Intelligent Man's Guide Through World Chaos or Strachey's Menace of Fascism, though I hope to do so as soon as I have the opportunity.

1. The Pioneer, 23 November 1933.
2. The editorial claimed that most of Jawaharlal's views in Whither India? were second hand and taken from volumes which are "among the sacred books of the Bloomsbury intellectuals or 'Parlour Bolsheviks'" and, on Jawaharlal's own confession, "laid down no programme at all much less a detailed programme," still less answered such questions as how he proposed to secure "social equality" without abolition of caste

But of course I have read many similar books and my ideas are, as you have pertinently observed, largely second-hand. I claimed no originality for them. Indeed I tried to lay stress on the fact that they were commonplaces in intelligent circles.

My point was that the capitalist system was collapsing because of its inherent contradictions and world conditions. Undoubtedly the World War has hastened this process but the war itself was an inevitable consequence of capitalism and imperialism. It is quite possible that another world war will put the finishing touches to the work of the last war and finally end the capitalistic system. The fact remains and, I submit, cannot be challenged that, whatever form the new social order might take, the capitalist order is doomed. Any further argument must proceed on this assumption.

As to what the new order is going to be or should be we may differ. I think it will be the socialist order. To my knowledge no other consistent theory has so far been suggested (if we may ignore Major Douglas, the technocrats and some others whose schemes are sufficiently revolutionary). But socialism does not mean just a duplication of what has taken place in Soviet Russia. It may, and probably will, evolve on different lines in different countries. It must always be remembered that Czarist Russia was one of the worst places to try the socialist experiment because of her backward condition. An advanced industrial country like England or Germany would have been far more suitable and would have yielded swifter and richer results. It is easy enough to criticise Russia. In a vast country launched on a vast and unprecedented experiment there are bound to be innumerable lapses and even failure. But the point is that in Russia these lapses and failures are recognised and an immediate effort is made to remedy them. In the capitalist countries, on the other hand, there is a helpless wringing of hands and a policy of waiting and seeing, for every avenue of growth and every effective remedy leads to a change of the system.

I do not admire all that has occurred in the Soviet Union but I do admire their objective and the vital urge that is driving them to it. I think also that in spite of many mistakes and failures the Soviets have an amazing amount of success to their credit.

My programme? The objective is political independence for India and a rapid social change to establish a socialist state. The method of action and exercising pressure is at present chiefly civil disobedience, and I invite you, Sir, and your readers to participate in this.

Yours etc.,
Jawaharlal Nehru

2

OUT OF PRISON

THE CONGRESS PROGRAMME

1. Exploitation of India[1]

It is not easy to write briefly on the Indian situation for the information of the British public. Partisan and one-sided propaganda has held the field there for so long that every vital issue has been confused and a totally false impression created of conditions in India. Even in India, during the last three or four years, ordinance rule, which is close cousin to martial law under certain legal forms, and a rigid censorship of the press have suppressed not only expressions of opinion but even news that was unpalatable to the British authorities in India. The newspaper press is bound hand and foot, public meetings on political issues are not allowed to be held, books and pamphlets, even those giving admitted facts, are proscribed, letters and telegrams are censored and sometimes do not reach their destination. It is an offence in many parts of the country to publish the names or photographs of people arrested under the ordinances. Some months back even a memorial meeting on the anniversary of the death of Pandit Motilal Nehru was banned though it was convened largely by non Congressmen and a peaceful moderate like Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru was to have presided over it. In some parts of Bengal and in the Frontier Province there is a military occupation and an interference with the day to day activities of every citizen which is far severer than if the country had been invaded by a foreign army during war time. Even children in Chittagong and Midnapore have to carry about cards of identity. The movements of people are strictly regulated, even their dress has to conform to official directions, and heavy fines are imposed on whole towns and villages to which the residents are made to contribute, regardless of guilt or innocence. Every hint of police or military barbarity is suppressed and punished and even official enquiries are denied. An occasional act of terrorism by a youth is answered by the organised and continuous terrorism and reprisals of the State.

1 Daily Herald (London), 2 October 1933, later reprinted under the title The Indian Struggle for Freedom in Recent Essays and Writings, (Allahabad, 1934), pp. 113-120.

British newspapers attack the Indian national movement from a variety of fronts, regardless of the obvious inconsistency of their statements. On the one hand, the Congress is said to be a reactionary body controlled by millowners and the like; on the other, no-rent campaigns are said to be the work of Bolsheviks and their kind rousing up the peaceful peasantry by their artful agitation. Even well-informed newspapers give currency to statements which are entirely wrong and have no relation to facts. Some time ago one of the best of the English weeklies stated as a fact that the movement against untouchability and for the raising of the depressed classes was started by Mr. Gandhi's fast last year and that the Congress had closed its doors to these classes. As a matter of fact the movement is an old one and it has been one of the biggest movements in India since 1920 when the Congress, at Mr. Gandhi's instance, made it a major plank in its programme. The Congress has never kept out the depressed classes and during the last thirteen years it has insisted on representatives of the depressed classes being elected to its highest executive committee. Mr. Gandhi's fast undoubtedly gave the movement a tremendous push.

India and the East generally are supposed to be mysterious lands where strange people work in strange and peculiar ways and no real attempt is made to understand them. This magic view of history and geography may perhaps fit in with the somewhat romantic and unworldly, and yet profitable, outlook of the average conservative or liberal politician who has no other standards to go by. But labour believes in a scientific and economic interpretation of history and current events and it is surprising that British labour should suffer under the same delusion. Perhaps generations of imperialist domination have affected the ideology of British labour and made it unable to take a correct and objective view where British imperialist interests are concerned. We are told by labour leaders that nationalism is a narrow creed and therefore Indian nationalism is reactionary. Under cover of this doctrine they seek to perpetuate British imperialism calling it by the high-sounding title of the British Commonwealth of Nations. Nationalism is of course a reactionary force in the modern world, whether it functions in England or India, but it is an inevitable reaction to imperialism in colonial countries, and a step which cannot be avoided in the march to real internationalism. To defend any kind of imperialism by calling colonial nationalism as reactionary is sheer hypocrisy.

It is a commonplace that great movements are not caused by individuals or a handful of agitators but are due, in the main, to economic forces. The Indian national movement arose in this way and in its early days was controlled by the upper middle class. It was not essentially hostile to imperialism as this class itself was a product of British rule and wanted to fit itself into the fabric of imperialism. The march of economic events, however, wrought a change in it and the lower middle class and the declasse intellectuals began to dominate it. India played an important part in the great national wave that shook the whole of Asia after the Great War. A great national leader inspired the people and for the first time the masses, and especially the peasantry, took an effective part in the national struggle. In the after war years the association of the masses with the Congress increased progressively and in some provinces the peasantry played an important role in formulating policy and in participating in direct action. The industrial workers, especially in Bombay, built up a trade union movement and developed a revolutionary ideology. As an organized group they did not cooperate with the Congress but they were powerfully influenced by it and many took part in the Congress campaigns. At the same time Indian labour carried on its own fight against capitalism by means of strikes.

As the Congress became more radical and dependent on mass support, the Indian vested interests that were represented in it became frightened and some of them dropped out. It was out of these leavings that the small and ineffective moderate or liberal group was formed. Association with the masses forced economic issues to the front in the Congress and a socialist ideology began to develop. A number of vaguely socialist resolutions were passed from time to time and in 1931 the Congress took a more definite step in this direction by adopting an economic programme at Karachi.

The direct action struggle of the Congress during the last four years, and the slump and a rapid march of economic events in the world during this period, have resulted in influencing the Congress powerfully in a socialist direction, and the struggle for independence has come more and more to mean a radical change in the social order to bring relief to the suffering masses. In a recent correspondence Mr Gandhi declared that real independence must mean the devesting of the vested interests in India. The Congress still continues to be a national organisation and as such includes in its fold many groups and classes which have conflicting social interests. But recent events have forced the economic issue to the forefront and, as a result, the Congress has become even more a mass organisation and the Indian vested interests, from the princes downwards, have joined hands with British vested interests in India to resist all real political and social change. The Round Table Conference in London was such a grouping of vested interests. Thus inevitably our struggle for independence is also becoming a struggle for social freedom.

The word independence is not a happy word for it signifies isolation and there can be no such isolation or independence in the modern world. But the word has to be used for want of a better one. It must not be understood, however, to mean that we want to cut ourselves off from the rest of the world. We do not believe in a narrow and aggressive nationalism. We believe in inter-dependence and international cooperation, but at the same time we are convinced that there can be no dependence whatever and no real cooperation with imperialism. Thus we want complete independence from every kind of imperialism. But that does not rule out the fullest cooperation with the British people or other peoples who do not wish to exploit us. With imperialism there can be and will be no compromise under whatever guise it may come.

Essentially therefore our struggle for freedom is a struggle for a radical change of the social structure and the ending of all exploitation of the masses. This can only be done by the devesting of the great vested interests in India, and the biggest of these is that of the British Government. A mere process of changing officials, of 'Indianisation', as it is called, of giving a high office to an Indian instead of an Englishman, has no interest whatever for us. It is the system which exploits the masses of India that we object to and which must go before any effective relief comes to the masses.

The Round Table Conferences in London have proceeded on an entirely different basis Almost their sole concern has been to protect every conceivable vested interest and make it impregnable and to this crowd of parasites they wish to add others. Thus the whole Round Table scheme instead of lessening the exploitation of the masses actually puts fresh burdens on them. We are told by the Secretary of State for India that the constitutional changes will involve extra expenditure of many millions and therefore must wait till the world has got over its present economic discontents and India is more prosperous! He may have to wait a long time if he wishes these discontents to be solved according to his liking. His statement shows a singular lack of appreciation of what is happening in the world and what is likely to happen in the future. But even apart from that it is an extraordinary instance of the powerful reasoning powers of Whitehall and the India Office. India is in a state of revolt because the working classes, the peasantry and the lower middle classes are crushed by various kinds of exploitation. They want immediate relief; they want bread for their hungry stomachs. Even the great majority of the landlords are being reduced to beggary as the land tenure system is breaking down. The remedy for this collapse and widespread misery is sought in propping up all the vested interests that have brought it about and in attempting to strengthen a semi feudal order which has long outlived its utility and is an obstacle to all progress. In addition to this further burdens are cast on the masses. And then we are told that when conditions right themselves of their own accord, it will be time enough to introduce changes.

It is manifest that this method of procedure is the sheerest quibbling with a great problem affecting vast numbers of human beings. The Round Table scheme, whether it is adopted by the British Parliament as it is, or varied, will not solve a single problem in India. Much is made in England of the so-called 'die-hard' opposition to it, of the attacks of the Churchill-Lloyd group and of the defence bravely put up by Mr. Baldwin and others. So far as India is concerned it views these mock battles with supreme unconcern for, whatever the result of these may be, it will not affect her attitude to a scheme which is reactionary, absurd and unworkable to an extraordinary degree. The British Government may succeed in grouping round itself all the backward, feudal and reactionary groups in India, including even the bigoted religious obscurantists who have been frightened by Mr. Gandhi's attacks on their strongholds. If it finds pleasure in this varied company we have no complaint. It makes our task easier in bringing about a social change together with a real political change.

Thus so far as the Congress is concerned the Round Table Conferences and the Joint Select Committee have made no difference whatever to our struggle for freedom, except in so far as they have cleared issues and demonstrated that British imperialism stands for all that is reactionary in India. Under these circumstances the struggle for independence and social change must go on. Indeed it is not in the power of any individual or group to end this struggle. Even the Congress cannot do it for the struggle for freedom is the natural result of economic conditions, and so long as these conditions continue they must find an outlet in such a struggle. If the Congress leaders withdraw, other people and other organisations will take their place.

A political solution of the struggle can only come when the Indian people can settle their own constitution in a popularly elected constituent assembly. Such an assembly would also, I have no doubt, solve the minority and other problems, which have assumed so much prominence because their solution has been entrusted not to popularly chosen spokesmen but to official nominees. It is these reactionary nominees who have refused to agree among themselves and made it appear that the Indian people cannot agree. The Indian people have never been given a real chance to solve the problems for themselves. So far as the Congress is concerned it has little difficulty as it has long been prepared to guarantee minority rights.

The Congress does not want any power for itself. I am sure that it will willingly abide by the decision of the constituent assembly, and even dissolve itself as soon as Indian political independence is achieved. It is doubtful, however, if under existing conditions, or in the near future, such a constituent assembly can be held. The more this is delayed the more will the political problem of India become an economic one and the ultimate change will be social as well as political. The struggle for Indian freedom is essentially a part of the world struggle for the emancipation of the exploited everywhere and for the establishment of a new social order.

2. To A.L. Simha[1]

Lucknow
October 7, 1933

Dear Simha,

I have your letter.[2] It is perfectly true that some efforts are being made in various parts of the country to form groups and parties within or without the Congress. That is quite natural in a living organization It would be absurd to say that the situation in the country is a perfectly satisfactory one or that all is well with the Congress.

1 JN Correspondence, NMML

2 A L. Simha, a physician of Madras, had suggested that a new party called the National Socialist Party be started by Jawaharlal He also asked him to define the Congress attitude to the White Paper, council entry and communal parts.

Nobody can make such a claim. We are up against a hard job and we expect difficulties at every step But all this does not justify in my opinion what you said in your previous letter about the Congress. If the strength of an organization is to be judged by its hold on the mass mind then the Congress is more powerful today than it has ever been, despite the criticism of a number of people. And the long shadow of the Congress continually darkens the horizon of our Viceroys and Secretaries of State.

I propose, if I have the time, to write a number of articles in the public press on the present situation and I will refer you to them for my views. The three questions that you put in your letter betray a great deal of ignorance of the Congress policy. But I shall answer them briefly.

1. 'The Congress attitude towards the White Paper[3] is one of supreme contempt

2. The Congress is committed to a programme of direct action against the government which takes the shape of civil disobedience. Direct action and so-called constitutional action do not go well together though it may be possible to combine them to some extent under certain circumstances. Council entry being a form of constitutional action is thus not compatible with the present policy of the Congress. Indeed the Lahore session of the Congress called for a boycott of the councils and that decision stands today. Apart from this I fail to understand how the question arises. Estimates vary But it appears that under no circumstance will the new councils function before another three or four years Personally I do not think they will ever function Long before they appear on the scene much will have happened in India and the world to put them out of action I do not understand how any practical politician can lay down any definite programme in regard to the councils so long ahead when Indian and world conditions are changing so rapidly.

3. Regarding communal pacts, the Congress has not sanctioned or approved of any pact The Lahore session laid down that a national solution should be found for this question At the same time the Congress has always expressed its readiness to accept any scheme that is agreed to between the parties The Congress is further willing to go to the utmost length to assure the minorities that all their rights will be protected Presumably in referring to communal pacts you mean the Poona Pact of last year The Congress as an organization has not even considered this but it is perfectly true that many noted Congressmen headed by Gandhiji have accepted it as it stands. The essence of this Pact, as I understand it, is to give assurance to the depressed classes that they will be given considerable representation under the new scheme. So far as this principle is concerned I have no doubt that the Congress will agree to it, and it may even agree to the figure given in the Pact because it has all along been the Congress policy to adopt a generous policy to minorities and backward groups. But as I have said above the Congress has had no chance of considering this so far.

3 Setting out British constitutional proposals for India

I do not know what you mean by a fascist programme. Fascism has a certain technical meaning. It means a grouping together of the possessing classes to keep down the working classes. If that is what you desire I am entirely against it. Indeed we see a brand of fascism already in the country grouping itself round the British Government. They are the greatest enemies of the movement for national freedom.

You may certainly publish this letter if you so wish.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

3. To Asaf Ali[1]

Allahabad
October 12, 1933

My dear Asaf Ali,[2]

I have your letter.[3] You will forgive me if I send you a brief reply as my mother's illness and various other matters are filling up my time. Any real reply to your letter would develop into a long essay. You will perhaps get some idea of how my mind is working from certain articles

1 J.N Correspondence, N.M.M.L.

2 (1888-1953); leading Congressman of Delhi, secretary, Congress Parliamentary Board, 1934, member, Congress Working Committee, 1940-42, imprisoned during 1942-45, deputy leader, Congress Party in the Central Assembly, 1945, member, Interim Government, 1946-47; ambassador, U.S.A., 1947-48, Governor of Orissa 1948-52, ambassador, Switzerland, 1952-53.

3 Asaf Ali in his letter of 30 September 1933 wrote that he felt the need for a positive programme as "unity, removal of untouchability, khaddar... did not evoke any dynamic enthusiasm."

which I have been sending to the press. If I have the time and the opportunity I shall write more for the press.

Personally I think that a withdrawal of civil disobedience would be a blunder of the first magnitude. Having regard both to the Indian situation and the international situation I feel that our direct action struggle must be carried on even though at a low level.

From the point of view of the struggle I do not attach importance to what are called the constructive activities of the Congress. I am, therefore, not interested at present in any such activities or rather it would be more correct to say that I am not prepared to give any time or energy to them.

I am not at all enamoured of Harijan work though of course I am very keen on the abolition of untouchability. I realise that there is some feeling among the Mussulmans that the Harijan movement is aimed at strengthening the Hindus politically. This is of course without foundation but none the less it is there As a matter of fact the aspect of the Harijan movement which appeals to me most is that it will weaken the Hindus in the sense that it will create a split among them. I like such splits because they clear up the position and bring real issues before the public. It is a good thing that the orthodox section of the Hindus is showing its true colours and behaving politically as a most reactionary group.

As for unity—communal unity—I agree with you that there is no room for any attempt to bring about a compromise to replace MacDonald's Communal Award.

I do not see how the question of council entry arises now. According to the most optimistic estimates any new council will not begin functioning for three or four years. Practical politicians do not lay down their immediate programme for a contingency which may occur three years later or may not occur at all. Personally, I doubt if the Round Table scheme will ever function in India.

I do not think it is possible for us now, even if civil disobedience is withdrawn, to organise the peasantry and others properly. All manner of obstructions are being and will be put in the way of such real work. It seems to me almost easier to do some organisational work in the rural areas through civil disobedience than otherwise.

I do not attach much importance to the particular Maharashtra group which is said to have organised a new party.[4] But I know well that individuals here and there think on those lines and may drop out of the Congress if the Congress carries on an aggressive direct action policy. I think that need not worry us much. It is an inevitable development. Such groups will not injure our cause but might even strengthen it because the issues will become clearer before the country.

4 Jamnadas Mehta, Kelkar and other leaders of Maharashtra decided on 30 August 1933 to form the Democratic Swaraj Party to work for the attainment of full independence by all legal and constitutional means.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

4. To Nabakrushna Chaudhuri[1]

Allahabad
October 15, 1933

Dear Comrade,[2]
I am glad to receive your two letters[3] I have read them with the greatest interest In many things that you say I am in entire agreement with you I do not agree with what you say regarding a secret organisation to carry on the work. I think that secrecy is a possible and an effective method under certain circumstances. I have no moral objection to it at all but under present circumstances I do not think that secret methods will help us at all. Of course this does not mean that we should not have private methods of consultation and work. This is always permissible Our fight is essentially based on mass morale and I am sure that secret methods undermine this morale. If our movement is to be essentially a mass movement it cannot help being an open movement There is a certain inconsistency between the satyagraha method of open defiance and secret methods which involve an avoidance of conflict by numerous individuals. I can quite conceive our adopting knowingly secret methods of organisation as, for instance, exist in Germany today; but that will involve an entire change of tactics for us It will also mean winding up the open struggle This kind of secret activity is usually indulged in when

1 JN Correspondence, NMML
2 (b 1901), participated in the noncooperation movements, founder member of the Congress Socialist Party in Orissa, 1934, Chief Minister, Orissa, 1951 53
3 In these letters written on 8 September and 9 October 1933 he advocated "a network of sound secret bodies".

large scale activities are impossible. It is only a preparation for something big later. In our country the whole basis of our struggle having been open defiance in order to inculcate character and backbone in our people—and in this it has succeeded to a remarkable extent—it is very difficult to switch on to an entirely different method. This really means ending the present struggle and laying the foundations for a different type of struggle. I feel that in spite of the lull that prevails we are still strong enough to carry on the struggle, though at a lower pitch. Both on national and international grounds it is essential for us to carry on the struggle at present. We cannot afford to be quiescent when at any moment a great international crisis may develop. Therefore, I think that our work must be of an open and aggressive character. At the same time it is perfectly open to us to have private consultations and group action This is what Gandhiji himself said in his letter to me in Poona I am sending a copy of my correspondence with Gandhiji[4]

I agree with you that it is necessary to organise nuclei of Congress workers in all provinces who are ready for a sustained and prolonged fight That is exactly what we have been doing in our province We have discussed very fully with our provincial workers and district leaders the present position in India and the world and we have asked them to have similar discussions in each of their districts. I am sending you a copy of the resolutions passed by us. We propose to issue more detailed instructions within a few days to our districts.

It comes to this then that we must carry on the struggle aggressively and openly in the form of civil disobedience and in the course of this organise and consolidate our position as well as try to change the ideology of our workers This is a difficult task of course but it seems to me the only way to do it Some people imagine that we can organise better if we stop the fight. I think this is wrong and the government will not let us organise openly even then, quite apart from the fact that winding up of the fight will bring utter demoralisation

As you say, in every great fight there is bound to be an ebb and flow This need not discourage us in the least and I am not discouraged by the state of affairs in India at present The tall talk of British officials is largely bluff and the whole international situation is in our favour. But to take advantage of it we must not give in I do not think it is possible for us to switch on the struggle for national power to local economic issues as suggested by Gandhiji in the article you have sent me.[5] There is exhaustion today both among the workers and the peasantry and little can be done immediately to rouse them up even on an issue that affects them immediately. Where possible of course this should be done but essentially the national fight must continue and we should try to make it a social and economic fight as well for the broad masses. Fundamentally this means the development of a new ideology. I am trying to help in this process by writing articles in the press which you may have perhaps noticed.

4 See Selected Works, Vol 5, pp 526 530

You can rest assured that we do not forget your province. But, as matters stand, it is not easy to give anything more than sympathy.

With all good wishes,

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

5 In his article Substance not Shadow published in Young India on 18 June 1931, Mahatma Gandhi suggested that in the event of a failure to reach an agreement at the Round Table Conference it was better not to "force Swaraj through highly artificial surroundings" and meanwhile the Congress could "fulfil its mission" of representing the masses by fighting for their economic relief

5. To H.K. Hales[1]

Allahabad
October 17, 1933

Dear Mr. Hales,[2]

Thank you for your letter.[3] I am sorry for the delay in answering it.

There is no present intention of calling a meeting of the National Congress A meeting of the All India Congress Committee, however, may be held if a proper requisition for it reaches me.

National struggles against an alien domination invariably give rise to bitter feelings That is unfortunate And yet, I think, it may be said with some confidence that we have tried in India to avoid this bitterness as far as possible and to base our struggle on love for the cause and not hatred for the opponent. Personally I feel that it is inevitable that India should sever her present connection with the British Empire because such connection can only be based on the domination of England over India. That of course does not mean that we should break all contacts with England or that we should remain opponents. Indeed I feel sure that the only true comradeship that can exist between the two countries can only come when both are free of each other and can meet on a basis of equality.

1 JN Correspondence, NMML
2 Conservative member of the House of Commons, had contacts with British manufacturing interests in India
3 In his letter of 6 October 1933, Hales had appealed to Jawaharlal to base future Congress policy on "love, not hatred"

I agree with you that construction and not destruction should be our motto. But to construct properly one has often to remove the debris of an old structure.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

6. To Swami Govindananda[1]

Allahabad
October 26, 1933

Dear Friend,
I received your letter of the 12th October about four or five days ago.[2] I regret the delay in answering it. I have today sent you a telegram to the following effect:

> Reference your letter. Suggest your sending requisition for meeting. Signatures may come separately.

With much that you say in your letter I am in agreement but I also disagree with a great part of it. I do not think it will serve any useful purpose to reply in an argumentative manner. There are one or two points however to which I should like to refer. You mentioned that "there is a deep resentment in the whole country against this effort

1. J N Correspondence, NMML
2. Swami Govindananda feared that the Congress leadership would meet the same fate as Kerensky in Russia and felt that the situation demanded the convening of the AICC to decide the fate of an old nation behind closed doors in Poona between you and Gandhiji" I was not aware that I was a party to any such decision as you refer to Nor have I seen anywhere signs of any such resentment. I went to Poona soon after my discharge from prison to consult with Gandhiji about various matters and subsequently we issued a resume of our conversations in the form of letters addressed to each other. I fail to see how this can cause resentment to anybody or how it can be interpreted as deciding the fate of nations.

If the state of India today is similar to the one obtaining in Russia in the last quarter of 1917, as you suggest, surely this is not a matter for regret for the last quarter saw the beginnings of a great revolution. If we are on the eve of such a revolution, let us welcome it by all means. Personally I do not think there is any analogy whatsoever between 1917 in Russia and 1933 in India.

I am not interesting myself in the Harijan movement as it is being carried on, and, so far as I am concerned, my energy will be utilised for political work alone The name Harijan is new but you will remember that the abolition of untouchability has been a fundamental part of the Congress programme for many years

Regarding the AICC meeting you must be aware that I have repeatedly invited a requisition and have stated that immediately on receipt of it I shall convene the meeting. I am placed in a somewhat difficult position and in order to gauge the feeling of the members of the AICC. I took the only course open to me, i e, asked for a requisition if a sufficient number of members desire the meeting. For the last five weeks I have been patiently waiting for such a requisition but none has come. It is rather strange that there should be this delay in a requisition coming if, as you say, an overwhelming majority of members desire a meeting It is very easy for them to write to me as you have done I can assure you that I want to put no obstacles whatever in the way of a meeting As, however, there appear to be two sets of opinions, one desiring a meeting and the other definitely not desiring it, I left it to those members who wanted the meeting to take the initiative I might add that to remove any technical difficulties that may stand in the way of members living in different places I am perfectly prepared to accept as a requisition if the requisite number of members, that is, 30, write to me even separately If even this number do not wish to do so, and this number represents about 8% of the total membership, then I can only conclude that the great majority of members do not desire a meeting at present

I would therefore suggest to you, as I have done in my telegram, that you and those who think with you should write to me formally on the subject. If your demand for the meeting is supported by others even though they write independently to me I shall immediately convene a meeting.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

7. To N.S. Hardikar[1]

Allahabad
October 28, 1933

My dear Hardikar,
...I have just seen that Kamaladevi has been arrested in Gudivada.[2] This was rather unexpected. I suppose that probably she will be let off soon. But one never knows. This kind of thing is bound to continue. People talk of our withdrawing our offensive but they forget that the other party's offensive is continuous and unrelenting.

Ever yours,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. Hardikar Papers, N.M.M.L. Extracts.
2. Arrested on 27 October 1933 while delivering a speech.

8. To H.K. Hales[1]

Allahabad
October 28, 1933

Dear Mr. Hales,
I thank you for your letter of the 25th October.[2] I am afraid there is a vital difference in our viewpoints and there is not much meeting

1. J.N. Correspondence, N.M.M.L.
2. Hales thought a dissolution of Indo-British relations was 'unthinkable' and wished to meet Indian leaders to discuss the White Paper.

ground. I can assure you that I feel convinced that the policy I suggested will succeed not only in my lifetime but before I am very much older. As for those who agree with my viewpoint I can also assure you that they are a very large number.

It is not a question of a husband and wife separating but one of, if I may use a similar analogy, the perpetrator of a rape being made to part company with his victim. There can be no normal relations after a forcible rape. That rape must be atoned for before cooperation can arise, for this has to be based on mutual respect and mutual freedom.

I have no fear that India will be placed in a position of insecurity after her separation from Great Britain. Some Liberal politicians in India may desire protection from external invasions through the British armed forces but so far as the Congress is concerned the very first and the most vital thing that we want is the ending of this so-called protection.

I should like you to consider the measure of security we have in India today. You invited Mr. Gandhi some time back to visit Midnapore. I do not know if you have yourself visited Midnapore or Chittagong I think a visit to these places and an impartial enquiry would reveal to you that whatever else Indians may have or may not have, they have not got the least measure of security under British rule. I have never heard of any other incident in war time or in peace time or even in territory occupied by a hostile army, when children were called upon to keep cards of identity as they are required to do in Chittagong and Midnapore. I refer only to one incident. I can add to it but no doubt you can easily find out what British rule means to us by studying the record of happenings in these two districts of Bengal as well as in the Frontier Province.

If I may quote Arthur Griffith,[3] the founder of Sinn Fein, "England has one of her hands at our throat and the other hand in our pockets." So long as both these hands are not removed there can obviously be no talk of peace between England and India.

You are perfectly right in saying that the White Paper is unwelcome to every community in India. So far as the Congress is concerned it is totally indifferent to the fate of the White Paper because in its opinion it is wholly misconceived and incapable of improvement. We are not prepared to accept the dictum that we must leave the decision of the fate of our country into the hands of any foreign body or group of individuals. That fate must be settled by Indians themselves. This cannot be done by a few odd individuals, some of whom represent nobody but themselves, discussing and coming to an agreement with the opposite party. The right way to proceed is for a constituent assembly, elected by the people as a whole on the broadest franchise, to be held in India. I think it should be realised by our friends in England that the one certain way to court failure in India is to imagine that they could coerce the Indian people to act in the way they desire. It is impossible to coerce for any length of time any country or people with a flicker of life in them. And India has a bright enough flame which cannot be put out. So long as the element of coercion lasts it seems very much out of place to talk of cooperation.

3 (1872 1922), President of the Irish Republic, 1921 22

I am perfectly willing to meet any individual or group, subject to my engagements, to discuss the present and the future in India. But personally I do not think that a meeting of the small group suggested by you would serve any useful purpose.

I have written to you quite frankly because I think it would be unfair to you if I clothed my thoughts and ideas in ambiguous language.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

9. To Secretary, Bikaner Political Case Committee[1]

Allahabad
October 29, 1933

Dear Sir,

I have your letter as well as a copy of your telegram to the Maharaja of Bikaner. It seems to me from the facts you have stated that grave injustice is being done in the case referred to.[2] You have my full sympathy in the matter. I feel, however, that what is really wrong is the whole Indian states system. Anything more incompetent, corrupt and autocratic it is difficult to imagine. I have no doubt in my mind

1 J.N. Correspondence, N.M.M.L.
2 Seven subjects of Bikaner state had been charged with sedition and held for two years without trial. The Bikaner Political Case Committee was formed on 18 August 1933 to assist the accused.

that it must go completely before any proper solution of the Indian problem can be found.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

10. To J.T. Gwynn[1]

Allahabad
Nov. 2, 1933

Dear Mr. Gwynn,
I received your letter some days ago and I read it with great interest. I am glad you have written frankly and fully. I believe in frankness in politics and I have always endeavoured, within the limits that an active political worker has sometimes to face, to express my thoughts freely. Sometimes indeed both my colleagues and opponents have been somewhat embarrassed by my frankness.

I am perfectly willing to write to you from time to time or to answer any questions that you may put to me, if they are capable of an answer. Unhappily intelligent argument does not go very far when interests are at stake but none the less it makes a difference and the more of it we have the better. I know that there are a large number of people in England who want to know and understand the other side and if I can be of the slightest help to them in doing so I shall gladly make the attempt. As for the Manchester Guardian I have always had a soft corner in my heart for it in spite of occasional irritation at what I consider its perverted and wrongheaded Indian policy.

But there are some difficulties in my way. The lives of many of us are spent largely in Indian prisons with brief intervals spent in the wider world outside. We come out and have to face difficult political and economic problems and domestic upsets and illness. We try to do what we can in a rush and hurry and before we are even half way through the immediate problems that demand attention, back we go to prison. This kind of life is not helpful in carrying on a long distance correspondence. There is neither the time nor the inclination to write.

1. JN Correspondence, NMML. Extracts from this letter were published in the Manchester Guardian of 15 December 1933

Indian newspapers may help you to form some vague idea of conditions in the country. But that idea will be wholly inadequate. Partly this is so because they dare not give even the facts for fear of consequences, much less can they give expression to radical opinions. Partly, I must confess, it is due to a singular lack of comprehension of the major forces and events that are shaping the world and India today. I wonder if you have any notion of what is happening even now in parts of Bengal, notably the Midnapore and Chittagong areas, and the Frontier Province. The most amazing reprisals on a mass scale are indulged in by the government forces and yet little of this is allowed to appear in the press.

I cannot write to you, I am afraid, a long letter at present as I am hard pressed for time. If I attempted to deal with all the points you have raised and to answer your questions at all adequately I would have to write a long essay. I shall deal just with a few of the points briefly. I have recently written some articles in the Indian press and these have appeared in pamphlet form.[2] I am sending you these pamphlets separately. They will give you some idea of how my mind is working. I am also sending you a copy of an article which I gave to a correspondent of the London Daily Herald.[3] I have no idea if this article has appeared or is going to appear in the Herald.

I think you are right in saying that Mr. Gandhi has suppressed to some extent independent thought and initiative. Is that not inevitable when a great personality with a magnetic and extraordinary power of mass appeal arises? And yet, fundamentally, I think your statement is not wholly correct. There was very little independent political thought before what might be called the Gandhi era. Our middle class politicians and intellectuals merely repeated some phrases which they had learnt from the 19th century English liberal writers, regardless of their applicability to Indian conditions. Gandhi for the first time succeeded in pulling some of them out of these ruts and made them think along different lines, or rather to act along different lines. This action and the course of events gradually forced a newer ideology—vague and confused no doubt but with some relation to facts. But Gandhi's real contribution was not this change in the horizon of the intelligentsia or part of it, important as this was. It was the vast change he wrought in the mentality of the Indian masses. This was not just a Messiah worship, as is often stated. There was certainly a great deal of the idea of a Messiah in the popular mind and yet there was something far more. India has had and has today no lack of people who are called mahatmas and reverenced, and even blindly obeyed by their followers. But the awakening that Gandhi brought about was definitely a political awakening of the masses. Gandhi was the political leader of India, not a religious one. Political subjects began to be discussed in the villages and the bazaars, quite divorced from religion and communalism. Thus, instead of suppressing political ideas, Gandhi actually did the reverse from a mass point of view. This sudden release from long continued suppression, and the programme of open and defiant action that Gandhi put forward, worked an amazing change in the masses. A helpless and demoralized people looked up and gathered strength and confidence in themselves and began to hope.

2. See ante, section 1.
3. See ante, item 1.

It is true that the new thought and action all ran along one channel. That was bound to happen in a mass movement. Some intellectuals who opposed the new trend were swept aside by the current, but this was largely because they had proved themselves bankrupt in ideas, ineffective in action, and hopelessly out of touch with realities.

Gandhi thus released thought from its old bondage and did not suppress it. The mass movement however tended to enforce conformity. Even this conformity did not and could not stop the growth of new ideas. What it did was to kill or smother the lifeless ideology of the Indian moderates. To some extent it is true that other ideas more in fitness with modern conditions were also partly smothered in the process but they were bound to survive and they have grown.

Today there is nothing more pitiful than the wail of the Indian moderate that nobody will listen to him He is so badly stuck in the ruts that it is impossible for him to come out and face facts. I am quite convinced that an intelligent peasant is more in touch with economic and political realities, though in a very limited way, than the highly intellectual (?) moderate leader. Talking to a group of moderates one feels that one is in a monastery and the monks have been completely cut off for long years from the world of thought and action.

Gandhi of course did not function in the air. The conditions were such that he could utilise them and work with them. It was a union of a great personality with objective conditions and the result was powerful mass movements.

The fundamental problem of India today, quite apart from independence and the like, is the incompatibility of the political and economic structures with existing conditions. The political structure is terribly expensive and top-heavy; it is toppling over through sheer financial instability. There are of course other reasons also. The condition of the peasantry and the industrial workers is steadily deteriorating and no real relief seems possible under existing conditions. The zamindari system, which prevails in some of the provinces, is hard hit. The British Government is in a quandary. Politically it supports the zamindars in order to draw them to itself. Economically the zamindars are a nuisance to government and are no longer required. The government would like to increase its own revenue from land and this can come only at the cost of the zamindar. The government would also like to better the lot of the peasantry, partly in order to soothe them and prevent them from aggressive mass activity, and partly to increase their purchasing power so that they might consume foreign, and especially British, goods more. This would help British trade and also increase the customs revenue of the central government and thus give it much needed relief. The poor zamindar does not fit in with this scheme of things and yet for reasons of state policy he has to be patted on the back.

About the British connection I hold somewhat radical views. I cannot conceive of it, under present conditions, except in terms of imperialist domination and exploitation of India. I do not think that any fair cooperation on equal terms is possible so long as England does not change her own form of government radically. Nor do I think that the British Commonwealth of Nations is itself stable enough to survive for long. But whatever may be the fate of the dominions, India stands apart from them and she cannot fit in as others have done. I have touched upon this in my pamphlet.

The White Paper seems to me to be an utterly bad thing designed entirely to perpetuate and consolidate British domination, both directly and through the most backward and reactionary groups in India. I do not think it is even capable of improvement and personally I doubt if the proposals in it will ever be applied to India in that form. In any event such an application is so distant still that the question what we should do then does not arise now.

As in the West, the economic problem overshadows everything—the condition of the peasantry and the petty zamindars, the landless proletariat, the industrial workers, the declasse intellectuals and the large numbers of middle class people without the possibility of employment, and the extraordinarily expensive and out of date structure of government. To solve this problem with any success means the ending of British rule and something more, and so the problem is not faced at all, even though conditions deteriorate.

The problem of the army does not trouble me at all. Of course in all great changes there is a certain amount of risk which must be undertaken. I do not want the least bit of army control by the British and I should like to see the British army of occupation depart as soon as possible. If this was agreed to peacefully by both parties there would be no difficulty in making the necessary arrangements for the change-over and for the security of India. But such things are unhappily never agreed to peacefully. Inevitably, a struggle has to decide the issue and a successful struggle in itself creates the strength to protect the country from outside aggression as well as internal disruption.

I am strongly attracted towards communism and I feel that the only reasonable and scientific explanation of history is the communist one. I do not approve of many things that have taken place in Russia nor am I a communist in the accepted sense of the word. But taking everything together I have been greatly impressed by the Russian experiment. As you say communism was not given a fair chance in a backward country like Russia. It would have been far different and far more successful in a country of western Europe. And yet Russia seems to have made good and the new generation that is rising up there is an extraordinarily promising one.

I have a weakness for Oxford and what it stands for myself. If something like it, only with a broader base, could be retained, well and good. But even Oxford and its like are not worth the sacrifice of the wider mass culture and initiative that the right kind of communism should bring forth.

After all, the ultimate choice seems to lie between some type of communism or fascism; the middle forms seem to fade off. Between these two all my mind and heart is for the former.

I am all against organized religion even in its social aspect. Much more so do I object to it in its political manifestations. Communal representation may have to be put up with because of various factors, the principal reason being that a denial of it actually increases the disease. But I have no doubt that the British Government have deliberately aggravated this disease by their policy. Even today I would say that the disease is not nearly so bad as the government makes it out to be. It is there of course. But the government nominees to the R.T.C. were a thoroughly bad lot from the communal point of view and every effort was made to suppress the other party. Ultimately, I suppose, communalism will go by the diversion of interest to economic issues. Even now one can see this happening in the agrarian movements. Even from the purely nationalist point of view, the younger generation of Moslems is leaving its old moorings and has already discarded its so-called leaders. These leaders, by the way, are more or less purdanashin people who seldom go to the public. They meet in private and issue long statements which interest very few persons even among their own co-religionists.

Essentially the Moslem communalist belongs to the middle class and is out for a job, and his prototype of the Hindu Mahasabha is exactly the same, with this difference that the latter organisation is confined largely to a group of the richer people—landlords, a few capitalists and even a few princes. Both the communalists are political reactionaries.

Many of the younger Moslems, and of course the younger Hindus and others also, are beginning to think on socialistic and communistic lines.

There is a slight tendency in Bengal to keep itself apart from India, culturally and politically. I think this is largely due to a feeling that the rest of India does not fully appreciate the great sacrifices of Bengal in the struggle for freedom. This feeling is not a correct one. At the same time there are many other forces at work knitting the various provinces closer together and I think that the momentary irritation in Bengal will pass off.

I am afraid I cannot discuss individuals in this letter. That is far too delicate a subject for an active politician.

I began this letter by saying that I would not write a long one. And yet I was drawn on, page after page, and I find that I have imposed quite a long letter on you. There is nothing confidential in what I have written to you and you can certainly make such use of it as you think proper.

Was it not you who paid me a visit in the Lucknow gaol in 1922?[4]

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

4 Gwynn had visited Jawaharlal in jail on 14 October 1922, see Selected Works, Vol. 1, p. 346.

11. To Kakalbhai Kothari[1]

Allahabad
November 2, 1933

Dear Friend,[2]
I am in receipt of your letter. I wish the Kathiawar States' People's Convention, which is going to meet at Amreli, all success. Personally I feel that the States' People's Conferences have seldom faced the issue directly. They have discussed all manner of side issues and avoided the main one. In my opinion the present autocratic form of government in the Indian states is an absurd and dangerous relic of feudal times and should be done away with as speedily as possible. The proposed All India Federation according to the White Paper is an attempt to bolster up this autocracy and to consolidate themselves not only in the states, but also in India as a whole. Neither the people of the states nor of the rest of India can tolerate this imposition. I think the time has come when the people of the Indian states should take up a definite and clear attitude on the subject and should work with the rest of India for the realisation of the common goal of full freedom.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 JN Correspondence, N.M.M.L.
2 (1900-1966); at this time secretary, Indian States' People's Conference for Kathiawar and Kutch states.

12. On the Formation of the Democratic Swaraj Party[1]

Democratic Swaraj Party seems to me to be a misnomer; although, so far as I am concerned, they are welcome to any name, the more resounding the better, for it is likely to consist chiefly of a name.

It is not democratic and it obviously has no real public support. It has little to do with Swaraj

So far as I can see it is not much of a party.

1 Interview to the press, Allahabad, 2 November 1933 The Pioneer, 5 November 1933.

The one aim that has brought a number of individuals together is the desire to enter the councils. So long as the Congress is a dangerous body they will keep far away from it. But they assure us most generously that if in the fulness of time the Congress becomes a perfectly safe, legal and constitutional organisation, they will be willing to join it.[2] That is something to be thankful for.

Mr. Kelkar's address as well as the other proceedings of the party, so far as they have been published in the press, are interesting revelations of the mentality that prevailed in India a couple of generations back.[3] I would suggest to the new party that a school of politics, economics and current affairs be opened for the benefit of its members.

2 At the Maharashtra Political Conference on 28 October 1933 it was decided that the members of the Democratic Swaraj Party would also be members of the Congress but this condition would not be enforced till the ban on the Congress had been lifted

3 Kelkar had wanted "an effective manipulation of the legislative machine," and thought noncooperation was only a "sullen, static aloofness from the political machine."

13. To Mahatma Gandhi[1]

Allahabad
November 8, 1933

My dear Bapu,

I have not written to you for three or four days although there was plenty to write about. I expected to go to Wardha and to see you. But this visit has fallen through now.

The effect of my telegram to Nariman was to make him pack up and come here.[2] Brelvi also turned up. We had long talks. It was evident that we held conflicting views about most matters however much we might seek to cover them in soft language. Nariman wanted to carry on open and aggressive propaganda for his view—indeed he

1 Maharashtra Government, Home Department (Special), Intercepted Letters

2 The telegram of 3 November 1933 read: "Surprised at your public statement criticising colleagues Working Committee without reference to them Regarding your criticism suppression democracy what course do you suggest? Do you desire meeting Working Committee?"

81719CL

had already begun this.[3] It seems to me ridiculous and impossible for the Working Committee members to carry on such propaganda against each other on vital matters of Congress policy. The only way out was for the A.I.C.C. to decide and it was up to those who wanted a change of programme to requisition a meeting. I suggested that the members of the old Working Committee should meet informally to consider the situation and if necessary to convene an A.I.C.C. meeting. Nariman agreed and hence my telegram to you.[4] It was obvious that such a consultation would not do much good. We all of us know more or less each other's views and a mere repetition would not convince anybody. Yet a measure of formality was required and there was no other way out. The date you fixed was a most inconvenient one for me as it conflicted with some rather important engagements. But I sacrificed them. Yesterday a telegram came from Abul Kalam Azad to say that he was very ill and suggesting that the consultations might be postponed for a few days. I wired to him that this could not be done. Then came Mahmud's telegram also saying that he could not come on this date. I was going to ignore this also when a sheaf of telegrams came from Bombay. Ansari could not come and hence Sarojini and Nariman suggested a date as soon after the 22nd as possible. The arrangement about the 11th thus fell through. I do not know when and where you can spare the time again. Nariman etc. suggest two clear days I shall await your reply.

This proposed consultation is a most futile affair but what else can be done? I have suggested to Nariman that instead of this he and those who think with him should demand an A.I.C.C. meeting and I shall convene it. They waste time and energy over preliminaries. It may be that some of us have come to the parting of the ways. If so let us face it and the consequences.

If an A.I.C.C. meeting is held it seems to me that some place in the C.P. would be the most suitable for it. Probably Jubbulpore would suit you and others.

Malaviyaji returned from Mussoorie today and we had a long talk. The talk will be continued tomorrow morning. He was looking much better than when I last saw him.

3 Nariman, on 2 November 1933, objected to brushing aside the differences in the Congress and criticised the "tendency of some Congressmen to place individuals howsoever great above the organisation and party." He also issued a pamphlet Whither Congress? to give publicity to his views

4 Dated 6 November 1933, the telegram read: "Nariman and I consider informal consultation with you, Azad, Ansari, Sarojini, Mahmud and others desirable within next 10 days or so Suggest your fixing day, place suitable to you"

74076

I have received your letter of Nov. 3 with its enclosures. The account of sarkar salaam is horrible and the mere reading of these barbarous doings upset me. We have had no such thing in the U.P. I feel quite sure that not all the might of the British Government can force us to submit to it here.

As for the Frontier Province note[5] I would rather not approach Sapru about it. I have given a copy of it to Malaviyaji.

Mother's progress is not as fast as it ought to be. And yet it is much to be thankful for that she is improving slowly.

I have just had a telegram from Jamnalalji asking me to stay for a few days at Wardha or the neighbourhood. I am afraid the trip is off.

Love,

Yours affectionately,
Jawaharlal

5 This note stated that 300 Congress volunteers were being kept as under trials for long periods followed by severe punishment and nearly Rs 80,000/ had been extorted from the villages under one pretext or the other It demanded an urgent enquiry into the repressive policy

14. To K.F. Nariman[1]

Allahabad
November 8, 1933

My dear Nariman,

I have just received Ansari's and your telegrams In accordance with your desires I have postponed the proposed consultation and have wired to Gandhiji accordingly. This sudden change is rather unfortunate. However, I suppose there is no help for it.

If Gandhiji suggests any other date I shall of course let you know. But personally I feel that the situation is developing too rapidly to permit of delay. All that a consultation with Gandhiji can result in is the decision to hold an A.I.C.C. meeting. Obviously no other decision can be arrived at by us Delay now means a growth of the disruptive tendencies and unfortunate mutual criticisms which you deprecate. Personally, I do not wish to take the slightest part in such arguments. I feel, therefore, that the sooner we, as members of the Working Committee, know where we stand the better. Only the A.I.C.C.

1 AICC File No G 30/(1933 36), p 288, NMML.

can decide this one way or the other. Why then should we not decide to hold it without further ado. Of course the members of the Working Committee should meet a little before the A.I.C.C. for mutual consultation

I should prefer receiving a requisition for the A.I.C.C. meeting to having to take the initiative myself. I explained to you the reason why. In the alternative I can state that as some members of the Working Committee desire it, we have called the A.I.C.C. meeting. If this is settled all that remains is to fix up the date and place. Both these would partly depend on Gandhiji, that is, if we wish him to be present. Personally I would like him to be there. Even apart from Gandhiji there are certain advantages in having the meeting in the C.P. The atmosphere is quieter there and there is likely to be less obstruction.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

15. To H.K. Hales[1]

Allahabad
November 9, 1933

Dear Mr Hales,

I have just received your letter of November 7th.[2] It is not signed but I presume that this is due to inadvertence.

It is always a little difficult, even in normal conditions, to judge the extent that a particular view prevails in a country. In a fully democratic country this can be done, to some extent, although even there very often economic pressure on various groups makes them vote contrary to their own convictions. In India there being no democracy or democratic institutions there is no such test. A rough and ready way of judging popular sentiment is from newspapers, public meetings and the like But this is obviously very incomplete and often deceptive because nationalist newspapers represent particular groups. There is certainly a common nationalist viewpoint which unites the people of a country which is under foreign domination Under cover of this nationalism, however, various upper class groups lay stress on their own interests

1. J N Correspondence, N.M M L.
2 Hales suggested to Jawaharlal that as he was the "leader of a hopeless minority" he should recognise "the necessity of close cooperation with Britain."

far more than on the interests of the masses. Thus even under normal conditions there is no expression of views of the very great majority of the population.

This discrepancy between real feelings and their public expression becomes very marked under the abnormal conditions that have prevailed in India during the last two years or so. Strict censorship and special laws to prevent freedom of the press and meeting and other expression of opinion, make it quite impossible for an outsider to judge what is happening and even more so what people are thinking and feeling. Many people avoid saying what they really feel. Others who are prepared to face the consequences of frank statement do not find newspapers or presses who will help them in the process.

Thus it is not possible for anyone to say at a particular moment which viewpoint will prevail if perfect freedom of expression was given. We can only go by our general knowledge of the country and her people. From such knowledge as I possess of my countrymen and countrywomen, both of the middle classes and the working and agricultural classes, I am quite convinced that never, at any rate since the revolt of 1857, has there been such extraordinary bitterness against the British Government and such a passionate desire to be rid of it as exists today. For reasons of tactics some people may express themselves in a moderate or in an ambiguous way but their feelings are not fundamentally different from those of others. I admit that there are small groups who are afraid of real democracy in India because they fear that their special privileges and interests will suffer thereby. But these small groups apart, there is a universal desire for Indian independence That is to say, a complete elimination of every vestige of imperial control.

This is very natural and you can find similar phenomena in many other countries where nationalism has grown as a reaction to imperialism. Thanks to Mr. Gandhi, the bitterness of nationalism has been largely toned down and specially there is hardly any feeling against individuals. But all history shows us that nationalism and imperialism are conflicting forces and there can be no compromise between them.

I should like you to appreciate that this is not a conflict between India and England, much less is it one between the Indian people and the British people. The conflict is with a certain system called imperialism which the British Government represents today in India and elsewhere. With that system, in the very nature of things, India cannot make peace because that system is based and exists solely by the exploitation of a subject country. If England changed her form and method of government and dropped all taint of imperialism from it there would be little difficulty in the two countries cooperating for a common purpose. But the purpose must be a common one before there can be cooperation. Between imperialist England and nationalist India there is no common ground. It is from this point of view that I said that it was inevitable that India should sever her present connection with the British Empire.

I think that is the view of the vast majority of my fellow countrymen. Personally I am perfectly prepared to have a referendum or a plebiscite taken on this point and to accept its decision. But I want you, for a moment, to eliminate personal views and to consider the question historically and objectively. If you do so, I am sure that, inevitably, you will arrive at the conclusion I have done. We are living in the midst of great movements and vast economic and other forces which seem to be almost beyond human control. To imagine that a few odd individuals can change the destiny of nations by what they think or what they do not think is an out of date notion.

You told me that by no possibility can I achieve the object I have in view; nor can I have more than an infinitesimal proportion of the Indian population to support me. It is not a question of people supporting me or anyone else but of standing for an idea or an objective which for the moment some of us may represent. We may come or go but that idea remains and continues to move masses. I can only assure you of my conviction that that idea is bound to triumph within a reasonable time and the more the triumph is delayed the more radical and far-reaching it will be.

I have not the slightest feeling of hostility to the English people. As you perhaps know I was educated at Harrow and at Trinity College, Cambridge, and I have always had a warm corner in my heart for English friends and English ways. It can be no pleasure to me to carry on in a way which brings conflict and suffering. But the conflict is not of my creation nor indeed do I say that it is a British creation. It has been created by the march of events. If we want to resolve it and to end it we have to approach the question with a right historical and economic perspective and to face facts as they are and not as we would have them to be.

I am glad that we agree on two points: that the White Paper is thoroughly unwelcome to the people in India and secondly that the fate of India must be settled by the Indians themselves. This is indeed a common ground for meeting. I am prepared to cooperate with anybody anywhere on this basis If the British Government also approached the Indian problem on this basis I have no doubt that a solution would be found, of the nationalist problem at least, without much difficulty. It is the denial in theory and in practice of the right of Indians to settle their future that has given rise to so much trouble.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

16. On the Agreement with Lancashire Mills[1]

I think I have no right to say anything from the Swadeshi Exhibition platform as I did not take any part in its organization. My non-participation in its activities did not mean that I did not take interest in swadeshi. I am very much interested in swadeshi but since I am engaged in the struggle for freedom, I feel that I should concentrate my full energy in that struggle and should not divert my attention by associating myself with any other movement, however good it might be for the country.

Of late a question has arisen whether the Indian mill cloth should be allowed to be exhibited and sold in the swadeshi exhibitions or not. Some years ago, the Congress issued certificates to the Indian mills on their agreeing to certain conditions, one of which was that they would cooperate in the country's struggle for freedom. About 90 per cent of the mills signed those conditions, but it was discovered subsequently that the proprietors of many of the mills forgot the conditions and acted against them; and the latest instance of their deplorable conduct is the action of the millowners of Bombay in entering into a pact with Lancashire.[2] How far that agreement was fair is not the question, but the mere fact of their entering into a pact with Lancashire when the struggle for freedom was on, amounted to their being opposed to the interests of the country. It is, therefore, necessary that the

1 Speech at the All India Swadeshi Exhibition, Allahabad, 9 November 1933 The Leader, 11 November 1933.

2 H.P. Mody, on behalf of the Bombay millowners, signed an agreement with Sir William Clare-Lees, the representative of Lancashire interests. It conceded that India would not seek the same degree of protection against Britain as against other foreign interests and Indian millowners agreed not to make fresh proposals regarding duties on imports of British goods if the general surcharge imposed in October 1931 were removed.

traders dealing in cloth should express their resentment against the act in question of the Bombay millowners.

Such a conduct of the proprietors of the mills has given rise to the question whether mill cloth should be allowed in swadeshi exhibitions or not and the Charkha Sangh decided not to permit khaddar bhandars to participate in exhibitions, which allowed the sale of mill cloth. But as the Allahabad Swadeshi Committee had already given stalls to the dealers of mill cloth also beforehand, special permission was given to the khaddar bhandars to participate in the exhibition this year on the understanding that in future mill cloth would not be allowed in the exhibition.

I am not against the Indian mill cloth or other Indian industries but the point is that those who are opposed to the interests of the country should not be helped.

17. To K.R. Luckmidas[1]

Allahabad
November 10, 1933

Dear Mr. Luckmidas,[2]

I have your letter with its enclosures.[3] What I said about the Indian states system represented my exact and well thought out views on the subject. I do not think the system can be reformed. It must be and will be ended.

As for your scheme of constructive work, I do not think it is possible to undertake any scheme of the kind in the midst of a national struggle of life and death which is going on in India at present.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. JN Correspondence, NMML.
2. Editor, Modern India Thinks, (1932).
3. In his letter of 6 November 1933 he suggested a scheme of constructive work such as improving the conditions of the depressed classes and granting financial assistance to educational institutions with the cooperation of the states.

18. On the Congress Programme[1]

The programme of the Congress is dynamic enough, but it is perfectly true we are passing through a period of lull and the masses are not participating in direct action. As a matter of fact a large number of persons, far larger than is stated in government statements, have offered civil disobedience in the course of the last two months or so and gone to prison. In the province of Bihar, my information is, and this is not up to date, that over 800 such persons have gone to prison. In the United Provinces and other provinces also, in numerous places individuals continue to offer satyagraha. The number of all these taken together is considerable, but the question of number is not very important at this juncture.

We realise that we cannot suddenly develop a mass movement which can upset the machinery of government. The choice before us and the country is between the struggle even at a low pitch and gradual drifting towards some form of cooperation with government. There is no middle way. So far as the Congress is concerned it is today committed to the former policy and it stands for no compromise with imperialism

Those who criticise the Congress programme have so far made no suggestion of an effective alternative programme. There are some, of course, who are pining away to enter the stately portals of the council chamber, but we leave these gentlemen out of consideration for the moment because it is obvious that the question does not arise at present and will not arise for some years. The cry that a change of programme is needed means only one thing, that the only programme we have should be scrapped. The slogan that we should fight on all fronts also means just one thing and that is that we should give up the struggle on the front we are fighting. All these are negative policies and cannot even be considered so long as there is any fight in the country.

I should like to assure our friends and critics that there is plenty of fight and life left in large numbers of us and we shall carry on in an aggressive, persistent and defiant way so far as the struggle with imperialism is concerned and that we will not compromise with it. If they can suggest any effective programme of struggle we shall willingly consider it. It is easy enough for those who want a change of programme to take the necessary steps to bring this about. For many weeks I have been inviting them to do so but my invitation has not been accepted.

1 Interview to the press, Allahabad, 11 November 1933 The Tribune, 17 November 1933

19. To P. Nageswara Rao[1]

Allahabad
14.11.33

Dear Mr. Nageswara Rao,[2]
I have your letter with its enclosures. I do not understand what you mean by asking me to give permission to Mr. Giri to carry on work. He does not require permission from me for any work. He can certainly carry on as he thinks right.

India has entered a certain historical stage in her struggle for freedom. That stage is a revolutionary stage when the usual constitutional and legal activities are not possible. People who talk about these organisational activities do not realise where we stand today.

There is no question of my going on tour all over India. This suggestion itself betrays an ignorance of present-day conditions in India.

Most of my work has been in rural areas. A recent conference of the U.P. Congress workers decided to devote its energies almost entirely to rural areas.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. Home Department (Political) File No 4/19/33, National Archives of India.
2. A resident of Machilipatnam in Andhra Pradesh

20. To Mahatma Gandhi[1]

Allahabad
20.11.33

My dear Bapu,
I am sorry for the delay in writing to you. It is difficult to know where to write as you are moving about, and I have recently had a full share of work which has given me no breathing time—meetings, consultations, workers coming, peasants etc., and there is a huge correspondence without any staff to deal with it. I am afraid I am guilty or have been guilty of not answering letters promptly and Jamnalalji is entitled to complain. But I thought that my letters to you were bound to be shared by him.

1 Home Department (Political) File No 4/19/33, National Archives of India.

About the Swaraj Bhawan Trust matters[2] you are perfectly right that I should refer to the trustees. It was my intention to do so and I shall now take the necessary steps.

I am very sorry to learn that you cannot find time—except three hours on a Monday afternoon—to give to a consultation with some of us. I suppose we must be content with that. I feel that we must meet to clear up certain matters—not fundamental policies but procedure. I was waiting to hear from Ansari. As he did not write I wired to him and he replied that we might meet on December 4th at Jubbulpore but he preferred December 10th at Delhi. I sent an answer to him that December 4th was late enough and we should meet then. To that I have had no reply. I am now provisionally fixing 4th and informing others accordingly.

As for the A I C.C. it still hangs in the air though a requisition is threatened from time to time. I think it will materialise. I feel that you should attend it even though you may not take an active part in it. If necessary your tour programme might be varied to fit in with it. Changes in the programme have already been made and this is not impossible. However it is for you to decide.

I have just received intimation that some old railway and other shares standing in my name have been attached on account of my income tax. The value at par of these shares was about Rs. 20,000. I suppose the present value is much less—probably about 13,000/- or 14,000/-. Previously they had realised other moneys from a sale of a car etc.

I wonder if you have noticed my gentle comment on the Hindu Mahasabha and the still more gentle rejoinder.[3] I have enjoyed them greatly.

Yours affectionately,
Jawaharlal

2 Concerning the working and financial position of Swaraj Bhawan Hospital, see post, item 95.
3 See post, items 77 and 78.

21. To Roger Baldwin[1]

Allahabad
November 23, 1933

My dear Roger,

It is good to hear from you again after a long interval and I was glad to receive your letter of October 19th together with a copy of the letter you had sent many months ago to Mr. Gandhi.[2]

No arguments of yours are necessary to convince me of the desirability of having a responsible and capable Congress representative in America who can keep in touch with developments in India. I am prepared to do a great deal to bring this about and, if it is at all possible, I shall get it done whenever an opportunity arises.

But I must not give you a wrong impression of what I can do. In regard to this matter we are rather helpless at present. Our organisations and committees are illegal and cannot function normally. This of course does not mean that we cannot function, and this by itself would not be a bar to our taking any step abroad. But this does mean that we have to carry on a hard struggle at home and most of our good people are usually in prison. It is highly unlikely that any prominent colleague of ours would be given passport facilities to go abroad. Then again the censorship of mails makes it difficult to communicate with the outside world.

There is another vital difficulty. The growth of our national movement has reached a stage when it is likely to be in permanent and intensive conflict with imperialism. As the struggle grows more intense the weaker elements fall away and a seeming disruption goes off. As a matter of fact this makes for real strength. But it does create a certain confusion in people's minds. It is a conflict between those who can only work on constitutional and legal lines and those who have come to the conclusion that it is impossible to go ahead within the framework of the existing political order.

That is the political side. Then there is the social and economic aspect. World events as well as our national struggle itself have led to a rapid development of social forces in India. Class cleavages are becoming more apparent. The nationalist ideology is being partly

1 JN Correspondence, NMML.
2 In his letter of 17 February 1933, Baldwin had suggested that a representative of the Congress be sent to the United States replaced by a social ideology, generally vague but here and there definite and clear. This also helps to produce cleavages.

You will thus see that we are in a curious state of flux. On the one side the civil disobedience movement is going on, though at a much lower pitch than before, on the other there are various groups pulling in different directions. Ordinarily the full Congress would meet and arrive at a majority decision. But the Congress cannot meet today in a normal manner owing to government restrictions. All attempted meetings have really been occasions for civil disobedience when delegates have been forcibly dispersed by the police or arrested and convicted. It is possible that the All India Congress Committee might meet in the course of the next month and perhaps this will help to clarify the situation. It might on the other hand make the confusion worse confounded.

Under these circumstances it is not easy to say what exactly the Congress would stand for if it has the chance to express its opinion. Mr. Gandhi's recent fasts and decisions have added to the confusion and many of us do not follow his logic or understand his reasoning for them. None the less he remains, as before, the dominating personality so far as the masses are concerned.

Thus the question resolves itself into this. We are not in a position to nominate a person who can be called a representative of the Congress. Even if we could do so, he could only represent one set of opinion in the Congress and anyhow he is not going to be permitted by the British Government to leave India.

I feel that what I have written above will not throw much light on the Indian situation and might even succeed in confusing you more than enlightening you. But the fault lies with the situation itself which is confusing. I look upon all this as a real sign of growth and am in no way perturbed.

My sister got married last month[3] and has gone off to live in Bombay.

With all good wishes,

Ever yours,
Jawaharlal Nehru

3 Krishna Nehru was married to G. P. Hutheesing on 20 October 1933

22. Interview to the Press[1]

I do not know anything about the letter referred to in the message from Karachi.[2] There can be no question of Gandhiji or my being 'brought round' to call a meeting of the A.I.C.C. because we were 'round' all the time. The meeting would have been held long ago if but a handful of members had asked us to do so. In spite of my repeated invitations for a requisition, I have so far received just one postcard from a member of the A.I.C.C. from Bihar asking me to add his name to a requisition for the meeting. Some others, like Swami Govindananda, have made statements in the press but have not followed it by any written demand to me. I telegraphed to Swami Govindananda asking him to send the requisition even on his own behalf and suggested that names could be separately added to it later, but he has not even acknowledged my letter or telegram. Quite apart from an ordinary requisition, a member of the Working Committee stands on a special footing. He has only to ask me in his individual capacity to summon a meeting and I, as General Secretary, am prepared to do so without any further requisition. I do not see, therefore, why any member of the Working Committee should take the trouble to issue circular letters as mentioned in the Karachi message. All he needs to do is to write or wire to me and his wishes will be fulfilled. I do not know what truth there is in the Karachi message. It seems to me rather extraordinary that any member of the Working Committee should carry on a propaganda in this way behind the back of the executive of which he is a member. It is still more extraordinary for anyone to talk about unanimity over a resolution of the kind suggested in the Karachi message, when it is notorious that such a resolution is not only against the present policy of the Congress for which, in theory at least, the Working Committee is responsible but which has also been openly supported by large numbers of prominent Congressmen. If anyone, whether he is a member of the Working Committee or not,

1. Allahabad, 23 November 1933 The Leader, 25 November 1933.
2. A press report from Karachi on 24 November 1933, based on letters from Nariman to prominent Congressmen, stated that Mahatma Gandhi and Jawaharlal had been 'brought round' to call a meeting of the A.I.C.C. the following month.

is labouring under this delusion I can only say that he is grievously mistaken and will have a rude awakening.

Again I repeat that the meeting of the A.I.C.C. will be convened as soon as a requisition reaches me or even a single member of the Working Committee demands it.

Question: Can't you, as General Secretary, convene a meeting of the A.I.C.C. on your initiative?

Jawaharlal Nehru: Of course under the constitution a member of the Working Committee cannot force the hands of the General Secretary in this way but I do not wish to stand on legal formalities or to raise any obstructions in the way of those who desire a change in the programme of the Congress. But I do feel that the initiative should come from those who desire such a change and not from me when I am not in favour of the change I trust that any A.I.C.C. member who wants this change will take the obvious and the normal course of asking me to convene the meeting instead of avoiding the step and criticising me for his own avoidance and also at the same time carrying on a propaganda which is not very fair to the Working Committee and is obviously subversive of discipline and organised activity.

23. To the Editor, Amrita Bazar Patrika[1]

Allahabad
November 24, 1933

Sir,

I feel that you have done me, perhaps unwittingly, an injustice in a reference to me in your leading article of November 23rd.[2] You say that "Pandit Jawaharlal seems to think that those who think in terms

1 Amrita Bazar Patrika, 28 November 1933.

2 The editorial demanded that Jawaharlal call the A.I.C.C. on his own initiative. It could either endorse the present Congress policy, or lead to the abandoning of individual civil disobedience, which in any case served only to put the Congress under an official ban of revolutionary change should not object to such secret functioning of the Congress." The average reader will naturally think that you have quoted my words within the inverted commas. As a matter of fact I never said anything about secret functioning, and even an inference was unjustified. What I said in the course of an article[3] was as follows.

> People forget sometimes that we are functioning abnormally. They discuss the constitutional issue in terms of normality or they criticise the Congress for its seeming inactivity, forgetting that the Congress has arrived at a certain stage of historical growth. It is not at present a constitutional or legal body and many of the safe and brave deeds that are performed on public platforms are no longer in its line. Constitutionalists naturally dislike this; they cannot function in an illegal atmosphere. But why should those who think in terms of revolutionary change object to this inevitable and desirable development?

I was not thinking at all of any secret activity when I wrote this. I was merely pointing out that when a national movement grows it reaches a stage when it must cease to be a constitutional movement, in the limited and governmental sense of the word, and come into conflict with various laws made to suppress it. Having arrived at that stage it cannot go back except by rendering itself wholly ineffective. My argument was addressed to the 'left' or advanced socialist criticism of some of my previous articles.

About the A.I.C.C. meeting may I inform you that in spite of my repeatedly declaring that I await a requisition or even separate signatures for a requisition, I have so far received only one postcard from a member in Bihar asking me to add his name to a requisition. Not a single other member has written to me definitely about it. Some individual members have certainly made statements in the press but they have refrained from following them up by accepting my invitation to write to me formally. Swami Govindananda, to give an instance, has made more than one press statement, and I wired and wrote to him to send me his requisition or even separate names for a requisition. But he has not even acknowledged my telegram or letter. I really fail to understand this extraordinary modesty and reluctance to adopt the natural and normal course. There seems to be some mystery about it. Is it that our friends who sometimes talk of the desirability of an A.I.C.C. meeting really do not want it?

3 See ante, section 1, item 3.

Bengal's quota of A.I.C.C. members is 48. Even some of these members, if they were so inclined, could send me the requisition. Why has not one of them written to me on the subject though I have invited them to do so? Perhaps, Sir, it might be worthwhile for you to try to convert some of our Bengal colleagues of the A.I.C.C. to your viewpoint.

I might repeat what I have already stated separately that I shall also convene an A.I.C.C. meeting if a single member of the Working Committee desires me to do so. The constitution may not compel me to do so but the wishes of a Working Committee colleague naturally weigh with me, as General Secretary, and I shall carry them out.

So far, however, the position is this: I have only a postcard from Bihar, and with all respect to the member who sent it, a single postcard is hardly evidence of a passionate desire among A.I.C.C. members to have a meeting.

Yours etc.,
Jawaharlal Nehru

24. To Members of the A.I.C.C.[1]

Dear Comrade,

Some controversy has arisen about the desirability of holding a meeting of the All India Congress Committee, and I venture to address you on the subject so that you may be informed of the existing position. Ordinarily it would have been my duty and privilege to convene such a meeting as we have not met for a long time now and much has happened during the past two years which demands attention. But, as you are aware, we are not living under normal conditions. A national struggle is being carried on and the Congress organisation has been functioning in an abnormal manner. Under these circumstances the responsibility for convening or not convening a meeting of the A.I.C.C. seemed to me to be a great one and naturally I took the advice of respected colleagues. The advice was conflicting. Under these circumstances it seemed to me, as General Secretary, to be the right course to leave the decision and initiative in the hands of the members themselves.

1. Allahabad, 24 November 1933. The Tribune, 26 November 1933

The constitutional way of doing so was to invite a requisition from thirty members as laid down by our rules. I made repeated statements in the press suggesting that such a requisition might be sent to me by those who desire a meeting to be held. In order to remove any technical difficulties in their way I went so far to suggest that individual members of the A.I.C.C. might send me their signatures separately. In spite of this invitation no requisition has been sent to me and only one solitary member from Bihar has written to me asking that his name might be added to any requisition that might be received.

I have further made it clear that if even a single member of the Working Committee wants me to convene the A.I.C.C., I shall do so in deference to the wishes of a respected colleague. This is the position.

I have not desired, and I do not desire, to place the slightest obstruction in the way of those who wish to have a meeting under the peculiar circumstances of today. I wished to have the direction of A.I.C.C. members themselves in the matter and I have made the path clear for such direction.

We do not wish to enter into the controversial aspects of the question or of vital issues that the A.I.C.C. may have to consider when it meets. My function, as General Secretary of the A.I.C.C. and a member of the Congress executive, is to carry out the Congress policy and take my directions from the majority of the members of the A.I.C.C. I trust that other members will also avoid a needless and harmful controversy. It is possible that many members have changed their addresses during this long period. Many are in prison. I shall be grateful if those who are in a position to do so will intimate to me their correct addresses.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

25. To Rev. Dan Singh Chowdhury[1]

Allahabad
November 24, 1933

Dear Mr. Chowdhury,
Thank you for your letter and good wishes. It may be that merely courting imprisonment does not carry us far. But it seems to me that we have arrived at a stage when every effective action involves the risk of imprisonment. To avoid that risk leads to ineffectiveness.
With all good wishes,

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 JN Correspondence, NMML.

26. To Ranglidas M. Kapadia[1]

Allahabad
November 24, 1933

Dear Mr. Kapadia,[2]
Forgive me for the delay in answering your letter. I was glad to read about your general views on the political situation. This situation seems a little complex and confusing but essentially it is clear enough. The very fact that it appears confusing is a sign of growth. We are growing out of a narrow and purely nationalist ideology.
My mother is better now and she is making slow progress.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 JN Correspondence, NMML.
2 Editor, The States People, the journal of the All India States' People's Conference

27. Speech to the Kanpur Swadeshi League[1]

It is not without hesitation that I have accepted the invitation of the Swadeshi League to visit the exhibition and to receive a welcome address I have no time to waste over swadeshi exhibitions but that does not mean that I have no sympathies with the aims and objects of the Swadeshi League. There is one thing which is very much responsible for my taking no part in the Swadeshi League movement and the Swadeshi League exhibition. That one thing is the presence of the mill cloth shops in the exhibition. I want you to remember those days when the satyagraha movement was at its height and the millowners willingly or unwillingly had to sign the Congress pledge to the effect that they would do their best to promote the cause of Indian nationalism. Now as the Congress fight has become a bit slack they have taken advantage of it and have not only broken their pledges which they had given upon their word of honour but have also begun to do things and enter into agreements which are directly opposed to the interests of the country.

I wish to point out to you the recent agreement entered into by the Millowners' Association represented by Mr. Mody on the one hand and the Lancashire Mill Association on the other hand. I recall those days when Mr. Mody visited my place often for certain alterations in the Congress pledge. Those days were when the Congress programme of foreign cloth boycott was at its height and Mr. Mody would not have dared to enter into such treacherous agreements as he has done recently. All these things are responsible for my attitude in treating the mill cloth on the same footing as any other foreign cloth. Consequently I do not subscribe to the policy of encouraging exhibitions where mill cloth is allowed either for sale or for display. I have no sympathy for millowners. They try to fill their pockets at the expense of labourers.

1 30 November 1933 From The Searchlight, 6 December 1933

discuss the question of holding a meeting of the All India Congress Committee. The meeting was held simply to enable some friends to see one another and to exchange views on some important matters. For instance, I had not met Maulana Abul Kalam Azad since his release from jail, and the Jubbulpore meeting brought us together.

32. Statement to the Press[1]

A casual remark made in lighter vein by Gandhiji has apparently been taken very seriously by the gentlemen of the press. At a meeting of Delhi Congress workers, when Gandhiji was pressed for time and had to go away and many questions were still being put to him, he remarked that these questions might be put to me, as he had given a general power of attorney to me. This remark has been given prominence in the press and all sorts of inferences have been drawn from it. As a matter of fact it has little significance. Gandhiji has been pleased to make similar remarks about me and others on many previous occasions. Even leaders of great movements must be permitted to relax occasionally and indulge in humour.

The Congress is not something that can be handed over by anybody to anyone else. Gandhiji no doubt is our respected leader and I have the honour to be the General Secretary of the Congress. As such, I have certain duties to perform and Gandhiji referred to these in his remarks.

1. Allahabad, 16 December 1933 The Tribune, 18 December 1933.

33. On Arrests of Congressmen in the U.P.[1]

The recent convictions of some Congressmen in Allahabad,[2] Shri Sheo Murti Singh, Shri Feroze Gandhi[3] and others, for alleged no-rent

1 Statement to the press, Allahabad, 25 December 1933 The Leader, 28 December 1933

2 Feroze Gandhi was arrested on 8 December 1933 and Sheo Murti Singh on 13 December 1933 for "instigating" people not to pay rent and taxes. Both denied the charge of instigation but were sentenced to six months rigorous imprisonment each

3. (1912 1960), married Indira Nehru, 1942, member, Lok Sabha, 1952-60.

It is true that there is a great deal of political depression in the country at present but I do not think that conditions are quite so bad as you suggest. We are passing through an inevitable period of lull. It is perfectly true that under present conditions the existing programme of the Congress is not attractive or dynamic in the sense that it moves large numbers. No programme can be dynamic during a period of depression. But there can be programmes which are potentially dynamic and which can develop rapidly as soon as conditions change. I think the Congress programme of direct action has that potentiality in it....

30. On the Repressive Policy of Government[1]

So long as the bread and unemployment problems of the millions of poverty stricken peasants and educated youth remain unsolved, the freedom fight cannot be stopped even by Mahatma Gandhi.

I admit the temporarily prevailing dullness but am satisfied at the public zeal, activity and enthusiasm, considering the same as the very sign of Congress immortality. Although the continuous ordinance regime has paralysed the fight for freedom and outward activities it has failed to kill the Congress, which still breathes.

The present fight has taught us to distinguish between the true patriots and black legs who in peace time posed as nationalists but deserted the camp when the fight began.

I am sure the country's prestige will never be lowered and the flag will fly as high as ever.

1 Speech in reply to the address of welcome presented by the Jabalpur Municipality, 5 December 1933. From The Leader, 7 December 1933

31. Interview at Allahabad[1]

It is a wrong impression that appears to have been formed in the public mind, that the meeting was held at Jubbulpore principally to 1 7 December 1933. From The Hindu, 7 December 1933.

by the government or the local authorities. It is clear that the official world is mightily afraid of the truth reaching the rural areas and wishes to isolate them from the rest of the world and prevent them from organising and thus to hold them in its grip.

34. Message to the Rajputana States' People's Convention[1]

Recent events in India and England have made it clear that all the reactionary forces, British and Indian, are combining together to prevent or delay the freedom of the Indian people. These forces have tried to suppress our freedom movement and the White Paper is an attempt to consolidate the hold of all these vested interests. Nothing is more significant than the utterly reactionary attitude of the Indian princes and the backing it received from the government.

It is probable that free India will be a federation but it is quite certain that nothing even remotely resembling freedom can come out of the federation that has been suggested in the White Paper. This proposed federation is merely meant to prevent India's growth and enchain her still further to feudal and out of date systems. It is quite impossible to progress from this federation to freedom without breaking the federation to pieces

It seems to me, therefore, that all of us, whether in the Indian states or the rest of India, must appreciate this position clearly and realise that our only course is to reject utterly any such bogus federation. We must stick to the completest form of independence which means complete absence of foreign control as well as a fully democratic form of government. The Indian states system, as it exists today, must go root and branch There can be no compromise with these relics of a barbarous age.

Your convention will deal with many matters of present-day importance such as the States' Protection Bill[2] and the repression that is going on in the Indian states. These loom large before you but they are, after all, the inevitable products of the system as it exists today. Therefore,

1 The Bombay Chronicle, 1 January 1934, reprinted in Recent Essays and Writings, (Allahabad, 1934), pp 138 139 The convention was held in Beawar on 29 December 1933

2 This bill sought to prevent criticism in British Indian newspapers, of the administration in Indian states and entry of demonstrators into the states activities raise interesting issues and throw a revealing light on the mentality and attitude of the British authorities. Convictions of Congressmen have been common enough for many years and those who defy the law do so with a full knowledge of the consequences. But often enough these convictions are brought about in such a manner as to deserve public notice and the recent convictions are particularly deserving of this notice. My colleague, Shri Purushottamdas Tandon has already drawn attention to Shri Sheo Murti Singh's case. His argument is further strengthened by Shri Feroze Gandhi's case.

In both the cases there was a clear denial on the part of the parties concerned and they said that they had not preached non-payment of rent or revenue as this formed no part of the present Congress programme. Congressmen do not usually hide their light or their programme under a bushel and when non-payment of rent and revenue was their programme they proclaimed it openly enough. When this part of the programme was given up or suspended they proclaimed this fact also openly. It is obvious that such programmes are mass programmes and are not and cannot be confined to individual effort. The trying magistrate accepted the fact that the no-rent campaign was no part of the present Congress programme. But he preferred to believe the halting statement of a shivering and frightened chowkidar (who could not even recognize Feroze Gandhi) and another village witness in the face of the clear denials of responsible and well-known public workers. I suppose he is entitled to believe or disbelieve any witness however unreasonable this may appear to be. We have grown accustomed to this, and certainly no Congressman complains of being sentenced and sent to prison. We have trained ourselves for that and prison has become a part of the day's work.

But what deserves notice is this: under cover of stopping a no-rent campaign every other activity in the villages is attempted to be stopped. The law as it prevails in our province may be bad enough but where even this extraordinary legislation does not go far enough, it is extended to meet every contingency. It is so easy to put up a couple of policemen or village folk to say that a certain person said that rent or revenue should not be paid It is immaterial what they actually said or did. The weapon is good enough for any purpose.

Thus we have it that any activity, any approach to the rural areas, is to be stopped by the plea that it is part of the no-rent campaign. Congressmen do not mind this for they will carry on their work and willingly face the consequences. And on no account will they leave their helpless and downtrodden village comrades in the lurch. But it is well for the public to realise the inner significance of the action taken little choice left to us, though it is little enough. We can avoid immediate trouble sometimes, though not always. The question therefore that each one has to consider, leaving out the larger issues, is how are we going to face the issue—defensively or aggressively, unwillingly or willingly. The result from the personal point of view is much the same. Ultimately the decision is not the result of pure logic but of instinct or the inner urge. Each person will answer according to his or her temperament and each one will have to answer for himself or herself.

In Bengal today it is hardly possible for anyone to be even quietly sympathetic with the national movement. They are forced to repudiate it openly, to salute the Union Jack, to offer welcomes and dalis to British troops, and to humiliate themselves in a variety of ways. This will happen in the rest of India also and the more defensive we are the sooner will it happen. What then are we to do? To retract and recant and forswear? We may not be faced with this alternative today but to some extent it is there even now. The choice is clear-cut and it is becoming increasingly difficult to remain in the middle.

I think the best course for you now would be to carry on for the next month in an unobtrusive way. You can see that the office papers and accounts are put in proper order. For the rest Ramsaran[3] should do the active work. If you do not indulge in any overt act I do not think that there is much chance of your being arrested. An odd risk of course is always there. At the end of the month, when there is another meeting, you might explain your position frankly and ask to be relieved of the secretaryship. Absolute frankness, I think, is best and we who have been associated with each other for so many years can fully appreciate each other's difficulties.

As for the new arrangements, I doubt if it will be desirable to make Mohanlal secretary as soon as he comes out of prison. Of course he will work and help in a variety of ways, but he should be given some chance of looking round before he goes back again. It is obvious that the person who takes up the secretaryship must be prepared to go off to prison at any moment. He cannot be a secret secretary. He has to announce the fact and face the consequences.

I feel that under the circumstances Narendra Deva might be asked to take up the secretaryship (in spite of my jocular remark to the contrary). He may not be able to travel about much but otherwise

3 A Congress worker of Moradabad, joined Kashi Vidyapith in 1923 as professor of economics, member, U.P. Legislative Assembly, 1937 52, member, Lok Sabha, 1952 62.

I hope, you will frame your objective clearly and uncompromisingly and draw up your programme accordingly.

The struggle of the Indian states' people is peculiar to them but essentially it has a great deal in common with the national struggle for Indian freedom. And this national struggle again has much in common with the world struggle for the freedom of the oppressed and exploited. I hope your convention will take the larger viewpoint and face the issues bravely, taking up the side of those oppressed and exploited everywhere.

35. To Sri Prakasa[1]

Allahabad
Jan. 11, 1934

My dear Prakasa,

Your letter has just reached me and I hasten to reply so that Nageshar can go back by the day train.

I am sorry we could not have a fuller talk when you were here. But your letter has made the position clear. It was not quite clear to me when the question of secretaryship arose.[2] I had not previously thought of your undertaking the job at present but when your name was proposed and you were agreeable, I concluded that you were willing to shoulder the burden and the inevitable risk involved. That risk followed from your acceptance of the office, not from the subsequent publication of your name. Under the circumstances it would have been better for you to keep out of office for there can be no mere figure-heads today and even figure heads have to face the risk, sometimes even more so than others who work in the background. I appreciate your difficulties. The difficulties are personal in the case of each one of us but essentially they are impersonal. We are all crushed in the mill of existing conditions—most of us, like the peasantry who suffer most, are unwilling victims. But willing or unwilling, they get crushed and there is no way out for them except the way of revolution. Revolutions occur because of this. Some of us have a

1 Sri Prakasa Papers, N.M.M.L.

2. Sri Prakasa was the general secretary of the United Provinces Provincial Congress Committee from 1928, but now wished to relinquish it for personal reasons.

he ought to be an excellent choice. He can be helped of course by Ramsaran and Birbal Singh.[4] You might speak to Narendra Deva about this and tell him of my suggestion. It is unlikely that I shall be available for the next meeting.

As for myself, please do not trouble yourself, and ask Shiva Prasad not to do so. I am quite clear as to what I should do and this gives me peace of mind. I have been perfectly prepared to go back to prison from the day of my discharge. Now, I am not only prepared but I am eager to do so. My instinct tells me that I must take a step forward and instinct in this matter is a safe guide for me.

Few things have pleased me in recent months quite so much as the riddance of the jewellery.[5] I have developed a horror of such things and I would prefer throwing them away to keeping them. It is true that we have sold them at a fraction of the original price. That was inevitable.

I am afraid I cannot offer you any useful advice about your boys' education. Even in normal times this is a difficult enough problem, now it is almost insoluble, at any rate satisfactorily. Greenlees is a curious person and he seems to have got stuck up in the C.P. I cannot say how suitable he is for the work you have. Perhaps he might be good at it. But for the moment he seems to be out of reach. Your idea of starting a school is a good one if it can be arranged. Only, such undertakings absorb so much time and energy.

The school Indira is at in Vile Parle, Bombay, is fairly good but being a small private affair it is expensive. The monthly bill, including board and some extra tuition, comes up to about Rs. 100/-. The boarding part is the expensive part. Good food is given and there is plenty of attention. The people who run it are not only nationalists but socialists and some modern methods of teaching are employed, such as the pupils being taken individually and helped to grow mentally. Examinations are not stressed, though, when necessary, they are kept in view. If you sent your two boys there the expense would probably be about Rs. 160/- a month but I am not sure. Then there would be travelling expenses during holidays etc. If you like you can write direct and enquire from Jahangir J. Vakil, Pupils' Own School, 22 Ghorbunder Road, Vile Parle, via Bombay.

4 (b 1899), participated in noncooperation movement, member, U.P. Legislative Assembly, 1937 52, and Lok Sabha, 1952 57

5. In his Autobiography Jawaharlal wrote, "To improve the immediate financial situation we decided to sell off my wife's jewellery, the silver and other similar articles that we possessed"

I am glad you wrote to me fully and frankly. I appreciate your position thoroughly and I am only sorry that I was partly responsible for placing you in an awkward position.

Love,

Yours affly.,
Jawaharlal

36. A Shadow Conference[1]

Some friends have asked me for my opinion on the proposed "All Parties Conference" which has been suggested in Bombay. I should have thought that so far as Congressmen were concerned, or those who think along Congress lines, there was no room for doubt. We stand for independence and the fullest self-determination by the people of India without any interference by an alien authority. It is obvious that any attempt to consider the White Paper and to try to improve it, is incompatible with independence and self-determination. It is also incompatible with what is termed Dominion Status or even a small measure of political or economic freedom. Only those who are prepared to give up their oft repeated objective, forget their pledges, and accept, not for today and tomorrow but for the distant future, the steel chains of British imperialism and political and financial and military control, can discuss the White Paper and its offshoots. For Congressmen and others who work for a fundamental change in India there is going to be no compromise on this issue whatever happens. For them therefore to associate themselves with any attempt to modify the White Paper would be a betrayal of all they stand for and a strengthening of the reactionary elements in the country. Whatever the motives of those who are sponsoring the so-called All Parties Conference may be, there can be no doubt to any political realist that their action is harmful to the country and in the interests of British imperialism.

The White Paper, even with all the modifications that have been suggested by its liberal critics, would be worthy only of the waste-paper basket, where no doubt it will find a refuge sooner or later. But it is well known that no modifications are likely to materialize and yet those very gentlemen who tell us so, meet together solemnly to discuss modifications. Self-deception could hardly go further; or is it that their urge somehow to cooperate with British imperialism is so great that it dims their vision?

1 Statement to the press, 11 January 1934. The Tribune, 13 January 1934

It seems to me clear that between those who continuously think of this cooperation and are always prepared to submit to every decision of the ruling power, and those who aim at independence, there is nothing in common. What are we to discuss if we meet together?

Some newspapers, who have done me the honour of publishing my recent article on the constituent assembly, have put me a question. All this is very well, they say, but what of the present? I am afraid I can give no answer that can satisfy those who can think or act only in terms of an impotent constitutionalism. Constitutionalism is dead and worms have already been at it and there is going to be no resurrection Not even the National Congress can revive it by resolution for we have passed that historical stage of growth. Every national movement, every social movement, when it is strong enough to endanger the existing order, passes that stage and cannot go back, though individuals and groups may collapse or retire. An impasse is created and this continues till the existing order breaks down. To suggest that the impasse should be resolved by an attempt to revive the corpse of constitutionalism is to ignore both historical precedent and existing facts, for the conditions that created the impasse continue and function more intensely and thus bring about a worse impasse. The only way out is to struggle through to the other side. Therefore the only possible answer to the question, 'What of the present?' is: Carry on the struggle for freedom without compromise or going back or faltering.

No person who understands the implications of a constituent assembly imagines that it can meet under the distinguished patronage of the British Government. Its patrons can only be the people of India. And because today the Indian people are held down by the imperialist machine, speaking and writing and meeting and the press are suppressed and only a faithful echo of our rulers' wishes is permitted, there can be no constituent assembly. It will come in good time when the Indian people gain the upper hand. Not till then. And meanwhile all talk of "All Parties Conference" and "Conventions" is so much shadow talk not even resulting in shadow action.

37. On Social and Village Uplift Work[1]

I find from some newspapers that I am supposed to have recommended social and village uplift work to my colleagues and that I myself propose to indulge in this activity. I have no such ambition nor have my colleagues of the United Provinces. This kind of safe and pious activity can well be left to old ladies. My colleagues and I work for the freedom of India and for the ending of all political and economic domination of the Indian masses, and we are prepared for the consequences of our action. We do not believe in safety first.

1. Statement to the press, Allahabad, 12 January 1934 The Bombay Chronicle, 13 January 1934

38. Interview to the Press[1]

Question. What is the object of your visit to Calcutta?

Jawaharlal Nehru: I have come to Calcutta partly because of my wife's ill health in order to consult doctors and partly to meet old friends and colleagues to find out how matters stand in Bengal. We in other provinces feel keenly the misfortunes of our countrymen in Bengal, although the whole country is at present in the grip of repression of the severest type. There is no doubt that Bengal has had to bear the brunt of this in common with the North West Frontier Province. I should like to convey to our brothers and sisters of Bengal, in so far as a single individual can do so, how very much the rest of India is watching with anxious interest the happenings in Bengal and how much they desire to show their solidarity with this province.

1 Calcutta, 16 January 1934 From Advance, 17 January 1934.

Q: Does not the present-day talk of internationalism stand in the way of our national struggle for freedom?

JN: That all depends on what one means by internationalism. I am myself a convinced internationalist because the world today is international in character and I do not think it is possible for nations in these days to function separately. There is an attempt at present at what is called economic internationalism, but I doubt very much if it can succeed. I think any attempt to reduce the international character of the world is a step backward, progress can only come through more and more internationalism. But there can be no real internationalism unless the component parts are entirely free. Therefore, the essential preliminary to internationalism is the ending of all foreign exploitation of one nation by another.

So far as we are concerned it is folly to talk of internationalism when our country is dependent and exploited. Only an independent India can take an effective part in an international order. Thus though we must look forward to an international order, we can only reach it by achieving national independence first. Any talk of internationalism, which ignores this issue, is merely weak and sentimental talk which means nothing at all. It may even result in further exploitation of India by the international organisations. Thus the League of Nations, which is supposed to be an international organisation, but is really controlled by a few governments of great powers, in effect, helps and tries to perpetuate the exploitation of subject nations.

Q: What do you think of the Harijan movement?

JN: There can be no two opinions about the desirability of putting an end to all such things as untouchability and the like, and because the Harijan movement aims at this it must be welcome. Personally, as I consider the political struggle to be of great importance, I devote all my energies to that as well as to the economic struggle.

Q: Would you please give a message for young Bengal?

JN: My message to young Bengal is the same message that I wish to give to the whole of India. All of us stand or fall together, or, to quote a famous writer, "Let us hang together or else we hang separately." The struggle must and will be carried on and young Bengal will, I have no doubt, play the same leading part in it as old Bengal has done in the past.

The problem of India is one and indivisible. It cannot be separated into provinces, or even as between Indian states and the rest of India. The sorrows and misfortunes of one province are the sorrows and misfortunes of the whole of India, likewise the triumph of one province is the triumph of all India. Therefore, though we may function in separate areas and spheres we work for the same ideal, namely, the salvation of the motherland.

Q: When are you going to Santiniketan and how long do you propose to stay there?

JN: I propose leaving for Santiniketan on the 19th instant, and the object of my visit is to pay my respects to the Poet.

Q: Is there not a danger that a large number of communalists will come in and spoil the object of the constituent assembly which you are ushering in?

JN: There is certainly the chance of some communalists coming in but they will undoubtedly find themselves in a minority and will be consequently powerless to act contrary to the country's interests. The majority of members of such an assembly elected on the largest franchise must necessarily be men who will be more representative in character than the so-called members of any self-styled group or party as they will have to come through the votes of the starving masses who will make it a point to see that their interests are safeguarded.

39. The Character of the National Struggle[1]

Mr. President and Friends,
Chance has brought me to Calcutta to be present at this meeting today. I welcomed that chance because I wished to associate myself with this meeting and when I was invited I gladly acceded to that request—not, I take it, that it was necessary for me or for any person coming from outside Bengal to assure you that we feel with you and that I am entirely at one with you on this question. But, still, I think it was desirable that someone should tell you something of the feelings of other people too, who live in the other provinces of India in regard to what is happening in Bengal, and I think, although I speak as an individual, I may well claim to represent the feelings of other people in other provinces and specially I think I claim to represent the feelings of my own colleagues of U P. And I tell you that when the news of these occurrences at Midnapur, Chittagong and other places came to us, it filled us with anger—flaming and blazing anger—which finds a very poor echo, if I may say so, in the resolution that has been put before you[2] There is nothing wrong in the resolution. I am not saying that the resolution is not correct but somehow I have been feeling so, sitting here and partly following the speeches and partly not, because to my misfortune I do not know your beautiful language well enough to follow it—but I have been thinking all this time about this attempt of an arrogant imperialist power to humiliate us—mind you, not the city of Midnapur, not the few people of Midnapur—to humiliate not Bengal but the whole of India—because it is a matter of the utmost humiliation to every Indian from Khyber Pass to Cape Comorin—how are we to meet this arrogant attempt? It is right that you and I should protest, and protest vehemently; and yet one feels a sense of helplessness and one's anger reacts and makes one fret and the desire to seek a remedy forces one to think as to what one should do. After all, you may here pass this resolution and perhaps appoint a committee to investigate and suggest measures, but do you feel that you have to meet something that is bigger than a mere resolution—something that requires more than a resolution of protest—something really that is beyond the power of individuals who may come in your way and touch you, because, remember, it is not a question of certain individuals in Midnapur or certain individuals in other parts of Bengal, of a certain individual whether he is the Governor or a constable—it is not a question of these people ill-treating you but it is ultimately a question of a system, a cruel and a vicious system that afflicts you, and anybody that fits himself into this system whether he may be His Excellency the Governor of Bengal or the panch or the chowkidar—they are all screws of the same machine. It is the machine that crushes you and crushes India. That is the problem before you. Why not face it and understand it? You simply pass a resolution of protest and you go to that machine and ask for redress —go to them and tell them that 'you are ill-treating us!' Do you think that is consistent with your dignity? I have nothing to do with that. If you have any self respect, seek a remedy with your own strength and your own people.

1 Speech at the Albert Hall, Calcutta, 17 January 1934 This and the following item are based on reports of the speeches prepared by police reporters and filed at Jawaharlal's trial on 12 February 1934.

2. The resolution protesting against the "enforced saluting of the Union Jack".

The other day I read and took the trouble to read 5 columns of a speech that was delivered by the commissioner of Burdwan—Mr. Burrows.[3] I was glad I read it because it was a most extraordinary and most amazing document that I ever came across. I felt when I read it what an excellent thing it would be for some nationalist organisation to publish it in a pamphlet form for wide distribution. I hope the suggestion will be taken up by somebody or perhaps by the committee you appoint, because that speech as well as other speeches display the mentality—the brutal, disgusting, vulgar mentality—which governs India today. It is well that you and I should understand the mentality which controls the destiny of India, and, after all, it is not the fault of that gentleman Mr. Burrows—he is again but a cog in the machine. What is he to do? He simply moves with the machine. He may be perhaps a little less discreet, a little more given to fits of nerves—but whatever the reason, I tell you that what he said does represent today the mentality of the power that governs us. And not only that, but look around you again—look at this, a friend of ours was just complaining against the nationalist papers in Calcutta.[4] Well, I am not in a position to judge. I have not been able to read these papers for a long time, but we had the honour and the privilege, even in the jails of U.P., to be supplied with some other papers of Calcutta and even outside the jails I had occasion to read them. The extraordinary manner in which they sometimes treat us and the way in which they justify it, is really an eye-opener. It is not a question of nationalism or imperialism. To any man with the least sensitivity, with the least education, with the least culture, it comes as a shock that people claiming to be above ordinary vulgarity, should behave in this manner. That is what we find in Bengal and the rest of India in a greater or lesser measure. It is an extraordinary vulgarity of imperialism. Why is that so? Because imperialism of today, in spite of the strength that it seems to possess, is in a tottering condition, and when a great system like this totters, when it is afraid of falling, then it loses all control, its culture

3 L D Burrows stated on 10 December 1933 that, owing to a lack of strong public opinion, the government had to rely on their own resources to fight terrorism

4 The reference was to a young man who complained against the nationalist papers of Calcutta for not publishing the news of the rough handling of an Indian girl by the management of the Hagenbeck circus and education and everything else goes. It becomes vulgar and it becomes abusive. That is the position today. Of course, do not think that it is going to collapse suddenly, but these are the signs of a decadent system. That system is utterly decadent. Therefore you find utter cruelty, utter vandalism. That is what is happening specially in Bengal and the Frontier Province.

Well, a friend has suggested that there should be, as far as I can understand his Bengali, an All India agitation over this. Undoubtedly it would be a very good thing if there was an All India agitation over this, but I feel that he is missing a point. If by agitation is meant public meetings and the like and the passing of resolutions, it does seem to fall very much short of the mark, because agitation is meant to impress the will of the people on an individual or government. But when that individual or government becomes utterly callous and utterly shameless, without any care as to what people think of it, in fact when it loses all sense of decency, then you have to think what other effective means you can adopt to impress your will. Ultimately you arrive at the same question, which is the final question so far as we are concerned: what are the means to enforce the will of the Indian people in Bengal, in Midnapur, in India? That is the final question and there is no half way house to it. You cannot stop half-way, because today the two forces in India—imperialism and nationalism—have come to close grips When two forces are in close grip then there is no giving way on either side. Then you miss gentle chivalry. That chivalry, to some extent, our movement has attempted. Our leader has constantly reminded us not to forget that chivalry and the basis of our movement has been, to a large extent, chivalrous. Of course, it would be vain to deny that we are moved with extreme anger on occasions. But so far as the imperial power is concerned, there is no doubt that it has given up all pretences of chivalry. Therefore, do not expect anything from appeals to chivalry or appeals to justice or the like. We are today in the midst of a historic struggle, which all nations have to face at a particular time and from that there is only one escape—victory of one side or the other I hope you will realise that and work for that.

40. The Futility of Terrorism and the Nature of the Mass Movement[1]

Young men and women of Bengal,

You have just been reminded of an occasion over two years ago when I addressed you in this very hall.[2] My mind travels back to that time, two and a quarter years ago and then I think of what has taken place during this long interval. Two years is not a very long period of time even in the life of an individual, much less in the life of a nation. But sometimes the years drag themselves out and even a year or a month seems to be an enormous period of time, and these two years have been long years. Through these two years we have experienced moments of exultation and we have experienced also moments of depression. We have gone through, as all great movements must go through, the valley of the shadows; and we are yet in these valleys and no one can say when we shall be able to emerge from them into the light of freedom. So I thought of these two years with varying emotions, I thought of the great things that we had accomplished in this country, I also thought of the many weaknesses that are ours still, for, after all, whatever we may have failed to accomplish, is ultimately and fundamentally due to our own weakness.

I have been asked by a friend who has preceded me to endeavour to inspire you—well, I do not know if it is in my capacity to inspire anybody by any words that I might use, but it seems to me that if anyone has survived and is surviving the various events that are happening in India and has failed to be inspired by them to action, it will be very difficult for him to be moved by any words of any individual.

What do you see in India today? What do you see in the world today? And what do you see in your own province of Bengal? You see an amazing number of problems—you see the greater statesmen of the world lost in a morass, in a fog and not knowing how to come out of it. Do you know that in the course of the last fifteen years or so, roughly, I believe, 133 world conferences have taken place in order to solve the various problems which afflict the world and each one of these 133 conferences has been a total failure? Why was that so? Not because the people who met there did not want to succeed

1 Address to the students of Bengal at the Albert Hall, Calcutta, 18 January 1934

2 See Selected Works, Vol 5, pp. 300 303

—they did; not only so, but they were convinced and they proclaimed to the world that "if we do not succeed in these conferences, there will be a disaster, there will be a world revolution", and so on and so forth. You will remember some months back when there was a World Economic Conference[3]—one of these 133—that met in London, everybody proclaimed that "if this conference fails, the end of the present order is in sight and there will be an enormous catastrophe." Well, this conference failed. Now, you see the last gasping efforts of the Disarmament Conference in Geneva[4]—that, too, is collapsing.

Well, I mention these to you to make you realise how extraordinarily knotty the problems are today in the world and how difficult it is for the world to solve them, because today I shall address you in a few moments in regard to our present position in India and I do wish you to feel that our present position in India is a part of the international situation. Our movement is a freedom movement. We desire the independence of India, but it is a part and parcel of the great world movement, the great revolutionary urge that is shaping the world today; and unless you understand and appreciate that, you will never be able to get the key to the Indian situation.

Then, again, to take a jump and to come back to your own province of Bengal—to come to certain parts of Bengal—we find the most amazing and the most extraordinary occurrences taking place here. Last evening, in this very hall, a meeting of protest—'of emphatic protest!', as they said—was held here against what was happening in Midnapur district. Well, I had the honour to be present there and I said a few words—a very few words to express the anger that was in my heart, because what happens in Midnapur, or Chittagong, what has taken place and is taking place there is not merely the humiliation of Midnapur or Chittagong or the particular area where it takes place, but it is a deliberate insult of the Indian people, it is a humiliation of the whole of India, and it is well that each one of us should realise that those orders, those humiliating restrictions, commands and behests that have been issued in Midnapur, apply to each one of us, however high or low he may be, in the whole of India. Well, some 3 The World Economic Conference opened in London on 12 June 1933. Roosevelt's repudiation of the formula devised to ensure stable currencies in the world made the Conference ineffective.

4. The Disarmament Conference which began on 2 February 1932 in Geneva failed to reach any agreement France refused to disarm unless she was assured of "security" and Germany demanded the right to rearm if nations like France were to retain their arms The Conference adjourned on 11 June 1934 of us, it is very natural, feel very angry about that and some of us should perhaps get angry with the individual officers who might have issued those orders. But the fact remains that it is not a question of individual officers here and there doing such things but of a certain enormous machine that moves on, crushing everything that comes in its way. Officers, whether they happen to be Viceroys or Governors or happen to be red-coated chaprasis, they have little say in the matter in spite of the pomp that may accompany them wherever they may go. What we are up against is not an officer however high he may be, but we are up against a certain system, against a machine which crushes the Indian people today, which exploits them and tries to humble and humiliate them. And today because the Indian people have risen and have put up a very gallant and a very effective fight for freedom, shaken up that machine and almost made it totter, that machine reacts as all such machines have reacted in the past and present. It reacts even forgetting the ordinary canons of war, because when one's life is threatened one is apt to be terribly nervous, terribly forgetful of all ordinary precepts of humanity. When the life of British imperialism was threatened by our freedom movement, it has reacted in the peculiar way in which all such monsters react. We see that in Midnapur, Chittagong and Dacca. You know that one of the tremendous excuses for all that is happening in these areas—one of the reasons which the government puts forward—is that it has to meet the terrorist menace in Bengal.

You know my views about such individual acts of terrorism, because I spoke to you about them on the last occasion and I tried to show to you how it is a completely ineffective, wrong and harmful move for us in our present stage of growth. I did not tell you that merely as a pious platitude. What I tried to tell you, whatever I propose to tell you now is not going to be, in spite of what my friend has asked me to say, an appeal to your emotions or an attempt to inspire you, because that is a thing I am not capable of doing, but I certainly prefer to appeal to your minds instead of to your emotions for the time being It is good to have emotions, to use them and to be impelled by fine emotions—I do not wish to decry them. It is good to have emotions, but still behind emotions there should be minds functioning. Therefore I want to appeal to your minds and as I said on the last occasion when I addressed you here I told you in regard to these individual sporadic acts of terrorism that they were weak, ineffective, futile, harmful and completely out of date. Personally speaking, I take pride in the fact that I claim myself to be a revolutionary and I want revolutionaries in this country. I think every person who has any spirit in him, who feels that he must take a part in upsetting the evil order in this country, he must be a revolutionary or nothing else. What is the meaning of the word 'revolutionary'? You must try to understand that. Merely an individual act does not make that act—whatever that act may be—a revolutionary act. The only test of a revolutionary action is this—that it helps in promoting a revolutionary atmosphere, that it creates a spirit, a militant spirit in the masses. That is the test of a revolutionary act, not any other test. And I tell you that if you judge it from this test, these individual acts are counter-revolutionary, they are not revolutionary. You think in terms of either mass action or individual action. If you understand at all—if you have studied at all the technique of revolutionary action, you will know that it is based today completely on mass action; and if you indulge in mass action, fundamentally that mass action must be peaceful action. It cannot be otherwise, it may be otherwise but today the technique of revolutionary action is fundamentally peaceful action, whether it is a general strike or a labour strike or other forms of civil disobedience etc., etc. For the moment I am not discussing the question of himsa or ahimsa from a political or moral standpoint. I wish you to consider that today the only effective means of action in order to impress the will of the people on any group or any power that oppresses them is mass action, and there is no other method And if you want to approach the masses, to organise the masses, you cannot do so by individual acts of terrorism That shows an extraordinary misconception of the situation. In spite of claiming to be a revolutionary act, it really becomes a counter-revolutionary act, because that action brings in its train consequences which produce an atmosphere contrary to what you ought to produce, and you see today that though individuals may become militant, the masses do not.

I do not wish to repeat the arguments I told you two years ago. You must consider this problem not in a hurry, in a mood of sentiment but try to reason it out, because it is a problem of life and death for all of us in this country, as to what road we should adopt. And now what do we see? These occasional, sporadic acts of terrorism which still take place unfortunately in some parts of Bengal—this has been made an occasion by the British Government for trying to crush every kind of public—effective or ineffective—activity in Bengal. They have tried in those parts of the province not only to crush the activity of the people, but they have tried to humiliate, humble and insult the people of those places in every possible and conceivable manner, where every boy and girl above 12 years is a suspect, where you may not ride a bicycle or where your houses are searched from morning till evening, where you are asked to come and salute the Union Jack forcibly, where you are asked to come with presents of dalis to the "respected" district magistrate when he arrives at the station, and you are informed in writing that disobedience will be construed into an act of disloyalty.

Is any of you here loyal to the British Government? I say if you are loyal then I have nothing to say. In the Congress we have nothing to do with loyalty. We are disloyal, not once but hundred times, and it is our business to preach disloyalty wherever we go. Today you and I have to choose loyalty or disloyalty. Loyalty is a fine word in the English language—but loyalty to whom? Are you going to be loyal to those people who humiliate your people, who degrade your country, or are you going to be loyal to your own country, to your own people? I am proud to be loyal to my own country and not to anyone who is going to insult my country and my people. I have no quarrel with any foreign country or any foreign flag, but if I am asked and forced to salute any flag and specially the Union Jack, I hope I shall have the strength to die a thousand deaths. That is happening in our country and there is no lack of men in this country who in spite of what is taking place in Midnapur and elsewhere go and consort with these men and shake hands which are dripping with blood. I do hope that most of us will realise that we shall have nothing to do with those people, whether they are Englishmen or Indians. It may be that the latter have become so frightened that they cannot give expression to their views. So the British Government has used all its strength—has made this terrorist movement an excuse for crushing the life of Bengal. Of course, it cannot crush all life in Bengal but it has tried to do so and is trying to do so. The way in which it is trying to crush the freedom of the press, the freedom of meeting and the usual activities that take place ordinarily in this province, is probably better known to you than to me. Today, you have as much freedom as the freedom not to use that freedom. You are free so long as you do not use any freedom. If you use it, there your freedom ends That is the position not only in this province but in the whole of this country.

Well, that is the situation from a national point of view, if I may say so, facing us. But I want to delve a little further and consider the reality behind this, because after all there are bigger things behind this which make individuals and nations act in the manner they do. I told you just a short while ago what we are up against—not an individual officer or a group of people but a machine which is crushing us and exploiting us. Why is that so and how can we get rid of it—that, after all, is the problem before you. If you go still further you will find that today even your national movement has at the back of it the economic discontent of the people. You and I, who presume to be intellectuals to some extent, perhaps think that freedom is an idealist conception which comes out of our heads. We desire freedom because it is good. No doubt that is true, but fundamentally nations desire freedom because of economic causes. Fundamentally the Indian masses move and have moved because of the economic discontents they are troubled with, and therefore, if you study these causes you will come to the conclusion that today the dominant and the predominant feature of the situation in India as well as the world is the economic factor.

It is the economic factor that has troubled the European countries and is bringing them near disaster; and it is the economic factor which is at the back of your movement. Unless you understand that, you will not be able to understand the present situation, and because it is the economic factor, no solution will be a proper solution till we find a solution of the economic problems of this country and the world.

I have tried, during the last three or four months that I have been out of prison, to lay some stress on these economic considerations. Perhaps some of you may have come across those articles and writings of mine and most of you may know that the way I look upon these problems is the socialist way. I think there is no other solution and the socialist solution is bound to come sooner or later; and so long as that solution does not come, you will find no political solution of these problems either in India or in the larger world outside.

Now if you think along these lines, if you think at all, you will gradually come to those views because there is no escape from those views. You will have to fashion your own activity accordingly and you cannot act merely in the air, purely on political, national lines. Your nationalism must solve the economic problems, your nationalism must take on an economic tinge, it must, in other words, become socialist. I do not refer to national socialism which is an emotional word for fascism, because personally I have the extremest dislike for fascism. I think it is a most undesirable thing and I should like to combat it if it came to India. But when I say your nationalism should become economic, I mean that nationalism must remain with us because we cannot escape from the nationalist outlook, so long as there is foreign domination in this country. But that is not enough. You have to think along economic lines and solve economic issues, and I hope you will solve them. So you will come to the conclusion that I have come to, namely, that the only solution lies in the way of socialism and in the ending of the present extraordinary feudal and other relics in this country. I do not think any real progress is possible as long as you are saddled with these feudal relics; and, having come to that conclusion, you will draw up a programme of activity which will help you in ending them.

Now any effective movement, I told you, must be a mass movement. You people living in the city of Calcutta or studying here, for the time you are here, you have largely to deal with city problems and are keeping yourselves aloof from the village folk. You have to understand that India is after all an agricultural and village country. So any big mass movement must fundamentally be a peasant movement in this country. Of course, industrial workers must also play a big part in it, as also the lower middle class, but a really big mass movement must essentially depend on the agriculturists and peasants. And, therefore, the problem before us becomes one of working in those village areas, taking not only the message of freedom but making them understand how their economic ills can find solution, as also organising them and helping them. We are not organising them to help us, though we are too often tempted to talk in such terms, but rather going and helping them in their freedom movement. Is it going to be their freedom movement in which you could help them or is it going to be your freedom movement in which they could help you? Therefore, you have to go to them and help them to realise their own strength and to organise themselves and specially to appreciate their economic troubles and try to get rid of them.

You will tell me that under the present conditions it is not at all possible. It is not easy at any rate to function in this way, because our benign government comes in the way wherever we go. If we go to the villages it comes in the way, if we function at all it comes in the way. That is perfectly true, but what is the conclusion you draw from this? Some of our friends draw the conclusion that we should give up our aggressive tactics and resort to certain non-aggressive defensive tactics so as to avoid conflict with the government and thereby gradually develop our organisation and then, perhaps later on, think of aggressive tactics. That is the suggestion put forward by some of our friends. But those friends seem, to me, to ignore certain fundamental aspects of the question. Every national movement, every social and economic movement, when it begins and is weak, is tolerated by the ruling power or the ruling group. As it grows an attempt is made to suppress it, but still it grows, because behind it there are certain economic causes which push it on. But the time comes when it grows so strong as to actually endanger the existing social order. When that nationalist or socialist movement becomes so strong as to endanger and threaten the existence of the ruling power, then that ruling power tries to crush it with all its might. Then there is no room left for any forbearance and courtesy between the two groups. Then they come to close grips with each other and then the historical stage is reached when that nationalist or socialist movement ceases to be constitutional or legal. It is not a matter merely of the government declaring a certain organisation illegal but rather a historical development of a certain movement when it automatically becomes unconstitutional and illegal; and that, mind you, is the sign of its strength. When it becomes strong enough to threaten the existing order then it cannot alter that and function as a constitutional and legal movement.

The Congress has been declared illegal, thousands of Congress bodies and allied organisations have been declared illegal. But that is only an outward indication of that historical stage that we have reached. We reached that stage in 1930 and ever since then we have been hovering about the verge of it. When I say 'we' I mean principally the Congress of course, but I also refer to something bigger than the Congress i.e., the whole national movement of India. Now, having reached that stage, there is no going back from it. I say if tomorrow the All India Congress Committee passes a resolution "let us withdraw the civil disobedience movement", it would have some effect of course. It may stop the movement as it is being carried on today—it may also perhaps result in the ban of illegality being removed from the Congress. That is a possibility, though I doubt it. But even so we cannot go back from that historical stage that we have reached, because the nation has reached it, not the All India Congress Committee even if it has certainly helped to carry us to that point And the result will be that, although a certain organisation, by cooperating, by compromising, by showing weakness, or whatever the reason may be, may become temporarily legal, the movement itself will always hover on the verge of illegality. That is to say, that any person doing any effective work, whether it is really effective work among peasants and workers, even effective social work, if it goes far enough, it is immediately stopped by the government because government cannot tolerate any effective work after that historical stage in the nation is reached.

Today, I see a great deal of Harijan work is being done in various parts of the country. Speaking of my own province wherever there is Harijan work,—I am not personally in Harijan work—but wherever that work is being done with any real strength behind it, it has come in conflict with government immediately. Harijan workers sent to villages have been arrested in some parts of the U.P. Although their object is purely Harijan work, yet the government is afraid of allowing them to go to rural areas.

So, the point I wish you to appreciate is this—we have arrived at a stage when fundamentally our strength remains on the edge of illegality and unconstitutionality, and there can be no going back from it. Of course, I do not mean that many of our activities are not legal and constitutional. The point is that any effective activity we indulge in, is immediately made illegal and unconstitutional by the government. It is easy enough to make it so—a little interpretation will make it. And as a matter of fact the present ordinances, ordinance laws and various other laws in force in this country are so extraordinarily comprehensive that any single activity can be construed as being against the law, and every individual, whoever he may be, if nothing else, can be considered a badmash and under preventive sections can be sent to jail. That is a frequent occurrence. They are sending a large number of workers to jail under sections which are meant for bad characters and these friends of ours are never mentioned in newspapers as civil disobedience prisoners. There are so many thousands in various provinces because those gentlemen go in as bad characters, who are not counted as such, of course the badness of their character being the undesirability of their politics in the eyes of government. So we have arrived at that stage and having arrived at that stage, in our national movement the only choice that is left to us is either to go ahead or to withdraw—either to do nothing, to become ineffective or act effectively and thus come into conflict with the government. There is no other third way. People delude themselves into suggesting various ways.

Now, the choice before us is either effective action which brings us into conflict with government or no action at all. Some people tell us "let us fight on all fronts", which, if analysed, means withdrawal from fighting on any front. Sometimes you may have heard a very peculiar argument that we have been struggling for freedom in this country in a particular way for the last fourteen or fifteen years and our condition is worse than it was. We have got ordinance laws, censorship and the rest of it—our condition is far worse than it was fifteen years ago. This is an argument which specially our moderate friends have advanced. They say that "we seem to be going from bad to worse by our methods and tactics." That is a fundamentally wrong view of the situation. If you fight for the citadel of power, if you fight for the real thing and not merely for some shadow of power, then there can be no getting of power in bits. If, suppose, you are marching on to a citadel or fortress which is occupied by another army, well, do you conceive of bits of the citadel or fortress falling in your hands and for the rest living in amity and friendship with the enemy army? That does not happen. As you approach the fortress, instead of your condition becoming better your condition will become worse and worse. So, I want first to say a word or two as to the extreme falsity of this argument. The more your strength increases, the more you approach the citadel of power, the more fierce is the fighting going to be. It does not lessen as you approach, it becomes worse and when you are actually at the citadel near the walls of the fortress, fighting will be the fiercest and your condition will be the worst conceivable. Indeed, the day before you seize power and get into the citadel, that evening your condition will be the worst of all. To think in terms of getting two annas or four annas of the possession of the fortress is really to misunderstand history and human nature completely. It is possible, I can conceive of a compromise coming between one group which desires to go forward and the group in the fortress, the compromise being that the group in the fortress allows the other group the possession of the area outside. That is a possibility, you may consider that as getting two annas power. But if it is a question of your taking possession of the citadel, there is not two annas or four annas—either one will prevail or the other. Two powers cannot exist in the same country and at the same time. Of course, you may have dual authority during the transition period when power is shifting from one party to the other.

People who imagine that they can gradually get the freedom of India, either they delude themselves or are thoroughly ignorant of history, because such a thing never happens and will never happen in India. How and when we shall achieve power I cannot say—I am not a prophet—but I cannot conceive of power coming to you bit by bit. As far as I can see, Indian nationalism and British imperialism are at close grips with each other. British imperialism may succeed in suppressing Indian nationalism, but remember this also: that while Indian nationalism may be suppressed many a time by British imperialism Indian nationalism will grow again, but British imperialism will be suppressed once for all by Indian nationalism and it cannot grow up after that, because it is fundamentally and historically a receding phenomenon. Indian nationalism is bound to come up again and again because the basis of it is the national urge of India. But at the same time there is the economic discontent of India and no amount of repression and no amount of forcible salutation of the Union Jack fills the hungry stomach. No amount of orders and ordinances will make hungry people contented. You can satisfy a hungry man for a short while, but his hunger will drive him into action and so today in India, even if leaders and organisations weaken, compromise and betray, this economic urge remains and will continue to push the masses on; that pushing process is bound to continue till a solution is found for economic troubles and that solution will not be a sufficient solution if it is merely a political solution.

Now, therefore, if you consider the situation in the world which is on the verge of revolution, you will find there has never been a period in the history of the world more full of revolutions and changes than this 20th century of ours. If anybody dislikes changes and revolution all that can be said is this that he has chosen a very wrong moment to be born, because he cannot escape from it. You see all over Europe and America, in fact everywhere that the most extraordinary changes have taken place and still greater changes are hovering in the future. You hear talk of war, international war, terrible war which may come off sooner or later and which seems bound to come off. I confess to you that sometimes I welcome the idea of war, and yet at the same time the idea frightens me sufficiently because the next war is going to be such a terrible affair and what will survive from the war, it is very difficult to say. We have merely to take an objective view of the situation and we find today all over the world and in India these revolutionary conditions existing. They may continue for years and no terrible crisis may come off, but, as far as one can see objectively, the whole trend of affairs is drifting towards a tremendous catastrophe.

What then are you going to do in India, how are we to fashion our struggle so as to achieve freedom the soonest? If conditions are revolutionary, in some measure they should help us because we want revolutionary changes in this country. If Indian conditions had been more or less stable, of course we would have to work for a long distance change but today we cannot afford to do that. Therefore we have to carry on our campaign, our struggle for freedom aggressively—at whatever level it may be it does not matter. We are not ashamed to confess our weakness. You and I ought to know both our strength and our weakness We should neither exaggerate our strength nor minimise our weakness. It is true that today the British Government has to a large extent suppressed our movement, that is to say, suppressed the outward manifestations of our movement—it is perfectly true. But it is also true that the British Government with all its might and main has not been able to suppress it quickly. And it is equally obvious to the British Government as well as to the Indian people that it is a physical impossibility for the British Government to suppress this movement completely. Every mass movement goes up and down. You cannot keep up a mass movement at a certain pitch for ever, it cannot be done. But that does not mean that the movement has been suppressed or crushed. I read the other day in an Anglo-Indian newspaper of Bombay, The Times of India—it was a review of the situation—and it said that "we have crushed the Congress, it does not function." Then there is an 'if' and it was a very big 'if'—'if Congress was allowed to function for a fortnight it would become stronger than ever all over the country'! An extraordinary remark of The Times of India—to say that a thing which has been crushed will suddenly become a powerful organisation all over India after a fortnight's work! Now our movement which has come down to a low level today and which is not a mass movement yet has all the potential strength in it and at any moment it will grow up and it will grow up not because of you and me but because of the inherent force at work today. You and I can push it on as far as possible by effective work. Aggressive work, you will remember, will inevitably bring us to conflict with government. If conflict comes I will welcome it. It is not merely a question of going to jail mechanically. If in the course of our work we come into conflict with government, well and good, if not, we carry on our work with more aggressiveness and more effectiveness.

Now, I should like to say a few words in connection with another matter. Many of our friends have asked me in other parts of the country as well as here—"We want to do no aggressive political work but we want to do other social work, i.e., village work, organisation work etc. What are we to do?" The other day—only a few days ago—in the course of a press interview I said something for which I am rather sorry because it was a great slur on a respected class or group. I said that while referring to village work. Some news agency—the Associated Press I think—had sent a message saying that Jawaharlal proposes to devote himself in future to quiet village work. I am not against village work but the impression gathered from reading that passage seemed to be that I was going to retire behind the purdah and not to do any aggressive political work. So in the course of a press interview I said "I have no intention of retiring behind the purdah, and doing this kind of constructive work, as this could very well be done by old ladies, and I do not believe in the safety first principle".[5] I apologise in all humility to old ladies because it is really unfair to them. We have seen some wonderful old ladies in this country and still we have them and they still play a very important part in our movement. Also, I really do not wish to run down village work. There you come into contact with villagers and workers. It is far better than doing nothing and sitting idle. I do think that even village work, if it is effective, brings us into conflict with government and you must be prepared for that. That is your look-out.

Two or three words more and I shall finish. Recently, I made some remarks about communalism in India and they gave rise to a controversy.[6] I am not averse to controversy. I took a fair and aggressive part in that controversy and I feel—I hope I am not taking undue pride in this fact—I emerged triumphant from that controversy. The fact remains that it is a matter for you to consider, because this communal question, I say and I do repeat before you, is a bogus question. It is not a communal question. It is purely a reactionary question. It is a question raised by political reactionaries to cloud the other real and effective political issues in the country. I tell you there are of course—I do not challenge them—many good people, many honest people, even people who have taken a brave part in the fight for freedom, in communal movements and organisations. They have unfortunately been deluded—they have not really understood what the communal organisations stand for. But fundamentally the communal organisations in India, whether they are Hindu or Moslem or any other, they stand for political reaction and their leaders stand for political reaction. If you analyse their statements and their repeated speeches and their policies and methods, you find each one of them trying his utmost to gain the favour of government. Inevitably they have to become more and more reactionary. It is about time that young men exposed these facts. It is not communalism. I dislike this political reaction, this bogus thing, going about under the mask of communalism.

Friends, I do not know whether what I have told you is connected or disjointed, because I came here in a very disjointed frame of mind, because a very hurried programme, one function after another, does not allow me to think about anything. I was worried, I am still worried but now it is a different kind of worry. Many things I might have told you—some perhaps I have said in a peculiar way, a disjointed way and I am not going to say more because my time is up. But I do

5 See ante, item, 37.
6 See post, subsection on communalism wish to say one thing, that when we talk about our sacrifices and sufferings for the cause and all that, we do not really do adequate justice to the tremendous sufferings that our people have undergone. After all, our suffering is a mere flea-bite. If we compare it with what other nations have gone through—at any rate it is not easy to compare it with many nations—you will find that they had to go through something tremendously more and we must not flinch because of this little measure of repression or oppression or humiliation that we may have to put up with. If we desire freedom we shall have to pay in full measure the price for freedom. I honestly tell you that it rather annoys me when people talk so much of my sacrifice. What have I sacrificed? I have sacrificed nothing. I lead the life of a man now and I feel happy about it. Sometimes I may misbehave, I may lose my temper, but I tell you I have peace of mind which I did not have before. I think it is absurd, it is a calumny to go about saying that "I have sacrificed this or that". I have sacrificed nothing that I consider worthwhile, and it is a tremendous thing, I tell you, because after all the real joy in life comes from the knowledge that you are serving in a mighty cause—a cause that you know to be a great cause and if you devote yourselves to it you get something which is worth having. Specially if the cause has some relation to the masses, this huge conglomeration of humanity. You forget the little worries of life, the hundred and one little things that trouble you—the illnesses and sickness. So many of us are complaining of these troubles and thinking that the world is conspiring against them. I want you young men and women to look upon this really as something which will bring joy to you and make you feel that you are really acting as men and women should act and that it is no sacrifice.

Well, I shall now take leave of you and say farewell for a time at least. Perhaps that time may be a long time. I have come back after two and a quarter years and I do not know how many years it may be before I come back again. But whether it is long or short it does not matter, because you can take it from me that we shall meet again and again. We shall meet perhaps here, perhaps, and I hope so, many of you and I will meet in the battle-field of action in the struggle of ours and certainly I hope that we shall all meet one day to celebrate the freedom of India.

41. On Independence[1]

What we are having today is not a proposal but a vow. Despite great hardships our flag is still flying The government has failed to crush the movement.

Do not be under any delusion that by getting more seats in the councils or by any Indian becoming a great officer the situation will improve.

An Indian has been appointed as Governor in U.P.,[2] but there is no relaxation in repression nor has the province benefited in any way due to his appointment. They are all alike, parts of a big machine, and mere white or black parts do not make any difference in the action of the machine.

The question before you is how to fill your starving bellies. Several people who are patted by the government have issued notices to the effect that Congress is responsible for the fall in prices. If the Congress had such power it could have wiped out British rule in India.

It must be stressed that the administration under the White Paper will be much more costly than at present, a fact which has been admitted even by Sir Malcolm Hailey. I would warn you not to be deceived by the talk of reforms.

The question is not one of two or three annas but a basic one. It is a question of full independence.

Take the example of two warring armies. One of the two is bound to remain in the fort while the other might perhaps get a place in the stable. Those who talk of getting two or three annas want to live in the stables, but I think all Indians are not animals, there are also men among them. The last stages of the fight are bound to be grave.

You all know what is happening in Bengal, particularly in Midnapur and Chittagong.

The question of freedom is one of life and death. It is a question of hunger which cannot be solved by any leader entering into a compromise with the government; nor can repression satisfy the hunger of the people.

1. Speech at Allahabad on Independence Day, 26 January 1934 From The Tribune, 29 January 1934.
2. The Nawab of Chhatari

SOCIALISM AND THE LABOUR MOVEMENT

42. To T. Viswanatham[1]

Lucknow
October 2, 1933

My dear Viswanatham,
It is good to hear from you again. I do not personally think that the political condition of our country at present is at all unsatisfactory. There are of course numerous difficulties in our way and there is a lull in our activities. But all this is natural and nothing to be surprised or annoyed at. There is a certain amount of confusion in the minds of people. This is due not so much to what any individual has done but to the fact that world conditions and objective facts are forcing the country to adopt a new way of thinking. To give up an old ideology to which we are accustomed is always a painful process.

The real difficulty in India as well as in the world today is that ideas as well as the social and political structure lag far behind existing conditions, hence the conflict and confusion. Till that lag is made good this conflict will continue. Human nature being what it is there is little chance of the lag being made good by means of peaceful efforts and gradual change through the cooperation of various groups. Because this does not happen, revolution takes place.

The world conditions today are forcing big changes whether we are mentally ready for them or not. Our social system may be thousands of years old but that will not save it nor will it delay a change when it comes. It will only result in the change being sudden and far reaching. Therefore we cannot afford today to have a gradual long-distance programme. Tact of course is always good but if tact means an attempt to confuse issues it is bad. The greatest need of the day is clear thinking even at the cost of tact.

You refer to the need of propaganda and invite me to go to Andhra. I would love to visit Andhra but I am a bit surprised at your making such a suggestion. We are in the midst of a struggle and all such peace time activity is barred. Long before the date you mention I hope to be back in prison.

1 J N Correspondence, N M M L.

With all good wishes,

Yours fraternally,
Jawaharlal Nehru

43. To Bhagavan Das[1]

Lucknow
October 2, 1933

My dear Babu Bhagavan Dasji,

Thank you for your letter. I have also read the letter published in The Leader of the 25th to which you refer.[2] It is my intention to write something on the subjects you mention or at any rate on some of them. But I have not yet adapted myself to life outside jail and I find that numerous little things and worries come in the way of my writing seriously. However, I shall try.

My one idea is that the present confusion in thought which we see all around us in India is due to the fact that our old ideology does not fit in with existing facts. There is a tremendous lag between the two and this causes confusion and conflict. We live between two ages. We think in terms of the old and try to act in terms of the new. This is natural enough and to some extent we see it all over the world today.

There is of course no such thing as absolute independence for a nation or an individual. The modern world especially is based on cooperation and interdependence. Indeed many of the world's troubles are due to non-recognition of this fact and yet personally I have laid stress on the term "Independence" for India because it brings out rather aggressively one important aspect of our national problem—complete freedom from British control. Every other word that we may use is misinterpreted, and leads to loose thinking and vague ideology and compromise. It forces people to face the real national issue. You may remember that some time back the Oxford Union passed a resolution which created something of a sensation. This resolution said, so far as I remember,

1. J.N Correspondence, N.M.M.L.
2. In this letter, signed by "Enquirer", a clear statement of economic policy had been demanded from the Congress that under no circumstance would they fight for their King and country. On the face of it this resolution was extravagant and could hardly represent the true feelings of those who voted for it. And yet it was a truer one than any vague slipshod appeal to peace and condemnation of war which almost anybody could have supported. It is for this reason that I adhere to the word "Independence". It is also for this reason that I think it is desirable to deal with economic problems rather brutally and not tone them down in order to soothe some people's susceptibilities. Facts themselves are brutal in this world and soft words do not alter them; they only help to delude ourselves and others. At the same time of course it is always desirable to use the language of peace wherever this does not produce confusion and a false impression.

My mother's condition is very unsatisfactory but I hope to take her to Allahabad day after tomorrow.

Yours very sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

44. To Bagh Singh[1]

Lucknow
October 2, 1933

Dear Friend,[2]

I have your letter. Not knowing the details of your scheme of work I can say little about it. But I feel sure that the idea of starting a bank for the development of agriculture and industry involves all manner of difficulties at present If you will study the situation in Europe and America you will find that the tremendous trade depression which is breaking down the capitalist system in the West has been caused by certain fundamental causes which go to the root of the matter. There is no lack of banks in Western countries but large numbers of them have failed during the last four years. The whole system has broken down and it cannot be propped up. We are living through a period of intense social change.

Your reference to the crore of rupees that the Congress collected in 1921 shows some ignorance of the matter. The money was not

1. J.N Correspondence, N.M.M.L.
2 A retired headmaster of Khalsa High School, Gujranwala.

collected for khadi although khadi had some part of it. This khadi part of the fund is still almost intact and finances the widespread operations of the All India Spinners' Association. Part of the rest of the money went in carrying on national universities and schools. The greatest part, however, was spread out all over India and used by thousands of Congress committees for political work. Far from being lost this money yielded great results. I doubt if such a comparatively small sum has ever gone so far in any country.

You must keep in mind the objective conditions of this country and of the world at present and try to discover the great forces that are shaping world events before you can draw up an effective scheme of work.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

45. To Bhagavan Das[1]

Allahabad
October 17, 1933

My Dear Babu Bhagavan Dasji,
Many thanks for your enlightening letter which I have read with great interest.[2] I am glad you liked my recent article. You will forgive me if I do not write at length just at present. The subjects you touch upon—communism, fascism, economic conditions, social conditions, sex, functional organisations of the society etc.—require elaborate treatment.

Briefly I will say that though there may be outward similarity between the communist state and the fascist state there are fundamental differences. Both are dictatorships but in the former society as a whole profits by it and no special class is a favoured one except in a very minor degree. In the fascist state the dictatorship stands for certain possessing classes who profit by it. Russia is deliberately and scientifically going towards a definite and well thought-out goal. It

1. JN. Correspondence, N.M.M.L.
2. In his letter of 13 October 1933, Bhagavan Das had written that there was "much in common" between fascism and communism. He also stated that he had read that Stalin received a monthly salary of 700 roubles or 1100 rupees is perfectly true that at the present moment many things exist that conflict with pure socialism but the whole tendency is towards a socialistic state. Fascism has no philosophy and no scientific outlook and no clear goal. Under fascism, as in Germany, the working class and liberal elements generally have been crushed out.

I think the figure you give about salaries in Russia are not quite correct. Stalin probably gets the same salary as any other communist in any position and that does not usually exceed 300 or 400 rupees per month. Of course he has a number of other advantages.

The sex problem in Russia seems to have been solved more satisfactorily than elsewhere.

Russia presents today any number of inconsistencies and disagreeable features and yet so far as I can see its general aim is correct and its methods are also not far wrong. It is a living nation full of youth and energy and inspired by great faith and hope, while other nations sink deeper and deeper into a morass of doubt and despair. Italy is in a very bad way economically at present.

It is impossible to say what the exact future of India is likely to be. But this future cannot divorce itself completely from our past inheritance and ideology though I have no doubt that there will be great changes.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

46. To S. Ramanathan[1]

Allahabad
October 21, 1933

Dear Sir,[2]

I received your letter some time ago. I heard about the self-respect movement[3] when I passed through south India two years ago. I do

1. J.N. Correspondence, N.M.M.L.
2. Editor of The Rationalist, the journal of the Self Respect League founded in south India in 1925, Minister, Government of Madras, 1937-39
3. Organised by E.V. Ramaswamy Naicker in 1925 to remove all "superstitious belief" based upon religion or tradition and to end caste domination not know very much about it. I have personally every sympathy with any newspaper which publishes any rationalist view of life. I have found, however, that rationalism covers many kinds of dogmas which are as bad as religious dogmas of old. I hope your paper will be truly rationalist in every respect.

I am afraid I have no time to contribute an article as suggested by you.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

47. On Fascism and Democracy[1]

The democratic system of government everywhere in Europe and America is collapsing. The nearest approach to it is in France and in England, more so in the former than in the latter. Even in these countries, the old style of democratic form has ceased to exist. All this shows that the old system is collapsing rapidly. Fascism is itself proof of the strength of the working class movement in Europe. Wherever the challenge to the possessing classes has been the greatest, they have huddled themselves together in the form of fascism to meet it In Germany, the only alternative today to Hitlerism, as Hitler himself says, is communism.

There is certainly the possibility of the rise of fascism in India. Indeed, signs of it are already visible. But fascism cannot solve in Europe or India the real economic problem. And therefore it must inevitably fail some time or other.

1 Interview to the press, Allahabad, 28 October 1933. From The Hindu, 28 October 1933

48. To R.W. Fulay[1]

Allahabad
October 28, 1933

My dear Fulay,[2]
Thank you for your letter.[3] While I welcome the idea of labour unity I do not at present see how it is to be brought about. I am not in sufficient touch with present-day labour politics to give a definite opinion but I know enough to feel that there are radical differences which it will not be easy to bridge over. If there is anything that I can do to strengthen the labour movement in India I shall gladly do it. But I do not wish to make confusion worse confounded by suddenly entering the labour arena. I also do not wish to attach myself to any group.

My own sympathies and my ideology fit in far more with the advanced groups than with the moderate labour groups. At the same time I do not like some of the activities of these advanced groups. Moderate trade unionism is to my mind hopelessly inadequate under the existing circumstances. I think that trade unions must have an aggressive programme and at the same time labour should definitely have a political programme. How exactly this is to be brought about under existing circumstances is by no means clear. I am afraid I have no respect for people who talk tall and do nothing and there seems to be a good number of this kind in the labour movement.

I hesitate therefore at this juncture to take the initiative in this matter but I shall watch with interest developments in the Indian labour world and at any moment that I feel that I can be of help in the matter I shall certainly offer my services.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. JN. Correspondence, N.M.M.L.
2. Secretary, Nagpur Trade Union Congress, member, Legislative Council, Central Provinces.
3. He had asked Jawaharlal whether he could settle the differences between the trade union leaders

49. Thirteen Years[1]

"There is a vacant throne in every country of Europe for someone to occupy." So said Mussolini, having taken possession of one such throne. Unhappily for some aspirants for the seat of honour and authority, there is no such vacancy in India. For thirteen years the throne has been occupied in India by a person, who despite himself, cannot get out of it. Mr Jamnadas Mehta, however, objects to this monopoly and would fain end it. And so, finding other means of no avail, he has adopted the curious and unusual expedient of asking him who occupies the throne to vacate it and give other aspirants a chance of honour and glory. Evidently political India is not big enough to contain both Gandhiji and Mr. Jamnadas Mehta.

Mr. Jamnadas Mehta is a leader of the working class movement in India. Now that he has challenged the succession to the political gaddi in India, he will tell us, I hope, what he aims at, what his ideology is, and how he intends to reach his goal. He is dissatisfied with our methods and activities of the past thirteen years and is of opinion that they have failed. How would he have acted during this period and what does he imagine that he would have achieved? The labour movement almost everywhere stands for socialism and its ideology is Marxist. Is Mr. Mehta a believer in Marxism and what is called the materialist interpretation of history? If so what brand of Marxism does he favour—social democracy or Leninism—and how does he intend applying it to India? Is his socialism a kind of heaven which has little to do with this earthly world of ours, a hereafter, the thought of which consoles and intoxicates and makes us forget for a while the sorrows of the world, or is it something more earthly and of the present? Is it of the brand that finds favour with Messrs. Ramsay MacDonald and Thomas, or of the fiercer variety known as national socialism of which Mussolini and Hitler are the major prophets?

1. J.N. Papers, NMML. This note was presumably written some time after 28 October 1933 when Jamnadas Mehta, at the Maharashtra Political Conference, declared that the "first and foremost duty of the country . is to break the spell of Mahatma Gandhi".

50. To Abdur Rahim[1]

Allahabad
October 30, 1933

My dear Abdur Rahim,
I was glad to hear from you after a long while. I should like to discuss the questions you suggest in your letter.[2] But for the present I do not propose to go to Calcutta. It is just possible, however, that I may go there some weeks later, if I remain outside gaol till then. I have no fear of Bengal or any other part of India not being the place for me. I can feel at home anywhere and as for Bengal, it is after all the elder brother of all the provinces so far as political work is concerned and I have always had a soft corner in my heart for it.

I do not think that the Congress as constituted is likely to become a full fledged socialist organisation. But I do think that it will become more and more socialistic and as it does so, little groups interested in present social conditions will gradually drop out. That will be all for the good I do not see why I should walk out of the Congress leaving the field clear to the social reactionaries. Therefore, I think it is up to us to remain there and try to force the pace, thereby either converting others or making them depart. Separate organisations may be desirable. For instance industrial labour must have a separate organisation and as far as possible the peasantry should also have a separate organisation but I do not think it is desirable to have purely political organisations, counter or parallel to the Congress. There is a great talk of the socialist party or the like but I am convinced that much of this talk is merely meant to cover ineffective action and also as a means of self-aggrandisement.

More when we meet.

Yours affectionately,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. JN Correspondence, N.M.M.L.
2. Abdur Rahim had asked how the Congress, composed of different interests and groups, could propagate socialism and whether a parallel organisation would not invite an early clash.

51. Labour and the Congress[1]

During the great social and economic crisis that the world is passing through today, labour has a very special duty before it. For, inevitably, the burden of ideological leadership must remain with labour. In India, the national struggle covers and hides social differences. That is natural. But world events themselves are today forcing the pace and making even national movements more and more economic and social movements All over the world there is a great struggle between the forces of labour and the forces of entrenched vested interests. The stakes are high and therefore we cannot afford either in our national struggle or in our social struggle to compromise with petty changes. If we are to profit by the world situation, we must make up our minds to struggle for a complete and fundamental change of regime. Nothing else should satisfy us, nothing else can solve our problems.

India is today in a somewhat confused state of mind. She finds that her old nationalist ideology does not fit in with the existing circumstances in the world So she struggles to adopt a new way of thinking and this attempt to change over from the old to the new is a painful and confusing one But the attempt must be proceeded with, for only thus, by adopting a progressive ideology of social revolution, can India take an effective part in the freedom struggle as well as in the world struggle.

In such a social struggle labour has always occupied the foremost place. Indian labour therefore must wake up out of its lethargy, close up its ranks, and face the situation bravely and with confidence. It must give up its timid attitude and its demands for petty reforms and seek to play a part in the wider issues which confront it and the world. Such opportunities come rarely. Our national struggle and our social and economic struggle must join hands for the emancipation of the people of India.

Labour represents the productive working class, that is to say, the class which economically and historically is the most important class of the future. It is therefore possible for labour to have a much clearer ideology than for the Congress. Labour in theory is the most revolutionary group in a country because it represents the forces of the future. But in India today, as in every country under alien domination, the national problem overshadows social problems and nationalism is more revolutionary than the social struggle. World events are, however, pushing economic issues more and more to the front and even national organisations are becoming infected by such issues.

1. Message sent to the Indian Labour Journal on its eleventh anniversary in November 1933. Reprinted in Recent Essays and Writings, (Allahabad, 1934), pp 131-134.

I am quite clear that labour should organise itself in trade unions and the like quite separately. Otherwise it will get lost in mixed nationalist groups At the same time labour must recognise that nationalism is the strongest force in the country today and it must cooperate with it fully. It should also of course try to influence it on the economic issues.

I am not in theory against a labour political party apart from the Congress, but I fear that any attempt to make such a party today will only result in the exploitation of labour by a number of individuals who will try to advance themselves at the cost of labour.

The National Congress is, as its name implies, a national organisation. Its purpose is national freedom for India. It includes many classes and groups which have really conflicting social interests, but the common national platform keeps them together for the moment. During the past years it has inclined towards a socialist programme, but it is far from being socialist.

I should personally like the Congress to go very much further and to adopt a full socialist programme. I recognise also that there are many groups in the Congress today which are ideologically very backward and desire to prevent the Congress from going ahead. Recognising all this, I have no doubt whatever, that the Congress has been far the most militant organisation in India during recent years. It seems to me perfectly ridiculous for people who do nothing effective themselves to accuse Congress of lack of militancy There is a grave danger of most of our so-called socialists confining their militancy to catch phrases and drawing-room parlours

For Congressmen who are also interested in labour affairs, the course of action should be as follows· They should function separately in labour organisations, trade unions, etc, and help them to develop an ideology and programme of activity as militant as possible, even in advance of the Congress programme. In the National Congress they should try to push on an economic orientation in consonance with the labour programme Inevitably the Congress programme, so far as ideology goes, will not be as advanced as the labour programme But it is quite possible to have cooperation in militant activity.

52. To Arjun Arora[1]

Allahabad
November 9, 1933

Dear Sir,[2]
I have received your letter and your manifesto. I am glad to learn that you and your colleagues are trying to think along socialist lines. In reading your manifesto, however, I do not see anything that is definitely socialistic. The bills that you propose are given in this but most of them are what might be termed liberal. I must however make one exception and that is the "Factory and Railway Soviet Establishment Bill".

Socialism as understood in this country usually means a vague idealism demanding justice for the underdog but modern socialism is something far more than this. It is called scientific socialism. It interprets history, economics, politics and indeed all branches of life in terms of certain fundamental laws. I would suggest to you to study this scientific socialism and to develop its ideology among your fellow students.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. J N. Correspondence, N M M L.
2. (b. 1912); general secretary, Textile Labour Association; editor, Mazdoor Samachar since 1951, member, Rajya Sabha, 1960 72

53. To Bulaki Rama[1]

Allahabad
November 24, 1933

My dear Bulaki Ramaji,
Please forgive me for the delay in answering your letter.[2] I appreciate what you have said about choosing a narrow issue. To some extent that has to be done and is indeed being done in local areas.

1. J N. Correspondence, N M M L.
2. In his letter of 6 October 1933, he suggested that the Congress agitate on narrow issues such as taxation of agricultural surplus.

But present-day conditions are such that broader issues have to be faced. I have written considerably on these latter issues in the press and I do not wish to repeat what I have said there. I would gladly associate myself with any demand for minimum agricultural income being assured to the peasantry. I think this is a perfectly sound position to take up. The first charge on the land must be the peasant's but I am equally sure this cannot be brought about either under the present political system or the present economic system. We are, however, laying stress on this aspect in our work in the villages here

Your cooperation and help are always welcome. But conditions are so abnormal today that any of us may go back to gaol at any moment and I do not want to trouble you to change your place of residence under this condition.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

54. Civics and Politics[1]

Politics today are in a sorry mess all over the world and distraught politicians seek in vain for a remedy. Their old methods have failed completely and events have marched ahead leaving the old guard of politicians far behind. With the passing of politics from the centre of the world's stage, economics has appeared from behind the scenes and has dominated men and events. The old style of politician feels helpless before this transformation, but in the West, at any rate, he has been forced to bow down before the new gods and pay them homage Not so in India where many of us still cling to outworn theories and discredited methods

The dominance of economics has brought new ideas and new theories in its train and the problems of the world are viewed in a new perspective. Out of this welter of ideas and theories has grown the scientific interpretation of history and politics and economics that is known as scientific socialism or Marxism or communism. Many learned books have been written on this subject and passions have been roused and bitter conflicts have taken place.

1 First published in Calcutta Municipal Gazette, 25 November 1933. Reprinted in Recent Essays and Writings, (Allahabad, 1934), pp 140 141.

There is one aspect of communism however which is easy to understand for the man in the street. Communism is in a way the municipalization of the country or the world. Of course this is a wholly insufficient definition. None the less it does give us a glimpse of what underlies communism. The true civic ideal aims at common possession and common enjoyment of municipal amenities, and these amenities go on increasing till they comprise almost everything that a citizen requires. Roads, bridges, lighting, water supply, sanitation, hospitals and medical relief, libraries, education, parks and recreation grounds, games, proper housing, museums, art galleries, theatres, music —these are some of the activities that a modern up to date municipality should be interested in, and some of the amenities which it should provide free of cost to all its citizens. Communism means the extension and the application of this civic ideal to the larger group of the nation and ultimately to the world. And so the civic ideal becomes the national and the international ideal, and, with the passing of pure politics, civics becomes merged in the communist ideal of a scientific ordering of the world's affairs and a proper planning and control, on behalf of and for the benefit of the masses, of production and distribution and the many other activities of the modern world.

55. The Civic Ideal[1]

In the old days the state was looked upon almost as the private possession of the sovereign. His chief business was to tax his subjects and to protect them from external invasion and internal disorder from robbers and the like. Having given a certain measure of security to his people, his job was done. If he did this and did not impose too crushing a burden of taxation, he was looked upon as a good sovereign. Such states have been called 'police states' as the principal duties of the government were in the nature of police duties. Our Indian states today are more or less of this type, with this essential difference that they have not to protect themselves from external invasion. The British Government in India during the nineteenth century was also largely a police government. It did very little for the educational, cultural, industrial, medical and sanitary development of the state. Gradually, however, it was forced by circumstances to interest itself in some of the multifarious activities of the modern state, though its interest did not go far and it produced very little in the shape of actual results.

1. 1 December 1933. The Citizen, December 1933 Reprinted in Recent Essays and Writings, (Allahabad, 1934), pp 142 144.

It was in the cities that the idea of providing something more than protection for the citizens first developed. The close association of a large number of human beings in cities resulted in the growth of cooperative activities and of culture. With the civic ideal began to emerge the idea, that amenities for the common enjoyment of the citizens should be provided for. Roads and bridges which were privately owned and subject to tolls, became public property and free to all without payment. Sanitation, lighting, water supply, hospitals and medical relief, parks and recreation grounds, schools and colleges, libraries and museums, became the functions of the municipality. Today it is considered the function of a municipality not only to provide all these free of any charge to all its citizens, but also to provide art galleries, theatres, music and, most important of all, proper housing for everybody. But obviously the basic need is for food and to present art and culture to a man who has no food is to mock him. Hence it is the business of a modern municipality today to see to it that no one starves within its confines, to provide work for those who are workless, and, if no work is to be had, to provide food. That is the civic ideal today, although few municipalities approach it. In India, of course, we are still very far from even having a glimpse of the ideal.

This civic ideal gradually captured the state and with it the activities of the state grew in all directions. The police state transformed itself into the modern state, a complex, paternal organism with a large number of departments and spheres of activities, and innumerable contacts with the individual citizen Not only did it give him security from external invasion and internal disorder, but it educated him, taught him industries, tried to raise his standard of living, gave him opportunities for the development of culture, provided him with insurance schemes to enable him to face any unforeseen contingency, gave him all manner of amenities, and made itself responsible for his work and food. The civic ideal was spreading. Today it has spread as far as it can under the existing social structure and it finds its further progress stopped so long as that structure remains what it is.

The true civic ideal is the socialist ideal, the communist ideal. It means the common enjoyment of the wealth that is produced in nature and by human endeavour. That ideal can only be reached when the present social structure is changed and gives place to socialism.

56. To Onkar Nath Verma[1]

Allahabad
December 2, 1933

Dear Comrade,[2]
I have your long letter.[3] It is a little difficult to reply in detail because that would involve writing a long essay. I might point out however that I have not attacked communists all over the world (except those of Russia). What I have stated is that communist tactics, that is to say, the tactics of the Comintern have not succeeded in other countries so far. As you must know that is the view of some prominent communists also, like Trotsky.

You are also wrong in thinking that I expect very much from the peasantry. But I do think that the next step will be influenced very greatly by the attitude of the peasantry. I should like the industrial workers to develop the most advanced ideology and to take the lead both of the peasantry and the freedom movement. But at the present moment in India the industrial workers have no such influence over the rest of the country. One has, therefore, either to wait till the workers become class conscious enough and take the leadership or one has to work up the rest of the country so that the two processes might combine and lead to big results.

It is absurd to call the Karachi or the Allahabad resolutions communistic or even socialistic. Nobody has described them as such. They were passed by a national organization and not by a proletarian organization. They merely indicate that our national movement is gradually turning towards the left. I think this is a desirable development and that this in itself will help the fuller development of an advanced ideology in groups. It will provide a background out of which that

1. JN. Correspondence, NMML.
2. A resident of Mirzapur district.
3. In his letter of 30 November 1933, he alleged that Jawaharlal had been "long neglecting" the proletariat and now found it "convenient" to build his hopes on the "peasantry alone". He also suggested that Jawaharlal had confused communism with "state socialism".

ideology can develop. Without that background the workers' struggle would have far greater difficulties. You must remember that the industrial workers are still only a very small part of the Indian population and their influence is far less than that of the workers of Russia was.

Personally I have never put any obstruction or condemned in any way any worker who stands for an advanced ideology. But taking objective conditions as they are I think we ought to take advantage of the national movement as far as it can go.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

57. To Beltie Shah Gilani[1]

Allahabad
December 3, 1933

My dear Beltie Shah,

Thank you for your letter.[2] Your suggestions provoke thought but I must say that a reading of your letter leaves a confused impression of what you are driving at. There seems to me to be no reason why scientific socialism should ignore psychology and human nature. If it does so it will cease to be scientific. It is quite possible that the Russian experiment may fail, partly because Russia was a very backward country and partly it may be because of wrong methods. That would simply show that different methods should be employed.

I would not say that Marxism necessarily means swift and ruthless blows and certainly it does not imply chaos. I would put it this way: that it suggests a method of defence against the ruthlessness of present-day society. As vested interests never agree to give what they have got they prefer to create chaos and disruption rather than face the inevitable change.

The importance of Russia today is not that something has been done there which is worthy of imitation all along the line but because

1. JN Correspondence, N.M.M.L.
2. In his letter of 28 November 1933, Beltie Shah held that the Russian experiment, where the "irrepressible human element was having the better of the economic determinist", was not a classical application of scientific socialism.

something worthwhile has been attempted there and this attempt in itself is full of lessons.

I suppose it is at your instance that Father Lyons[3] of Kurseong has been sending me large numbers of foreign periodicals. I welcome them but it is quite impossible for me to find the time to read all he sends me. It would be far better if he could send me just one or two periodicals.

With all good wishes,

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

3. Of St. Mary's College, Kurseong

58. To Amar Kishor Sinha[1]

Allahabad
December 8, 1933

Dear Friend,[2]

I have your letter.[3] The condition of the peasantry is very bad all over India. Certainly we should try to help them by reviving hand-spinning as well as other village industries. But the real problem cannot be solved in this way. The only way to solve it is to change the whole land system and to write off the burden of debt. There is no other way out and therefore while we should try to give as much relief as possible we should really concentrate on organising the peasantry to fight for a radical change in the land system so that power may come into their hands. That means Swaraj

If you want to enquire about hand-spinning please write to the Provincial Charkha Sangha, Muzzafarpur (Bihar).

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. J N Correspondence, N M M L.
2. A resident of Champaran
3. In his letter of 3 December 1933, he urged the revival of cottage industries in the villages, especially hand spinning and weaving

59. To Dinkar Mehta[1]

Allahabad
December 9, 1933

Dear Mr. Mehta,[2]
Thank you for your letter.[3] I quite agree with you that the future trend of the Congress must be socialistic. Not only the trend but the actions also. Apart from the ideology the spread of which is essential to right action, the action, if it is of a revolutionary or direct action nature, inevitably releases mass forces In addition to this I should personally like Congress activities to concern themselves much more with the peasantry and the workers.

It is true Czarist Russia was an even more agricultural country than India today. But there is this difference: power was concentrated in the hands of an effete aristocratic group which had its headquarters in two centres—Petrograd and Moscow. In both these centres the industrial workers were strong and they could therefore influence tremendously and even upset the system of government. It is somewhat different here. Power is not so concentrated and we have to deal with a very powerful opponent who has his hold all over the country and whose sources of strength lie outside the country. Apart from this a perfectly extraordinary set of circumstances prevailed in Russia in 1917. No country can bank on a repetition of these circumstances.

My articles were written for those who do not know much about modern conditions or socialism. But it is perfectly true that a person who is wholly ignorant of these subjects will find some difficulty in understanding them. It is not possible to write something which will meet the level of the average intellectual as well as ignorant person. From what I have discovered of them, the articles were certainly not above the knowledge or intelligence of the average intellectual.

I am glad to learn that you have got over your illness.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. JN Correspondence, NMML.
2. (b 1907), participated in Bardoli satyagraha, 1928, and civil disobedience, 1930, member, Congress Socialist Party, 1934, and Communist Party of India, 1935-64, at present secretary, Gujarat Committee of Communist Party (Marxist)
3. He had desired a clear statement from the Congress showing that its future trend was to be socialistic. He thought there was great need for socialist propaganda and not a mere development of ideology.

60. Speech at Delhi[1]

I am no stranger to Delhi and require no address. But I know that the address is not to me personally but to the cause I am deemed to represent. Freedom means the end of poverty and economic exploitation. The main problem before us today is to provide food and clothing to the millions of people who are being victimised by vested interests. Swaraj means the power to end unemployment, starvation and oppression, and not the winning of a few honours and jobs. Swaraj is not a beautiful word for which we are sacrificing our lives. The heaviest burden on the country today is the burden of foreign domination. Swaraj does not mean change of masters or replacement of white by brown bureaucracy. The majority of the people are being exploited by a few classes and the chief fight is against these classes.

Politics are never taught by books or merely by speeches, but facts and events teach politics to the millions. Only a selected few can read books, but the masses can learn from events. Repression, as we have experienced, frightens some people and makes others stronger and more determined. I am now trying to judge whether we have been suppressed or have become stronger. The pessimist amongst us occasionally comes out with arguments that with all the sacrifices we are yet far off from Swaraj. Oppressive measures, ban on freedom of the press and platform have taken us further off from Swaraj. But I am an optimist and disappointment is an unknown word in my dictionary of politics.

As for Sir Harry Haig's ban—on the meeting of the A.I.C.C.—I am immensely pleased to read the proceedings of the Assembly on the subject which still continues to exist in spite of our not taking any interest in it. The assertion of the government that it has wiped out the national movement and crushed the spirit of the people is only a proof of the fact that the government is trying to cover its moral defeat by mere words. Real freedom cannot be won until real power passes into the hands of the people to enable us to redress our grievances.

Apparently two classes of people have come into existence during recent years: those who are continuously going to jails and others who are making repeated pilgrimages to London as members of the R.T.C. and Joint Committee delegates, year after year, for the last four years. Tremendous volumes of evidence and records which can fill a number of cellars have been published and songs of praise of Sir Samuel Hoare and his colleagues are being daily sung by those who have been to London. The government has really created this class of henchmen who are like clay in their hands. All the talk about federation has resolved into the fact that only a ceremonial show need be made of some sort of self-government with real power left in the hands of England, and all this apparatus is expected to add to the burden of taxation under which the poverty stricken people of India are already groaning. Under no circumstance can this game satisfy the people of India.

1 12 December 1933 From The Bombay Chronicle, 18 December 1933.

The various countries of the world are almost on the verge of collapse and are on the brink of war. We may hear any day that a world war has broken out. The world is in a great whirlpool of economic revolution today. It is true that Britain has been a dominating power for a century. This is largely due to her early industrialization and to the economic exploitation of India. Before the Great World War, America and Germany were powerful industrial rivals and the rivalry of Germany precipitated the World War; and although England won the war, economic miseries have followed and brought all the countries of the world to the verge of collapse. During the last 15 years no less than 130 great conferences have taken place in order to bring about peace in the world, but the maze of difficulties into which the world powers have wandered into has led to the collapse of the economic system today.

So far, England was only an island and was protected by the navy but with the change in the methods of war and invention of aeroplanes and poisonous gases it is no longer left in isolation. A war in the air, the possibilities of which are not very remote, has ended England's previous safety. British imperialism is in the process of disintegration but how long that agony will last is not easy to say. But do not think England has become helpless, because a whole century or more of exploitation of India and the rest of the world has supplied her with enough resources to last a while longer.

As for the public debt of India, my personal view is that not a pie from the so-called national debt should be paid to England. England, which was a creditor country so long, has now become a debtor country and while trying to repudiate its debts, or at any rate struggling to get remission of debts, is insisting that the poorest people of the earth should not put forward a claim to cancel the so-called national debt. Wherever in the course of my speech I have used the word, England and English, I mean British imperialism, because even in England there are the poor and the labourers who are equally being victimised and exploited by imperialist policy.

Reverting to the question of convening the A.I.C.C., the government's decision to ban the A.I.C.C. meeting is rather amusing since those who want suspension of civil disobedience are the people anxious to convene a meeting of the A.I.C.C.; and still the Home Member has not the courage to allow such a meeting. As far as the question of holding the meeting is concerned, officially, I can say that the question does not arise because 30 members have not yet made the requisition in accordance with the constitution.

As for the future programme, the programme is there for those who want to work it. They have a definite programme of constructive work in lakhs of villages of India. Do your duty to these struggling peasants, serve them to your best. Those who cannot carry on this mission can carry on the campaign against untouchability but I am personally interested at present only in the political and economic struggle of India, and I want others not to sit idle in this connection. The political struggle must always have the first place in your hearts.

61. Speech at Aligarh Muslim University[1]

Mr. Vice-Chancellor and young men of the University,

You, Sir! have set up an example by addressing the House in English, and perforce I have to follow that example. I wanted to meet you because I have heard from my childhood of what Aligarh has done and of the large place its products occupy in our national life.

Friends! I was going to tell you some of the ideas that have moved me in the past and move me still. I have been a dreamer of dreams. I am called a dreamer. I wish you were called dreamers too, provided your dreams have some relation to reality. There are not many in the country who are endowed with such a gift. If youth will not dream, do you expect these crabbed and aged people to dream? Age has its advantages. It is remarkable for its store of wisdom but there is hardly any activity in old age.

Read of what fascism is doing in Italy and Hitlerism in Germany, the continuous revolution in Spain and of that most marvellous and unprecedented work of construction in history. I mean the unique and unparalleled economic reconstruction in the U.S.S.R. Think of the revolutionary changes and turmoil in this world. Think of what has happened and what is happening under our own eyes. What do you think you would do if you get power to influence the world and national events? Look how the world is changing. It is an extraordinarily fascinating and cheerful prospect for a big mind; for little minds it is not cheerful at all. It is, I think, Trotsky who says that there has been no such revolutionary period as the present in the history of the world, if anyone disapproves of this period, all I can say is that he has chosen an unfortunate moment to be born. The world today is being moved by large forces, almost like an earthquake. It is trembling with fundamental changes. Your country is engaged in a battle for freedom. Don't you think it is a cause you should espouse? I repeat again. Do you dream, and do your dreams point towards action? Do you ever think in these universities of the starving and bare skeletons of our countrymen moved by the elemental force of hunger? Do you ever ask yourself the question—what has happened to them, and if they are going to remain starved and poor for ever? What is going to be your contribution in their struggle? Even if you wish to, you cannot escape these questions. What are the university men going to do about it? Do they seek the solution through government jobs? Are our vast numbers of graduates, the great many of the prospective unemployed, too proud for manual work, going to be an additional burden on our country and people? I am deeply interested in seeing how you solve these problems.

1. Aligarh, 15 December 1933. The Bombay Chronicle, 19 December 1933.

I wonder what is your view of history. You seem to have images of big men as your heroes. Your view of history seems to present a pageant show which throws a light on the past, but does not give you a key to the understanding of the present. Unless you understand the forces which are working beneath the surface, the tremendous forces of hunger and want which have changed the face of the earth—you cannot get the connecting link.

Mr President, you have referred to the unity of communities in India and to the diversity of cultures. I believe this diversity of cultures has given us the richness which we should preserve. Unless we have unity of outlook, we cannot achieve anything and I admit that these diversities may be a hindrance. It is amazing to note how the cultural unity of the masses has survived even now. That unity is going to endure.

Europe has to face basic and fundamental problems which is not the case with our communal question. Our question is a ghostly thing, and of no substance. It is the result of political reaction. I admit there may be honest communalists who want to protect their community, that is understandable. Nevertheless communalists take shelter behind political reaction. I submit that if the question is placed before the masses, the solution will be found readily enough.

International conferences have failed because the whole structure of European society is diseased. There are certain conditions and forces that go to destroy the present social structure. The society in its growth wants to break and tear its old dress, and put on a new one. This process in history is called revolution. It is not a question of a few agitators and revolutionaries. It is a tremendous elemental force from below. Politicians do not bring about these revolutions. It is social development that brings them.

You know the history of the noncooperation movement. It began some twelve years ago. Some people thought it was peculiar to India. But it was not a disconnected fact There were similar movements in western Asia. Gandhi was not there. But the people used fundamentally more or less the same methods. It is difficult to explain. There was something in the air. Elemental forces were at work. There was something much bigger than the human material it used.

When we stress diversities, we ignore the fundamental unity of the country. We of the middle class arrogate to ourselves the exclusive right of being Indian. Outside these walls, there is the real India and if we do not march with the events, it is possible that real India may take things in its hands and march ahead of us.

62. Fascism and Communism[1]

The Indian press has been very kind and considerate to me and has given me numerous opportunities of giving publicity to my opinions. I must express my gratitude to it. But sometimes it gives me a shock and one of the biggest shocks that I have recently had has come today from the report of a so-called interview in Delhi given to certain

1. Statement to the press, 18 December 1933. The Leader, 20 December 1933 Reprinted in Recent Essays and Writings, (Allahabad, 1934), pp 129 130 foreign visitors. The National Call of Delhi first gave publicity to this and I was amazed to read what I was supposed to have said. The Free Press Journal of Bombay has now gone a few steps further and in a seven column headline announces that I have put my cards on the table and declared that I prefer fascism to communism. I did not know that I had so far kept any cards up my sleeve. I have endeavoured during the last three months to give expression to my views in writings and speeches with as much clarity as I am capable of. Those views may be right or wrong but I had at least hoped that they were clear enough and no one could mistake them. To find that they were misunderstood and to be made to say the exact opposite of what I believe and mean to say comes as a shock and a disappointment.

The report of the Delhi interview is so full of errors and mis-statements that it is a little difficult to correct, short of rewriting the whole of it afresh. I do not propose to do so. I shall refer those who are interested in what I believe to read my writings on the subject. But one thing I wish to clear up and that is my attitude to fascism and communism. I do believe that fundamentally the choice before the world today is one between some form of communism and some form of fascism, and I am all for the former, that is communism. I dislike fascism intensely and indeed I do not think it is anything more than a crude and brutal effort of the present capitalist order to preserve itself at any cost. There is no middle road between fascism and communism. One has to choose between the two and I choose the communist ideal. In regard to the methods and approach to this ideal I may not agree with everything that the orthodox communists have done. I think that these methods will have to adapt themselves to changing conditions and may vary in different countries. But I do think that the basic ideology of communism and its scientific interpretation of history is sound.

I hope I have made myself clear. Only a person of unsound mind could express himself in the self-contradictory way which the reported interview makes out. Only a lunatic could favour communism one day and fascism the next day. I flatter myself that I am neither and claim to be sane and, perhaps, sober.

63. To M. R. Masani[1]

Allahabad
December 19, 1933

Dear Masani,[2]
I have your letter. I would welcome the formation of socialist groups in the Congress to influence the ideology of the Congress and the country. As you are aware, I have been laying stress on the socialist ideal very much in my recent speeches and writings. I feel that the time has come when the country should face this issue and come to grips with the real economic problems which ultimately matter. All over the world today people are being forced to think in terms of economic and social change and we in India cannot afford to remain in the backwater of pure politics.

The Congress is, as its very name implies, a nationalist organisation and it has so far functioned on the nationalist plane. That was inevitable because in a country under alien domination the problem of political independence has always taken first place. So long as the Congress remains the nationalist Congress this nationalist outlook is bound to dominate the situation. But the world events as well as the natural consequences of our mass struggles have forced the Congress to think, to some extent at least, in terms of economics. Our direct action struggles were, to begin with, purely political; however, the political aspect became tinged with the economic. The Congress, nationalist as it was, began to talk rather vaguely and idealistically in terms of some social change. That process of change of ideology is proceeding apace and is being hastened by economic conditions as well as the continuation of direct action.

The time has undoubtedly come now when we must think more clearly and develop a scientific ideology. This is, so far as I am concerned, one of socialism and I would, therefore, gladly welcome the formation of groups to spread this ideology. But it is not enough to talk merely in terms of an academic ideology, especially at a moment when our country is in the midst of a struggle for freedom. This ideology must be tacked on to action and this action, if it is to bear fruit, must be related to the Congress struggle. Otherwise the socialist group will become an ineffective, academic and sterile study centre. Even to spread the ideology the effective method is through action which is coordinated to the direct action of the Congress and labour and peasant organisations.

1. Maharashtra Government Records, C I D File No. 1/C S P /33.
2. (b 1905); joint secretary, Congress Socialist Party, 1934 39; member, Constituent Assembly, 1947-48, and Lok Sabha, 1949 52, 1957 62 and 1963-71; president, Swatantra Party, 1970 71, author of Our India

I lay stress on this because I have had sad experience of individuals and groups putting on the colours of socialists and advancing a brave ideology and then doing nothing or, what is worse, just criticising and condemning others who are carrying on the struggle. If a group is meant to give shelter to such persons it is obvious that little can be expected from it. It has become the fashion for some people to cover their own ineffectiveness by strong criticism of the Congress activities. Criticism of ideology or methods must of course be free and welcome but it must not be allowed to become an anti revolutionary weapon. Although ideologically backward, the Congress is undoubtedly today the most advanced revolutionary organisation in action in India. It must be strengthened and at the same time directed towards newer channels.

I hope therefore this socialist group you suggest will take part in action as well as thought and will join the vanguard of the struggle. I should like to make clear that in the last but one paragraph of this letter I do not refer to people who may differ as to the present Congress programme. Personally I hold that under existing circumstances the present programme is suitable and gives us scope to develop our struggle. But I know that other comrades are of a different opinion and I respect these comrades. In any socialist group both these sets of opinion as well as others must have full scope. What I referred to was the person who has no notion of indulging in any action now or later and finds satisfaction in brave talk only. I attach considerable importance to action as I feel that out of it alone will the masses imbibe revolutionary ideas.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

64. The Trade Union Congress[1]

I am addressing this congress after about four years. These four years have seen great changes in India both in the national and trade union movements. A great struggle for freedom has been carried on and is still continuing. The trade union movement has been split up into various parts and I am not yet clear as to what each part stands for. During my period in prison I was unable to follow the various developments in the labour world. I tried to find out some facts recently but am still not in a position to know the exact situation. While I deplore the lack of unity I feel that to some extent it is inevitable as the struggle proceeds. On one side there are the reformists and constitutionalists, and on the other, revolutionary elements that want a radical change in the social and political structure. Much the same thing is happening in the national movement.

The present position of labour in India is deplorable. There is tremendous unemployment and the wages are cut down and living standards are reduced. Labour only meets these attacks by presenting a united front. World conditions are such that mere crumbs fall from the imperialists' and capitalists' table to the labour masses. As these conditions have deteriorated there is less and less to distribute. Therefore, the only way out for labour is to fight for a radical change which would give power. The labour method of fight is organisation and strike. Many petty strikes are taking place all over the country because of the attempts to lower wages. These individual strikes are bound to fail. If they want them to succeed there should be coordination and organisation, resulting, when time comes, in a general strike to prevent the progressive cutting down of the wages. As a matter of fact the labour problem and the national problem are both coming nearer to each other and have to face the ultimate issue—that is to say, the removal of British imperialism from India. No other solution will satisfy both or bring relief to the masses. I hope, therefore, that there will be an increasing amount of cooperation between the two great movements. The national movement cannot of course, drop its national character and become a purely labour movement. Nor can the labour movement become just a part of the national movement because it represents technically the class-conscious workers who are the most revolutionary elements in the population. But there is no reason why the two cannot cooperate wherever possible.

1. Speech delivered at the 13th session of the All India Trade Union Congress at Kanpur on 23 December 1933 From The Tribune, 30 December 1933. Reprinted in Recent Essays and Writings, (Allahabad, 1934), pp 135 137.

Some people say that after years of struggle our condition is worse than it was before. That is always so when a fight takes place about fundamental matters. Today imperialism and capitalism all over the world are fighting a last-ditch battle to preserve themselves and it is up to labour to organise and strengthen themselves and put their whole weight in the struggle. If they do so and at the same time cooperate with the national movement and influence it, I have no doubt that victory will come to you and not only will thereby bring political freedom in India but social freedom also.

65. To J. T. Gwynn[1]

Allahabad
December 27, 1933

Dear Mr. Gwynn,

I have received your two letters dated the 15th and 28th November. I have not seen what has appeared in the Manchester Guardian from my letter, but as I wrote to you, there was nothing private in what I wrote.[2]

Of course I shall not take it ill if you criticise me at any time.

As regards communism I think I wrote to you that I do not look upon it as a dogma which must be accepted in its entirety but rather as a general outlook on history and on current events as well as on the future. It is this outlook that appeals to me. As for details and methods, I am sure that many changes will have to be made from time to time and from place to place. I would hate to live in a world which is purely mechanical and which does not give individual freedom or rejoices in the infliction of suffering and the suppression of human kindness. I feel that in the modern world the qualities that make life worth living are at the most confined to a few and the vast majority have no chance to indulge in them. It is possible that a communist society while levelling up the masses may do injury to some of these

1. J.N Correspondence, N.M.M.L.
2. See ante, item 10

qualities. The risk has to be taken. But we can certainly try to preserve these qualities as far as we can and bring them within the reach of all.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

66. On the Municipalisation of Services[1]

I thank you for the honour you have done to me. I am no stranger to Cawnpore, and, even before my time, my father had been intimately connected with the city both as a student and as a lawyer. I am proud to think that I occupy a corner in the hearts of the people of Cawnpore.

Why is this address then given to me now? I think it is not a personal tribute to me but it is a way of expressing sympathy for certain ideals I happen to represent. Some people say that municipal boards should keep away from politics and the like. But if the municipality represented the people how could it ignore the feelings and passions which moved them and stirred them.

I am glad to learn from the address that the board has done something for the improvement of the labourers and the Harijans in regard to the housing conditions and education. A few years ago, I visited the labour quarters in Cawnpore and was shocked and horrified. Nowhere else had I seen anything so bad in housing conditions. I hope that improvement has been made regarding them during the last few years. The municipal board might take some pride in its achievements but the test is not what little has been done but what a great deal remains to be done.

No board can be said to have done its duty so long as any of its citizens are unemployed, starving, homeless or living in a miserable condition. It is often said that financial difficulties come in the way. That is no doubt true under existing circumstances, but it is no excuse for ignoring the essential claims of any group of citizens. A board's duty is to provide, among other things, education, sanitation, housing and recreation for all its citizens. A board cannot be judged by the houses of the rich but by the living conditions of the poor.

1. Reply to the welcome address presented by the Kanpur Municipal Board The Bombay Chronicle, 29 December 1933.

A much feared word, namely, communism or socialism, means largely municipalization of services and the activities of the country.

67. To E Raghava Reddi[1]

Allahabad
January 12, 1934

Dear Friend,[2]

I thank you for the copy of your article which I have read with interest. It contains an interesting analysis of past and present-day conditions. I feel, however, that you have ignored certain important factors in comparing the East with the West. What you call the old Indian economy was not essentially different from the old Western economy. The differences have arisen during the last two hundred years or more by the introduction of new methods of production in the West and now we notice a vast difference between the West and the East. This difference is not between the West and the East as such but between industrial and agricultural economy. It seems to me inevitable, whether one likes it or not, that the agricultural economy should give place to an industrial one. In doing so it has brought many evils in its train but it is possible to separate these evils and keep the good only.

You say that the Indian sages laid stress on the principle that political units must be coterminous with economic units. More or less this was so all over the world in pre-industrial times. But the new industrialism brought the world market and gradually the real economic units became the whole world. Thus today it is impossible to find a solution which is not a world solution based on the world being treated as one unit.

You will also find in the middle ages in Europe the same attempt to regulate prices, to prevent profiteering and insure fair exchange as far as possible, such as you find in India in olden times. But this solution cannot apply now because of the new conditions that have arisen all over the world. Therefore the solution must be of a different kind, something which recognizing the benefits of capitalism and keeping

1 J.N Correspondence, N.M.M.L.
2 An advocate of Nellore.

them yet does away with the profit motive of capitalism. The only way seems to me socialism. Charity under present conditions is quite ineffective and usually harmful. It can only function with any measure of success in a limited rural economy

It is easy to say that a spirit of humanity should pervade individual and national activities. One might as well say that all human beings should become saints and sages. Unhappily our wishes remain in the air and if we are to be effective we have to deal with conditions and the human material as we find them.

You say that India is a land of small holdings. This is not true today, although it was certainly true in pre-British times. At present the whole of Bengal, Bihar and the United Provinces are zamindari areas full of enormous holdings

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

68. Message to All India Textile Workers Conference[1]

I would have gladly attended your conference, because I feel that it is dealing with one of the most important problems that faces us today, a problem that not only faces the textile workers and the labour movement, but also affects the freedom struggle in India. I regret, however, that I shall be unable to attend. It is extraordinarily difficult for me to leave Allahabad for the next few days.

It is clear that the textile workers' conditions are progressively deteriorating and attempts are being made to reduce their wages and lower their standards. Many sporadic strikes are taking place all over the world. It is obviously desirable to have concerted action instead of this sporadic action I hope, therefore, your conference will succeed in evolving a common line of action. Merely submitting to the offensive of the owners of the textile mills will inevitably result in great misery for the workers and in the break up of the trade union organisation. This offensive, therefore, must be combated in an organised and united manner by the workers.

I wish you all success in your labours.

1. Allahabad, 28 January 1934 The Bombay Chronicle, 29 January 1934

69. To A. H. Khan[1]

2nd February 1934

Dear Mr. Khan,
I have your letter.[2] I am afraid it is quite impossible to give effect to your proposal. Firstly, because all manner of people are subscribing to the fund and one cannot impose a radical solution on them. Secondly, because the Congress itself as a whole is not a convinced socialist body. Thirdly, because numerous past instances teach us that it is not possible to build up socialist colonies in a capitalist state. All such attempts in Europe and America have failed hopelessly. Fourthly, there is bound to be a great deal of opposition from the government as well as the various groups in the community.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. Maharashtra Government Records, Bombay Police Commissioner's File No 3590/II/II.
2. Khan's letter is not available

OFFICIAL REPRESSION

70. M.N. Roy[1]

I met him first in Moscow in November 1927. I had heard a great deal about him and had read his brilliant book[2] on Indian problems and so I looked forward with interest to this meeting, and I was not disappointed.

Six feet tall and well built physically, M.N. Roy was a fine specimen of Indian humanity. Intellectually, he was alert and keen and even a few minutes' conversation impressed me with his unusual ability. He was obviously a man of intellect, and yet he was something more. He was a man of action also, trying always to fit his action to his thought and ever eager to seize any opportunity that might offer itself. Firmly convinced of the Marxist view of economics and politics and life, he was devoted to the great cause as he conceived it. But he had the pride of intellect also and he was not of the sort that follows another blindly and without questioning.

I was impressed by him. Evidently he was not impressed by me and during the years that followed he wrote many an article in bitter criticism of me and my kind, whom he dubbed, with considerable truth, as petty bourgeois. He used hard words which stung, but the memory of our brief meeting remained fresh in my mind and I retained a partiality and a soft corner in my heart for him.

Years passed. One day in 1931, I was surprised to find that a stranger who had called on me was none other than M.N. Roy. I had not expected him, I did not even know that he was in India, but I recognised him immediately and was delighted to meet him.

He had come back to his homeland, after a long absence of about fifteen years, under strange circumstances. He was one of those who were bitterly disliked by the British authorities and a return to the land where the Union Jack was supreme meant, almost certainly, prison and suffering. He knew this full well and yet he came. He had disagreed on some grounds of policy and tactics with the predominant Stalin group in the Soviet Union and any pronounced disagreement was not welcomed there. So he left Russia.

1. The Bombay Chronicle, 17 October 1933. Reprinted in Recent Essays and Writings, (Allahabad, 1934), pp. 113-115
2. Presumably The Future of Indian Politics, published in 1926.

But he was not the man to remain idle. The cause called him and the call was too powerful to be ignored. All the pent up energy of the man of intellect and action pushed him inevitably to his homeland though he knew the fate that awaited him there.

That fate met him some months after his return. None of us could do much for him and yet I wanted to be of some service to him, to show somehow in what regard I held him. I joined his defence committee[3] because of this desire of mine though I knew that such committees are of little real use in India at present and I had little faith in them.

Today he lies in the Bareilly Central Prison and for nearly two years and a half he has been in gaol. He is ill and is said to suffer from a serious constitutional disease. For long unused to a hot climate, he has had to endure the terrible summer heat of northern India in the hard and painful surroundings of a prison. The usual facilities which were granted to some of us in prison are denied to him and, it appears, that even books and writing materials are severely restricted. For an intellectual that is the hardest trial of all.

And so he wastes away and his bright young life, which had already shown such rich promise, slides downhill to the brink. Such is the fate of one of the bravest and ablest of India's sons of the present generation. We are poor enough in human material and it is a tragedy to see the waste of the lives of those who have the ability and capacity to do so much for their country, while others whom nobody can accuse of possessing any intellect or ideals or even decent feelings occupy the seats of power and authority But it is wrong to think that their lives are wasted. They serve the cause better in this silent way than many who shout from the house tops.

3 See Selected Works, Vol. 5, p 297

71. Statement on Fyzabad Prisoners[1]

Over a month ago I drew the attention of the public to the state of affairs in the Rae Bareli jail and to the hunger strike of two political prisoners because of ill treatment.[2] About three weeks later the superintendent (who I believe has been transferred to some other place since then) was good enough to issue a brief contradiction which ignored some of the facts that had been stated.[3] Truth apparently is not easy of access in the Rae Bareli jail and it took the superintendent three weeks to discover it, or rather what he considered a plausible semblance of it.

News comes now from the Fyzabad jail that the jail staff is again on the move and some repetition of last year's notorious occurrences is taking place.[4] The 'B' class prisoners there have again been punished in various ways and have been put in separate cells and pushed and dragged and beaten in the process. Some of them have been transferred to other prisons with fetters on. The condition of one prisoner, who had been ill, became so bad because of this treatment that he had to be discharged suddenly. Letters and interviews have been stopped and those who had gone for an interview had to return disappointed.

Such is the fragmentary news that has come about the happenings and sufferings behind the forbidding walls of the Fyzabad jail. Are we going to have a repetition of last year's long agony?

1. Allahabad, 26 October 1933 The Leader, 28 October 1933.
2. See Selected Works, Vol 5, p 540.
3. Issued on 14 October 1933, he contended that the hunger strike was a one day affair and that the convicts, in whose favour the hunger strike was started, had denied being flogged
4. See Selected Works, Vol 5, pp 430-431

72. On the Ill-treatment of Fyzabad Prisoners[1]

A certain gentleman of Fyzabad, rejoicing in the title of Khan Sahib, has issued a contradiction of my statement regarding the recent ill-treatment of 'B' class prisoners in the Fyzabad jail. I do not know his interest in the matter or his source of information but I take it that he is a faithful mouthpiece of the Fyzabad jail staff who hesitate to take the responsibility of making a public statement themselves. Long association with and experience of jail officials in the province has convinced me that from want of practice they develop a constitutional inability to tell the truth, and, especially in any matter concerning themselves, their testimony is useful only in that it helps us to some extent to arrive at a contrary conclusion. I would not ordinarily take the trouble to contradict such statements for they have no value and require no contradiction. But it is desirable that the public should not be misled.

1 The Leader, 8 November 1933

I am assured from reliable sources that the facts I had stated previously, with one exception, were perfectly correct. That one exception was my reference to the transfer of certain prisoners in bar-fetters. I made this statement under an error and I greatly regret it. No bar-fetters were used.

It is entirely untrue to say that the trouble arose because of the refusal of the 'B' class prisoners to sleep inside their barrack from October 1. As a matter of fact they would have been justified in such a refusal as, on the occasion of the settlement following previous trouble last year, it was, I understand, definitely agreed by the jail staff in writing that open air sleeping would be allowed till the end of October. But in spite of this assurance they were locked in from the night of October 1. They submitted to this and there was no trouble of any kind. They used to be locked up at 7-30 p.m. Many days later, on October 9, one of the 'B' class prisoners was asked to see the superintendent in the office. He went but did not return. He was put in a separate barrack as a punishment. When the other politicals learnt of this they requested the superintendent to grant some of them an interview. This was refused. That evening however he came to the 'B' class barrack at 6 p m and ordered the prisoners to be locked up at that time. The prisoners were surprised and pointed out to him that their locking up time had so far been 7-30 p.m. and they were not prepared to agree to this sudden change without any reason. Thereupon they were dragged and beaten and about 21 were forcibly locked in the cells and a dozen or so in other barracks. During this assault many received considerable injuries. At least one prisoner fainted in the process. The prisoner whose condition became very bad had undoubtedly been ill but in spite of this he was locked in a hospital barrack without light or water. In the course of this night he grew much worse.

I am told it is stated on behalf of the jail authorities that the prisoners then went on hunger strike. This is entirely untrue. My information is that the jail staff did not supply them with food for five days, till October 14. Thus they were forcibly made to starve for this period.

On October 15 four of the 'B' class prisoners were transferred to other prisons. The so-called minor punishments included, apart from the assaults on the 9th and the subsequent starvation, the reduction of a number of prisoners to 'C' class and stoppage of letters and interviews.

These are some of the facts which I think are reasonably established. There are others also but I do not wish to lengthen this statement. No doubt the jail staff and the very convenient and obliging Khan Sahib may not approve of facts, and it is easy enough to sit entrenched in the jail office, prevent a fair enquiry, and deny everything.

73. To the Superintendent, District Jail, Allahabad[1]

Allahabad
December 31, 1933

Dear Sir,

In the course of the last few days a number of our colleagues and friends have been arrested and kept in the Allahabad District Jail as under trial prisoners. Attempts to interview them or to send them food or other belongings from outside have failed because the jailor would not permit these. I do not know under what rule this permission was refused because so far as I am aware under trial prisoners are allowed interviews as well as certain facilities in regard to food, clothes and beddings. Further, I understand that friends other than relatives are also permitted to interview under-trial prisoners at frequent intervals. I have myself had experience of being an under trial prisoner on many occasions and the superintendents of the jails in which I happened to be kept told me so on several occasions and allowed these facilities to me. I have also personal knowledge of these facilities being allowed to many other under trial prisoners of various classes.

1. J N. Correspondence, N.M.M L.

India Bulletin.[5] The full statement however might be shown to individuals and even to high officials in London. The position that might be taken up is that very grave allegations have been and are being made. These may be exaggerated here and there and it may be difficult under the existing circumstances to substantiate them, but responsible people, who have met some of the sufferers believe that there is a great deal of truth in them. An independent enquiry should therefore be demanded. Before a public demand is made, private efforts might be made. If these fail, a public demand can be made.

Personally I am convinced, after meeting people from the Frontier, that a disgusting and cruel terrorism has been rampant there on behalf of the authorities But I can have no personal knowledge of these events. I can only rely on the odd evidence that reaches me. In a legal sense this may not be sufficient, and in any event, when allegations are denied, it becomes a question of word against word.

As for the question—sections 107, 108, 109 are the preventive sections of the Indian Penal Code (or probably the Code of Criminal Procedure). They can be easily referred to anything. These sections are not meant for those who have committed offences but for bad characters who are likely to commit offences. The English law, and most of the legal systems, have no such provisions. Ordinarily these sections are meant for those who are considered bad characters by the police. The sections have been used for political bad characters in recent years. Sureties and bonds are demanded for stated periods, usually one year, and if those sureties and bonds are not forthcoming, the person concerned is sent to prison for the full period. In the Frontier Province this one year seems to be extended to three years. Usually such heavy sureties are demanded that it is quite impossible to find them, even if the person was willing enough to furnish them. Thus people have to spend as much as three years in prison, not for an offence committed but for fear lest they might commit an offence. I have not the sections before me as I write but a reference to them will clear up the position. Sec. 108 is, I believe, for politicals or those who are seditiously inclined.

These preventive sections have been largely used all over India and Congressmen have been roped in as badmashes and bad characters. It is worthy of note that these prisoners are not considered politicals and are not included in the official returns of civil disobedience or other political prisoners whose number is brought down by treating them under the preventive sections as bad characters.

5 Published from February 1931 as the journal of the Friends of India Society in London.

Captain Cole[6] has a very bad reputation and there are many complaints about him but under existing conditions nothing can be substantiated. This applies also to Haripur jail which has been notorious for its ill-treatment. I must give the same answer about the six months' solitary confinement. Allegations to this effect have reached me and names have also been mentioned but I am quite unable to authenticate them. What probably happens is that technically there is a break in the solitary confinement but in effect it continues for long periods.

I am sending you copies of two notices and two statements about happenings in Midnapur in Bengal.[7] Both these were sent by me to various papers here. The notices were published by most of them. The statements have only appeared in one or two newspapers. The others were afraid. The statements, you will observe, are signed. There is no doubt that they give a correct account of what is taking place round about Midnapur.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

6. Captain G.A. Cole, assistant commissioner, Peshawar, 1932-35.
7. The notices were served by the government on Congress workers directing them to welcome Garhwali soldiers at Contai on 16 December 1933 and ordering them to salute the British flag On refusing to do so, the Congress workers, according to their statement, had been beaten up.

75. Earthquakes—Natural and Political[1]

The Indian people have been stirred, as seldom before, by the tragedy of the earthquakes in Bihar and Nepal.[2] The poorest, in spite of their dire poverty, and the lower middle class, which has suffered so much

1 31 January 1934, JN Papers, NMML. This was the heading given by Jawaharlal The article was published in Vartman, 6 February 1934, under the title Political Earthquake in East Bengal and also in Nation, New York, 11 April 1934, under the heading The Humiliation of India.
2 See post, item 86.

which told us more of the way despotic governments function than all the professors and text books could have done. I ventured to suggest in Calcutta that this speech of the commissioner should be widely distributed in pamphlet form so that people may know to what depths of vulgarity and bluster even a seemingly powerful government can sink when it has lost all moral hold on the people it governs.

But all this has not been enough. And now we are told of new laws extending the penalty of death for certain offences under the Indian Arms Act[5] (apparently the carrying of unlicensed arms), for a still further muzzling of the press,[6] so that the Indian press cannot publish anything at all disapproved by the local government. There must be no expression of undue concern or sympathy for detenus in detention camps or for convicts in the Andaman Islands. We may not show that it matters to us in the least whether they live or die, whether they are ill or well, whether they are treated humanely or inhumanly. They have been hunted down and cast out of the human pale, and human considerations must not apply to such castaways.

We have been long used to the proscription of books. But this was not enough. In future not merely individual books but whole 'classes of literature', specified by the government are going to be proscribed. Why take the trouble to read and judge a book when it is far easier to stop the source at the base by condemning whole groups and classes of literature? The next step presumably should be to attack the root of the problem by declaring that all reading of books and newspapers, except those produced through government agencies, is illegal.

Determined to improve the morals of our youth, the government wants to arm its district magistrates with still wider powers to control and restrict the movements of young persons, even though such persons have done nothing to bring them in touch with the wide-flung net of the laws and ordinances. So the district magistrate must be empowered to take action as soon as he suspects that someone might keep bad company. And then again government has to face a difficult problem. To send them to gaol, or to intern them, is the obvious way to treat those who look suspicious. But they become worse in

5 The Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Bill of 1934 provided for death penalty for possession and manufacture of arms

6. The Act also demanded the forfeiture of security for publication of prohibited information expressing "undue concern and sympathy for detenus and convicts in Andaman Islands or the publication of identity of witnesses before special courts."

gaol because of their association with other undesirables and to let them loose on society when they come out of prison would obviously be a risky business. Therefore the safest place for them is the prison or the detention camp, or at any rate their movements should be severely restricted.

Breaches of various orders apparently continue even though the penalty is two years' imprisonment. What can a government do except to increase the penalty? And so the proposed legislation increases the two years to seven years.

And finally the temporary repressive laws which were due to expire in 1935 are to be made permanent. This will no doubt be some consolation to those who grumble about the delay in the coming of the 'Reforms'. They will realise that the 'Reforms' are coming, if they have not already arrived.

There seems to be just one lacuna in these schemes of 'Reforms'. It is just possible that some people may be left out in spite of all the careful thought that has been given to the framing of the existing and the proposed legislation. Instead of a variety of laws and ordinances and orders and rules, it would be simpler to have one comprehensive enactment laying down that every Indian must consider himself as if he was in prison (C class), all schools and colleges to be abolished, all newspapers and books suppressed, and every morning we must all salute the Union Jack, divine service twice a day should consist of the singing of the British National Anthem, and the afternoon might be profitably devoted to listening to an inspiring address on the virtues of the British rule. This arrangement would have much to commend it In these days of world-wide depression and deficit budgets there would be much saving of money by the stoppage of educational and many other services and the employment of free labour by government. Many offices could also be combined in single individuals. Thus the district magistrate could also become the prison superintendent for the whole district.

Are we drifting to this? And is it not a mockery for us to talk of constitutions and All Parties Conferences and 'Reforms' and elections and the like when this grim tragedy faces us?

THE COMMUNAL PROBLEM

76. To Mohammad Alam[1]

Allahabad
October 29, 1933

My dear Alam,
Your letter. I do not seem to have received the articles from your paper which, you say, were sent to me.[2] It is just possible that I may have missed them in the prevailing confusion in our house. I have, however, been following your speeches as reported in the press from time to time. I confess that I feel that little can be done in this way. I think the communal problem does not stand by itself but is part of the larger social problem of India and the world. I have given expression to some of my views on the larger issues in the recent newspaper articles. Looked at from the national point of view I think that the most important thing for us is to carry on our civil disobedience struggle Only through that can we divert attention from the wretched communal wrangles of today. I have been feeling very angry at the proceedings of the Hindu Mahasabha and like bodies in Ajmer recently.[3] It is scandalous the way these people of the Mahasabha cover their extremely narrow and selfish mentality under a cloak of so-called nationalism. As a matter of fact they represent, as the resolutions show, a group of upper middle class, Hindu capitalists, landlords and hangers-on of princes. If I have the time I shall write about them.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. JN Correspondence, NMML.
2. Alam had sent a copy of the constitution of the Anti Communal League along with his articles published in Tiryak.
3. On 14 October 1933 the Hindu Mahasabha passed a resolution which strongly disapproved of any movement advocating extinction of capitalists and landlords as a class.

77. The Hindu Mahasabha and Communalism[1]

I have long been of opinion that the Hindu Mahasabha is a small reactionary group pretending to speak on behalf of the Hindus of India of whom it is very far from being representative. None the less misapprehensions have been created by their high-sounding titles and resounding phrases and it is time that these misapprehensions are removed. Nothing in recent months has pained me quite so much as the activities of the Mahasabha group culminating in the resolutions passed at Ajmer.

Going a few steps further, the Arya Kumar Sabha, which is presumably an offshoot of the Hindu Mahasabha, has proclaimed its policy to be one of elimination of Muslims and Christians from India and the establishment of a Hindu Raj.[2] This statement makes it clear what the pretensions of the Mahasabha about Indian nationalism amount to. Under cover of seeming nationalism, the Mahasabha not only hides the rankest and narrowest communalism but also desires to preserve the vested interests of the group of big Hindu landlords and the princes. The policy of the Mahasabha, as declared by its responsible leaders, is one of cooperation with the foreign government so that, by abasing themselves before it, they might get a few crumbs. This is a betrayal of the freedom struggle, denial of every vestige of nationalism and suppression of every manly instinct in the Hindus. The Mahasabha shows its attachment to vested interests by openly condemning every form of socialism and social change. Anything more degrading, reactionary, anti national, anti progressive and harmful than the present policy of the Hindu Mahasabha is difficult to imagine.

The leaders of the Mahasabha must realise the inevitable consequences of this policy of their lining up with the enemies of Indian freedom and most reactionary elements in the country. It is for the rest of India, Hindu and non Hindu, to face them squarely and oppose them and treat them as enemies of freedom and all that we are striving for. It is not a mere matter of condemnation and dissociation, though of course there is to be both these, but one of active and persistent opposition to the most opportunist and stupid of policies.

1 Speech delivered at the Banaras Hindu University on 12 November 1933. From The Bombay Chronicle, 15 November 1933. Reprinted in Recent Essays and Writings, (Allahabad, 1934), pp 45-46

2. The report of the resolution passed by the Arya Kumar Sabha, the youth wing of the Arya Samaj, was later found to be incorrect.

78. On His Criticism of the Hindu Mahasabha[1]

I am glad that the remarks I made at Banaras regarding the Hindu Mahasabha have galvanized a number of people and made them think furiously. This thinking has even taken the form of personal denunciation of me.[2] This personal aspect is unimportant and will pass because the question is far too important and vital to be considered in relation to personalities. I hope to say something in reply to the criticisms later. But I should like to point out that my criticisms related to the Hindu Mahasabha chiefly because I was addressing a purely Hindu audience. There was no point in my tracing Muslim or other non Hindu communalism there as the average Hindu is sufficiently aware of the feelings of others. It is always difficult to appreciate fully the weaknesses of oneself or one's own community. As I have stated, my remarks against communalism and anti national activities apply in an equal measure to all communal organizations in India —Muslim, Hindu, Sikh etc. There seems to be a race between them as to which can be more communal than the other. For a long time past I had remained quiet on the subject because I wished to ignore this aspect of Indian public life and hoped that national activities would gradually divert people's attention from it. But matters have come to such a pass that I felt silence on the subject was in itself a compromise and acceptance of this evil. We all know of the amazing communal and reactionary outlook and activities of the Muslim

1. Interview at Allahabad, 21 November 1933. From The Leader, 23 November 1933.
2. In a letter published in The Leader of 20 November 1933, Bhai Parmanand attributed Jawaharlal's criticism of the Mahasabha to the fact that owing to his "early training" and upbringing abroad "he is incapable of thinking as a Hindu."

communalists in India. These require no publicity but there is a misapprehension in some quarters that the Hindu communalists are of a greyer colour and not quite so black as the others. This notion is thoroughly unjustified as the attitude of the Hindu Mahasabha and the many other Hindu organizations, specially in north India, connected or unconnected with the Mahasabha, has conclusively demonstrated during the last year. The statements and evidence before the Joint Select Committee in England as well as numerous speeches and resolutions chiefly in the Punjab show this.[3] Leading members of the Hindu Mahasabha and other communalists have deliberately advocated cooperation with British imperialism in the hope of getting some odd favour. This attitude is both anti-national and reactionary, and even from the narrow point of view of Hindus, foolish and short-sighted.

There seems to be some mystery about the resolutions passed by the Arya Kumar Sabha at Ajmer. My reference to a certain resolution has called forth denials, although the denial does not tell us exactly what the resolution was. This can easily be verified and I shall be very glad indeed to learn that my information was wrong. I received a copy of that resolution apparently from some official of the Sabha for my information. This resolution was also received by others and Dr. Mahomed Ullah Jung[4] has given publicity to the text of it.[5] I shall be glad if the Arya Kumar Sabha will publish their resolutions and if it appears that we have been victims of a hoax I shall gladly and willingly express my regret to the Arya Kumar Sabha. But apart from this my main criticism would hold as it is based specially on the activities of Hindu communalists during the last many months.

3 On 31 July 1933, they protested that the government's decision on the communal problem was unjust to the Hindus and the separation of Sind was an "ex-parte judgement"

4 A resident of Allahabad

5. In a letter to the editor published in The Leader of 20 November 1933.

79. To Bhai Parmanand[1]

26/11/1933

My dear Bhaiji,[2]
Thank you for your letter of Nov. 24th.[3]

I recollect now the incident you refer to. It was in 1921 probably in the month of May or June. Shaukat Ali and I were visiting a number of towns in the eastern districts of the U.P. on a Congress tour. There had been some mention in the press about the abduction of a Hindu girl and some excitement had been caused thereby. As we were likely to pass near the village in question during our tour, Gandhiji asked us, if possible, to visit the village and enquire into the matter.

The village was, I think somewhere near Mau and on our way from Azamgarh to Ballia our train stopped for nearly two hours at Mau, or perhaps we had to change there. That very evening we had to address a meeting at Ballia so we could not stay at Mau long. We decided to pay a hurried visit to the village during the two hours at Mau. . When we reached Mau we found that the village was five miles or so away and the only conveyance available was an ekka. It was the middle of the day in midsummer and it was very hot. Shaukat Ali said that it was impossible for him to mount a rickety ekka as it was bound to break, and he could not possibly walk ten miles. He was fasting on account of the Ramzan. I decided to go by myself on the ekka. I reached the village and met the girl and talked to her for about a quarter of an hour. She was a grown up young woman and she told me (as far as I remember I spoke to her apart from the others) that she had left her home of her own free will and had come away willingly with the Muslim youth in question. Further that she had accepted Islam and married the Muslim youth and was not prepared to go back to her old house I tried to assure her that she need not be afraid of anybody but should tell me the truth and her

1. J N. Correspondence, N M M L
2 (1874 1943); prominent Arya Samajist and Hindu Mahasabha leader; sentenced in connection with the first Ghadar Conspiracy to life imprisonment, 1915, released in 1929, Chancellor of Punjab Vidyapith in 1934.
3 In reply to Jawaharlal's telegram drawing attention to a newspaper report that Bhai Parmanand had called him a coward, Bhai Parmanand denied it but said he had referred to an incident of 1921. For details of this incident, see Selected Works, Vol 1, pp 174 176 real feelings. Still she repeated what she had said before. I felt helpless in the matter and could do nothing more.

EARTHQUAKE RELIEF OPERATION IN MUZAFFARPUR, BIHAR, 22 JANUARY 1934

My conversation with the girl and the others were so prolonged that I could not come back to Mau in time for the train. So I tried, by dashing across the fields, to catch the train at the next station which was not far. But I missed the train. There was no other train and the station master was good enough to provide me with a trolley which took me quite twenty or thirty miles. I could not reach Ballia but I just managed to catch up Shaukat Ali on his way back from Ballia. The poor station master, I think, was subsequently dismissed for his courtesy to me in allowing me the use of a trolley.

On my return to Allahabad I wrote an account of what had happened and sent it on to Gandhiji. So far as I remember, I did not issue any statement to the press.

The incident took place over twelve years ago and naturally my recollection of it is a little vague. I may be wrong in some minor particulars but I think I have given the facts correctly. I do not know anything (or have forgotten) about the girl's suicide.

As for the report that you had called me a 'coward', please do not attach any importance to it. I can assure you that I do not. As you say you did not say the word, there the matter ends. But even if you had mentioned the word in a moment of excitement it would have had little significance. All of us, who feel strongly about anything, are apt to be a little vehement at times. I know that I am often guilty of this and, knowing my own weakness, I try to be tolerant in this respect to others Those in public life cannot afford to be thin-skinned. So please dismiss this matter from your mind.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

80. Hindu and Muslim Communalism[1]

My recent remarks on Hindu communalists and the Hindu Mahasabha have evidently touched a sensitive spot of many people and

1. 27 November 1933. The Tribune, 30 November 1933. Reprinted in Recent Essays and Writings, (Allahabad, 1934), pp 47-61

have produced strong reactions. For many days every morning the newspapers brought me a tonic in the shape of criticisms and condemnations and I must express my gratitude for these, to all who indulged in them. It is not given to everybody to see himself as others see him, and since this privilege has been accorded to me and my numerous failings in education, up-bringing, heredity, culture, as well as those for which I am personally responsible, pointed out to me gently, I must need feel grateful. I shall try to profit by the chiding I have received but I am afraid I have outgrown the age when the background of one's thought and action can be easily changed.

I have not hastened to reply to the criticisms because I thought it as well for excitement to cool so that we might consider the question dispassionately and without reference to personalities. It is a vital question for all of us Indians, and especially for those who from birth or choice are in the Hindu fold.

But I must begin with an expression of regret and apology. It is clear that some of us were the victims of a hoax in regard to the alleged resolution of the Arya Kumar Sabha which was sent to us and in which it was stated that there could be no peace in India so long as there were any Muslims or Christians in the country. It has been demonstrated that no such resolution was passed by the Arya Kumar Sabha at Ajmer or elsewhere; indeed no resolution of a political nature was passed by that body at all I am exceedingly sorry for having permitted myself to fall into a trap of someone's devising and I desire to express my deep regret to the Arya Kumar Sabha.

I must also express my regret both to the Arya Kumar Sabha and the Hindu Mahasabha for having presumed that they were associated with each other.

In regard to my main contention, however, I confess that I am unrepentant and I still hold that the activities of Hindu communal organizations, including the Mahasabha, have been communal, anti-national and reactionary. Of course this cannot apply to all the members of these organizations, it can apply only to the majority group in them or the group that controls them. Organisations also change their policies from time to time and what may be true today may not have been wholly true yesterday. So far as I have been able to gather, Hindu communal organizations, especially in the Punjab and in Sind, have been progressively becoming more narrowly communal and anti national and politically reactionary.

I am told that this is a consequence of Muslim communalism and reactionary policy and I have been chided for not blaming Muslim communalists. I have already pointed out that it would have been entirely out of place for me, speaking to a Hindu audience, to draw attention to Muslim communalists and reactionaries. It would have been preaching to the converted, as the average Hindu is well aware of them. It is far more difficult to see one's own fault than to see the failings of others. I also hold that it serves little purpose, in the prevailing atmosphere of mutual suspicion, to preach to the other community, although of course, whenever necessity arises, facts must be faced and the truth stated.

I do not think that the Muslim communal organizations, chief among whom are the Muslim All Parties Conference and the Muslim League, represent any large group of Muslims in India except in the sense that they exploit the prevailing communal sentiment. But the fact remains that they claim to speak for Muslims and no other organization has so far risen which can successfully challenge that claim. Their aggressively communal character gives them a pull over the large number of nationalist Muslims who merge themselves in the Congress. The leaders of these organizations are patently and intensely communal. That, from the very nature of things, one can understand. But it is equally obvious that most of them are definitely anti national and political reactionaries of the worst kind. Apparently they do not even look forward to any common nation developing in India. At a meeting in the British House of Commons last year, the Aga Khan, Sir Mohammad Iqbal and Dr. Shafaat Ahmad Khan are reported (in The Statesman of December 31, 1932) to have laid stress on "the inherent impossibility of securing any merger of Hindu and Muslim, political or indeed social, interests." The speakers further pointed out "the impracticability of ever governing India through anything but a British agency." These statements leave no loophole for nationalism or for Indian freedom, now or even in the remote future.

I do not think that these statements represent the views of Muslims generally or even of most of the communally inclined Muslims. But they are undoubtedly the views of the dominant and politically clamorous group among the Muslims. It is an insult to one's intelligence to link these views with those of nationalism and freedom and of course any measure of real economic freedom is still further away from them. Essentially, this is an attitude of pure reaction—political, cultural, national, social And it is not surprising that this should be so if one examines the membership of these organizations. Most of the leading members are government officials, ex-officials, ministers, would be ministers, knights and title-holders, big landlords, etc. Their leader is the Aga Khan, the head of a wealthy religious group, who combines in himself, most remarkably, the feudal order and the politics and habits of the British ruling class, with which he has been intimately associated for many years.

Such being the leadership of the Muslims in India and at the Round Table Conference it is no wonder that their attitude should be reactionary. This reactionary policy went so far as to lead many of the Muslim delegates in London to seek an alliance with the most reactionary elements in British public life—Lord Lloyd and company. And the final touch was given to it when Gandhiji offered personally to accept every single one of their communal demands,[2] however illogical and exaggerated they might be, on condition that they assured him of their full support in the political struggle for independence. That condition and offer was not accepted and it became clear that what stood in the way was not even communalism but political reaction.

Personally I think that it is generally possible to cooperate with communalists provided the political objective is the same. But between progress and reaction, between those who struggle for freedom and those who are content with servitude, and even wish to prolong it, there is no meeting ground. And it is this political reaction which has stalked the land under cover of communalism and taken advantage of the fear of each community of the other. It is the fear complex that we have to deal with in these communal problems. Honest communalism is fear; false communalism is political reaction.

To some extent this fear is justified, or is at least understandable, in a minority community. We see this fear overshadowing the communal sky in India as a whole so far as Muslims are concerned; we see it as an equally potent force in the Punjab and Sind so far as the Hindus are concerned, and in the Punjab, the Sikhs.

It was natural for the British Government to support and push on the reactionary leaders of the Muslims and to try to ignore the nationalist ones. It was also natural for them to accede to most of their demands in order to strengthen their position in their own community and weaken the national struggle. A very little knowledge of history will show that this has always been done by ruling powers. The Muslim demands did not in any way lessen the control of the British in India. To some extent they helped the British to add to their proposed special powers and to show to the world how necessary their continued presence in India was.

2 At the meeting of the Minorities Committee from 1 to 8 October 1931, Mahatma Gandhi agreed to accept all the demands of the Muslim representatives

I have written all this about the attitude of the Muslim communalist leaders not only to complete the picture but because it is a necessary preliminary to the understanding of the Hindu communal attitude. There is no essential difference between the two. But there was this difference that the Congress drew into its ranks most of the vital elements of Hindu society and it dominated the situation and thus circumstances did not permit the Hindu communalists to play an important role in politics. The Hindu Mahasabha leaders largely confined themselves to criticising the Congress. When however there was a lull in Congress activities, automatically the Hindu communalists came more to the front and their attitude was frankly reactionary.

It must be remembered that the communalism of a majority community must of necessity bear a closer resemblance to nationalism than the communalism of a minority group. One of the best tests of its true nature is what relation it bears to the national struggle. If it is politically reactionary or lays stress on communal problems rather than national ones then it is obviously anti-national.

The Simon Commission, as is well known, met with a widespread and almost unanimous boycott in India. Bhai Parmanandji, in his recent presidential address at Ajmer, says that this boycott was unfortunate for the Hindus, and he approvingly mentions that the Punjab Hindus (probably under his guidance) cooperated with the Commission. Thus Bhaiji is of opinion that, whatever the national aspect of the question might have been, it was desirable for the Hindus to cooperate with the British Government in order to gain some communal advantages. This is obviously an anti-national attitude. Even from the narrow communal point of view it is difficult to see its wisdom, for communal advantages can only be given at the expense of another community, and when both seek the favours of the ruling power, there is little chance of obtaining even a superficial advantage.

Bhaiji's argument, repeatedly stated, is that the British Government is so strongly entrenched in India that it cannot be shaken by any popular movement and therefore it is folly to try to do so. The only alternative is to seek its favours. That is an argument which I can only characterise, with all respect to him, as wholly unworthy of any people however fallen they might be.

Bhaiji's view is that the cry of Hindu-Muslim unity is a false cry and a wrong ideal to aim at because the power of gift is in the hands of the government. Granting this power of gift, every cry other than one of seeking the government's favours is futile. And if the possibility combines in himself, most remarkably, the feudal order and the politics and habits of the British ruling class, with which he has been intimately associated for many years.

Such being the leadership of the Muslims in India and at the Round Table Conference it is no wonder that their attitude should be reactionary. This reactionary policy went so far as to lead many of the Muslim delegates in London to seek an alliance with the most reactionary elements in British public life—Lord Lloyd and company. And the final touch was given to it when Gandhiji offered personally to accept every single one of their communal demands,[2] however illogical and exaggerated they might be, on condition that they assured him of their full support in the political struggle for independence. That condition and offer was not accepted and it became clear that what stood in the way was not even communalism but political reaction.

Personally I think that it is generally possible to cooperate with communalists provided the political objective is the same. But between progress and reaction, between those who struggle for freedom and those who are content with servitude, and even wish to prolong it, there is no meeting ground. And it is this political reaction which has stalked the land under cover of communalism and taken advantage of the fear of each community of the other. It is the fear complex that we have to deal with in these communal problems. Honest communalism is fear; false communalism is political reaction.

To some extent this fear is justified, or is at least understandable, in a minority community. We see this fear overshadowing the communal sky in India as a whole so far as Muslims are concerned; we see it as an equally potent force in the Punjab and Sind so far as the Hindus are concerned, and in the Punjab, the Sikhs.

It was natural for the British Government to support and push on the reactionary leaders of the Muslims and to try to ignore the nationalist ones. It was also natural for them to accede to most of their demands in order to strengthen their position in their own community and weaken the national struggle. A very little knowledge of history will show that this has always been done by ruling powers. The Muslim demands did not in any way lessen the control of the British in India. To some extent they helped the British to add to individual capacity. Subsequently of course the Mahasabha took full part in the London conferences and committees.

2 At the meeting of the Minorities Committee from 1 to 8 October 1931, Mahatma Gandhi agreed to accept all the demands of the Muslim representatives

Of the part taken by the Mahasabha representatives in these deliberations, especially by those from the Punjab and Sind, I wish only to say that it was a most painful one. Politically it was most reactionary and efforts were made to increase the reserved powers and safeguards of the British Government or the Governors in order to prevent the Muslim majorities in certain provinces from exercising effective power. The identical policy and argument of the Muslim communalists in regard to the whole of India were repeated by Hindu communalists in regard to certain provinces. But of course the special powers of Governors were not going to be confined to some provinces. They would inevitably apply to all the provinces. The reason for this reactionary attitude in both the cases was of course fear of the majority. Whatever the reason, this played entirely into the hands of the British Government.

The whole of the case of the Sind Hindu Sabha is a negation of the principle of democracy,[4] except in so far as joint electorates are demanded. It is an attempt to prevent the will of the majority from prevailing because the minority might suffer. The anti-social arguments of greater wealth and education of the minority are advanced, and financial reasons based entirely on the continuation of the top-heavy British system are made a prop. Wealth and economic control are not only sufficient protection under modern conditions, but have to be protected against. Almost every argument that has been advanced by the Sind Hindu communalists can be advanced by the Muslim minority in India as a whole with this difference that the Hindus are generally the richer and more educated community and have thus greater economic power.

In their attempts to show the backwardness of the Muslims in Sind, the Sind Hindu Sabha memorandum to the Joint Parliamentary Committee has made sweeping statements about Muslims which are astonishing and most painful to read.[5] They remind one of Katherine Mayo's methods of denunciation.

I do not know what the Punjab Hindu Sewak Sabha is. Probably it is not connected with the Hindu Sabha, and it may only be a

4. Its contention was that Sind, whose connection with Bombay had proved beneficial, was now being made over to a Council "dominated by a .. medieval oligarchy"

5 The memorandum of 17 July 1933 stated that "the organised gang dacoities in the Sukkur district show that the Sind Muslims continue to be almost as intolerant as they were in the forties of the last century."

(Anandi Thakore etc.) who have written to me on the subject and asked me for the facts. I have given them permission to publish this correspondence if they so wish it. You can also make any use of it that you desire.

Yours etc.,
Jawaharlal Nehru

82. To S. A. Brelvi[1]

Allahabad
December 3, 1933

My dear Brelvi,

Thanks for your letter.[2] I am now receiving the Chronicle.

I am going to Jubbulpore tomorrow. I do not think there is much chance of my going to Bombay in the near future. But one never knows.

As regards the communal issue it is true that I have not said much about it in the past though I have made frequent brief references to it. This was not because I wanted to ignore it but because I felt that mere talk of Hindu Muslim unity in the air was rather pointless. What was far more important was the positive side of our struggle, political and economic, as this would necessarily divert public attention. Now that there is a lull in the political activities the position is somewhat changed and I felt compelled to come out strongly. People accuse me of using strong language but one has to be vehement to force public opinion on an issue. Milk and water utterances full of noble sentiments and piety do not carry one very far. I think I have succeeded, at any rate, in drawing attention to the growing danger. I have felt also in the past that attempts to bring about superficial pacts and compromises could be of little help. Under the present circumstances, I think, it is even more difficult to succeed in this way. Therefore, I would not be eager to encourage such an attempt. But certainly the time has come, if it was not long overdue, to attack communalism root and branch. I think the right line to take is that communalism is merely a cover for political reaction.

1. J.N Correspondence, N.M.M.L.
2. In his letter of 29 November 1933, he congratulated Jawaharlal on his stand on the communal question.

Bhai Parmanand's rejoinder to my long statement seems to me to be particularly feeble.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

83. A Reply To Sir Mohammad Iqbal[1]

11-12-33

I have read with care the frank and courteous statement that Sir Mohammad Iqbal has issued to the press[2] and I gladly accept his invitation to answer the question he has formulated. But first I must refer to the incident during the communal negotiations at the second Round Table Conference, which has been mentioned by Sir Mohammad. I am obviously not in a position to say anything about it from my own knowledge, and others, who are in a better position, will no doubt clear up any misapprehensions that may have arisen. But when Sir Mohammad refers to any condition laid down by Gandhiji as an "inhuman condition", I am quite sure that he is under a serious misapprehension.

Sir Mohammad says that Gandhiji was prepared to accept, in his personal capacity, the demands of the Muslim delegates to the Round Table Conference, but that he could not guarantee the acceptance of his position by the Congress. It seems to me obvious that Gandhiji, or any one else in his position, could not possibly adopt any other course. No representative of a democratic organization could do so. Even the Working Committee of the Congress could not go behind the Congress resolution; it could only refer the question to the All India Congress Committee or the open session of the Congress which is the final authority. Quite apart from the general Congress attitude, it was

1 Statement to the press, 11 December 1933. The Bombay Chronicle, 14 December 1933 Reprinted in Recent Essays and Writings, (Allahabad, 1934), pp 62-71

2. In a statement issued on 6 December 1933, Iqbal contended that the Aga Khan had offered Mahatma Gandhi Muslim cooperation if the Congress agreed to accept the Muslim demands and regarded Mahatma Gandhi's condition that the Muslims should not support the claims of the depressed classes as "inhuman".

(Anandi Thakore etc.) who have written to me on the subject and asked me for the facts. I have given them permission to publish this correspondence if they so wish it. You can also make any use of it that you desire.

Yours etc.,
Jawaharlal Nehru

82. To S. A. Brelvi[1]

Allahabad
December 3, 1933

My dear Brelvi,

Thanks for your letter.[2] I am now receiving the Chronicle.

I am going to Jubbulpore tomorrow. I do not think there is much chance of my going to Bombay in the near future. But one never knows.

As regards the communal issue it is true that I have not said much about it in the past though I have made frequent brief references to it. This was not because I wanted to ignore it but because I felt that mere talk of Hindu-Muslim unity in the air was rather pointless. What was far more important was the positive side of our struggle, political and economic, as this would necessarily divert public attention. Now that there is a lull in the political activities the position is somewhat changed and I felt compelled to come out strongly. People accuse me of using strong language but one has to be vehement to force public opinion on an issue. Milk and water utterances full of noble sentiments and piety do not carry one very far. I think I have succeeded, at any rate, in drawing attention to the growing danger. I have felt also in the past that attempts to bring about superficial pacts and compromises could be of little help. Under the present circumstances, I think, it is even more difficult to succeed in this way. Therefore, I would not be eager to encourage such an attempt. But certainly the time has come, if it was not long overdue, to attack communalism root and branch. I think the right line to take is that communalism is merely a cover for political reaction.

1 J.N. Correspondence, N.M.M.L.
2. In his letter of 29 November 1933, he congratulated Jawaharlal on his stand on the communal question.

difficult to meet a suspicion and a prejudice which has little reason behind it, but anyone who knows Gandhiji at all will consider the suggestion that he is working for the Harijan movement with a political motive as absurd. Personally, I am not interested in religious labels and I am sure that they will soon disappear, or, at any rate, cease to have any political significance. Sir Mohammad evidently still attaches political significance to them Gandhiji, to my knowledge, does not, but he is certainly a man of religion and he believes in the essentials of the Hindu faith. He wants to restore these essentials and to sweep away the accretions. It is because he feels that untouchability is a degrading and a disgusting accretion that he fights against it. It is quite wrong to say that he does not want a fusion between the depressed classes and caste Hindus. Indeed he wants this as well as a fusion between both of these and the other communities in India. But, like Sir Mohammad, he is enamoured of certain basic essentials of culture and he wants to preserve these and at the same time to give perfect freedom to other cultural forms

Personally my outlook is different. It is not religious and I find it difficult to think of groups in terms of religion. Sir Mohammad evidently does so to the exclusion of other and more modern ways of thinking, and I am afraid he confuses religion with race and culture. Perhaps it is because of this that he advances a biological argument which I entirely fail to understand. Having condemned Gandhiji for a fancied attempt to prevent the fusion of the depressed classes with other communities he says that in his opinion a fusion of the different communities in India is a chimerical notion and the sooner the idea is given up the better

The question whether biological fusion of different groups in India is going to take place or not raises a host of issues and is chiefly interesting from the point of view of eugenics and culture. It is not, directly, a political question and present interest in it can only be academic. I think that it is inevitable that we should go towards such fusion but I cannot say when it is likely to become an accomplished fact.

But what has this got to do with the communal issue? Are Muslims or Sikhs or Indian Christians, as religious groups, biologically different from the Hindus as a group? Are we different species of animals or of homo sapiens? There are racial and cultural differences in India but these differences have nothing to do with the religious divisions, they cut athwart the lines of religious cleavage. If a person is converted to another religion he does not change his biological make up or his racial characteristics or to any great extent his cultural background. Cultural types are national, not religious, and modern conditions are helping in well known that a considerable section of Muslim opinion in India, the Muslim nationalists, were opposed to some of those demands. Gandhiji had repeatedly stated in India, prior to his departure for England, that he would accept the decision of Dr. M.A. Ansari as representing the Muslim nationalists, on this question. He had further stated that if the two Muslim groups could arrive at an agreement, he would unhesitatingly accept it. In order to facilitate this he had pressed hard for the inclusion of Dr. Ansari's name among the delegates to the Round Table Conference, but this repeated request was apparently strenuously opposed by the Muslim delegates in London. In spite of all this and as a last effort to bring about some agreement, Gandhiji went to the length of committing himself personally. It is obvious that although he could not bind the Congress, his comment and pleadings would have gone a tremendous way in converting the Congress.

The second condition said to have been laid down by Gandhiji was that Muslim delegates should not support the special claims of the depressed classes. This, according to Sir Mohammad, was "an inhuman condition" as it meant that the depressed classes should continue to be kept down. This is an extraordinary conclusion. If there is one thing more than any other that Gandhiji has stood for and stands for today, it is that the depressed classes should cease to be depressed or exploited or handicapped in any way, and that they should be on a perfect level with every other group. It was because he felt that if they were placed in a separate compartment by themselves they would have a stigma attached to them and fusion with others would become more difficult, that he opposed their separation. It is well known that a certain alliance was formed in London during the second Round Table Conference between the delegates of some minority groups and British Conservatives. Gandhiji evidently wanted the Muslim delegates not to support the demand for the separation of the depressed classes into a distinct group. So far as I know, he has never opposed the grant of special and additional representation to the depressed classes. Indeed, he holds that every facility must be given them to advance and catch up to the more advanced groups and communities. Subsequent events have demonstrated how far he is prepared to go in this direction. Socialist as I am, I fail to see any flaw or any impropriety in this reasoning.

Sir Mohammad evidently suspects a sinister design on Gandhiji's part. He hints that what Gandhiji is after is not so much the raising of the depressed classes, but the prevention of their fusion with the other communities, especially, I suppose, the Muslims in India. It is

I now come to Sir Mohammad's 'straight question'[3] to me. There is a great difference in his outlook and mine and I am unable to think in terms of religious majorities or minorities. It is possible, therefore, that we may talk round each other and use words and phrases in different senses. But for the present I shall try to use these words in Sir Mohammad's sense.

I am not prepared to leave the decision of any vital matter affecting India or the Indian people to any outside authority, and certainly not to the imperialist power that governs us and exploits our weaknesses and differences. I agree that the majority community should 'concede the minimum safeguards necessary for the protection of a minority'. But what are these minimum safeguards and who is to decide them? The minority itself? As a general rule I am prepared to agree to this also, though there may be exceptions where vital matters affecting the nation are concerned. We may, for the present, rule out these exceptions. How then are we to know what the minority community really desires? Are we to take the opinion of any small group claiming to represent the community? And when there are several such groups, what are we to do? Neither the Muslim League nor the Muslim Conference can claim to be a democratic or representative body and a considerable number of Muslims are opposed to their demands. The council of the Muslim League—apparently the council exists in the air and there is no other body behind it—is a more or less permanent, self-electing or nominating body. The Muslim Conference is dominated, by its very constitution, by the Muslim members of the official legislatures. How can these bodies claim to represent the Muslims generally in India and, more specially, the Muslim masses? They may occasionally give expression to a prevailing sentiment. Then again are we to consider a group of persons, chosen by the ruling imperialist power for the Round Table Conference, as representatives of the Muslim masses? They may be estimable persons, but they certainly have no representative capacity.

The only way to find out the wishes of the Muslims of India is to consult them and the democratic method is for them to elect representatives for the purpose on as wide a franchise as possible, preferably adult franchise. I am perfectly prepared to abide by any decision of theirs so arrived at.

3 Iqbal asked Jawaharlal how India's problem could be solved if the majority community was prepared neither to make concessions nor to accept the award of a third party. Iqbal thought that there were only two alternatives, either to allow British imperialism to continue permanently or to redistribute India on the basis of religious, historical and cultural affinities.

I should like Sir Mohammad Iqbal to consider his fourteen points which are supposed to provide the minimum safeguards necessary for the protection of the Muslims, and to spot anything in them which benefits or raises up the Muslim masses. As he knows, my chief interest in politics is the raising of the masses and the removal of barriers of class and wealth and the equalization of society. This point of view was apparently never considered by the framers and advocates of the fourteen points. It is natural that I should not feel enthusiastic about them. But if the Muslims declare for them in the democratic way I have suggested, I shall accept these demands and I am quite sure that they would be accepted by the nation as a whole. I imagine, however, that when the Muslim masses are consulted they will lay far more stress on economic demands which affect them as well as the non-Muslim masses intimately rather than on such demands as interest a handful of upper class people.

The political problem of India can only be decided by the Indian people themselves without the intervention of an outside authority, so also the communal problem. And the only way to proceed in regard to both of these is to go to the people themselves. A constituent assembly elected on an adult or near-adult franchise alone can decide the political issue. I am personally prepared to have elections for this assembly by separate electorates for those minorities who so desire it. The representatives of these minorities, so elected, will have every right to speak for them and no one can say that the majority community has influenced their election Let these people consider the communal question and, as I have stated above, I shall accept the demand put forward by the Muslim representatives.

Sir Mohammad will observe that I am placing before him a democratic and feasible solution of the problem and I am even keeping the Congress out of it. I am sure the Congress will gladly efface itself if this solution is put forward

My answer to Sir Mohammad Iqbal's question therefore is this. I do not think that these are the only two alternatives he mentions. There are many other avenues. In any event he ought to know full well, that if any community, majority or minority, seeks an alliance with imperialism, it will have to face the unrelenting and continuous opposition and hostility of Indian nationalism. As a matter of fact, no community or minority can do so Only a few leaders and upper class people may do so, for every community as a whole suffers from it. The masses can never compromise with imperialism for their only hope lies in freedom from its shackles.

Nor do I believe in the religious redistribution of India. Such divisions are most undesirable and cannot take place in the modern world. But

I am not against redistribution or reshaping of different provinces which will give different cultural groups the fullest opportunity for self-development.

84. Statement to the Press[1]

I am glad Sir Mohammad Yakub[2] has appreciated the suggestion made by me in my reply to Sir Mohammad Iqbal about a decision on the political and communal problems by means of a constituent assembly. But he is labouring under a misapprehension if he thinks that the present and intended legislatures can take the place of a constituent assembly. That is far from my meaning, and I do not think these legislatures can be really representative of any section of opinion.

The ideas underlying a constituent assembly are (1) full self-determination by the people of India without the imposition of the will of any outside authority and (2) decision by the mass of people through their representatives elected on adult franchise.

To facilitate a decision on the communal problem and remove all suspicion from the minds of minorities, I have suggested that such minorities as desire it might elect their representatives through separate electorates.

The only business of the constituent assembly will be to draw up a constitution and then dissolve itself, new elections taking place under the new constitution so drawn up.

It is clear that the White Paper and the Round Table Conference schemes have nothing to do with all this, and they must be ignored till the time comes for a constituent assembly to be summoned. The struggle for freedom of the Indian people which is being carried on by the Congress will continue till then.

1. Allahabad, 16 December 1933 The Hindu, 17 December 1933.
2. (1879-1942), president, U P Muslim League, 1926, member, Legislative Assembly, 1924-38.

85. Reality and Myth[1]

The suggestion made by me that both political and communal problems in India should be solved by means of a constituent assembly has met with considerable favour. Gandhiji has commended it and so have many others. Others again have misunderstood it or not taken the trouble to understand it.

Politically and nationally, if it is granted, as it must be, that the people of India are to be the sole arbiters of India's fate and must therefore have full freedom to draw up their constitution, it follows that this can only be done by means of a constituent assembly elected on the widest franchise. Those who believe in independence have no other choice. Even those who talk vaguely in terms of a nebulous Dominion Status must agree that the decision has to be made by the Indian people. How then is this decision to be made? Not by a group of so-called leaders or individuals. Not by these self-constituted bodies called All Parties Conferences which represent, if any body at all, small interested groups and leave out the vast majority of the population. Not even, let us admit, by the National Congress, powerful and largely representative as it is. It is of course open to the Congress to influence and largely control the constituent assembly if it can carry the people with it. But the ultimate political decision must be with the people of India acting through a popularly elected constituent assembly.

This assembly of course can have nothing in common with the sham and lifeless councils and assemblies imposed on us by an alien authority. It must derive its sanction from the people themselves without any outside interference. I have suggested that it should be elected under adult or near adult franchise. What the method of election should be can be considered and decided later. Personally I favour the introduction, as far as possible, of the functional system of election as this is far more representative of real interests The geographical system often covers up and confuses these interests But I am prepared to agree to either or to a combination of both. I see no difficulty, except one, and that is an important one, in the way of such a constituent assembly being elected and functioning. This functioning will be limited to drawing up of a constitution and then fresh elections will have to be held on the basis of the new constitution.

1 Statement to the press, Allahabad, 5 January 1934 The Tribune, 8 January 1934 Reprinted in Recent Essays and Writings, (Allahabad, 1934), pp. 72-81.

The one difficulty I referred to is the presence and dominance of an outside authority, that is the British Government. It is clear that so long as this dominance continues no real constituent assembly can meet or function. So thus an essential preliminary is the development of sufficient strength in the nation to be able to enforce the will of the Indian people. Two opposing wills cannot prevail at the same time; there must be conflict between them and a struggle for dominance, such as we see today in India. Essentially, this struggle is for the preservation of British vested interests in India and the White Paper effort is an attempt to perpetuate them. No constituent assembly can be bound down by these chains, and so long as the nation has not developed strength enough to break these chains, such an assembly cannot function.

This assembly would also deal with the communal problem, and I have suggested that, in order to remove all suspicion from the minds of a minority, it may even, if it so chooses, have its representatives elected by separate electorates. These separate electorates would only be for the constituent assembly. The future method of election, as well as all other matters connected with the constitution, would be settled by the assembly itself.

I have further added that if the Muslim elected representatives for this constituent assembly adhere to certain communal demands I shall press for their acceptance. Much as I dislike communalism I realise that it does not disappear by suppression but by a removal of the feeling of fear, or by a diversion of interest. We should therefore remove this fear complex and make the Muslim masses realise that they can have any protection that they really desire. I feel that this realisation will go a long way in toning down the feeling of communalism.

But I am convinced that the real remedy lies in a diversion of interest from the myths that have been fostered and have grown up round the communal question to the realities of today. The bulwark of communalism today is political reaction and so we find that communal leaders inevitably tend to become reactionaries in political and economic matters. Groups of upper class people try to cover up their own class interests by making it appear that they stand for the communal demands of religious minorities or majorities. A critical examination of the various communal demands put forward on behalf of Hindus, Muslims or others reveals that they have nothing to do with the masses. At the most they deal with some jobs for a few of the unemployed intellectuals but it is obvious that the problem even of the unemployed middle class intellectuals cannot be solved by a redistribution of state jobs. There are far too many unemployed persons of the middle class to be absorbed in state or other services and their number is growing at a rapid pace. So far as the masses are concerned there is absolutely no reference to them or to their wants in the numerous demands put forward by communal organisations. Apparently the communalists do not consider them as worthy of attention. What is there, in the various communal formulae, in regard to the distress of the agriculturists, their rent or revenue or the staggering burden of debt that crushes them? Or in regard to the factory or railway or other workers who have to face continuous cuts in wages and a vanishing standard of living? Or the lower middle classes who, for want of employment and work, are sinking in the slough of despair? Heated arguments take place about seats in councils and separate and joint electorates and the separation of provinces which can affect or interest only a few Is the starving peasant likely to be interested in this when hunger gnaws his stomach? But our communal friends take good care to avoid these real issues, for a solution of them might affect their own interests, and they try to divert people's attention to entirely unreal and, from the mass point of view, trivial matters.

Communalism is essentially a hunt for favours from a third party—the ruling power. The communalist can only think in terms of a continuation of foreign domination and he tries to make the best of it for his own particular group. Delete the foreign power and the communal arguments and demands fall to the ground. Both the foreign power and the communalists, as representing some upper class groups, want no essential change of the political and economic structure; both are interested in the preservation and augmentation of their vested interests. Because of this, both cannot tackle the real economic problems which confront the country for a solution of these would upset the present social structure and devest the vested interests. For both, this ostrich-like policy of ignoring real issues is bound to end in disaster. Facts and economic forces are more powerful than governments and empires and can only be ignored at peril.

Communalism thus becomes another name for political and social reaction and the British Government, being the citadel of this reaction in India, naturally throws its sheltering wings over a useful ally. Many a false trail is drawn to confuse the issue; we are told of Islamic culture and Hindu culture, of religion and old custom, of ancient glories and the like. But behind all this lies political and social reaction, and communalism must therefore be fought on all fronts and given no quarter. Because the inward nature of communalism has not been sufficiently realised, it has often sailed under false colours and taken in many an unwary person. It is an undoubted fact that many a Congressman has almost unconsciously partly succumbed to it and tried to reconcile his nationalism with this narrow and reactionary creed. A real appreciation of its true nature would demonstrate that there can be no common ground between the two. They belong to different species. It is time that Congressmen and others who have flirted with Hindu or Muslim or Sikh or any other communalism should understand this position and make their choice. No one can have it both ways, and the choice lies between political and social progress and stark reaction. An association with any form of communalism means the strengthening of the forces of reaction and of British imperialism in India; it means opposition to social and economic changes and a toleration of the present terrible distress of our people; it means a blind ignoring of world forces and events.

What are communal organisations? They are not religious although they confine themselves to religious groups and exploit the name of religion. They are not cultural and have done nothing for culture although they talk bravely of a past culture. They are not ethical or moral groups for their teachings are singularly devoid of all ethics and morality. They are certainly not economic groupings for there is no economic link binding their members and they have no shadow of an economic programme. Some of them claim not to be political even. What then are they?

As a matter of fact they function politically and their demands are political, but calling themselves non-political, they avoid the real issues and only succeed in obstructing the path of others. If they are political organisations then we are entitled to know, exactly where they stand. Do they stand for the complete freedom of India or a partial freedom, if such a thing exists? Do they stand for independence or what is called Dominion Status? The best of words are apt to be misleading and many people still think that Dominion Status is something next door to independence. As a matter of fact they are two different types entirely, two roads going in opposite directions. It is not a question of fourteen annas and sixteen annas but of different species of coins which are not interchangeable.

Dominion Status means continuing the steel framework of British finance and vested interests; from this stranglehold there is no relief under Dominion Status. Independence means a possibility of relief from these burdens and the freedom to decide about our social structure. Therefore whatever measure of limited freedom we may get under Dominion Status it will always be subject to the paramount claims of the Bank of England and British capital, and it will also be subject to the continuation of our present economic structure. That means that we cannot solve our economic problems and relieve the masses of their crushing burdens; we can only sink deeper and deeper into the morass. What then do the communal organizations stand for: independence or Dominion Status?

We need not refer to that travesty of a constitution which the White Paper is supposed to embody. It is only an ungentle reminder to us that British capital and interests in India will be preserved at all costs, so long as the British Government has power to preserve them. Only those who are interested in the preservation of these British vested interests or those who are very simple and unsophisticated can go anywhere near the White Paper or its offshoots.

Even more important than the political objective is the economic objective. It is notorious that the era of politics has passed away and we live in an age when economics dominate national and international affairs. What have the communal organizations to say in regard to these economic matters? Or are they blissfully ignorant of the hunger and unemployment that darken the horizon of the masses as well as of the lower middle classes? If they claim to represent the masses they must know that the all-absorbing problem before these unfortunate and unhappy millions is the problem of hunger, and they should have some answer, some theoretical solution at least for this problem. What do they propose should be done in industry and in agriculture? How do they solve the distress of the worker and the peasant; what land laws do they suggest? What is to happen to the debt of the agricultural classes; is it to be liquidated or merely toned down, or is it to remain? What of unemployment? Do they believe in the present capitalist order of society or do they think in terms of a new order? These are a few odd questions that arise and an answer to them, as well as to other similar questions, will enlighten us as to the true inwardness of the claims and demands of the communalists. Even more so I think will the masses be enlightened if the answers manage to reach them. The Muslim masses are probably even poorer than the Hindu masses but the 'fourteen points' say nothing about these poverty stricken Muslims. The Hindu communalists also lay all their stress on the preservation of their own vested interests and ignore their own masses.

I am afraid I am not likely to get clear, or perhaps any answers to my questions, partly because the questions are inconvenient, partly because communal leaders know little about economic facts and have never thought in terms of the masses. They are experts only in percentages and their battle ground is the conference room, not the field or factory or market place. But whether they like them or not the questions will force themselves to the front and those who cannot answer them effectively will find little place for themselves in public affairs. The answer of many of us can be given in one comprehensive word—socialism—and in the socialist structure of society.

But whether socialism or communism is the right answer or some other, one thing is certain—that the answer must be in terms of economics and not merely politics. For India and the world are oppressed by economic problems and there is no escaping them. So long as the fullest economic freedom does not come to us there can be no freedom whatever the political structure may be. Economic freedom must of course include political freedom. That is the reality today; all else is myth and delusion, and there is no greater myth than the communal myth.

To go back to the constituent assembly. If a really popular assembly met with freedom to face and decide the real issues, immediately these real economic problems would occupy attenion. The so-called communal problem will fade into the background for the masses will be far more interested in filling their hungry stomachs than in questions of percentages. This assembly will release the vital forces in the country which are at present suppressed by our foreign rulers as well as by Indian vested interests. The lead will go to the masses and the masses, when free, though they may sometimes err, think in terms of reality and have no use for myths. The workers and the peasantry will dominate the situation, and their decisions, imperfect though they may be, will take us a long way to freedom. I cannot say what the constituent assembly will decide. But I have faith in the masses and am willing to abide by their decision And I am sure that the communal problem will cease to exist when it is put to the hard test of real mass opinion. It has been a hothouse growth nurtured in the heated atmosphere of conference rooms and so-called All Parties Conferences. It will not find a solution in that artificial environment, but it will wilt and die in the fresh air and the sunlight.

THE BIHAR EARTHQUAKE

86. Appeal for Relief[1]

The terrible earthquake catastrophe that has overwhelmed Bihar and stricken thousands of homes, has, for the moment, shaken and numbed us all.[2] Many of us of the Congress fold are engrossed in our struggle for freedom. But even so the call of the suffering and afflicted humanity must be attended to.

I hope Congressmen will give every help, personal service, money and material to those that have been rendered helpless. There must be hundreds or thousands of orphan children to be looked after. That should be the special province and privilege of our women.

As was done in Japan during the earthquake disaster, I hope each householder will offer at least temporary welcome to one or two orphan boys and girls. The burden of relief will naturally fall heavily on Bihar, but I hope other provinces will help her and gladly share it with her.

1 Statement to the press, Santiniketan, 19 January 1934. The Bombay Chronicle, 20 January 1934

2 The earthquake in Bihar on 15 January 1934 damaged all buildings in an area of about 6000 square miles and caused considerable loss of life. Darbhanga, Champaran and Muzaffarpur were the worst hit.

87. A Report on Muzaffarpur[1]

Muzaffarpur was in ruins Thousands of houses had collapsed and many that remained standing were cracked and dangerous of approach.

1 Statement to the press, Allahabad, 24 January 1934. The Tribune, 27 January 1934 Jawaharlal visited Muzaffarpur on 22 January 1934.

The streets were full of bricks and debris. Many of the smaller lanes were wholly blocked by the fallen material and one had to mount up ten feet or more to cross it. The roads were full of cracks and fissures through which large quantities of sandy water had come out leaving a covering of sand behind. In one place the road had sunk several feet and a wide gaping chasm separated it from the rest of the road.

The surviving population was living in improvised shelters; most of them could hardly be called shelters as there was only a white sheet as a covering. There they lived with an utter lack of privacy and without the most elementary necessities, shivering in the cold and not daring to approach the tottering walls. Many of these encampments in the city were isolated islands, surrounded by debris and ruined houses, and difficult of access. Sanitation, in these inside areas especially, was most defective, and the fear of an epidemic breaking out was always present. The water supply was very scarce.

The debris still covered many corpses. I saw corpses being carried away for disposal. I saw also a corpse emerge as the debris was being removed to clear a lane. It was that of a young man. His arm was up, apparently to protect himself from a falling wall. But the attempt failed and the raised arm remained petrified in that position, in mute testimony of his desire to save himself from the approaching doom.

There was no escape for those who lived in the crowded quarters of the city with its narrow lanes, no escape especially for the womenfolk. If they rushed out in the lane, even there the falling walls buried them. Those who were buried and still lived, lived only to die a lingering and terribly painful death for no rescue came for days. A few, with an amazing persistence, were taken out three days after and survived.

One of the most painful and distressing aspects of a painful occurrence was the delay in beginning relief work. It was natural for the people concerned to be numbed by the shock. It was natural for the nerves of the district officials to give way to some extent. But nerves have to be controlled in emergencies, and when every hour is precious, every moment may mean life or death to many, a cool and clear head is necessary. There were apparently no such heads in Muzaffarpur when they were most needed. And so it happened that while Muzaffarpur lay in ruins and large numbers of men and women and children hovered between life and death, the world knew nothing about it. Not even Patna, a bare forty miles away, knew of it. Nor did any outsiders know of the worse fate of Monghyr or of Darbhanga or many other places. It took three days for the terrible news to leak out. The usual swift means of communication—the telegraph and the railway—had no doubt failed, but these cities lay within a day's journey on foot of each other. Government collapsed during these three days as surely no other government of modern times has done. Mr. K.P. Jayaswal,[2] writing of Darbhanga, truly says that such a state of affairs was unthinkable under any modern government. The first step that the government should have taken was to facilitate telegraphic and other communications to relieve the anxiety of friends and relatives in other places, and immediately to organise rescue work. Instead of this the telegraph worked in the most leisurely way and no steps were taken to add to the staff. Telegrams were usually accepted but not sent for days.

It is only three or four days after the event that the government seem to have woken up from their torpor and realised the gravity of the disaster. After the Bihar Governor's flying tour of the affected areas, relief work was pushed on by official agencies.

When I reached Muzaffarpur I went straight to one of the camps of the refugees in the court compound. Immediately I was surrounded by many of these unhappy people who complained that they were being forced by the police to take down their huts and encamp elsewhere as the compound was needed for the military. Many huts had already been brought down. This struck me as a curious way of offering relief—to turn out these people unceremoniously and without helping them or making other arrangements. A reference was made to some of the district authorities present, whereupon the order was apparently varied and most of the people who had encamped there were allowed to remain.

I next visited the hospital nearby. It was carrying on its work in the open. There were, I was told, eighty to ninety indoor patients and 50 to 60 outdoor patients. These figures apply to the earthquake patients only. It seemed to me that these figures were very low, considering the magnitude of the disaster. And I found, subsequently, large numbers of injured people in the various shelters round about the city who were not receiving any or sufficient medical attention. The hospital staff was working at high pressure and it was apparent that they were in need of further help. In spite of this, however, I was informed that qualified doctors from outside were not officially welcomed in Muzaffarpur, nor were the local doctors encouraged in any way.

Both in regard to medical and other relief, I gathered the impression that the officials in charge disliked the idea of any activity that was not completely under them. A Marwari Relief Committee that was doing good work complained of the difficulties they had faced from official red tape and discouragement.

2. (1871-1937); historian and author of Hindu Law and Hindu Polity.

This attitude, typical as it is of officialdom in India, was none the less completely out of place in the face of a great disaster calling for every effort, official and private. It had been made perfectly clear on behalf of non-official agencies that they were there to cooperate with official agencies, as far as possible, in the relief work. But it was also stated that they could not place themselves under the control and direction of the official agencies as this would make them as expensive, slow-moving and unresponsive to public needs as official agencies usually are. Non-official effort should be far more efficient and speedy, and should make the most of every rupee spent.

The present needs of the survivors of Muzaffarpur are food, clothing, blankets, good shelters against rain, and medical relief. At least one more hospital should be started in a big shed, and arrangements made for medical attendance in the various camps. Splints and first-aid materials are badly needed. Cases of delivery are taking place in these camps with no doctors in attendance. A thorough cleaning up of the areas surrounding the camps is urgently needed to prevent an epidemic. The lack of water is causing great distress as the old water supply has failed and the wells have become choked up with sand. The government is taking steps to open a number of tube wells.

Something is now being done, both by official and non-official agencies, to relieve the survivors of Muzaffarpur. But the villages round about are sadly neglected. They suffer also from a lack of water and their fields are partly covered by the sand that came up when water gushed out from the fissures in the ground. The disaster is terrible enough but wild rumour makes it even worse. All manner of extraordinary stories are about. The Pioneer gave currency to an amazing tale of the Ganges drying up and playing various other tricks in Patna. No one in Patna, that I came across, had heard of this extraordinary occurrence.

Figures for casualties vary from a few thousands to tens of thousands. Official figures, as usual, err greatly on the one side, rumour errs on the other.[3] Perhaps the truth lies between the two. It is obvious, however, that a very large number of people died as a result of this terrible visitation. And most of their bodies still lie buried under the ruins of the houses they once inhabited.

3. The official estimate was that 7,253 lost their lives.

88. Appeal for Contributions[1]

My visit to Muzaffarpur has convinced me—if further conviction was necessary—that help in the shape of money, blankets and clothes is most urgently required. Various official and non-official agencies are at work in organising relief and there is some danger of duplication and waste of effort although every attempt will undoubtedly be made for cooperation in the common task. Official agencies are heavy of movement, expensive and surrounded by red tape. They seldom reach fully or effectively the masses who are most affected. Therefore it is desirable for us to concentrate on the non-official agencies that are functioning and to send our help to them. These agencies are gradually consolidating themselves under the Central Relief Fund of which Babu Rajendra Prasad is the president, and many representative persons in Bihar the members. I earnestly appeal therefore for help to be sent direct to Babu Rajendra Prasad or to the Bihar Bank, Patna, for this Central Relief Fund. It is inadvisable for individuals and groups to attempt to carry relief directly to the areas affected. They should communicate first with the Central Relief Committee at Patna who will direct their efforts in the right direction. Above all, it should be remembered that delay defeats the object in view. Urgent and immediate help is wanted—blankets, old and new, clothes, used and unused, and, above all, money. First-aid appliances are also needed.

Bihar has been struck down by a terrible natural calamity. We in other provinces have escaped. A slight turn in fortune's wheel and we, of other cities and areas, might have had to face disaster and the loss of our loved ones. We have escaped but many of our brethren and sisters have been stricken down and call, in suffering and agony, to us, the fortunate ones, for help. The dead are beyond our reach, but the living and the maimed lie in the shadow of death and fight for life. Their strength fails them but their feeble cry has reached the hearts of India's millions. The call has been heard and all our strength and resources must go out in answer to it.

1 Statement to the press, 24 January 1934. The Bombay Chronicle, 28 January 1934.

89. Advice on Contributions[1]

Babu Rajendra Prasad writes to me that relief work is proceeding apace; but the problem is, of course, an enormous one. He says that blankets and clothes are not so much needed now as money for shelters and other work. It is therefore desirable not to pay much attention to the collection of clothes and blankets. And in no event should food-stuffs be sent. Some grain merchants of Allahabad have collected rice, dal and other food stuffs and tried to send them to Patna. I have pointed out to them that this is a very wasteful method of giving relief as such articles can easily be purchased on the spot, and the freight, thela and other charges may even exceed the price of the food-stuffs sent. Such provisions when collected, should be sold and the money sent to Patna. All energies must therefore be concentrated on the collection of money.

Young men have come to me offering their personal services for relief work. Their idea of relief usually is to collect money and material and to distribute them in the affected areas. The work of distribution can obviously be done only by a select few and it is not possible to increase the number of workers of this kind indefinitely without a loss of efficiency. Babu Rajendra Prasad has also stated that he does not require workers from outside at present.

But may I commend to our eager young men a suggestion put forward by Sir Courtney Tyrell, the Chief Justice of the Patna High Court? He has suggested that small groups of young men, about six in number under a leader or foreman, should go armed with spades, shovels and baskets and help in clearing the debris. In this way, working as voluntary labourers, they could give valuable help to the poor and to persons of moderate means to recover their household goods, and sometimes even the bodies of their dear ones, from the debris and rubbish that cover them. This requires hard work but it is most useful work and profitable alike to the sufferers in the affected areas and to those who undertake it. Does the enthusiasm of our young men run to this kind of physical labour, or is it merely a clerkly enthusiasm which looks to a desk?

1. Allahabad, 29 January 1934 The Leader, 31 January 1934

90. The Organization of the Allahabad Relief Fund[1]

Many of our colleagues and members of our Earthquake Relief Committee who have been making collections for the Relief Fund have told me that all manner of groups and individuals are collecting money for relief in the city. Some of these groups are no doubt bona fide groups, about others we cannot say whom they represent and for whom they collect. It appears that quite a large number of communal, sectional and even caste groups are collecting money for their special funds. That is unfortunate enough but what is even sadder is the opportunity that this indiscriminate collection gives to unscrupulous individuals to exploit the earthquake disaster to their own personal advantage. If there could be anything that was non-communal and non-sectional it was the earthquake that struck down high and low and people of every community and religion and class and group. And if there is any form of activity that must be above communalism and party and sectionalism and petty group feeling, it is the relief work to lessen the suffering of the survivors. It is tragic to think and act in our narrow groups in the face of such a terrible and all embracing disaster. And it is criminal for anyone to endeavour to profit by this catastrophe.

It was to prevent this and to avoid the duplication of energy and waste of effort, and to make the city of Allahabad pull together in one mighty effort to render relief, that the Earthquake Relief Committee, Allahabad, was started. Every attempt has been made to make this committee a thoroughly representative one of the city by the inclusion of people from various groups and communities, and if any further suitable names are suggested for inclusion, they will be gladly added to it As chairman of the executive of this committee I appeal to our fellow citizens to concentrate on all relief going through this committee, and not fritter away their energies and their money by distributing them in various directions

I should also like to warn them not to give money to any collectors whom they do not know Those who are collecting on our behalf possess our receipts and we are not responsible for money collected for which our receipts are not given. Lists of donors of Re. 1 and upwards are sent to The Leader for publication If any donor does not find his name in any list or has not received a receipt from us he is requested to make enquiries from us. We want our accounts to be in perfect condition so that they can be audited later and placed before the public.

[1] Statement to the press, Allahabad, 31 January 1934. The Leader, 31 January 1934

I should like to express my deep regret to some members of our committee for their not receiving the notice of our last meeting in time. Some of these notices were insufficiently addressed and came back through the post. We are certainly responsible for this mistake. But may I also point out that a very heavy burden of work has had to be borne by some of us, and especially by our secretary, Pandit Mohanlal Nehru, during the last few days. He has not only given much time to collections but has, almost unaided, done a great deal of office work and account keeping in connection with the collections made. We have received, besides money, about thirty maunds of blankets and clothes and most of these have been despatched to Patna.

In conclusion may I, on behalf of the Earthquake Relief Committee, appeal again for generous donations of money for relief. Allahabad has begun well and it is obvious that there is widespread sympathy and a desire to help It has been most heartening to see the poorest giving what were to them quite substantial sums. But Allahabad has still to catch up with other cities. I am sure it will—but meanwhile men and women and children suffer dire agony in stricken Bihar.

91. On Conditions In Sitamarhi[1]

The crops are gone and there are large sheets of water all round. The future is threatened with a dangerous situation. In some places roads are passable while in others one has to go in boats for three miles at a stretch. It is monstrous to think of collecting rent now from the peasants. Rent must be remitted I am amused to learn of the attachment of a peasant's property in Vedual (Katna Thana) for chowkidari tax after the earthquake His lota and bedding were attached. It is extraordinary that such things should happen. Obviously, when one talks of relief it means that a person has no resources to live upon and to ask him to pay any kind of tax is absurd. The question is not how much he is to pay but how much he is to be paid by us. Probably, in most instances officials are discouraging such tendencies but this is not a matter to be left to the discretion of individuals at such a time. Formal orders might be issued postponing all pending suits and definitely laying down that no other suits must be instituted for a definite period of some length. The situation in Sitamarhi sub-division seems to me to be full of dangerous possibilities in view of the almost total failure of the crops which have come after all these days of dead harvests and floods.

1 Interview to the press, after his tour of the Sitamarhi sub-division of Muzaffarpur district, 6 February 1934 From The Searchlight, 9 February 1934

As for the complaint of the middle classes that they have not received adequate relief, I have not looked into the matter, but I am inclined to think that this complaint, while partly true, is wholly unjustifiable It can be true in the sense that the immediate need was that of the poorest classes which had no food and which lacked the immediate necessities of life. In the case of the middle classes this was not so acute, although in individual cases it was bad. Naturally, relief agencies supplied the necessities first to those who lacked them, including members of the middle classes. The real demand from the middle classes which has not so far found fulfilment is for loans and other kinds of assistance such as help to start some kind of business etc. Some such kind of help will no doubt have to be given but it is bound to take second place during the first few weeks of urgent relief.

Compared to the town the village problem is much more important and it is increasing daily to such an extent that in two or three months a terrible famine is expected. It is a problem of supporting about 20 lakhs of men with food, clothing etc. We have to do something to prepare ourselves to face this emergency. The relief agencies plan to give support for a few months and then, feeling that things have been restored to normal conditions, the workers may return to their houses to resume their own business. We must be prepared for the terrible situation that is going to face us after two or three months.

The village problem should be carefully studied and I am convinced that immediate relief should be given there. One is frightened by looking at the condition of the villages. Sitamarhi was the granary of Bihar till now and even used to send grains to other places. The condition of the peasant here was complete nakedness before the earthquake For the last two or three months it has been very bad because of floods, and now the earthquake has made it worse. The granary has gone underground I have seen the inside of houses where, due to water coming from underground, sands five to six feet high have accumulated Now the rains will come and the road problem will become very acute. There are already large sheets of water and with the rains the villages will become absolutely unapproachable. In some of the villages all the houses have been razed to the earth. In one place, where there was very little sand, the removal of the same for one bigha of land cost nearly eighteen rupees, which means that lakhs of rupees are required to make the land cultivable. In other places the removal of sand results in the finding of water. As I was going on the road, I saw one cow sinking under the sand neck-deep, due to water under the sand.

A moderate estimate shows that a sum of four to five crores of rupees is required for purposes of loan. The government will have to give loans from famine funds lying with them and it is the duty of the government, not only the right of the people, that they should utilise these funds for this purpose, because neglecting this problem at present will result in acute famine

Public works, being the best means of relief, must be created on a very wide scale, and if these are forthcoming much work could be done Cheap grain shops, cloth shops and building materials shops should also be opened.

I feel that the villagers should be made to do cooperative relief work. Until and unless the peasants and masses do cooperative work, the relief agencies cannot carry on relief work. Relief should be given through a proper channel: form volunteer corps of able-bodied men of each village in various places, so as to make them tackle the problem of clearing wells, debris etc. Giving relief in grain and clothes is all right but that will only be making them weak and even creating a class of beggars and idlers, and unless they are organised nothing substantial can be achieved.

92. Conditions in North Bihar and Monghyr[1]

I have returned after a week's wandering over the earthquake areas in north Bihar, impressed more than ever with the havoc caused by this terrible disaster and the vastness of the problem which we have to face I had read a great deal about the results of this earthquake, I had seen

1 Interview to the press at Patna, on his return from a tour of the north Bihar and Monghyr areas, 10 February 1934 From The Leader, 12 February 1934

many pictures; I had even visited previously the ruined city of Muzaffarpur; I had thought that I had a fair idea of the conditions prevailing in the affected areas But the actual sight of mile after mile of desolate sand-covered land, full of cracks and fissures and petty crater-like protuberances in the Sitamarhi area and elsewhere in the north, is one which I will never forget. And Monghyr—all that I had heard and read had not prepared me for the fearsome sight that met my eyes. I stood staggered and appalled at the heap of utter ruin and desolation that was once a rich and flourishing city.

I have come back with many impressions. I hope to put them down in a report which I shall submit soon to the Earthquake Relief Committee, Allahabad, and the Bihar Central Relief Committee. But I should like to pay my tribute of admiration to the numerous groups and workers from all over India, who are giving their personal service to the cause of relief. It would not have been surprising if friction had developed in this mixed and heterogeneous crowd, engaged in a novel undertaking Some petty cases of friction have taken place but, on the whole, there has been a remarkable and most pleasing cooperation and coordination of activities. I could not discover any instance of communal or sectional activity in any group or even individual worker. Hindus, Muslims, Sikhs, Christians and others have pulled together and tried to work as Indians, face to face with a common disaster. It is well that the country should realise and appreciate not only the real spirit of service that our people have shown but also their powers of organization and mutual cooperation, and take pride in this.

93. The Inefficiency of Official Relief[1]

Nine gentlemen of Bihar have given a chit to the Government of Bihar for what is called their prompt action in dealing with the earthquake situation[2] They have expressed their admiration and gratitude for this and have deprecated that anything should have been said to give a contrary impression. Sir Samuel Hoare has not failed to take advantage of this statement and has, after his wont, paid another tribute to the "magnificent services" that rule us.

1 12 February 1934 The Leader, 15 February 1934
2. The statement commending local officers from the "commissioner down to the ordinary constables" was published on 11 February 1934.

In giving the certificate of good behaviour, the nine gentlemen perhaps had in view a certain statement made by me recently. I have no desire to deprive the Bihar Government of this chit, nor have I got the least wish to find fault with the government or anyone at a time of great difficulty. But in the face of an unparalleled disaster vital facts cannot be ignored or slurred over, especially when they affect future action. Individuals, on the spot, whether officials or non-officials, must have received a great shock and it would be ungenerous to judge them by standards meant for normal times. No one of us can say how he or she will behave in the face of such an overwhelming catastrophe. But governments cannot be judged by individual and personal standards. If they claim to be efficient, they have to be judged by standards of efficiency. The government we have has a measure of efficiency in certain departments—in collecting taxes, in repressing political activity, in running its bureaucratic machine, etc. It takes action swiftly and often ruthlessly when its interests are at stake. It passes new laws overnight to strengthen its position whenever that is required. But is it equally efficient and swift in other forms of activity? Was it efficient in the days immediately following the earthquake? I am sure that the Bihar Government knows in its own heart that it was not so. And I am surer still that public opinion of every shade in the affected areas thinks so, though this may not find expression in newspapers. Habitual supporters of the government, title-holders and the like, have told me so in plain enough language.

No one blames the government for the earthquake. But if the government fails to act at the right moment, it is inefficient, and if this failure results in serious loss to the community, it must be held responsible for this loss. The government we have has a long record of inefficiency in many matters and a classic description of this was given by the late Mr. E.S. Montagu in connection with the Mesopotamian muddle.[3]

The first step that the government had to take immediately after the catastrophe was to act swiftly, measure up the situation, restore communications, and try to save life and lessen human suffering and loss A study of the earlier communiques of the Bihar Government will show how erroneously they viewed the situation and how they tried to minimise the loss. Even district officers who wanted to take quick action had no assistance then from their government. Large numbers of living persons were lying under the debris suffering untold agonies and dying the most painful of deaths. What steps did the government take to rescue them in these vital early days? What has it done since in regard to this? So far as I know the government has not attempted to remove the debris from any considerable number of houses. Some roads have certainly been cleared, and this was an important matter, but the houses with their dead and half-dead remained. It was not a very difficult matter to rush troops to clear this debris, or to utilise the services of the thousands of railway workers at Jamalpur or Monghyr, or to engage an army of labourers for this special purpose. No such step was taken and the debris remains still, except where it has been removed to a small extent by private agencies. But private and non-official agencies have many difficulties to face, some of these of the government's making, some due to the sacrosanct laws of private property.

3. Montagu had attributed the military failure in Mesopotamia in 1916 mainly to the machinery of the India Office which "produces an apotheosis of circumlocution and red tape"

A fact, which has a terrible significance, is the recovery of living persons from under the debris, day after day, right up to the thirteenth day after the earthquake. Many bodies were also recovered which doctors testified to having died a day or two earlier. How many died during that fateful period when they might have been rescued alive if real efforts in that direction had been made?

The government has demonstrated that it can produce special laws and ordinances at a moment's notice. Could it not declare a state of emergency in the affected areas and pass special measures to deal with the new conditions swiftly as other governments have done under similar circumstances? But its energy and ingenuity seem to be exhausted in dealing with Chittagong and Midnapur and the like.

I have no desire to go back to past events and to cry over spilt milk. But if the government wants to surround itself with the halo of sanctity and to gather chits of good character, it will have to face criticism. And the purpose of this criticism is not to waste time and energy over past happenings, which are beyond remedy, but to take a lesson for the future. The situation cannot be met by pious phrases and platitudes or by the wooden methods of a red tape-ridden officialdom living in the ruts of routine. Vision is necessary, and courage, and an organic view of the present situation, so that even out of the disaster something worthwhile might emerge. I know that many officers of the government are devoting themselves to the work of relief with commendable energy. But that energy will not carry them far unless the mind of the government behind them functions with speed and efficiency.

MISCELLANEOUS

94. On the Understanding of History[1]

When my friend and colleague, Acharya Narendra Deva of Kashi Vidyapeeth,[2] asked me to write a foreword to this book, I hesitated a little. I had little time and having recently come out of jail was very busy. Then I saw what the book was about and I gladly agreed to write something. After reading part of the book I became more convinced that I should write because I desired that this book should be widely read. I have not finished reading the book as yet and therefore do not want to say anything about it in detail. But I have seen enough to know that Shri Mukundilal Srivastava[3] has written extremely well on various aspects of imperialism and has thrown considerable light on a major problem of our present-day world.

There are several ways of reading history and understanding it. One view is that a variety of events takes place, and great men appear and leave their powerful impact on the country and on the world. Any event is not specifically related to any other; sometimes events occur suddenly and sometimes they are coincidental. The other interpretation of history is that events are all closely inter-related. One event affects the other and if all the developments of world history are taken together then some sort of laws and causes emerges and we can understand the course and significance of world history. By knowing this, some light is thrown on all the events of world history and we can see our course ahead.

1. 8 October 1933. Foreword to Samrajyavad Kya Aur Kaise Phaila by Mukundilal Srivastava, published in 1933. Original in Hindi.
2. With the object of providing higher education, through the medium of Hindi, to students who had left government recognised institutions, Shiv Prasad Gupta started the Kashi Vidyapith. It was inaugurated by Mahatma Gandhi in 1921. Dr. Bhagavan Das was the first chancellor and Acharya Narendra Deva, the first principal.
3. (b. 1896), journalist, his published works include Brihat Hindi Shabda Kosh and Jnana Shabda Kosh.

In our country and in many others, history is still mostly interpreted in the first way. Everywhere are to be found people who consider their own country the best, and regard it as sacred soil. They study their ancient history and award it a high place—it becomes satyayug or Ramarajya; and the hope remains that the same may be restored. They do not ponder over the real reasons that cause national progress and decline and revolutions. But the advanced communities in Europe do not now understand history in this way. They prefer the other viewpoint and thereby gain a proper understanding of history and the present-day conditions of the world.

Many people in India these days are perplexed as to what to do and how. The present-day world and the condition of our country look strange and meaningless to us. The reason for this confusion is that we have not understood the real meaning of history. When we secure this understanding our way will be clear and no event of today will seem meaningless

In this book an attempt has been made to view history in a new perspective. There have been vast empires for thousands of years, but modern imperialism is a new concept developed for the first time in recent years. At present almost all the countries of the world (except Soviet Russia) are in its grip. We fight against it in India and want to be free of it. But very few of us have understood its real import and often mistake it for the imperialism of old. Unless we understand this new imperialism properly and discern its roots and branches, we cannot grasp the conditions of the present-day world and cannot properly wage our battle for freedom

So, because the various aspects of modern imperialism are explained in this book, I welcome it This is not a book for a few persons or even for one or two thousands, but for millions Anyone who works for the country should pay attention to this issue and understand it.

I am, however, sorry that the language used in this book seems a bit too difficult and many people will not be able to understand it. I could not understand many words but, unfortunately, I am almost illiterate in Hindi. It seems to me that such books should be written not for a few scholarly persons but should be such that a person with very limited reading—a farmer or a labourer even—should be able to understand it. Unless the masses understand it, our labour will be in vain.

95. On the Death of Vithalbhai Patel[1]

One by one the old guard of leaders and fighters for India's freedom pass away, leaving terrible emptiness behind.[2] The strain of fighting breaks up their physical strength. Prison life at an advanced age ruins their health but the call of the great cause continues to beckon them and they go forward till the end in health and sickness in India and abroad. Mr. Vithalbhai Patel was a fighter for this cause, a warrior of the battalion for India's freedom and even in death the last words that came from his lips echoed the passion that had consumed him. It is idle and somewhat presumptuous for me to pay the usual tribute to Vithalbhai, but I can say with assurance that we of the younger generation will treasure his memory and draw inspiration from his example. The great cause of freedom has consumed many brave warriors in its fire and it will consume many more of India's sons and daughters That cause remains, the fight continues and shall continue till the goal is reached. We, who had the privilege of working with Vithalbhai Patel in the common undertaking, have learnt of his passing away with deep pain and sorrow. What must be the shock to his brother, Sardar Vallabhbhai, as he lies in his lonely cell in Nasik Jail![3]

1. Statement to the press, Allahabad, 24 October 1933 The Tribune, 26 October 1933.
2. Vithalbhai Patel died on 21 October 1933 in Geneva
3. He had rejected the government's offer of parole for two days to perform the cremation.

96. To Mahatma Gandhi[1]

Allahabad
October 27, 1933

My dear Bapu,
I should like to have your advice in the matter of the Allahabad Congress Hospital. This hospital was situated in Swaraj Bhawan and functioned successfully till the end of 1931 when Swaraj Bhawan was seized by the police. All our expensive equipment and medicines—there were even six unopened cases of fresh medicines worth Rs. 2000/—were taken possession of by the police. An ambulance car had the same experience. After some interval, the British authorities, more for show purposes than for anything else, proclaimed that they would continue to keep a dispensary open in Swaraj Bhawan for the public. For the last year or two this dispensary has been supposed to function. But there is no evidence that even a single member of the public has ever taken advantage of it. Some policemen go there occasionally for treatment. Anand Bhawan overlooks Swaraj Bhawan and no one here has seen any patient enter or come out of the place. And yet I am told false entries are made in their books to show that many patients are being treated. However, I am not interested in this.

1. JN Correspondence, NMML.

The Congress Hospital after being turfed out of Swaraj Bhawan had no home and for some weeks it established itself under a big tree in a public park nearby. Medicines were distributed from this open place and in the course of two months under the tree it treated 2500 outdoor patients.

In April 1932, the hospital was established in a cottage belonging to me. This little house adjoins Swaraj Bhawan on the side away from Anand Bhawan. Previously this house had been rented out As soon as we could get it vacated we established the hospital there and it has been functioning there ever since. Some threats were made by the authorities but they were ignored It was also suggested by them that if the word Congress was dropped from the name they would not interfere. This proposal was rejected and the hospital continued to be described on its board as the Congress Hospital and it continued to display the national flag. The government did not then interfere with it.

Indoor patients were not taken but during the year ending 31st March 1933, as many as 58,000 outdoor patients were treated. During the six months ending 30 September 1933, 37,034 outdoor patients have been treated We have reduced our maintenance charges very greatly and have spent during the last 18 months Rs. 8,360/- over the hospital. This works out to about Rs. 465/- a month. A great part of these funds has been received from the profits of the Allahabad Swadeshi Exhibition. We have not received much directly from the public except medicines and surgical appliances from some firms in Bombay. But a great part of the latter went to the government. We have now almost exhausted our present resources. Some little money may come to us from the next Swadeshi Exhibition but such an existence is rather a precarious one and I should have liked to provide for the hospital for at least the next two years. It is doing good work and it has kept the flag flying during a period of considerable difficulty.

Would you advise us to make a public appeal for funds giving the above facts? I am afraid that many people who might otherwise help may not be keen on doing so openly under the existing circumstances although the hospital as such has nothing whatever to do with politics. If a public appeal has to be made who is to make it? The person who is most intimately connected with the hospital is my cousin Mohanlal Nehru Kamala has also been much interested in it. Of the local committee there is no one of real importance and some of them have practically dropped out during the last two years of storm and stress.

I might mention that in calculating the expenditure of the hospital I have not included house rent. The rent of the house, which used to be Rs 75/- p.m, is my own contribution to the hospital expenses.

Yours affectionately,
Jawaharlal

97. To Bharati Sarabhai[1]

Allahabad
28.10.33

My dear Bharati,

I received your note soon after my discharge from gaol but I delayed answering it as I wanted to send you the photograph you wanted. I searched for it and could not find a spare one. The latest photograph —apart from snapshots—was one taken in Ceylon in the summer of 1931, that is, nearly two and a half years ago. It makes me look much younger than I am now but that perhaps is not such a bad thing after all. Not possessing a spare copy of the photograph I have written to Ceylon for it. As soon as it comes I shall send it to you. I shall also try to send a copy for Suhrid.[2] Both will be sent to your address and you can hand one of them to Suhrid.

1 J N. Correspondence, N M M L.
2 (1913 1942); son of Ambalal Sarabhai and brother of Bharati Sarabhai

You must be full of Oxford and your new life there. It is a fascinating place with an extraordinary charm, and, in spite of its narrow outlook on life, it gives something to its votaries that is hard to find elsewhere. Much the same can be said of Cambridge. But however much Oxford may absorb you, you will not, you cannot, forget what is happening in India. And I know that the call of India will grow and fill your mind.

Mridula wired to me on her discharge. I have asked her to pay us a visit here. I wish she would come but she is so shy and reserved that I doubt if she will do so.

Give my love to Suhrid and keep a lot of it for yourself. I have a fairly long memory for my friends but for you it is a little longer and more vivid than for many others.

Yours affectionately,
Jawaharlal Nehru

98. To E.G. Nair[1]

Allahabad
November 9, 1933

Dear Friend,[2]

Your letter. To bless a new periodical before one has seen what it is like, seems to be a precarious undertaking. I am afraid I am no admirer of Indian periodicals. They are extraordinarily poor compared to foreign ones. If you can bring out something which shows that it has intellectual efficiency behind it and not merely the dull routine work of schoolmasters and old world politicians ignorant of the present conditions then indeed I shall welcome your Review, not otherwise.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1. JN Correspondence, NMML.
2. He planned to edit a monthly journal, The Standard Review, on the lines of the Modern Review and asked Jawaharlal for a message.

99. To Gangadharrao Deshpande[1]

Allahabad
November 9, 1933

My dear Gangadharraoji,
Your letter about the Bellary exhibition.[2] I am not going to Madras for the youth conference or anywhere else for exhibitions and the like. I have even refused to open the exhibition being held in my own city of Allahabad. I feel that those of us who are carrying on the political and aggressive activities of the Congress must not divert their energies to the side shows. It is not merely a question of time and energy but one of creating a psychological atmosphere. I have, therefore, informed the Bellary exhibition people that I cannot come. I am sure you will understand me.

With all good wishes,

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 JN Correspondence, NMML.
2 He invited Jawaharlal to open an exhibition at Bellary sometime in December 1933

100. On Hindi Literature[1]

We may regard ancient Hindi literature as court literature. Most often poets and writers produced literary pieces in order to please the court under whose patronage they lived. Days have now changed. Literature can become effective only if new vigour and life is infused and contemporary ideas absorbed.

The manner in which the Hindi-Urdu controversy is being posed is not correct. It is generating among the Muslims the feeling that this is being done to oppress and suppress Urdu.

1. Banaras, 12 November 1933 From Aaj, 14 November 1933 Original in Hindi

While Hindi lags behind, Bengali, Marathi and Gujarati have advanced further because we find that they incorporate progressive ideas of the modern world. I know of people who in their desire to read Bengali literature have learnt the language but I know none who with the sole aim of reading Hindi literature have learnt the language.

If we were independent and I had the authority, I would first of all make arrangements to translate into Hindi 300 or 400 well-known literary works of the world.

101. To Indira Nehru[1]

Allahabad
14.11.33

Indu sweetheart,
We returned from Benares last night after a very strenuous and tiring visit. This morning I received your letter, well timed to reach me on my birthday When one gets so old as I am, birthdays are not quite so welcome as they used to be But a birthday letter from you is always very welcome and your few lines made me happy.

But why did you suddenly think of apologising for something that I do not know? 'Forgive and forget'—what am I to forgive and forget? There is seldom any question of forgiving and forgetting between friends, and I hope you and I are friends, though you happen at the same time to be a dearly loved daughter What is far more important is for people to understand each other

I sent you your books from Benares There were two small French dictionaries. You wanted an English-French one. I could not find any good one here. The pocket one I have sent is not much good I think you had better get Cassell's French-English and English-French in one volume This is the best students' dictionary that I know of and it is not expensive. I used it in Harrow! Of course since then there have been many later editions. You can easily get a copy in Bombay.

1 Indira Gandhi Papers, N M.M L

I enclose some stamps, stamped envelopes and postcards. About the torch—I can't find a decent one here. There is no point in my buying a new one here and sending it to you The postage will be nearly as much as the cost of the torch and there is a possibility of its breaking on the way. I am therefore asking Jal to get a new torch for you He will send it to you or give it to you.

My age is becoming a delicate subject, not fit for public reference. I was born on the 14th November 1889—so you can calculate it. The date is a hundred years after the storming of the Bastille, which took place in 1789 and began the French Revolution. That is something to help you to remember it by if you think it worth remembering.

Chhoti puphi is apparently still in Ahmedabad. Her address there is: Ghikanta Wadi, Ahmedabad. If she goes to Bombay she will of course let you know. Raja's[2] address there is: 21, New Marine Lines, Fort.

I am glad you like your new school Why do you say that there is little possibility of your passing this year? Of course you will pass and pass well

I am afraid there is little chance of my going to Bombay. Jal wires to ask me to come down but I doubt if I can go.

We have had a French couple here in Allahabad. They brought a letter of introduction from a certain Prof. Alba who wrote to say that he had come here last year, when I was in gaol and had met Miss Nehru who talked in French to him. Was it you who met him? I have had a chance of French conversation with the couple who came. It was a very halting affair but they were perfectly delighted to hear French and to talk it after a long interval. They did not know much English. Poor Madame got malaria and was laid up for a week. They have gone now to Benares and may go on to Bombay. Their names are M. and Mme. Deleplanque. Bari puphi has had the Poona photographs.

I learn that chhoti puphi has gone to Bombay.

I shall send you typed copies of the letters[3] for yourself and Mr. Vakil after a few days. I want to revise them before sending them, to correct typing mistakes.

Love,

Your loving
Papu

2 G. P. Hutheesing (b. 1906), married Krishna Nehru in 1933, secretary, National Planning Committee and China Aid Committee appointed by the Congress, honorary Planning Adviser to the Ministry of Rehabilitation, 1947

3 Published as Glimpses of World History by Kitabistan, (Allahabad, 1934)

102. To Horace Alexander[1]

Allahabad
20/11/33

Dear Mr. Alexander,[2]
Thank you for your letter of the 25th October which I have only just received. Also the pamphlet on the Indian prisons. I shall read it and if I have any suggestions to make I shall certainly let you know. My own articles on the subject dealt rather vaguely with the problem.[3] These have now appeared in pamphlet form and I am sending these to you separately.

I had several long talks with C.F. Andrews when he was here and he will no doubt tell you about them. But I should very much like to keep in touch with you and your group which is working so bravely for our cause. Of course these contacts come to a sudden end when any of us disappears for a while behind prison walls—and that happens frequently enough

About my letters to my daughter, I shall welcome publication in England. But there are quite a lot of them. Some of them were published here some years ago and they had a good reception.[4] My daughter was then about ten years old and naturally the letters were written for her age Later on I continued them in prison but my discharge in January 1931 interrupted this. I gave a set of these letters to Gandhiji and perhaps Miss Harrison[5] saw them. When I went back to prison I continued my self imposed task because I found it interesting and my daughter asked me to do so. I had a long period in prison and gradually the letters grew in volume. They were also far more advanced as Indira (my daughter) had also grown Within a week of my discharge I finished the series and brought it up to date and when I came out I brought this mountain of letters with me.

1 Horace Alexander Papers, N M M L.
2 Member of the Society of Friends; professor at Selly Oak College at Woodbrooke in Birmingham and associate of Mahatma Gandhi, author of The Indian Firmament and India Since Cripps
3 See Selected Works, Vol 5, pp 560 577
4 Letters from a Father to His Daughter, (1928).
5. Agatha Harrison (1885 1954), English woman who was a friend of Mahatma Gandhi and Jawaharlal and actively supported the Indian freedom movement.

Kurzaffaefun

Collapse road – about four feet – and fissures through which water forced out forming a little river. The bed is dry now but is covered with sand.

Taken on 22.1.43

[illegible]

THE BIHAR EARTHQUAKE PHOTOGRAPH TAKEN BY JAWAHARLAL

I have had little time to attend to them so far but the thought of publication has often occurred to me. It is difficult for me to judge of their value. They deal with world history in a sort of jumpy way with a connecting link, and there are many personal and intimate touches in them. Recently I enquired from Indian publishers and many of them were keen on publishing them. The Indian office of the Oxford University Press also have said that they are prepared to consider them. So far I have not sent the manuscript or typescript to any firm. I am having the letters typed.

There are certain obvious advantages in having them published by a good English firm rather than in India. I am by no means sure that the Oxford University Press will finally agree to do the job. Their Indian office is not very enterprising and largely deals with school textbooks, so it might be worthwhile to approach Allen & Unwin or Gollancz or some other well known firm. I shall be grateful indeed if you or Miss Harrison could do so.

I shall send you in a few days a copy of the old letters which were published in book form as well as the typescript of some of the new ones. If it is considered worthwhile to issue an English edition of the old letters (which have already been published), I shall gladly agree to it. My publishers here have no objection to it.

The publication of the new letters is a much bigger task. To give you some idea of their length: there are about 2000 foolscap pages of manuscript. I enclose a list of these letters to enable you to form some idea of the subjects dealt with.

In case the letters are to be published in England would it be desirable to have a separate Indian edition published here? I am not quite sure how these things work out. Of course there are going to be editions here in some of the Indian languages—Hindi, Urdu, Gujarati, Bengali etc. But I am not quite clear if the English language edition should be printed and published in both England and India at the same time.

There is always a possibility of my going back to prison suddenly. In case this happens I think it would be best if you communicated with my sister, Mrs. Pandit, 6, Cawnpore Road, Allahabad. She will know what I want done

With all good wishes,

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

103. Rammohan Roy[1]

An age of transition is always a difficult period to pass through. Human nature is terribly conservative and sticks to the old ruts. But life is dynamic and ever-changing, and so it happens from time to time that life goes ahead leaving social forms and customs far behind. There is a tremendous lag which prevents society from progressing, but as life must go ahead the lag has to be made good speedily.

Rammohan Roy[2] came during such a period of transition in India. Indian political forces had broken down and society was stagnant. There was decay and degeneration everywhere and yet the people generally remained in the old grooves. It required the vision of a really great man to sense that the old order had had its day and to have glimpses of the future. And it required great strength of will to fight for this change and to oppose the entrenched armies of reaction. Rammohan Roy had that vision and strength and he has rightly earned for himself the title of 'father of modern India'. Wise and learned in the ways of the old world as well as of the new, he formed the ideal link between the two, and he started India on the path which she has followed with growing speed ever since.

This path has now brought India to another and a greater period of transition. Again, life pushes ahead while reaction holds back, fearful of change. As always, life will win but there will be many a hard struggle before the change is made. And in these days of struggle and change it is inevitable that our minds go back a hundred years and think of our great countryman who fought the battle of progress on a number of fronts almost single-handed, and draw inspiration from his example.

1. Message on the centenary of the death of Rammohan Roy, 23 November 1933. J.N. Correspondence, NMML.
2. (1772-1833); founded the Brahmo Samaj, 1828, prominent in the agitation for the abolition of sati, pioneer of Indian journalism

104. To Syed Mahmud[1]

Allahabad
24.11.33

My dear Mahmud,
Thank you so much for your gift of books. Some of them are specially welcome. There were two or three which I already possessed. As it happened, Tewari was going to Calcutta that day and I decided to send these three books back to the Book Company with him. I shall get other books instead. I hope you do not mind.

As for the razor it is very beautiful and all that but you seem to have overlooked the fact that it was British-made. For a long time past I have not purchased or used any British articles consciously, with the exception of books and very special medicines. Indeed I try not to use foreign articles as far as possible. As for razors I have just invested in a seven anna Indian made safety razor which I intend using. I am also using Indian blades. What then am I to do with your beautiful English razor? I think you had better take it back and give it to some of your friends who use such things. I have no use for a British razor.

The Jubbulpore meeting[2] is definitely fixed for December 4th. So please turn up there.

You need not feel put out about forgetting my birthday. If a person is worried such things are bound to happen. There are bigger things than birthdays.

Yes, we did not discuss personal matters You ought to know me sufficiently to realise that I never discuss them unless the other party takes the initiative I would not do so even with Kamala or Indu. Such has been my training.

Thank you for your translation of the letters. I have sent it on to Kitabistan.

Love,

Yours affly.,
Jawahar

1 Syed Mahmud Papers, NMML.
2 The informal meeting of Congress leaders See ante, item 31.

105. To C.K. Narayanaswami[1]

Allahabad
December 2, 1933

My dear Narayanaswami,[2]
I have your letter.[3] It is really extraordinary how people talk tall and do nothing. I should have thought Bombay at least would provide an active and aggressive group of workers but so far there is no evidence of that I am very sorry to learn about your eye trouble and your domestic difficulties I really do not know what I can advise you from here. There are so many of my colleagues who are in similar difficulties and there seems to be no way out. Indeed there can be no way out and the more our struggle assumes a revolutionary character the more these difficulties will increase When I see scores of thousands of peasants who have been deprived of everything they possessed and are utterly helpless I feel ashamed of my own condition and yet all of us are powerless till the system itself is changed. A time is coming when every person who takes an active part in the movement must not merely go to prison but take the definite risk of losing every single thing he possesses Of course, this will result, and is resulting, in thoroughly frightening the possessing class

The Servants of the People's Society is a small group. So far as I know it is in considerable financial difficulties and can meet its present liabilities with some difficulty. It stopped long ago asking for new recruits. I do not think you can expect any help from it

I am sending you two pamphlets containing some of my articles. I have no present intention of going to Bombay. If something extraordinary turns up I shall go there.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

1 JN Correspondence, NMML.
2 Journalist; director of publicity, Khadi and Village Industries Commission, Bombay, 1961
3 He complained that Congressmen had not actively organized the discontented tenants.

106. To Indira Nehru[1]

Allahabad
16.12.33

Darling,
I have just come back from Delhi and Aligarh. I am sending you Rs. 20/- for your petty expenses. Of course you will want more for your travelling expenses to Allahabad. I shall send this soon.

Do come for a few days during Christmas or else you may have to visit me in Naini! Even now it is doubtful if you will find me here.

Jamnalalji is here and he sends you his love.

Love,

Papu

1 Indira Gandhi Papers, NMML.

107. To Vijayalakshmi Pandit[1]

Allahabad
25.12.33

Nan darling,
I have had some scrappy news of you since you all left. But I have presumed that you are having a good and restful holiday and the children are enjoying themselves. I have just returned from Cawnpore Indu, as you know, is here for a few days. So is Raja.

Allahabad seems to be very quiet on this Christmas day and the sun is shining brightly and almost one could imagine that India and the world were at peace. Almost—but behind the thin veil is turmoil and conflict and suffering.

I write these few lines to you to wish you all the best of new years and joy and fulfilment of your purposes.

Love,

Your loving brother,
Jawahar

1. JN Correspondence, NMML.

108. To Indira Nehru[1]

Allahabad
January 1, 1934

Indu sweetheart,
Today is New Year's Day and my thoughts travel to you and I want to send you all my love and good wishes. We did not see very much of each other during your brief stay here but it was a delight to have you even for a few days. I am afraid we shall not meet for three or four months and even when we meet then it will be perhaps for a twenty-minute interview! But I shall feel happy in the thought that you are growing up in mind and body and fitting yourself for the great work you will have to do in after-life.

There is some chance of mummie and I going to Calcutta about the middle of this month. If we go there we shall certainly pay a visit to Santiniketan.

We are expecting Psyche[2] and Perin here for a day or two on their way back from Lahore where they had gone to see Bul. Padmaja may also come here on her way back from Calcutta.

Please remember to send me volume 10 of the letters which you have got.

Mummie sends her love.

Love and kisses from

Your loving
Papu

1 Indira Gandhi Papers, NMML.
2 Goshiben Captain, grand-daughter of Dadabhai Naoroji

109. To Syed Mahmud[1]

Allahabad
4/1/34

My dear Mahmud,
You seem to have a way of worrying about the most trivial matters. I must say that your letters, containing references to my impending arrest, surprise me. You seem to forget what is happening in India and talk in terms of petty domestic troubles. I wish you would appreciate that I think somewhat differently.

1 Syed Mahmud Papers, NMML.

Do come here when you can. I hope to be here for at least another week, and maybe ten days.

Kamala wants me to thank you for the ghee and the eatables you have sent.

Mother is getting on fairly well.

Love,

Yours affly.,
Jawahar

110. To Indira Nehru[1]

Allahabad
12.1.34

Bien amee,
Your letter has just come. It does seem a pity that you should live so near the sea and yet not have a swim in it. I am writing to Mr. Vakil. Of course there are bad patches but it should be possible to choose a good place in Juhu. It is better to go some distance to a safe and good place than to choose a bad one. On Sundays plenty of our friends go to Juhn to have a dip and swim. I suppose you know some of them like Psyche etc. You could always go then. You could also go to Juhu on another day of the week and if necessary someone could go with you. I don't think there will be much difficulty about making the arrangements.

I sent you Marguerite Agnid's book with chhoti puphi. I hope she gave it to you I do so want you to develop your body for this is the foundation of health and beauty. You are too weak at present. Your back is not at all strong—and don't you want to have a stiff backbone?

1. Indira Gandhi Papers, N.M.M.L.

I have felt that a little exercise makes all the difference in the world. The day seems brighter and we are more cheerful and lighter on our feet.

When you swim, run a little in the sand afterwards. This takes the chill off.

Mummie sends her love.

Love,

Your loving
Papu

111. To Indira Nehru[1]

Santiniketan
January 19, 1934

Darling Indu boy,

We had three and a half very strenuous days in Calcutta and now we are at Santiniketan. We arrived here this evening and were welcomed by the Poet and all the students and staff who had gathered together. The Poet read out some lines in welcome which were very beautiful.

We have been put up in the Poet's own house. We have got delightful little rooms with fascinating furniture—low chairs and tables and little artistic knick-knacks. Art is of course the strong point of this place and everything has the artistic touch.

The electric lights have all gone out and I am writing this by the light of a hurricane lantern It is nearly midnight and mummie is asleep Although I am tired I wanted to send you a few lines for I have not written to you for many days and I may not be able to write again soon. We shall be travelling for another three days before we reach Allahabad.

Tomorrow we shall go over Santiniketan and Sriniketan where the farm is. I shall have a talk with the Poet and later with the students and staff And at night we shall again take to the train and journey on Our next halt will be Patna. We are staying there for the day to see Rajendra Babu and confer with him about relief work for the earthquake areas. There has been terrible destruction and loss of life and large numbers of children are homeless

1 Indira Gandhi Papers, N.M.M.L.

We felt the earthquake distinctly in Allahabad on the 15th. I was standing at the time in the verandah speaking to a crowd of kisans. Suddenly I started wobbling and when I discovered that it was an earthquake I was interested and greatly amused. Nothing much happened in Allahabad but in Bihar it has not been a matter for amusement. Whole cities have been destroyed. Did you feel the earthquake?

We hope to be back in Allahabad on the 22nd.

I have given the Last Letter[2] of the series I wrote to you in prison to the Modern Review to be published in the next number. A Hindi translation will also appear in February in the Saraswati.

I must go to bed now for we have to get up early to have tea with the Poet.

All my love (and mummie's also, although she is asleep!)

Your loving
Papu

2. See Selected Works, Vol. 5, pp 493-499.

112. Address to the Prayag Mahila Vidyapitha[1]

Many years ago—so much has happened during recent years that I have almost lost the exact count of time and even a few years seem long ago —I had the honour of laying the foundation stone of the hall of the Mahila Vidyapitha.[2] Since then I have been engrossed in the dust and tumble of politics and direct action, and the struggle for India's freedom has filled my mind. I have lost touch with the Mahila Vidyapitha. During the last four months that I have been in the wider world outside the prison walls many a call has come to me and I have been invited to participate in a variety of public activities I have not listened to these calls and have kept away from these activities, for my ears were open to only one call and all my energy was directed to one end. That

1 The Leader, 24 January 1934 Reprinted in Recent Essays and Writings, (Allahabad, 1934), pp. 148 153 As Jawaharlal could not be present, the address was read out on his behalf on 20 January 1934

2. See Selected Works, Vol 3, p 361

call was the call of India, our unhappy and long oppressed motherland, and especially of our suffering and exploited masses, and that end was, the complete freedom of the Indian people.

I have refused therefore to be drawn away from the main issue to other and minor activities, important as some of these were in their own limited spheres. But when Shri Sangam Lal came to me and pressed me to address the convocation of the Mahila Vidyapitha, I found it difficult to resist his appeal. For behind that appeal I saw the girls and young women of India, on the threshold of life, trying to free themselves from an age-long bondage and peeping into the future with diffidence and yet, as youth will, with the eyes of hope.

I agreed, therefore, provisionally and diffidently for I was not sure if a more urgent call would not call me elsewhere. And now I find that urgent call has come from the sorely afflicted province of Bengal[3] and I must go there and I may not be back in time for the convocation of the Mahila Vidyapitha. I regret this and all I can do is to leave this message behind.

If our nation is to rise, how can it do so if half the nation, if our womankind, lag behind and remain ignorant and uneducated? How can our children grow up into self-reliant and efficient citizens of India if their mothers are not themselves self reliant and efficient? Our history tells us of many wise women and many that were true and brave even unto death. We treasure their examples and are inspired by them, and yet we know that the lot of women in India and elsewhere has been an unhappy one. Our civilization, our customs, our laws, have all been made by man and he has taken good care to keep himself in a superior position and to treat woman as a chattel and a plaything to be exploited for his own advantage and amusement. Under this continuous pressure woman has been unable to grow and to develop her capacities to her fullest, and then man has blamed her for her backwardness.

Gradually, in some of the countries of the West, woman has succeeded in getting a measure of freedom, but in India we are still backward, although the urge to progress has come here too We have to fight many social evils; we have to break many an inherited custom that enchains us and drags us down. Men and women, like plants and flowers, can only grow in the sunlight and fresh air of freedom; they wilt and stunt themselves in the dark shadow and suffocating atmosphere of alien domination.

3 Jawaharlal had been invited to address a public meeting at Calcutta to protest against the repression in Chittagong and Midnapur For a report of this speech see ante, item 39.

For all of us, therefore, the first problem that presents itself is how to free India and remove the many burdens of the Indian masses. But the women of India have an additional task and that is to free themselves from the tyranny of man made customs and laws. They will have to carry on this second struggle by themselves for man is not likely to help them.

Many of the girls and young women present at the convocation will have finished their courses, taken their degrees, and prepared themselves for activities in a larger sphere. What ideals will they carry with them to this wider world, what inner urge will fashion them and govern their actions? Many of them, I am afraid, will relapse into the humdrum day to-day activities of the household and seldom think of ideals or other obligations; many will think only of earning a livelihood. Both these are no doubt necessary, but if this is all that the Mahila Vidyapitha has taught its students, it has failed in its purpose. For a university that wishes to justify itself must train and send out into the world knight errants in the cause of truth and freedom and justice, who will battle fearlessly against oppression and evil. I hope there are some such amongst you, some who prefer to climb the mountains, facing risk and danger, to remaining in the misty and unhealthy valleys below.

But our universities do not encourage the climbing of mountains; they prefer the safety of the lowlands and valleys. They do not encourage initiative and freedom; like true children of our foreign rulers, they prefer the rule of authority and a discipline imposed from above. Is it any wonder that their products are disappointing and ineffective and stunted, and misfits in this changing world of ours?

There have been many critics of our universities and most of their criticisms are justified. Indeed hardly anyone has a good word for the Indian universities. But even the critics have looked upon the university as an upper class organ of education. It does not touch the masses. Education to be real and national must have roots in the soil and reach down to the masses. That is not possible today because of our alien government and our old-world social system. But some of you who go out of the Vidyapitha and help in the education of others must bear this in mind and work for a change.

It is sometimes said, and I believe the Vidyapitha itself lays stress on this, that woman's education should be something apart from that of man's. It should train her for household duties and for the widely practised profession of marriage. I am afraid I am unable to agree to this limited and one-sided view of women's education. I am convinced that women should be given the best of education in every department of human activity and be trained to play an effective part in all professions and spheres. In particular, the habit of looking upon marriage as a profession almost and as the sole economic refuge for woman will have to go before woman can have any freedom. Freedom depends on economic conditions even more than political and if woman is not economically free and self-earning she will have to depend on her husband or someone else, and dependents are never free. The association of man and woman should be of perfect freedom and perfect comradeship with no dependence of one on the other.

What will you do, graduates and others of the Vidyapitha, when you go out? Will you just drift and accept things as they are, however bad they may be? Will you be content with pious and ineffective expressions of sympathy for what is good and desirable and do nothing more? Or will you justify your education and prove your mettle by hurling defiance at the evils that encompass you? The purdah, that evil relic of a barbarous age, which imprisons the body and mind of so many of our sisters—will you not tear it to bits and burn the fragments? Untouchability and caste, which degrade humanity and help in the exploitation of one class by another—will you not fight them and end them and thus help in bringing a measure of equality in this country? Our marriage laws and many of our out-of-date customs which hold us back and especially crush our womenfolk—will you not combat them and bring them in line with modern conditions? Will you not also fight with energy and determination for the physical improvement of our women by games in the open air and athletics and sane living so that India may be full of strong and healthy and beautiful women and happy children? And, above all, will you not play a gallant part in the struggle for national and social freedom that is convulsing our country today?

I have put these many questions to you, but the answers to them have already come from thousands of brave girls and women who have played a leading part in our freedom struggle during the last four years. Who has not been thrilled at the sight of our sisters, unused as they were to public activity, leaving the shelter of their homes and standing shoulder to shoulder with their brothers in the fight for India's freedom? They shamed many a person who called himself a man, and they proclaimed to the world that the women of India have arisen from their long slumber and would not be denied their rights

The women of India have answered, and so I greet you, girls and young women of the Mahila Vidyapitha, and I charge you to keep that torch of freedom burning brightly till it spreads its lustre all over this ancient and dearly loved land of ours.

113. To Krishna Hutheesing[1]

Allahabad
21.1.34

Betty darling,

Nan has given me some news of you which is not very satisfying. You are not well, I understand, and not very cheerful. I hope you have got over your indisposition. It is not worthwhile to be unwell in mind or body.

If reports and portents are to be believed I am likely to leave the shelter of Anand Bhawan soon for another place. It does not matter overmuch to me for I have learnt to be moderately happy under almost any circumstances. But before I go, I want to send you these few lines conveying, if ink and paper can convey such precious but insubstantial material, all my love and good wishes for your happiness. You will often be in my thoughts and to know that you are bravely facing the little and big difficulties that life has a way of placing before each one of us, will make me happy. We worry about little matters that do not count. Why worry then? Better to hitch our wagon to a star and live in the cooling light of its rays.

Give my love to Raja and keep a lot of it for yourself.

Your loving brother,
Jawahar

1 JN Correspondence, NMML.

114. To Indira Nehru[1]

Allahabad
25.1.34

Darling,
It is the eve of our Independence Day and I am sitting down to write to you wondering when I shall write to you again from Anand Bhawan and from this library table where I have sat, surrounded by my books, for so many long hours, month after month. I love the company of books, even when I have no time to read them. They stand there, row after row, with the wisdom of ages locked up in them, serene and untroubled in a changing and distracted world, looking down silently on the mortals that come and go. I shall miss them for a while if I go away and I shall remember them. But it really does not matter either way for I try to fit in with my surroundings wherever I may find myself.

I rather liked Santiniketan and so did mummie. I think it will be a good thing if you spent a year or so there. You may not have comforts there but that is a little matter and one should get hardened a little. It is a remarkably peaceful place. There is a German there who is a Buddhist monk. He teaches both French and German. I do not know how good he is at his work but he had an attractive face, as Buddhist monks often have. The art section is of course very good. If you go there I think it would be a good thing if you took up painting. Nand Lal Bose,[2] the man in charge of the art section, is one of the leading Indian painters of today, and he is a good teacher. But all this is rather premature. We can discuss it later when the time comes.

One idea, however, appeals to me. I want you to get to know the various peoples of India and if you go to Santiniketan you will pick up Bengali and get to know the Bengalis a little better. You know some Gujarati now and perhaps a little Marathi.

And now, I must say au revoir and end this letter with my love, which indeed you always have.

Your loving
Papu

1 Indira Gandhi Papers, N.M.M.L.
2 (1883-1966), distinguished painter of the Bengal School, taught for many years at Visvabharati, Padma Vibhushan, 1955.

115. To Indira Nehru[1]

Allahabad
29.1.34

Indu dear,

I have survived Independence Day although I did my best not to do so! What is to be done?

Your letter came today. No, I am not at all superstitious about the 13th. I think it is as good or bad as any other day. You must be, of course, a little excited about your preliminary examination. But examinations are not worth getting excited over. They seem rather terrible at a distance but if one takes them coolly there is nothing exciting in them.

I have received volume 10 of the letters. Thanks.

We are all busy collecting money for Bihar relief. Anand Bhawan is full of blankets and clothes which people are sending.

Dolamma is getting on well. Mummie is terribly busy going from house to house and shop to shop collecting money.

Love,

Your loving
Papu

1 Indira Gandhi Papers, N.M.M.L.

116. Five Months and Thirteen Days—166 days[1]

August 30th 1933 to February 12th 1934

Allahabad
Lucknow	31/8 to 2/9
Allahabad

1. Itinerary for the period Jawaharlal was out of prison Jail Note Book No 20, pp 13 14 N.M.M.L.

SEVENTH CONVICTION[1]

February 12th 1934

5.30 p.m.—Anand Bhawan—just finished a rather late tea. Kamala—Tandon—and one or two others standing in the east verandah.

A police car comes—the new City Supt. appears and I know that the time has come. He produces a warrant of arrest from Calcutta. बहुत दिनों से आप का इन्तजार था,[2] I said but he excused himself saying that the warrant was from Calcutta—It was not his handiwork. As if in any event it could be his handiwork!

Kamala stood it well to begin with—Tandon couldn't grasp the situation for a while. Then I went to mother but Bibi had forestalled me and mother was breaking down. I consoled her and she pulled herself up a little—brave little woman Then packing. Suddenly Kamala broke down. Others started arriving—Uma Bhabi, Vidya, Shammi, Shama Bhai (his first outing since his attack of paralysis), Nan, Ranjit and the children. Ladli Bhai, Janak, Muzaffar & Kashi Prasad were there when the warrant of arrest came. Kishan Dar & Mohan Bhai, Mohan Bhabi &c.

I drafted telegrams to Indu, Bapu & Rajendra Babu. Indu's exam begins today so the news of my arrest must have reached her just before the exam.

We started about 6.30 p m We thought we were going to Naini prison but on the way we were told that we were going to Naini station to catch the mail to Calcutta. Kamala, Ranjit & Mohan Bhai accompanied me—also Tandon—to the station. And there we said good bye and off I went in a 2nd class compartment.

At Mirzapur station I was surprised—and so was he—to find Santanam. He was also travelling in the same train to Calcutta. He gave me some welcome books

The inspector accompanying me was a tenant of Kalakankar. Wanted me to give him a chit for Kalakankar putting in a good word for him for something or other!

1. In this section and section 5 extracts from the diaries kept by Jawaharlal in jail from 12 February 1934 till his release on 3 September 1935, (with a break on parole for 12 days) have been printed. Letters written by him during this period have been interspersed The diaries are available in N.M.M.L.
2. I had been long expecting you.

Lucknow	5/9 to 8/9
Poona	9/9 to 14/9
Bombay	15/9—17/9
Lucknow	19/9—Oct.
Allahabad	October
Banaras
Allahabad
Cawnpore
Allahabad
Jubbulpore
Allahabad
Delhi
Aligarh
Allahabad
Calcutta	16/1/34—19/1
Santiniketan	20/1
Patna	21/1
Muzaffarpur	22/1
Allahabad
Patna	3/2
Muzaffarpur—Motihari	4/2
Sitamarhi	5/2
Samastipur—Darbhanga—Madhubani	6/2—7/2
Monghyr	8/2—9/2
Patna	10/2
Allahabad	11/2

3

PRISON DIARY WITH LETTERS

12 February 1934–12 August 1934

And so Calcutta on Tuesday morning Feb. 13th. I was taken to the Lalbazar jail or lock-up. I sat there for two hours and then I was taken to the Chief Magistrate's court—Sinha,[3] the Hon'ble. He told me what the charge was—showed me the report of my speeches which I had delivered in Calcutta last month. Charge under sec. 124A, sedition. He said that he was seeing me in his chambers in consideration for my feelings! He fixed Feb. 15th Thursday for the trial and wanted me to decide if it was going to be in camera or in public—Of course I told him I wanted nothing in camera.

And then I was brought to the Presidency jail in Alipur. Kept waiting at the gate. My goods & chattels examined. Money, watch, fountain pen, safety razor, knife, scissors &c. &c. taken away. Cigarettes allowed. All books & writing materials kept in office.

Shown to my cell. A small yard. Had nothing whatever to do as I had no books or writing materials. Nothing to read. No watch to give some idea of the passing of time. Fell asleep and slept rather heavily for a long time till the jailer turned up and said he would send me some reading & writing materials.

These came later in the evening—also my watch. At 6 30 I was locked in my cell and now at 7 I am writing this.

On my way from the Magistrate's court to the Presidency jail I was accompanied in the police lorry by four or five constables inside the lorry —The sergeants were outside. The constables were U.P. or Bihar men— They seemed to be much affected and looked sad. One or two of them asked me a few simple questions. Told me that I was being taken to the Presidency jail because they dared not keep me in Lalbazar which was full of policemen from the north, and they were afraid of my contaminating them. Suddenly one of the constables broke down and started blubbering!

This is a big prison. Pop. over 2000. The Supt. is a Punjabi—some Singh.[4]

And so begins my seventh term.

Gandhi caps not allowed inside jail. These as well as my khaki shorts & shirts kept in office....

3. Sushil Kumar Sinha, I.C.S. (1895-1937), appointed chief presidency magistrate, Calcutta, 30 September 1933.
4. Major M.A. Singh, officiating inspector general of prisons, 1931-37.

13.2.1934[5]

Betty darling,
So the long expected has happened and I am back again in prison. Very soon I shall fit myself into the new surroundings and carry on more or less contentedly. I am fortunate in having discovered, to some extent at least, the art of adapting myself to new environments.

My trial takes place day after tomorrow and you will probably know the result of it before you get this letter. But such results are not awaited with any excitement. One gets used to them—and this is my seventh experience of them. I am becoming quite an expert at this kind of thing!

I had a letter from you about two weeks ago and then I went off to Bihar and spent a very strenuous nine days there. I returned fagged out day before yesterday to Allahabad. I have had no more recent news from you except that Fory[6] was going to stay with you.

I was glad to learn that Raja and you intend shifting to a separate flat. I think it is always better for small families and individuals to live separately as far as possible. Large family groupings do not fit in with present-day conditions.

How did you like Fory? I am sorry I have missed seeing her. I wrote to her to Budapest long ago. As no reply came I wonder if my letter reached her.

Give my love to Raja and keep a lot of it for yourself. And do not permit yourself to develop the blues!

Your loving brother,
Jawahar

Feb. 13th, 1934[7]

Nan dear,
I have survived the journey and I have established myself in one of the safest places in Calcutta—the Presidency jail. I am a newcomer yet to this abode of safety but I shall settle down soon enough here or elsewhere. Day after tomorrow—the 15th—my trial takes place before the Chief Presidency Magistrate—the Hon. Sinha. I was produced before him today in chambers and he told me what the charge was and showed me the reports of my speeches. He left it to me to choose

5. Nehru's Letters to His Sister, (London, 1963), pp. 39-40.
6. Mrs B.K. Nehru.
7. Vijayalakshmi Pandit Papers, N.M.M.L. Extracts.

if I would like a trial in camera or in public. Naturally I preferred the latter.

As I can write a few letters as an under trial, I have written today to Horace Alexander about the letters and to Anil Kumar Chanda[8] about Ghani.[9] I think you had better write to both also. Ranjit should also write (as I have told him) to Dr. Khan Sahib about Ghani. I want Ghani's father to feel that Ghani is being well looked after and not to worry. In the event of some difficulty arising about Ghani's entry into Santiniketan, I do not quite know what should be done. Anyway, he should stay on in Anand Bhawan. Perhaps some temporary arrangements could be made for him to continue his German and some other subject in Allahabad. This will give him something to do.

Look after mother and see to it that she keeps cheerful and does not worry. She must continue her treatment. Her little wound will probably take another month or two to heal up but she can gradually walk about a little in the verandah. An occasional drive might also be given. With the coming of summer we shall have to decide where to keep her. But that is still far off....

Your loving brother,
Jawahar

Feb. 13, 1934[10]

Indu bien aimee,

So I am back again to my other 'home', as I wired to you. It was time I came for I was very tired with the various activities I indulged in and badly wanted a respite. My nine days in Bihar, touring the earthquake areas, were a tremendous strain and I reached Allahabad day before yesterday dead tired. I shall have plenty of rest now—perhaps too much of it!

I thought of you a great deal today. Today was the day of your examination and just before it began, the news of my arrest must have reached you I hope this did not worry you in the least. It should have acted as a fillip!

My trial has been fixed for day after tomorrow, the 15th. I do not know what will happen afterwards and whether I shall be kept in this

8. (b. 1906); secretary to Rabindranath Tagore; Deputy Minister, Government of India, 1952 62.
9 Abdul Ghani (b 1913), son of Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan, founder of the Zalme Pakhtun Party, N.W.F.P., in 1947.
10. Indira Gandhi Papers, N.M.M.L.

gaol or elsewhere. When you write to me, send your letter to mummie and she will forward it on.

You will be busy during the next two months or so with your examinations. I am sure you will do well in them. Take them easily without worrying at all. And then I hope to see you, wherever I may be at the time.

I have missed seeing Fory—just missed her. You met her. How did you like her?

All my love, cara mia,

Your loving
Papu

February 14th Wednesday

Had a fair night though I woke up repeatedly because of the visits of night watchmen and jail night inspectors. I was locked in at 6.30 p.m., unlocked this morning at 5.50 a.m. I expected the Supt. but he did not come. Most of the time I read Feuchtwanger's The Oppermanns.

Some Khanna of K.C. Khanna & Co., 162 Harrison Road sends me food. (It was Kapur.)

The text of my three speeches in Calcutta on 17th & 18th January has been sent to me.[11] This is the seditious matter I am going to be tried for.

And so the day has passed, and I have been locked in again.

I have written a statement for the court. But I doubt if I shall read it or give it to the Magistrate.

Lessing:[12]

> Go thy viewless ways, eternal Providence. But let me not despair of thee because thou art viewless. Let me not despair of thee even when thy steps seem to turn back. It is not true that the shortest line is always the most straight. Thou must have much to take with thee on thine eternal journey, and often turn aside.

11. See ante, section 2, items 39 and 40. The third speech is not printed as Jawaharlal thought the reporting was very inaccurate.
